INTRODUCTION TO THE CENSUS

This is a first systematic endeavour to ascertain the number and whereabouts of extant original copies of the Shakespeare First Folio,—the volume which constitutes the greatest contribution yet made to English literature. At the same time researches have been pursued with some persistency into the past history and the present condition of surviving copies, and the collected information has been arranged as methodically as the multitudinous details permit. The general numerical result will create widespread surprise. Although shrewd suspicions have long been cherished by experts that the scarcity of the Shakespeare First Folio has been exaggerated, few will anticipate the width of the interval that separates the popular estimate of the volume's rarity from the precise testimony to its existing plenitude, that is here brought together for the first time. The student of the following pages will recognize that henceforth it will not be by the paucity of extant exemplars that the Shakespeare First Folio will be notable in the eyes of bibliographers; it will be remarkable in their sight from the abundance of the copies that survive. Of works of first-rate literary interest, which were produced during the sixteenth or early seventeenth century, whether in England or on the continent of Europe, few can in fact be shown to survive in so many copies of the original edition as does the first collection in folio of Shakespeare's plays. No more than fourteen remain, it will be seen, in an original state of perfection. But as many as 150 extant copies, in varying conditions of cleanliness and completeness, are noticed in the accompanying Census. The First Folio edition may fairly be conjectured to have consisted originally of six hundred copies, and at the end of nearly three centuries the surviving number seems to amount to near a third of that originally printed. Most of the extant volumes betray the damaging effects of age, but time has shown a rare forbearance in sparing in whatever state so substantial a proportion of a highly popular first edition of supreme literary worth.

No special precautions seem to have been taken to preserve copies of the book within the first century of its publication. It was widely read, but no exceptional pecuniary value then attached to it. The work was thrice reprinted within little more than sixty years,—in the Second, Third, and Fourth Folios of 1632, 1663–4, and 1685 respectively. Each of these editions was as large as its predecessor, and for a long time no interest seems to have belonged to the First Folio above that belonging to the Second, Third, or Fourth. Owing to the abundant supply, a Shakespeare Folio

On the other hand, the first editions of Foxe's Acts and Monuments (1563), of Walton's Compleat Angler (1653), and of Bunyan's Pilgrim's Progress (1678), now enjoy a distinction of scarcity, which is altogether outside the experience of the First Folio.

1 To other first folio editions of the period, Spenser's Works, 1611, Ben Jonson's Works, 1616, and Beaumont and Fletcher's Works, 1647, the like figures probably apply closely, but these volumes were not exposed to the same danger of popularity as the Shakespeare First Folio, and there is nothing surprising about their extant numbers. Among famous books of the later years of the seventeenth century the first edition of Milton's Paradise Lost (1667) seems to have consisted of some 1,300 copies, more than double that of the Shakespeare First Folio. The type was long kept standing, and the original edition was issued at intervals extending over fully two years in small batches with altered title-pages. Most of these issues are still comparatively common, and are more accessible than the First Folio.

2 Through the middle years of the seventeenth century, connoisseurs were quite content to place on their shelves a Second Folio, though a First was within their reach. Both Charles I and his nephew, Prince Rupert, only owned Second Folios. Charles I's copy is now in the Royal Library at Windsor Castle. Prince Rupert's copy is noticed in A Catalogue of all the Books in His Highness Prince Rupert's Library, November, 1677 (British Museum, Sloane MS, 555, f. 4).
was in the seventeenth century an unusually common book. Consequently copies of the First Folio were from early days exposed to the devastating agencies of careless handling and rough usage. It is doubtful if the processes of destruction suffered any conscious check for a century and a half, but happily they worked with less ruinous result than average experience would suggest.

The Shakespearean commentator, George Steevens, learnt from the account-books of a seventeenth-century bookseller, which were extant in his day, that the price of a copy amounted on its publication in 1623 to £1. Each of the new editions—the Second, Third, and Fourth Folios—of 1632, 1663–4, and 1685 seems to have been issued at the same price, and for many years the pecuniary value of the First Folio remained on the same level as that of its three successors. None made any substantial advance in price. Towards the end of the seventeenth century, the Third Folio—alone of the four—seems to have risen in value, a rise due to unverified rumours that numerous unsold copies of the edition had been destroyed in the fire of London of 1666. At the auction sale of a library belonging to Benjamin Worsley on May 13, 1678, while a copy of the Second Folio fetched 16s.—four shillings less than the published price—a copy of the Third fetched £1 8s. 6d.—eight shillings and sixpence in excess. No First Folio was for sale on that occasion. The first record of the sale by auction of a First Folio belongs to the year 1687, when one figured in the sale of a collection of books belonging to Sir William Coventry and the Hon. Henry Coventry, who resided in the Haymarket, London. No details are, however, forthcoming.

In the eighteenth century Shakespeare’s works were constantly reprinted and edited, and public interest in the early editions steadily grew. The unique importance of the First Folio was soon recognized, and a demand for copies in excess of the supply gradually developed among scholars and book-collectors. In a London sale-catalogue of 1748, the earliest that has yet been found definitely to mention a First Folio, the volume was described as ‘a fine copy, very scarce.’ The earliest priced record of a sale of the book at auction belongs to the year 1756, when a copy in the library of Martin Folkes, the lately-deceased President of the Royal Society, was sold for three guineas (this copy is now in the John Rylands Library at Manchester). Ten years later, in 1766, the identical price was realized at the sale of the library of a well-known author, David Mallet. For some time three guineas was regarded as the highest price attainable, and during the same period copies often changed hands for far smaller sums. The leading Shakespearean editors of the epoch, Sir Thomas Hanmer, Lewis Theobald, Edward Capell, Dr. Johnson, George Steevens, and Edmund Malone are known to have acquired on moderate terms one or two copies each for purposes of study. About 1760, Garrick, the great actor, purchased one for £1 16s. of a fashionable bookseller, Thomas Payne, whose shop was at the Mews Gate by Charing Cross (this copy is now at Queen’s College, Oxford). But although the tide occasionally ebbed, the price’s upward movement was not seriously checked. Below states that about 1770 the standard value of a ‘fine copy’ was five guineas, and that he refused ‘at nine guineas a superb copy,’ which realized thirteen at Dr. Monro’s sale in 1792 (this apparently became afterwards the Grenville copy). In 1787 Dr. Richard Wright’s copy ‘bound in Russia’ brought £10 at a sale by auction. In 1801 fourteen guineas was the sum at which the First Folio in the library of Samuel Ireland, the father of the Shakespearean forger, passed to Dr. Matthew Raine, Head-master of the Charterhouse. But these amounts only represent the lower tendencies of the rising market. In 1790 the action of the Duke of Roxburghe, at the dispersal of the library of John
John Watson Reed, an attorney in Ely Place, inaugurated a higher scale of increase. According to a popular story, the duke at the Watson Reed sale looked on from one end of the room, while a friend bid for him at the other. To the general amazement the bidding rose to what was regarded as the exorbitant sum of twenty guineas. Thereupon the friend passed to the duke a slip of paper containing a warning to discontinue the contest. The duke coolly returned the slip with the added words—

‘Lay on, Macduff! And d——d be he who first cries “Hold, enough.”’

When the bidding reached £110 14s. the duke was declared victor, and he marched away in triumph, with the volume under his arm. (This copy afterwards became the Chatsworth copy.)

Steevens's comment on this incident was to the effect that the First Folio had become the most expensive single book in our language. Much followed to corroborate this opinion. A year or two afterwards Payne of the Mews Gate by Charing Cross made over a First Folio to the zealous virtuoso, Constantine Jennings, for no less a sum than seventy guineas. In 1812, when the Duke of Roxburgh's copy again changed hands at auction, Steevens's pronouncement was signally confirmed anew. For a second time it scored a record price, then leaping up to £100. But other copies soon outstripped this sum. In 1818 at the Midgeley sale, Thomas Grenville, who subsequently bequeathed his library to the British Museum, paid £121 6s. for a First Folio, and thereby created a new standard. The bibliographer, Dibdin, wrote somewhat prematurely that 'this was the highest price ever given or likely to be given for the volume.' Although the amount was not exceeded for thirty-three years, it was quickly approached very closely thrice. For the copy belonging to the actor, John Philip Kemble, James Boswell the younger paid in 1821 £122 6s. 7d., and the same copy passed five years later to Sir John Soane for £105 (it is now in the Soane Museum). In 1827 John Dent's copy was bought by Henry Perkins, the brewer, for £110 5s. It was not, however, till 1850 that a new advance began. In the interval prices varied from nineteen to fifty-five guineas for many fair copies in which defects had been supplied by facsimile pages or by pages taken from later folios. In 1850 a copy, formerly belonging to Sir John Rennie, which had been bought in at his sale in 1829 for £71 8s., fetched £124. In 1851 James Beaufay paid £111 10s. for a good copy sold with the library of the Right Hon. Charles Watkin Williams Wynn. Three years later a slight advance was made by James Lenox, a New York collector, who acquired at a London sale for £163 16s. the Lichfield-Baker copy. This was the first occasion on which American competition worked with palpable effect.

All earlier experience was belied at the sale of George Daniel's copy in July, 1864, when his First Folio was acquired by Miss (now the Baroness) Burdett-Coutts for the then unheard-of sum of £710 2s. So high a price foreshadowed the future, but it was not immediately maintained. A year later the Earl of Crawford acquired a good copy at the Earl of Charlemont's sale for £455. In July, 1867, Mr. James S. B. Bohn, when cataloguing the Shakespearean books for the sale of the library of George Smith, of 21 Russell Square, London, appended to his description of the First Folio these prophetic words: 'The difficulty of procuring a perfect copy ... is now so great, and the competition whenever one occurs so strong, that probably what our ancestors deemed dear at £100 will be regarded as cheap at £1,000 by our successors. The prophecy was not immediately realized, and George Smith’s very fair copy was bought by the late J. O. Halliwell-Phillipps (apparently for the Earl of Warwick) for no more than £417.

In fact no advance was made on the Daniel price for twenty-seven years, till the extreme end of the nineteenth century. In the interval several reputable copies fetched at auction sums varying between £400 and £600. In 1873 the Dent-Perkins copy was bought by a Manchester bookseller for £385. Next year Sir William Tite’s copy was purchased on behalf of an American collector (Mr. Brayton Ives) for £440; in 1882 the Ouvry copy fetched £420; in 1884, when the Earl of Gosford copy brought £470, the Syston Park copy, which went to America, fetched £590; in 1889 the Frederick Perkins copy brought £415. It was in New York in 1891 that the latest scale of increase was inaugurated. At the sale of Mr. Brayton Ives’ library there in March, 1891, his copy, formerly the Tite copy, beat the existing record at the sum of £840 (£4,200). This volume now belongs to Mr. W. A. White, of New York. Thenceforth prices mounted rapidly. In June, 1899, Mr. J. Pierpont Morgan, of New York, acquired privately of a London bookseller a First Folio for more than £1,000. Next month an absolutely new record was publicly achieved by a British buyer, Mr. B. B. MacGeorge, of Glasgow, who paid at Christie’s for the Belleruche copy no less than £1,700. This sum has as yet been exceeded only once, and then in a very small degree. In London on July 16, 1901, again at Christie’s, the Dormer-Hunter copy was bought by Mr. Bernard Quaritch, junior, for £1,720, which is the highest price that has been reached (this copy is now in New York). These two transactions remain exceptional. A good copy fetched at the Ashburnham sale no more than £85 in 1899, and, although in March, 1902, a moderate copy—belonging to Mr. G. B. Baker-Wilbraham—brought £620, the prices of inferior copies have not averaged during the last ten years more than £300. But £1,000 or £1,100 may at the moment be regarded as the average price for good complete copies, when they are subjected to sale-room competition either in New York or London. At the sale in New York, on March 20, 1900, of the late Augustin Daly’s library, his First Folio fetched £1,080 (£5,400), and another in the library of the late Colonel Edward George Hibbert brought £1,050 at Sotheby’s on April 12, 1902.

The precise sums at which copies of the First Folio change hands at auctions depend to a large extent on the accidents of sale-room competition. But, generally speaking, the price may be roughly held to be governed by the condition of the copy sold. Few books vary more in this respect. A very small number of copies survive in their original, unsophisticated form, and only one or two are still in the original binding. Time has laid a more or less heavy hand on all but a very few surviving copies; most of them bear telltale marks of age and usage. As a rule the preliminary leaves, especially the fly-leaf containing Ben Jonson’s lines on the portrait, the title-page and the last leaf, have been damaged or altogether lost. Not one copy in every twenty that survive retains the original fly-leaf, and only one in every fifteen copies possesses the last leaf and title-page uninjured. Steevens attributes much of the discoloration, that commonly characterizes the book, to the fact that it was a customary possession in country houses during the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries, and was ordinarily kept on the table in the hall at which the household was wont to take its meals. Steevens claimed often to detect scraps of food, especially thin flakes of piecrust, between the leaves of copies that he examined, and assigned many stains to spilt drink.
To obliterate by artifice the injuries that copies of the First Folio suffered, from either age or rough handling, became as early as Steevens's day the resolute endeavour of booksellers. About 1780 Steevens wrote—

'Every possible adulteration has of late years been practised in fitting up copies of this book for sale. When leaves have been wanting they have been reprinted with battered types, and foisted into vacancies, without notice of such defects and the remedies applied to them. When the title has been lost, a spurious one has been fabricated, with a blank space left for the head of Shakspeare, afterwards added from the second, third, or fourth impression. To conceal these frauds, thick vermilion lines have been usually drawn over the edges of the engravings, which would otherwise have betrayed themselves when let into a supplemental page, however craftily it was lined at the back and discoloured with tobacco-water till it had assumed the true jaune antique. Sometimes leaves have been inserted from the Second Folio, and, in a known instance, the entire play of 'Cymbeline,' the genuine date at the end of it [1623] having been altered into 1623.'

Since Steevens's day such practices have become habitual, but as a rule they are frankly acknowledged by booksellers, and few endeavours are made to represent imperfect copies that have been repaired to be in a perfect and original state.

The most difficult and expensive mode of repairing an imperfect copy is to supply its defects with leaves from other originals that are imperfect in different ways. This is now a difficult process, and resort to it is rare. It is more common and easier to depend on the skill of the copyist. Probably the most successful practitioner of the art of repairing, by pen or pencil, defects in damaged copies of the First Folio was John Harris (c. 1790–1872). In youth he was a student at the Royal Academy in London, and he devoted most years of his adult life to copying in exact facsimile, in pen and ink, the typography and engravings of old books. His copies were lithographed on old paper and were largely employed to fill gaps in old volumes. The preliminary leaves,—especially the fly-leaf and portrait-title,—and the last leaf of the First Folio, which are the portions of the volume that are most frequently missing, constantly employed his pen, and in his own day his success in imitating these pages was so great that some experts confessed themselves unable to distinguish between the original leaves and Harris's facsimiles of them. Other pages, especially at the end of the volume, often engaged his attention. Owing to failing sight Harris retired from business in 1870, but during the preceding half-century his handiwork was introduced into scores of copies of the First Folio. He had several competitors in the field, but during his lifetime he was easily reckoned first in capacity. Some of his successors are held to have shown superior powers, but none seem to have approached Harris in the extent of their operations.

Several defective copies, which have not enjoyed the benefit of Harris's skill, have been clumsily made up of late years from the facsimile reprint of 1806, or from fragments of Second, Third, or Fourth Folios. In examining copies of the First Folio and in appraising their value, one must consequently bear in mind all the varied artifices of repARATION.

More or less imperfect copies of the First Folio were ordinarily kept in stock by the great London booksellers during the eighteenth and nineteenth centuries. In 1767 the bookseller, Jacob Tonson, made George Steevens a present of a copy—a proof that it was not credited by him with superlative scarcity. Through many years of the eighteenth century a First Folio was always to be acquired at a moderate price of Thomas Payne, the great bookseller of Charing Cross. Thomas Rodd (1763–1822) the elder, and Thomas Rodd the younger (1796–1849), whose shop was in Great Newport Street, dealt largely in the volume. But probably the dealer who handled the greatest number of copies was Joseph Lilly, who was in business in the neighbourhood of Covent Garden for nearly forty years (1831–70). His catalogues occasionally indicate that he had as many as six copies on his shelves at one time, and it is estimated that his transactions covered in all some hundred copies. Five figured in the auction of 1871 which disposed of his stock on his death. Most of Lilly’s First Folios were in poor condition, and he was always a large buyer of Harris’s facsimiles. He apparently regarded £100 as a good price at which to dispose of a copy. Halliwell-Phillipps, the Shakespearean scholar, who was constantly buying and selling books in the middle of the nineteenth century, seems to have bought and sold some dozen different copies. Lilly’s successor, as the leading dealer in the First Folio, was Bernard Quaritch, who was in business in London between 1847 and 1899. As many as fifty copies probably passed through Quaritch’s hands. His chief competitors were James Toovey of Piccadilly and Frederick Startridge Ellis of Bond Street. Of late years, few booksellers of repute either in London or New York have failed at one time or another to secure copies for sale.

INTRODUCTION

Several attempts have been made in the past century to determine the number of extant copies of the volume and the names of their present owners, but none of these preceding endeavours have been carried far. The first effort was made by the bibliographer Thomas Frognall Dibdin, who published his results in The Library Companion in 1824. He gave particulars of twenty-six copies, placing three in a first class of perfect exemplars, six in a second class of slightly defective copies, and seventeen in a third class of imperfect copies. He also mentioned fourteen other copies of which he knew by hearsay only.

About 1840 the bookseller Thomas Rodd the younger began a list which he estimated to reach eighty in number, but he died without completing it, and no trace of it survives. In 1852, in 1853, and in 1877, correspondents in Notes and Queries urged, quite independently of one another, the systematic execution of the task, but little came of their suggestions. Henry George Bohn in 1863, in his revised edition of Lowndes’s Bibliographical Manual (part viii), cursorily mentioned thirty-nine copies, depending for his knowledge of nearly all on sale-catalogues, dated between 1877 and 1860, with the result that several appear more than once. Allibone, in his Dictionary of English and American Authors (Philadelphia, 1870, vol. iii), reprinted Bohn’s entries without corroboration, but vaguely added four. In 1897 Mr. Holcombe Ingleby contributed to Notes and Queries a list of some forty-five copies which he believed to be either in England or America; to that list some ten additions were made by subsequent correspondents to the periodical. Mr. Ingleby’s list was manifestly incomplete and was occasionally inaccurate; some of the owners named had parted with their copies, some persons who were credited with ownership of a First Folio possessed one of the later Folios only, while others had never acquired any Shakespeare Folio at all. None the less Mr. Ingleby’s remains the completest attempt at a Census

3 Copies have at various times been publicly assigned in error to the ten following persons or corporations:— the Earl of Leicester, who possesses only the Second and Third Folios; the Earl of Northbrook, Sir H. D. Ingleby, Bart., the Governors of Rugby School, and which which has been published before that which is undertaken here. In America an endeavour to enumerate copies in that country was made in 1874 by the learned librarian of Harvard College, the late Mr. Justin Win sor. He noticed nineteen copies, of which one, assigned to Asbury University, Greensastle, Ind., has proved on further investigation by me to be a late facsimile. Mr. Win sor's results were published in his valuable but little-known Bibliography of Original Quartos and Folios of Shakespeare: with particular reference to copies in America, Boston, 1875, 4to. A later account of First Folios in New York City alone was given by Mr. William H. Fleming in Shakespeariana for March, 1888—a periodical published in Philadelphia. Mr. Fleming described thirteen copies with much minuteness.

Most of the copies have changed hands since their publication in 1623 with a frequency, often with a secrecy, and invariably with an absence of detailed records that present serious stumbling-blocks to the bibliographical pedigree-maker. It is rare for extant copies to bear the marks of successive ownership. Only a few declare the name of the present owner's immediate predecessor. Neither book-plates nor inscriptions giving names of former possessors are commonly found in First Folios. The current methods of restoration and re-binding seem to be responsible for the removal of evidence of former ownership. It is consequently seldom that the past history of a copy can be fully recovered. At times notices of the dimensions or of the binding, or of some peculiar typographical feature, which appear in old sale-catalogues or in bibliographical compilations, furnish a clue which enables the investigator to trace the career of a copy backwards for some distance, but in the vast number of cases the restoration to which the copy has been subjected, and the effacement of book-plates and of earlier owners' names, have destroyed all opportunities of identification. The precise recent fortunes of many copies, to which early records attach historical interest, elude research.

Many persons of historical importance are known to have been among the purchasers or early owners of the First Folio soon after its publication, but it is in less than six cases that the pedigree of a copy can be ascertained from the beginning.
One copy was acquired in 1623 by the Spanish Ambassador at the English Court, Count Gondomar, and was handed down as an heirloom to his descendants in Spain. It was examined some sixty years ago by the late Señor Gayangos, while in the possession of a representative of the ancient Gondomar family at the Casa del Sol at Valladolid.
Gayangos reported that it contained many MS. interpolations in English, often in verse.
Although the library at the Casa del Sol to which the volume belonged is stated to be still intact, it is now neglected, and of late years endeavours to find the volume there have proved unsuccessful. Among the copies which figure in this Census, those belonging to the Earl of Ellesmere, to Mr. Francis Alexander Newdigate, M.P., of Arbury, Warwickshire (nephew and heir of Lieutenant-General Sir Edward Newdigate-Newdegate, whose death has taken place while these pages have been passing through the press), and to Mr. E. E. Harcourt Vernon, alone seem to have been from the first in the hands of the family which now possesses them. The copy acquired by Bishop John Cosin in the early years of the seventeenth century was bequeathed by him in 1672 to Durham Cathedral Library, where it still remains. Other very early owners whose First Folios, cited below, were long the property of their descendants, although the Earl Fitzwilliam, who have Third Folios only; Lord Hothfield, Sir David Dale, Bart., of Darlington,

they
they have now passed into new hands, were Robert Sidney, second Earl of Leicester (now belonging to Mr. J. Pierpont Morgan), Augustine Vincent, the herald, to whom the book was presented by the printer William Jaggard (now belonging to Mr. Coningsby Sibthorp), the first Lord Arundell of Wardour (now belonging to Stonyhurst College), John Hacket, Bishop of Lichfield (now belonging to Paulin Martin, Esq.), Colonel John Lane, of Staffordshire, the protector of Charles II after the battle of Worcester (now belonging to Abel Buckley, Esq.), and Ralph Sheldon, the antiquary and landowner, of Warwickshire (now belonging to the Baroness Burdett-Coutts). The copy now in the library of the Duke of Leeds seems to have belonged to Charles Killigrew, the theatrical manager of Charles II's reign, and was afterwards successively the property of the dramatist William Congreve, and of the Duke's ancestress, the second Duchess of Marlborough. It is significant of the serious repute which Shakespeare's works enjoyed at an early period to learn that two copies, of which the history is distinctly traceable back to the seventeenth century, were originally purchased by nonconformist ministers. The First Folio acquired by Dr. Daniel Williams (c. 1638-1716), the dissenting divine and benefactor of London, still forms part of the library called after him, which he founded and endowed by will in 1711. Another copy of the First Folio, which now belongs to Mr. A. Prescott Baker, of Boston, U.S.A., is reputed to have been the property, more than two hundred years ago, of the far-famed Boston minister, Cotton Mather (1663-1728), and to have reached its present owner through Mather's descendants. It is probable that Mr. Baker's copy has had its home in the United States longer than any other, and may be reckoned the oldest inhabitant in the populous and still growing community of American First Folios.

A slightly larger number of extant copies can be traced back to eighteenth-century owners, but only a small proportion of these remain in the possession of their eighteenth-century owners' descendants. The copy that seems to have belonged to the Duke of Newcastle, the Prime Minister, is still in the library of the present duke, while that formerly in the hands of the first Marquis of Lansdowne is now in a public institution, the London Institution. The copies on which the great commentators of the eighteenth century worked—Sir Thomas Hanmer, Lewis Theobald, Edward Capell, George Steevens, Edmund Malone—are all identifiable among the surviving exemplars, but positive traces are unfortunately lost of the one sold at Dr. Johnson's sale, in 1785, as well as of that in the library of Dr. Richard Farmer, the writer on 'Shakespeare's Learning,' which was sold (in a somewhat dilapidated state) to Thomas Amyot for £7 in 1798. Luckily Garrick's copy and Kemble's copy, among those belonging to great eighteenth-century actors, are now safely housed in the libraries respectively of Queen's College, Oxford, and of the Soane Museum, Lincoln's Inn Fields. But nothing is known of the copy which John Payne Collier reported that he saw in 1869 in Joseph Lilly's shop, bearing, in old handwriting, the names of Garrick and Mrs. Siddons; it was apparently a gift from the veteran actor to the young actress at the opening of her great career 1.

The libraries of most of the leading collectors of the early nineteenth century have long since been dispersed; and though in numerous instances, as a study of the Census will show, I have ascertained the fortunes of their First Folios by dint of persistent research, I have been baffled more often than I could wish. I am sanguine enough to believe that the copies formerly belonging to the following well-known men of letters or collectors of the nineteenth century figure in the accompanying Census, but my efforts to identify them specifically have not been successful. Happily for the present purpose none of these are reputed to be in first-rate condition. I arrange them in order of the dates of the sales at which they changed hands, and give the description and price from sale-catalogues or from accounts of the sale in newspapers or from bibliographical compilations:

1816. William Roscoe (restored; 'a very bad copy'). £21.
1819. The Marquis of Blandford, of White Knights (imperfect). £18 7s. 6d.
1834. Richard Heber (imperfect). £77 15s. Apparently in the eighteenth century in the library of Basil Feilding, sixth Earl of Denbigh (1719-1800), and sold at the Denbigh sale in 1825 for £89 5s. Purchased by Heber at John Brodley's sale in 1832 for £71.
1840. Bishop Samuel Butler (acquired c 1830, apparently of Thomas Amyot who had kept it for some years, together with a second copy that was formerly in the library of Dr. Richard Farmer); with uncorrected leaf of 'Hamlet,' p. 278 (cf. Malone's Shakespeare, 1821, xxi. pp. 447-50); fly-leaf and title in facsimile, and 'Cymbeline' from Second Folio (cf. Dibdin's Literary Reminiscences, 1836, ii. 966).
1853. Dr. Edward Craven Hawtrey, of Eton (mended). £65.
1860. Lancelot and Henry Holland (size: 12½ in. x 8½ in.). £91.

1 These copies were all disposed of at public auction. But several copies have been disposed of privately in England during the past few years, and in these instances I have only rarely been able to obtain precise information of their history and condition, and I have been compelled as a rule to leave their present whereabouts undetermined. Some ten years ago the Dean and Chapter of Canterbury Cathedral sold a copy which was long in the Cathedral Library, and the librarian has no information to give me beyond those unsatisfying facts. The Earl of Warwick parted with his First Folio and the rest of his Shakespearean library in 1858. Copies belonging to the late Lord Vernon and to the late Bishop Vertue of Portsmouth were also disposed of privately, the bishop's copy, of which I have fortunately obtained a full description, being sold by him in 1897. I cannot identify these and some other copies of which I have more or less vague intelligence with any of those whose present owners have been in communication with me. I have accordingly entered such imperfectly traced First Folios under separate headings as 'untraced' copies. I have done all I could to avoid duplication of entry in the Census, and have exhausted all available means of research before admitting an 'untraced' First Folio, but it is impossible in so complex an inquiry to counteract every risk of error.
The introduction of the one hundred and fifty-six copies, which are noticed in the Census, offers points of interest. One hundred and one may be reckoned to remain in the United Kingdom, fifty may be estimated to be now in the United States of America, three are in the British Colonies, and two at least are known to be on the continent of Europe. All the copies which I have definitely traced in the colonies and on the continent are in public libraries. It is notable that the three colonial copies were recent gifts to colonial public libraries on the part of public-spirited natives of the United Kingdom. The First Folios now in the public libraries of Cape Town and Auckland, New Zealand, were both presented by Sir George Grey, the eminent and patriotic colonial governor, while the one in the Sydney Public Library was presented by Sir Richard Tangye, of the Birmingham firm of engineers. Of the British copies twenty-eight are in public libraries or institutions, and of the American copies nine.

The British Museum and the New York Public Library have now each four copies. The private owner possessing the largest number of copies is Mr. J. Pierpont Morgan, of New York, who possesses three—one of great historic interest. Trinity College, Cambridge, the Birthplace Museum at Stratford-on-Avon, the Baroness Burdett-Coutts, and Lord Amherst of Hackney, each have two; but only at Trinity College, Cambridge, and in the Baroness’s library are two copies found together in good condition.

The largest dimension of height that is assignable to any of the enumerated copies is 13 1/2 in.; the largest dimension of breadth is 8 1/2 in. Only one copy—that belonging to Mr. Coningsby Sibthorp, exactly combines both superlative measurements, but they are nearly approached in the four exemplars belonging respectively to Mr. Pierpont Morgan (No. XXXVII), which measures 13 1/2 in. x 8 1/2 in.; to Mr. Harcourt Vernon, 13 1/2 in. x 8 1/2 in.; to Mr. L. Z. Leiter, of Chicago, 13 1/2 in. x 8 1/2 in.; and to Mr. F. A. Newdigate, M.P., 13 1/2 in. x 8 1/2 in. There is a sixth copy (belonging to Mr. E. Dwight Church, of Brooklyn) which is 13 1/2 in. tall, although no more than 8 1/2 in. broad. Four other copies reaching the highest limit of breadth—i.e. 8 1/2 in. (of which one belongs to the Earl of Ellesmere, another belongs to Mr. Jaggard, the Liverpool bookseller, the third is in the Forrest Home, Philadelphia, and the fourth was formerly in the Asay collection at Chicago)—do not measure in height more than 13 in., 13 in., 12 1/2 in., and 12 1/2 in. respectively.

Although the present Census records a far larger number of copies than that reached by previous workers in the field, it makes no claim to finality. I believe that I have noticed for the first time nearly a hundred hitherto unrecorded copies, and my success in this direction renders it only too probable that others may yet come to light in previously unsuspected places. Nor, in spite of my efforts after accuracy, can I hope, in a new investigation involving so much difficult detail, always to have achieved it. Such merit as the work possesses is mainly due to the active interest which has been taken in its preparation by owners, Shakespearean scholars, and booksellers in the United Kingdom and the United States, who have rendered me most generous assistance.

1 I print below the actual names of only ninety-eight present owners in England and of thirty-nine in America, but in giving the totals of the copies in the United Kingdom and the United States respectively, I allocate conjecturally fourteen copies which have changed hands in recent years, and whose present owners I have been unable to trace. Five of these untraced copies have long been in the hands of American collectors, and there is every reason to believe that they remain on American soil. The nine other untraced copies were lately in private libraries in the United Kingdom. From information given me (in a less definite form than I could wish) by London booksellers I infer that at least six of these have now passed to American owners. It will thus be seen how my figures are reached.
assistance. Occasional help has also reached me from librarians or students in Germany and Italy and in the British Colonies. The plan that was adopted at the outset was to forward to persons who, there was reason to believe, might own or have access to a copy of the First Folio, a printed schedule of inquirers, with a request that it should be filled up and returned to me. In only a trifling number of instances did my application fail to elicit the required response, and the correspondence that ensued has been consequently large. Very often information was sent to me spontaneously without any direct application on my part. In many cases owners of copies in England placed them freely at my disposal for purposes of a personal examination. One owner, Mr. R. J. Walker, of St. Paul's School, London, entrusted his copy, which is exceptionally fine, to my own keeping, during most of the period that I have been engaged on the work.

I regret that limits of space prevent me from acknowledging in detail all who have lent a hand to this research, but I feel it incumbent on me to specify some of my helpers. Two citizens of the United States have during the past eighteen months most energetically seconded my endeavours to acquire information about the copies now in America. Miss M. E. Blatchford, of Cambridge, U.S.A., herself the owner of a valuable First Folio, and Mr. W. H. Fleming, of New York, the Shakespearean critic, have devoted themselves to the work with great enthusiasm, and without their co-operation my results, as far as the United States are concerned, must have been far less perfect than they are. Through the good offices of Miss Blatchford, Mrs. Justin Winsor, the widow of the well-known Harvard librarian, presented to me some manuscript notes on the subject made by her husband, as well as the unbound sheets of his Bibliography of original... Folios of Shakespeare (1855), of which no copy was accessible to me in London. I have also to thank the trustees of the Boston Public Library, and the librarian, Mr. James L. Whitney, for lending me one of the twenty privately printed copies of The Description of the First Folio Edition of the Plays of Shakespeare, now in the Collection of T. P. Barton, New York, 1862. No copy of this rare pamphlet, which narrates all that is known of the interesting Barton copy in the Boston Public Library, was to be found in England, when I undertook this research. At the request of the Boston trustees, as soon as I had finished with the copy which they had kindly lent me, I handed it on their behalf to the trustees of the British Museum.

Minute descriptions of the four First Folios in the New York Public Library were furnished to me by Mr. Victor H. Paltsits. Very detailed particulars of the Phoenix copy in Columbia University Library were forwarded by Mr. Charles Alexander Nelson, A.M., the reference librarian. Mr. George Parker Winship, of the John Carter Brown Library, Providence, Mr. L. Z. Leiter, of Chicago, Mr. J. S. Morgan, Mr. Marshall C. Lefferts, and Mr. J. O. Wright, all of New York, have each answered several inquiries. Among my correspondents in England, I am more especially indebted to Sir Edward Maunde Thompson, K.C.B., Director and Principal Librarian of the British Museum, who sent me full accounts of the four copies in his keeping, to Mr. E. B. Nicholson, Bodley's Librarian at Oxford, to Mr. Francis Jenkinson, the Librarian of Cambridge University, to Dr. Aldis Wright, Vice-Master of Trinity College, Cambridge, to the Rev. Dr. Magrath, Provost of Queen's College, Oxford, a Delegate of the Clarendon Press, to Dr. C. L. Shadwell, of Oriel College, Oxford, also a Delegate of the Clarendon Press, and to Mr. R. R. Holmes, the King's Librarian at Windsor. To The Dictionary of National Biography, to Mr. W. Y. Fletcher's English Book Collectors (1902), to Book Prices Current (London, 1887–1901, 15 vols.), and...
INTRODUCTION TO THE CENSUS

to American Book Prices Current, compiled by Mr. Luther S. Livingston (New York, 1895-1901, 7 vols.), I owe useful memoranda about many past owners and past sales, while Mr. Walter Stanley Graves (son of my friend Mr. R. E. Graves, formerly of the British Museum) and Mr. C. E. Hughes have occasionally supplemented my researches among old sale-catalogues. But to every present owner whose name figures in the accompanying list, and to the chief officers or librarians of all the colleges, public libraries, and institutions, which are mentioned among existing guardians of a First Folio, my thanks are due for the time and trouble they have spent in aiding me to invest this Census with some title to be reckoned an authoritative contribution to Shakespearean bibliography.

THE CENSUS

In classifying the copies I depend for the most part on information supplied by the owners. Forty-three of the copies I have personally examined, but I have collated comparatively few of these without the assistance of the present owners and guardians. I have frequently been able to supplement the information which has been given me with regard to both the condition and history of the copies, either from the results of my own observation, or from descriptions that I have met with in early sale-catalogues and bibliographical works of authority.

I have divided the copies into four main classes according to my knowledge of their general condition. Class I consists of perfect copies, with three subdivisions (A, B, and C), A containing those that are not known to have undergone restoration, and B and C containing respectively those that have been restored in lesser or greater degree. Class II consists of imperfect copies, arranged in three subdivisions (A, B, and C), each indicative of the extent of their imperfections and the manner of supplying them. Class III consists of poor copies, which are arranged in two subdivisions (A and B), dealing respectively with defective and fragmentary exemplars. Class IV consists of copies of which I have not obtained sufficiently detailed descriptions to enable me to allot them to any of the other classes. In each class and subdivision I place, first, public institutions which possess copies, then the names of private owners in alphabetical order, and finally, when occasion demands it, independent 'untraced' copies about which more or less recent and definite information is derivable from various sources, although the names of the present owners have not been furnished to me. Under every heading I distinguish, where circumstances require it, the copies in the United Kingdom from those in the United States, in the British Colonies, and in countries on the continent of Europe. In each entry I give, wherever I can, firstly the size of the copy, secondly its history, and thirdly an account of its condition. To facilitate reference to the Census, I have numbered the entries consecutively throughout.
THE CENSUS

CLASS I (Perfect Copies)

Division A (in good, un restored condition)

[The United Kingdom: Public Institutions]

Size: 12\(\frac{3}{4}\) in. × 8\(\frac{1}{4}\) in. History: apparently sold for £13 13s. at the sale of Dr. John Monroe's library in 1792 and bought by Midgeley. Purchased in 1818 for £131 16s. at Midgeley's sale by the Right Hon. Thomas Grenville, who bequeathed it, with his library, in 1846 to the British Museum. ( Cf. Dibdin's Library Companion, p. 810.) Condition: clean; bound in red morocco by Charles Lewis.

II. LONDON.—LONDON INSTITUTION, FINSBURY CIRCUS. Size: 12\(\frac{3}{4}\) in. × 8\(\frac{1}{4}\) in. History: apparently acquired £1760 by the Earl of Shelburne, afterwards first Marquess of Lansdowne (d.1805); purchased at the sale of Lord Lansdowne's library in 1806 for London Institution. Condition: good; preliminary leaves re-arranged.

III. CAMBRIDGE. — THE MASTER AND FELLOWS OF TRINITY COLLEGE. Size: 13 in. × 8\(\frac{1}{4}\) in. History: acquired £1700 by Edward Duke, whose name is inscribed; subsequently, £1720, the property of Edward Capell, who bequeathed it to Trinity College in 1779. Condition: good; untouched by modern binder; last three leaves slightly injured by damp.

IV. CAMBRIDGE. — THE MASTER AND FELLOWS OF TRINITY COLLEGE. Size: 12\(\frac{3}{4}\) in. × 8\(\frac{1}{4}\) in. History: acquired £1840 by the Rev. William Grylls, of Polsloe Park, Exeter, who bequeathed it to Trinity College in 1863. Condition: re-bound in morocco; the three first and last leaves slightly repaired.

[The United Kingdom: Private Owners]

V. THE BARONESS BURDETT-COUTTS, 1 STRATTON STREET, LONDON. Size: 12\(\frac{3}{4}\) in. × 8\(\frac{1}{4}\) in. History: acquired £1800 by Daniel Moore, F.S.A., who left it to William H. Booth. Booth bequeathed it to John Gage Rokewode, the antiquary, who sold it £1840 to the London bookseller, William Pickering; it was acquired of Pickering by George Daniel in 1841 for £100, and was purchased at Daniel's sale in 1864 by the present owner for £716 2s., the highest price any copy had then reached. ( Cf. Dibdin's Library Companion, pp. 809-10.) Condition: very clean; bound by Baumgarten and kept in wooden carved casket, made from a fragment of Herne's Oak in Windsor Park, which was presented to the Baroness by Queen Victoria after the tree fell in 1863.

VI. EARL OF CARYSFORT, ELTON HALL, PETERBOROUGH. Size: 12\(\frac{3}{4}\) in. × 8\(\frac{1}{4}\) in. History: acquired £1870 by Frederic Ouvry, F.S.A., at sale of whose library in 1882 it was bought for £420 by Bernard Quaritch. Quaritch advertised it for sale in Athenaeum 1888 for £880. Purchased of Quaritch by present owner in 1888. Condition: clean; bound in red morocco by Clarke and Bedford £1860; preliminary pages re-arranged.

VII. THE EARL OF CRAWFORD, K.T., HAIGH HALL, LANCASHIRE. Size: 12\(\frac{3}{4}\) in. × 8\(\frac{1}{4}\) in. History: acquired by Earl of Charlemont £1820; sold at the sale of that earl's library in August—September, 1855, for £457 to F. S. Ellis, who sold it two months later for £225 to the eighth Earl of Crawford, the present owner's father. Condition: good, despite signs of use; bound in old red morocco; fly-leaf mounted; last figure 3 of date on title in facsimile. V.
VIII. Captain George Lindsay Holford, C.I.E., M.V.O., Dorchester House, Park Lane, London. Size: 12½ in. x 8½ in. History: possibly the 'very fine copy' sold in 1827 at the sale of James Boaden's library for £26 15s. 6d. Purchased c. 1840 by Robert Stayner Holford, present owner's father, for £250. Condition: clean throughout; title-page mounted on a guard at the back.

IX. Alfred Henry Huth, Esq., Biddeston Manor, Andover. Size: 12½ in. x 8½ in. History: purchased c. 1792 by Henry Constantine Jennings, a well-known collector (1771-1819), for 70 guineas of Thomas Payne, the bookseller; acquired c. 1819 by George Hibbert, of Pordland Place, London, at whose sale in 1829 it passed for £85 15s. to John Wilks. In 1847, Wilks sold it for £155 to John Dunn Gardner, at whose sale in 1834 it was purchased by Henry Huth, the present owner's father, for £250. Condition: clean; in 18th century Russia leather binding; small portion of margin of the title made up.

X. Bernard Buchanan MacGeorge, Esq., Glasgow. Size: 12½ in. x 8½ in. History: long in the French family of Belleroche, which settled for a time in England after the revocation of the edict of Nantes. Subsequently owned by a member of the family residing near Brussels; sold by him at Christie's Sale-rooms in London in July, 1899, to present owner for £1,700. Condition: excellent; in old binding; with 17th century MS. notes of value (see Athenæum, August 19, 1899); few corners of margin torn off. The leaf in 'Hamlet,' which should be numbered 277-8, is in this copy wrongly numbered 273-8, is uncorrected, and has numerous exceptional typographical errors.

[The United States of America: Public Institutions]

XI. Boston.—The Public Library—The Barton Collection. Size: 13½ in. x 8½ in. History: acquired in 1845 of Thomas Rodd, the London bookseller, for £110, by T. P. Barton, of New York. Bequeathed by Barton to the Boston Public Library in 1876. (Cf. Description of a copy of the First Folio Edition of Shakespeare, now in the collection of T. P. Barton, New York; 1866—twenty copies printed privately.) Condition: clean, unwashed; bound in red morocco by Charles Lewis for Rodd in 1845; some pages repaired. Rodd told Barton that only three copies—the Grenville copy, the Bridgewater House copy, and the Baroness Burdett-Coutts' Daniel copy—were in a superior condition. Two cancelled leaves of 'As You Like It' form part of the volume, and each bears the same erroneous numbering 203-194. Two corrected leaves of 'As You Like It' (pp. 193-4 and 203-4) were inserted by Rodd from another genuine copy in 1845 to accompany the cancelled proofs of these leaves, which alone originally formed part of this copy. (Cf. Nos. XXIX and CIII, infra.)

[The United States of America: Private Owners]

XIII. Charles Scribner, Esq., New York. Size: 13½ in. x 8½ in. History: owned c. 1860 by the twelfth Lord Dormer, of Grove Park, Warwick, who died 1900, leaving it to his daughter, Mrs. H. C. V. Hunter, of Mawley Hall, Shropshire. Sold at Christie's to Bernard Quaritch, jun., July 16, 1901, for £1,720. Subsequently purchased of Quaritch by present owner. Condition: clean; bound by Bedford; bottom corner of fly-leaf and last three leaves slightly repaired.

XIV. William Augustus White, Esq., Brooklyn, New York. Size: 12½ in. x 7½ in. History: acquired by Sir William Tite c. 1830. Sold at the Tite sale in 1874 for £440. It subsequently passed to America, where it has been owned successively by Eugenie N. Robinson of New York, by Mr. Cooke of Rhode Island, and by Brayton Eves of New York, at the sale of whose library in 1891 it fetched $4,200 (£840). It was acquired by present owner in 1892. [Winson, No. 11.] Condition: good; re-bound by Bedford; the preliminary matter does not follow the ordinary arrangement.
THE CENSUS

CLASS I

Division B (in good condition, but with occasional leaves either supplied from another copy of the First Folio or repaired, i.e. mended, mounted, or inlaid)

[The United Kingdom: Public Institutions]

XV. LONDON.—VICTORIA AND ALBERT MUSEUM, SOUTH KENSINGTON—DYCE AND FORSTER LIBRARY. Size: 12½ in. x 8½ in. History: acquired c. 1840 by the Rev. Alexander Dyce, who bequeathed it to the Museum, 1869. Condition: good, but pages much cut down in binding; fly-leaf and title mounted and slightly repaired; some corners of leaves elsewhere repaired.

XVI. LONDON.—TRUSTEES OF THE SIR JOHN SOANE MUSEUM, LINCOLN’S INN FIELDS. Size: 11⅛ in. x 7½ in., but inlaid in large paper 15 in. x 10 in. History: possibly the property of John Henderson the actor (1747-85), who disposed of an inlaid copy to Isaac Reed the commentator, at whose sale (1807) it fetched £38. The Soane copy was acquired c. 1807 by John Phillip Kemble the actor, and was sold at Kemble’s sale in 1822 for £112 7s. to James Boswell the younger. Purchased at Boswell’s sale in June, 1835, by John Britton, on behalf of Sir John Soane, for £105. Condition: washed white and inlaid; sumptuously bound, with inserted blank leaves at beginning and end, by Mackinlay for Boswell, at a cost of 60 guineas.

[The United Kingdom: Private Owners]

XVIII. MARK BEAFOY, ESQ., J.P., 87 SOUTH LAMBETH ROAD, LONDON. Size: 13 in. x 8½ in. History: the property in the 17th century of the Shakerley family of Cheshire, into which married Sir Watkin Williams Wynn, third baronet; Sir Watkin’s second son, the Right Hon. Charles Watkin Williams Wynn (1775-1870), owned the copy till his death. It was purchased by James Beaufoy, grandfather of present owner, for £141 10s., Feb. 28, 1871. Condition: clean; one leaf ‘King John,’ pp. 11-12, untrimmed; bound c. 1780 by Roger Payne, whose detailed invoice is preserved in the volume; six leaves in comedies, pp. 169-180, supplied from another copy and carefully inlaid; fly-leaf and last leaf inlaid.

XIX. ABEL BUCKLEY, ESQ., RYECROFT HALL, NEAR MANCHESTER. Size: 12½ in. x 8½ in. History: apparently purchased c. 1660 by Col. John Lane, of Bentley Hall, Staffordshire, Charles II’s protector. Subsequently in possession of Col. Lane’s descendant, Col. John Lane, of King’s Bromley, whose book-plate designed by Hogarth is inserted. At sale of the Lane library, in April 1836, it was purchased for £164 17s. by the third Earl of Gosford. The third Earl’s son, the present Earl, disposed of it to James Toovey, the London bookseller, in 1884 for £470. It was soon afterwards sold through another bookseller to the present owner. Condition: clean throughout; bound in red morocco by Roger Payne; fly-leaf and title mounted; two leaves repaired.

XX. THE BARONESS BURDETT-COUTTS, 1 STRATTON STREET, LONDON. Size: 12½ in. x 8 in. History: acquired c. 1670 by Ralph Sheldon (1623-1684), of Weston Manor House, Long Compton, Warwickshire. At the sale of the Sheldon library at Long Compton in 1781, it was purchased by Mr. King, a bookseller of Moorfields, with two other unnamed books, for £2 4s., somewhat dubious practices being attributed to the bookselling bidders. Condition: fairly clean; old binding re-backed; the arms of the Sheldon family stamped on the sides; fly-leaf re-backed; title-page title-page slightly repaired. A peculiar feature is a mutilated cancelled leaf containing concluding lines of 'Romeo and Juliet' on front and opening lines of 'Troylus' at back; this leaf, half of which is torn away, precedes a normal leaf afterwards inserted, which supplies prologue of 'Troylus' on the front and opening page of that play at the back. (Cf. No. XXXVII, infra.)

XXI. THE DUKE OF DEVONSHIRE, K.G., CHATSWORTH, DERBYSHIRE. Size: 13⅛ in. x 8½ in. History: at the sale of the library of John Watson Reed, an attorney of Ely Place, Holborn (d. 1790), it was purchased by the great book-collector, the third Duke of Roxburghe, for £25 14s. At the Duke of Roxburghe's sale in 1812 it was bought for £100 by the sixth Duke of Devonshire, cousin of the eighth Duke, the present owner. Condition: fly-leaf guarded; title mended and guarded; portrait on title inlaid. Seven leaves in the tragedies, 'Othello', pp. 311-24, sigs. f (4), g (3), h (7), t-i, 2 (misprinted 3), 3 (4), seem to have been supplied from a shorter original copy; the lower margin of these pages has been extended by the attachment of a strip of paper from ¼ inch to an inch in depth. There is the irregular reading on page 333 of Tragedies ('Othello'), 'And hell gnaw his bones.' (Cf. LXXI, XCI, and CXXIX.)

XXII. EARL HOWE, GOSPALL, LEICESTERSHIRE. Size: 13 in. x 8½ in. History: acquired c 1750 by Charles Jennens, the virtuoso and friend of Handel, who in 1773 bequeathed it, with his property at Gospall, to William Penn Asherton Curzon, ancestor of the present owner. Condition: occasionally stained by water; fly-leaf, title, and preliminary leaves mounted or mended.

XXIII. ALFRED LAW, ESQ., J.P., HONRESFIELD, LITTLEBOROUGH, NEAR MANCHESTER. Size: 12½ in. x 8½ in. History: acquired c 1830 by Frederick Perkins (1780-1860), of Chipstead, Kent, brother of better-known collector Henry Perkins, and like him partner in the brewery of Barclay, Perkins & Co. Purchased by Quaritch on behalf of William Law, present owner's brother, who died 1901, for £415 at sale of Frederick Perkins' library, July 1889. Condition: bound in blue morocco c 1850; fly-leaf and title mounted; last leaf and few middle leaves slightly repaired.

XXIV. GODFREY LOCKER-LAMPSON, ESQ., ROWPANT, SUSSEX. Size: 13 in. x 8½ in. History: acquired c 1870 by present owner's father, Frederick Locker-Lampson. Condition: clean throughout; fly-leaf supplied from another original. (Cf. Frederick Locker-Lampson's My Confidences, 1896, pp. 203-216.) The pagination at the end of 'Midsummer Night's Dream' and the beginning of 'Merchant of Venice' has exceptional irregularities.

XXV. WILLIAM PHELPS, ESQ., J.P., CHESTAL, DURSLEY, GLOUCESTERSHIRE. Size: 12½ in. x 8½ in. History: acquired c 1820 by John Delafeld Phelps, of Lincoln's Inn, on whose death in Dec. 1842 it passed to his nephew, William John Phelps, who, dying in Sept. 1881, was succeeded in his property by his nephew, the present owner. Condition: very good; fly-leaf, title, and last leaf repaired.

XXVI. R. J. WALKER, ESQ., ST. PAUL'S SCHOOL, LONDON. Size: 13⅛ in. x 8½ in. History: possibly owned by Robert Heathcote c 1780. Acquired c 1802 by John Dent, M.P., Leicester, partner in Child's Bank (d. 1826). At sale of Dent's library, the copy sold for £150 5s. to Henry Perkins the brewer (1778-1855). At the sale of Perkins' library, June 1873, it was bought for £385 (lot 877) by Thomas Hayes, bookseller of Manchester, who advertised it at £715 in August 1873. Purchased c 1873 by present owner's maternal grandfather, Richard Johnson, of Fallowfield, Manchester. Condition: good; well bound in red morocco by Charles Lewis; fly-leaf guarded; title guarded, mounted, and rubricated; two last leaves guarded. 'Winter's Tale' wrongly bound between 'Troylus' and 'Coriolanus.'

[The United States of America: Public Institutions]

XXVII. WASHINGTON, D. C.—LIBRARY OF CONGRESS. Size: 12½ in. x 8½ in. History: former owners were J. Broadhead (c. 1820, cf. Dibdin's Library Companion, p. 815) and Theodore H. Broadhead, whose book-plate it bears. Purchased at Swetthys' for £25, Dec. 1889, for the Congress Library. Condition: good; few pages mended; fly-leaf and title mounted; leaf in Histories (pp. 121-2) supplied from smaller copy.

XXVIII.
XXVIII. NEW YORK.—PUBLIC LIBRARY—LENOX COLLECTION. Size: 12½ in. x 8½ in. History: owned in 17th century by R. Chapell, whose autograph it bears. Acquired by James Lenox, of New York, c. 1860, and presented to the public with the Lenox library in 1870. [Winsor, No. 9] Condition: clean; bound by Bedford; fly-leaf and title both genuine but inlaid; a few letters in fly-leaf supplied in Indian ink; margin of last leaf mended.

XXIX. NEW YORK.—PUBLIC LIBRARY—LENOX COLLECTION. Size: 12.75 in. x 8½ in. History: acquired c. 1800 by John Lichfield of London, who described it in the Cabinet or Monthly Report of Polite Literature, 1807; afterwards in the library of James Baker of London, at whose sale in May, 1835, it was bought for James Lenox of New York for £163 16s. [Winsor, No. 8] A few leaves, including the title-page with mutilated date 1622, are from another copy on sale about 1820 by J. & A. Arch, booksellers of Cornhill; this second copy was acquired by J. O. Halliwell-Phillipps c. 1850, and disposed of by him through John Russell Smith c. 1855 to John Cole Nicholl (1823-1894) of Merthyr Mawr, from whom Lenox procured it c. 1860. Cf. James Lenox's articles in Historical Magazine, 1861, p. 224, and American Bibliopolist, June and July, 1870; Contributions to a Catalogue of the Lenox Library, No. V, Works of Shakespeare, pp. 32-33; Henry Stevens' Recollections of James Lenox, 1880, pp. 104-8, 139-40; F. S. Ellis in Quaritch's Dictionary of English Book-Collectors, 1897, pp. 10-12; also Mr. W. H. Fleming in Shakespeareana, Philadelphia, March, 1888, pp. 103-6. Condition: good; bound by Charles Lewis. There are duplicate fly-leaves and title-pages supplied from the Nicholl copy. One fly-leaf is perfect, the other is libelously inlaid. The inserted title from the Nicholl copy, though genuine, is inlaid, and the concluding figure in the date 1623 has been mutilated so as to resemble 1622; the other title has Harris's facsimile portrait. The last leaf is mounted on guards and other leaves have undergone repair. Two abnormal uncorrected leaves of 'As You Like It' precede the normal corrected leaves which are pagged respectively 193-4 and 203-4. The same curious feature characterizes the Barton-Boston copy, No. XI, supra, and the untraced Milner-Vertue copy, No. CIII, infra.

XXX. NEW YORK.—COLUMBIA UNIVERSITY. Size: 12½ in. x 8½ in. History: acquired by S. Whitney Phoenix, of New York, c. 1860, and presented by him to Columbia University, 1883. [Winsor, No. 12] Condition: clean; title inlaid and slightly restored; the fly-leaf and some twenty-one leaves have been repaired.

XXXI. MISS MARY EDGECCUMBE BLATCHFORD, CAMBRIDGE, MASSACHUSETTS. Size: 12½ in.x 8 in. History: acquired by Francis Calley Gray, of Boston, U.S.A., c. 1836; inherited by F. C. Gray's nephew, William Gray, of Boston, 1876; purchased by present owner 1879. [Winsor, No. 2] Condition: good, though bearing signs of age; bound by Hayday. Portrait inlaid in title; last leaf mended, with corner and inner margin supplied; a few margins elsewhere repaired. Preliminary pages re-arranged.

XXXII. E. DWIGHT CHURCH, ESQ., BROOKLYN, NEW YORK. Size: 13½ in. x 8½ in. History: having passed through the hands of Bernard Quaritch of London, and Dodd, Mead & Co., booksellers of New York, it became the property of present owner Nov. 28, 1888. Condition: fly-leaf, title (with rubricated border) and two preliminary leaves supplied from smaller original. 'Troylus and Cressida' mislaid by binder after 'Timon of Athens.'

XXXIII. JAMES W. ELLSWORTH, ESQ., NEW YORK. Size: 12½ in. x 8½ in. History: possibly identical with the copy acquired by Samuel Addington, of London, for £360 in 1870, and sold at the sale of Samuel Addington's library at Sotheby's in May 1886, to F. S. Ellis for £280; imported from London to New York by Dodd, Mead & Co. in June 1886; acquired by Augustin Daly, the theatrical manager of New York, in 1888. Purchased by present owner at the Daly sale in New York, Mar. 20, 1900, for $1,000 (£1,080). Condition: good; bound by Bedford; fly-leaf inlaid; title and last leaf partly re-bordered; preliminary pages re-arranged.

XXXIV. MRS. GEORGE L. HARRISON, PHILADELPHIA. Size: 13½ in. x 8½ in. History: purchased of James Toovey, the London bookseller, in 1877 by Mr. C. C. Harrison, now Provost.
THE CENSUS

Provoz of Pennsylvania University, for his father, George L. Harrison of Philadelphia, who died in 1855, and whose widow is the present owner. Condition: fly-leaf inlaid; title mounted with inlaid portrait; preliminary leaves and first two leaves of 'Tempest' inlaid and guarded.

XXXV. ROBERT HEE, ESQ., NEW YORK. Size: 13 3/4 in. x 8 3/4 in. History: acquired c. 1790 by Sir John Thorold, ninth baronet, of Syston Park, Grantham. At the sale of the Syston Park library by its founder's great-grandson, Sir John Henry Thorold, twelfth baronet, in Dec. 1884, this copy fetched £590 and passed to its present owner. (Cf. Mr. W. H. Fleming, in Shakespeareiana, Philadelphia, March 1888, pp. 113-114.) Condition: unwashed and clean throughout; some leaves untrimmed. Bound by Roger Payne in red morocco. Fly-leaf and title inlaid; some letters in the first, second, and last lines of title restored; lower margin of last leaf slightly restored.

XXXVI. CHARLES C. KALBFLEISCH, ESQ., NEW YORK. Size: 13 3/4 in. x 8 3/4 in. History: acquired c. 1850 by Col. Robert Tait, of Edinburgh. Purchased at the sale of Tait's library in London, Feb. 20, 1878, for £390 by Mr. Charles H. Kalbfleisch, of New York, the present owner's father. Condition: good. Apparently bound by Roger Payne. Fly-leaf and title inlaid; last leaf re-backed.

XXXVII. J. PIERPONT MORGAN, ESQ., NEW YORK. Size: 13 3/4 in. x 8 3/4 in. History: said to be originally c. 1623 in library of Robert Sidney, second Earl of Leicester (1595-1677). The arms of this nobleman are stamped on cover. Acquired c. 1860 by Leonard Laurie Hartley, and sold at sale of his library, May 3, 1886, to James Toovey, the London bookseller, who carefully restored it. It was purchased with James Toovey's private library by the present owner in 1899. Condition: the original leather binding bears the Earl of Leicester's arms; it was labelled 'Shakespeare's Works, 1623,' and had remains of old silk tape strings. Title-page is from another original, and has been introduced into the volume since the Hartley sale. (Cf. The Hartley Sale Catalogue, 1886.) Fly-leaf which belongs to the copy has been repaired; the leaf containing prologue and first page of 'Troylus' is from a smaller original. A cancelled leaf at beginning of Tragedies section, forming an original part of the copy, contains the last lines of 'Romeo and Juliet' on its reverse page (numbered 77 with a signature which is stated to read g g s), and the opening lines of 'Troylus' on the reverse page. (Cf. No. XX supra.) The sigs. of 'Troylus' differ from those in other copies.

XXXVIII. J. PIERPONT MORGAN, ESQ., NEW YORK. Size: unascertained; said to be the smallest copy known. History: acquired c. 1850 by the Duke of Sussex and sold with his library by auction, Aug. 1847, for £36. Purchased of Quaritch c. 1870 by Robert Lenox Kennedy, of New York. Sold in 1889, with R. L. Kennedy's library, to Lenox Library, New York, but disposed of as duplicate to Theodore Irvine, of Oswego, whose library was acquired by present owner in 1901. [Winsor, No. 10.] Condition: title partly in facsimile. Described by the bookseller Rodd in 1847 as 'cut to the quick and otherwise objectionable.' Said in the Duke of Sussex's catalogue to have two leaves torn. Recently reported to be generally sound.

XXXIX. WILLIAM AUGUSTUS READ, ESQ., NEW YORK. Size: 13 3/4 in. x 8 3/4 in. History: apparently bought at a miscellaneous sale at Sotheby's by Messrs. Ellis & Elvey, London, June 1892, for £208. Purchased Oct. 1892 of Messrs. Ellis & Elvey by Mr. Marshall C. Lefferts, of New York. Subsequently sold to Mr. George H. Richmond, bookseller of New York, who disposed of it to present owner. Condition: clean; unwashed; bound by Charles Lewis; fly-leaf inlaid; lower margin of title mended and imprint supplied in facsimile.

XL. PRESENT OWNER UNTRACED.—THE BAKER-WILBRAHAM COPY. Size: 13 3/4 in. x 8 in. History: acquired c. 1790 by Mrs. Anne Damer, the sculptress and friend of Horace Walpole. Mrs. Damer's book-plate, designed by Agnes Berry 1793, is inserted. Apparently after her death in 1828 it passed to Sir Frederick Francis Baker, second baronet, of Lovettor, Toines, by whose grandson, G. B. Baker-Wilbraham, Esq., it was sold March 20, 1902, at Sotheby's. It was then acquired by Messrs. Pickering & Chatto, booksellers of London, for £20. Condition: somewhat worn; bound by Roger Payne; fly-leaf inlaid and rubricated; title mended and mounted; last leaf backed and slightly damaged.

XLIV. LONDON. — TRUSTEES OF THE BRITISH MUSEUM [Press-mark C. 21. e. 16]. Size: 11 3/12 in. x 7 7/12 in. History: acquired c. 1770 for the library of George III and presented to the British Museum with that King's library by George IV in 1823. Condition: occasional stains; generally clean; fly-leaf verses missing; tissue paper pasted over both sides of every leaf; red ink lines ruled at sides of title-page.

XLVI. BLACKBURN. — STONYHURST COLLEGE. Size: 12 3/4 in. x 8 in. History: possibly acquired c. 1623 by Thomas, second Lord Arundell of Wardour (1623-1643), whose mother was sister of the third Earl of Southampton, Shakespeare's patron. It seems to have descended to Henry Benedict, eleventh Lord Arundell of Wardour, who presented it in 1837 to Stonyhurst College. Condition: good; cut down by binder; bound in Russia leather; fly-leaf, and two preliminary leaves ('To the memorie' and 'The Works') wanting; last leaf repaired in facsimile.

XLVII. DURHAM. — THE CATHEDRAL LIBRARY. Size: 12 3/4 in. x 8 1/4 in. History: acquired by John Cosin, Bishop of Durham, c. 1630, and bequeathed by him to the clergy of his diocese 1672. Condition: good, but well used; re-bound in morocco by Tucker, 1845; fly-leaf missing; title and last leaf mounted.

XLVIII. MANCHESTER. — THE JOHN RyLANDS LIBRARY. Size: 12 3/4 in. x 8 1/4 in. History: said to have been owned c. 1730 by Lewis Theobald (1688-1744). Acquired c. 1744 by Martin Folkes, F.R.S. (1690-1754). Sold at Folkes' sale Feb. 21, 1755, for £3 3s. to George Stevens, who made it over to the second Earl Spencer, c. 1790. It was sold to Mrs. John Rylands by the present Lord Spencer with the Althorp Library in 1893. Condition: very good; well bound by Walthers. The preliminary leaves 'To the memorie of the deceased Authour' and 'The Works' missing. Fly-leaf mounted.

XLIX. OXFORD. — THE PROVOST AND FELLOWS OF ORIEL COLLEGE. Size: 13 3/4 in. x 8 3/4 in. History: acquired c. 1730 by Edward, Lord Leigh, who bequeathed it to Oriel College in 1786. Condition: good. Two leaves (pp. 73-6, sigs. g g 2) in Tragedies ('Romeo and Juliet') are missing and present a hiatus of 461 lines in text. In complete copies these two leaves are insertions before a regular quire of six leaves (sigs. G g, G g 2, G G 3).

LII. THE EARL OF ELLESMERE, BRIDGEWATER HOUSE, LONDON. Size: 13 in. x 8½ in. History: this copy was probably purchased on its publication in 1623 by John Egerton, first Earl of Bridgewater, for whose children Milton wrote 'Arcades' and 'Comus.' It is noticed in the catalogue of the library of the second Earl of Bridgewater (1622-1686) and in the trust created by the last Duke of Bridgewater before his death in 1803. The duke's trust property is now enjoyed by the present Earl of Ellesmere. Condition: original binding; clean, with some 17th century MS. notes. Two preliminary leaves ('To the great Variety of Readers,' and Ben Jonson's poem 'To the memory of . . . Shakespeare') missing. Eight leaves supplied from other shorter copies of the original folio, viz.: 'The Comedie of Errors,' pp. 97-100; 'Much adoe about Nothing,' pp. 105-10; Prologue and first page of 'Troylus and Cressida,' two (unnumbered) leaves in the same play with the signatures 772 and 773.

LIII. FRANCIS ALEXANDER NEWDIGATE, ESQ., M.P., ARBURY, NUNEATON, WARWICKSHIRE. Size: 13½ in. x 8½ in. History: this copy has been the property of the present owner's family at least since 1660. An inscription dated June 25, 1660, describes it as belonging to Sir Richard Newdegate, the first baronet of Arbury. It has the book-plate of Sir Richard Newdegate, the fourth baronet, dated 1709, and some words in the handwriting of Sir Richard's son, Sir Roger Newdegate, the fifth baronet (1729-1806). On the death of Lieutenant-General Sir Edward Newdigate-Newdegate, K.C.B., in August, 1802, this copy passed with the Arbury estates to his nephew, the present owner. Condition: good; re-bound about 1750. Two preliminary leaves ('To the memorie of the deceased Author' and 'The Workes of William Shakespeare') missing, and a hole burnt in fifth leaf of 'Troylus and Cressida.'

On his death in 1805 the copy was purchased by the College for 22½ guineas. Condition: well used; fly-leaf and title supplied in facsimile; some leaves repaired; title and preliminary leaves inlaid.

LXI. ETON. — THE PROVOST AND FELLOWS OF ETON COLLEGE. Size: 12 3/8 in. × 8 3/4 in. History: acquired c. 1781 by Anthony Morris Storer, who, dying in 1799, bequeathed it to Eton College. Condition: good, though carefully mended and re-bound; no fly-leaf; letterpress of title in facsimile; portrait inlaid; most of the preliminary leaves inlaid; last leaf inlaid.

LXII. GLASGOW. — THE UNIVERSITY OF. Size: 13 in. × 8 3/4 in. History: apparently acquired c. 1780 by the fifth Earl of Inchiquin, afterwards Marquis of Thomond (in the Irish peerage), of Taplow Court, Buckinghamshire, a friend of Malone. Acquired c. 1870 by J. O. Halliwell-Phillipps, from whom it passed in 1876 to William Euing of Glasgow. Euing bequeathed it in 1887 to the University. Condition: fair; fly-leaf, title, and last three leaves in facsimile. A few pages seem to belong to a shorter copy.

LXIV. OXFORD. — THE PROVOST AND FELLOWS OF QUEEN’S COLLEGE. Size: 12 3/8 in. × 8 3/4 in. History: acquired by David Garrick c. 1760 of Thomas Payne, the London bookseller, for £1 16s. Purchased at the sale of Garrick’s library on his widow’s death in 1823 by Thomas Jolley, F.S.A., for £34 2s. 6d. At the Jolley sale in 1844 it fetched £86. Bought by the present owners c. 1830 through C. J. Stewart, a London bookseller. Both Garrick’s and Jolley’s book-plates appear in the volume. Described by Dibdin as ‘not a fine or perfect copy.’ Condition: fair; re-bound in morocco. Fly-leaf supplied in Harris facsimile while in Jolley’s possession. Title and few other leaves slightly mended.

LXV. OXFORD. — THE WARDEN AND FELLOWS OF WADHAM COLLEGE. Size: 11 3/8 in. × 7 3/8 in. History: Jacob Pendervis was an early owner. Acquired c. 1740 by Richard Warner, of Woodford Row, Essex, the Shakespearean scholar, who bequeathed it in 1775 to Wadham College. Condition: somewhat discoloured; re-bound; fly-leaf, title, and first three preliminary leaves wanting; last leaf in facsimile.

History: acquired c 1800 by George, Prince of Wales, afterwards George IV, for his library at Carlton House, which on his death in 1830 became the property of the reigning sovereigns. Condition: clean, but the whole is inlaid; no fly-leaf; the title and last leaf supplied from later folios.

LXVII. JOHN T. ADAMS, ESQ., SNAITHFIELD, ECCLESALL, SHEFFIELD. Size: 12¾ in. x 8½ in. History: acquired by present owner of Bernard Quaritch in 1877. Condition: good; bound by Bedford; fly-leaf, title, and two preliminary leaves supplied in facsimile.

LXIX. LORD AMHERST OF HACKNEY, DIDLYNGLTON, NORFOLK. Size: 12¼ in. x 7½ in. History: apparently acquired by the Duke of Roxburghe, c 1780, and presented by the duke, on acquiring the superior copy (now the Duke of Devonshire's, No. XXI supra), to the bookseller George Nicol, of Pall Mall (cf. Dibdin, Library Companion, p. 815). Acquired by Bernard Quaritch before 1869, when he advertised it for sale for £165. Sold by Quaritch to present owner c 1875. Condition: fair; bound in 18th century morocco. Fly-leaf and two preliminary leaves—containing respectively the verses 'To the memory of the deceased Author' and the sub-title 'The Workes'—in facsimile. Title, other preliminary leaves, and last leaf, mended and mounted.

LXX. LORD AMHERST OF HACKNEY. Size: 12½ in. x 7½ in. History: acquired c 1885 of Quaritch. Condition: fair; in early binding of panelled calf; no title nor last leaf; top edges of preliminary leaves cut by binder. There are, in 17th century handwriting on blank end-leaf, three epitaphs on Shakespeare, two respectively from the gravestone and monument in Stratford-on-Avon Church, the third being unknown elsewhere.

LXXII. MRS. MARGARET BULLEY, MARSTON HILL, FAIRFORD. Size: 12½ in. x 8½ in. History: acquired in 1870 of Joseph Lilly, the London bookseller, by the Rev. Dr. Bulley, President of Magdalen College, Oxford (d 1883), husband of the present owner. Condition: good; bound in red morocco; fly-leaf and title supplied in facsimile; last leaf repaired.

LXXIII. MRS. WAKEFIELD CHRISTIE-MILLER, BRITWELL COURT, BUCKINGHAMSHIRE. Size: 12½ in. x 8 in. History: apparently acquired c 1790 by Colonel Thomas Stanley (1749-1816), of Cross Hall, Lancashire. At Stanley's sale in 1813 it passed for £37 16s. to John North, of East Aeton, at whose sale in 1819 it fetched £39 18s., being bought by a bookseller named Jarvis. It was subsequently c 1830 the property of E. Poynder, of Hawkhurst, at whose sale June 5, 1834, it was bought by Samuel Christie-Miller, of Britwell, for £68, and from him it passed to present owner. Condition: clean; bound by Roger Payne; fly-leaf inlaid; letterpress of title supplied in reprint of 18th century; portrait genuine; last leaf re-backed.

LXXIV. VISCOUNT COBH, HAGLEY HALL, STOURBRIDGE. Size: 12½ in. x 8 in. History: apparently the property c 1660 of Sir Thomas Hervey, Knt., M.P. for Bury St. Edmonds, and his wife Isabella. Owned subsequently by their son John Hervey, first Earl of Bristol, and by that earl's son, John Lord Hervey of Eckworth. Acquired c 1810 by William Henry, third Baron Lyttelton, grandfather of the present owner. Condition: fairly good; unwashed; fly-leaf, letterpress of title (the inlaid portrait being genuine), and the last two leaves supplied in facsimile by Bart.

LXXV. SIR ALFRED ERASMUS DRYDEN, BARt., CANONS ASHBY, NORTHAMPTONSHIRE. Size: 12½ in. x 8½ in. History: at one time the property of Allen Paleston, from whom it passed to Sir John Dryden, first baronet of a new creation, who died in 1797. It has since belonged belonged to Sir John's descendants. Frederick Locker-Lampson in My Confidences (1896, pp. 204 sq.) describes the copy and his vain effort to purchase it c 1876 of its late owner, Sir Henry Dryden (d. 1900), the present owner's brother. Sir Henry figures in Locker-Lampson's somewhat acid narrative as 'Zachary Dene.' Condition: very good; title supplied in photo-lithographic facsimile; fly-leaf genuine though worn.

LXXVIII. LORD GLANUSK, GLANUSK PARK, CRICKHOWELL. Size: 12¼ in. x 8½ in. History: apparently acquired in 17th century by the Vaughan family of Trebarad. Gwyn Vaughan of this family married a daughter of William Lucy, Bishop of St. David's (1660-1707), a grandson of the famous Sir Thomas Lucy of Charlecote. The book passed with the Vaughan's house at Trebarad in 1826 to Sir Joseph Bailey, first baronet, grandfather of the present owner. Condition: re-bound and repaired in 1878; fly-leaf and portrait supplied in facsimile; some pages mended.

LXXX. THE REV. F. E. HUTCHINSON, TISBURY VICARAGE, SALISBURY. Size: 13 in. x 8½ in. History: apparently in the possession c 1650 of the Hutchinson family of Owethorpe, Northampshire, of which Col. John Hutchinson, the parliamentarian, was a member. The copy bears autograph c 1680 of Col. John Hutchinson's niece Olivera, daughter of his sister and his husband, Charles Cotton the author. (Olivera Cotton married George Stanhope, Dean of Canterbury, and died in 1707.) Another of Col. John Hutchinson's nieces, Elizabeth Hutchinson, Olivera Cotton's first cousin, also signed her name c 1680; she was afterwards successively Countess of Kennedy and Countess of Raglan. The book subsequently c 1860 passed to a descendant of the Owethorpe family, Captain Charles Hutchinson, R.N., the father of the present owner. Condition: fly-leaf, title, all preliminary leaves (save 'To the memory of the deceased Author,' 'The Workes,' and 'The Catalogue'), the two opening leaves of 'The Tempest,' &c., and the last leaf supplied in facsimile.

LXXXI. W. G. LACY, ESQ., 52 NORTH SIDE, WANDSWORTH COMMON, S.W. Size: 12 in. x 8 in. History: acquired c 1880 by Myles Birken Foster, the landscape artist, at whose sale in 1894 it passed to Bernard Quaritch for £255, and thence to the present owner. Condition: clean; bound by Bedford; parts of fly-leaf, title, last leaf, and other leaves in facsimile or mended (cf. Birken Foster's Sale Catalogue, 1894).

LXXXII. SIR EDWIN DURNING LAWRENCE, BART., M.P. Size: 12¾ in. x 8¼ in. History: possibly c 1800 in the library of Sir Peter Thompson, and sold on its dispersal in 1815 to Messrs. Longman of London for £41; apparently described as on sale by Messrs. Longman in 1821; it has book-plate of William Hartree, of Lewisham, c 1830. Sold in 1890 at sale of Hartree's library for £115. Subsequently acquired by the present owner. Condition: fairly good; fly-leaf in facsimile; title repaired. At page 333 of Tragedies ('Othello'), the first line has the irregular reading 'And hell gnaw his bones'; cf. Nos. XXI, XCII, and CXXXIX.

LXXXIII. LORD LEIGH, STONELEIGH ABBEY, WARWICKSHIRE. Size: 12¼ in. x 8½ in. History: purchased by the present owner's father, Chandos, first Lord Leigh, c 1832, of Henry George Bohn, the bookseller. Condition: generally clean; fly-leaf in facsimile; title-page made up with inlaid portrait. Pp. 155-6, 257-8 of the Tragedies supplied from another copy and inlaid. Portions of last three pages supplied in facsimile.

LXXXIV. JOHN MURRAY, ESQ., 50 ALBEMARLE STREET, LONDON. Size: 12¾ in. x 8¼ in. History: acquired c 1800 by Edward Knight, of Portland Place; purchased for £29 18s. 6d. after Knight's death in 1821 by John Murray, the eminent publisher, grandfather of of the present owner. Condition: slightly worn and spotted; bound by Roger Payne; fly-leaf, letterpress of title, and last leaf in facsimile. Some preliminary leaves and two leaves in ‘Cymbeline’ supplied from Second Folio.

LXXXIV. THE DUKE OF NEWCASTLE, CLUMBER HOUSE, WORKSOP. Size: 12 ¾ in. x 8 ¼ in. History: probably acquired c. 1740 by Thomas Pelham-Holles, Duke of Newcastle, the Prime Minister. Condition: fly-leaf inlaid; title with inlaid portrait mounted and rubricated; last leaf frayed and mounted; preliminary leaves re-arranged.

LXXXV. MRS. J. W. PEASE, PENDOWER, NEWCASTLE-UPON-TYNE. Size: 12 in. x 8 in. History: acquired c. 1850 by the Earl of Aylesford. Sold at the sale of the Earl of Aylesford’s library, March 1888, for £200, and acquired by present owner’s husband, who died in 1901. Condition: fly-leaf from Second Folio; title mounted.

LXXXVI. THE REV. ROBERT H. ROBERTS, AVONDALE, GORLESTON-ON-SEA. Size: 12 ¾ in. x 8 ¼ in. History: offered for sale for £105 by Thomas Hayes, bookseller of Manchester, August 1873. Purchased in 1875 by Messrs. Chatto & Windus, publishers of London, who issued it in reduced facsimile in 1876 with a preface by J. O. Halliwell-Phillipps. Purchased from Messrs. Chatto & Windus in 1876 by Robert Roberts, of Boston, Lincolnshire, the present owner’s father, who died in 1898. Condition: title made up from Second Folio; fly-leaf and three other preliminary pages in facsimile.

LXXXVII. CONINGSBY CHARLES SIBTHORP, ESQ., CANWICK HALL, LINCOLN. Size: 13 ¾ in. x 8 ¼ in. History: presented by the printer William Jaggard, on publication in 1623, to Augustine Vincent the herald. There is an inscription in Vincent’s autograph on the title to that effect. Vincent’s arms are stamped on the upper cover of binding. Apparently acquired by Humphrey Sibthorp, the present owner’s great-grandfather, c. 1800. Condition: excellent; the upper cover of the binding stamped with Vincent’s arms is in original calf; fly-leaf and last leaf in facsimile; title mended and partly mounted. Last three preliminary leaves, and several leaves elsewhere, supplied from smaller original and mounted.

LXXXVIII. MAJOR-GENERAL FREDERICK EDWARD SOTHEBY, ECTON, NORTH-AMPTONSHIRE. Size: 12 ¼ in. x 7 ½ in. History: probably purchased by present owner’s ancestor, James Sotheby, c. 1790, for £1 6s. Condition: good; fly-leaf and another leaf supplied in facsimile.

LXXXIX. MICHAEL TOMKINSON, ESQ., FRANCHE HALL, NEAR KIDDERMINSTER. Size: 12 ¼ in. x 8 in. History: Dibdin in Library Companion, p. 813, apparently mentions this copy as belonging to Roger Wilbraham, Esq., whose library was dispersed by sale in 1829; owned by George Wilbraham c. 1850; sold with the library of Roger W. Wilbraham, of Northwich, Cheshire, for £190 in June 1898. Acquired by present owner in 1899. Condition: good; fly-leaf and portrait in facsimile; leaf containing dedication supplied from Second Folio; the words in old writing ‘The Gift of M. W. Cherrington’ cut through by binder.

XC. LORD TWEEDMOUTH, BROOK HOUSE, PARK LANE, LONDON. Size: 12 ¼ in. x 8 ½ in. History: acquired c. 1870 by Sir Dudley Courts Marjoribanks, Bart., the first Lord Tweedmouth, the present owner’s father. Condition: good; fly-leaf in facsimile; title from another copy partly in facsimile; some preliminary leaves and the last leaf mended.

XCI. E. E. HARCOURT VERNON, ESQ., GROVE HALL, RETFORD. Size: 13 ½ in. x 8 ½ in. History: probably acquired c. 1640 by Sir Hardolph Wasteneys, first baronet of Heaton Hall, Notts, and on death of the widow of his great-grandson, Sir Hardolph, last baronet (d. 1742), passed to the last baronet’s great niece and heiress, wife of Col. Anthony Hardolph Eyre (1788–1836), of Grove Hall, Retford. It afterwards devolved on Col. Eyre’s daughter and heiress, who married present owner’s grandfather, Granville Harcourt Vernon, Esq. (1836–70). Condition: bottom edges much rubbed; preliminary leaf containing the sub-title ‘The Workes, &c.’ missing; fly-leaf, title, and last leaf in facsimile.

POSTSCRIPT

Information respecting two copies of the First Folio, additional to those noticed in the accompanying Census, has just reached me. Had I learnt of them in time, one of these newly recovered copies would have figured in the Census after No. LXXVIII, the other after No. CXXXIV. I have examined the former copy for myself; an account of the latter has been kindly forwarded by the owners. I append a formal description of each.

CLASS II
Division B

LXXVIII a. MRS. CHARLES HILHOUSE, HARECOMBE, CROWBOROUGH, SUSSEX. Size: 12½ in. x 8 in. History: owned c. 1850 by Benjamin Powys, who bequeathed it in 1876 to Richard Hilhouse, on whose death it passed to his brother Charles, whose widow is the present owner. Condition: fly-leaf inlaid, mounted, and misplaced after title-page; title-page made up from Second Folio, inlaid and mounted; corners of several leaves repaired and text supplied in MS.; ‘Troilus and Cressida’ bound up after ‘Cymbeline’; generally in good condition; re-bound c. 1840.

CLASS III
Division A

CXXXIV a. THE MISSSES WILLIAMS, LLANDAFF HOUSE, PEMBROKE VALE, CLIFTON, BRISTOL. Size: 12½ in. x 8½ in. History: possibly owned originally by John Hoskins, the lawyer (1566–1638), who was the intimate friend of Ben Jonson and Sir Walter Raleigh. From him descended in direct line Thomas Williams, Dean of Llandaff (d. 1878), who owned the book and treated it as a family heirloom, leaving it to his daughters, the present owners. The names of ‘J. Gurney’ and ‘J. Harington’ appear in the volume. Condition: fly-leaf, some preliminary leaves, and five leaves (including last leaf) of ‘Cymbeline’ missing. Fragments only of title-page preserved.

INTRODUCTION

The First Folio Edition of Shakespeare's Plays, which was published at the end of the year 1623, more than seven years after the author's death, and is here reproduced in exact facsimile, forms the greatest contribution made in a single volume to the secular literature of any age or country. By the English-speaking peoples it must always be regarded as the proudest monument of their literary history. Its publication first gave permanent record to the full range of Shakespeare's work. Of the thirty-six plays which appeared in the volume, only sixteen had been printed at earlier dates—fifteen in the author's lifetime, and one, 'Othello,' posthumously. (One play, 'Pericles,' which was also issued in the author's lifetime, was excluded from the collection.) No less than twenty dramas, of which the greater number rank among the literary masterpieces of the world—nine of the fourteen comedies that were here brought together for the first time, five of the ten histories, and six of the twelve tragedies—were rescued by the First Folio from urgent peril of oblivion. Whatever be the typographical or editorial imperfections of the First Folio, it is the fountain-head of knowledge of Shakespeare's complete achievement.

There is nothing exceptional or mysterious in the bibliographical fortunes that befell Shakespeare's dramatic writings either in his lifetime or in the years that followed his death. His written word, in spite of the supremacy of his genius, suffered at the hands of publishers and printers the fate common to all contemporary drama. However widely the magic of his pen differentiated his work from that of his contemporaries, his experience and practice in all professional relations were identical with those of his fellows. He and his colleagues wrote for the stage and not for the study. They intended their plays to be spoken and not to be read. It was contrary to the custom of the day for dramatists to print their plays for themselves or to encourage the printing of them by others or to preserve their manuscripts. Like all dramatists of his age, Shakespeare composed his plays for the acting-company to which he attached himself; like them he was paid by the company for his writings, and in return made over to the company all property and right in his manuscripts.

The theatrical manager viewed the publication of plays as injurious to his interests, and until a play had wholly exhausted its popularity on the stage, he deprecated its appearance in print. But however indifferent the Elizabethan dramatist was to the reading public, and however pronounced were the manager's objections to the publication of plays, there developed among playgoers and others at the close of the sixteenth century a wish to peruse in private dramas that had achieved success in the theatre. Publishers quickly sought to gratify this desire for their own ends. In the absence of any statutory prohibition, they freely enjoyed the right of publishing any MS., whatever might be the channel through which it reached their hands, provided that they purchased a licence for its publication from the Stationers' Company. At times failure on the part of an author to keep his MSS. in safe custody, at times the venality of an amanuensis, rendered MS. literature accessible to the publisher without the author's personal intervention. In such circumstances it was not the publisher's habit to consult an author about the publication of his work, and in the case of plays it was the rule rather than the exception for the MS. to reach the publishers through other hands than those of the dramatist. The publisher was, moreover, wont to ignore the claim to ownership in a play that was set up by the theatrical manager who had bought it of the writer. The wrong done the dramatic author passed unrecognized for nearly a hundred years, nor in Shakespeare's day was any endeavour made to protect the manager's interest. But the encroachments of the publishers on the manager's title were so manifestly inequitable that early in the seventeenth century—before 1630—the Lord Chamberlain, the public official who controlled the theatres, strove to restrain the publisher's piratical practices. Such efforts, however, at first met with qualified success. The sole ethical principle, which the publisher in good repute was ready to acknowledge in practice, concerned his business relations with members of his own profession. The grant to him by the Stationers' Company, to which he belonged, of a licence to publish a literary composition gave him in his eyes an exclusive and perpetual right in the licensed publication, and he respected his neighbours' exclusive and perpetual rights to their licensed publications as fully as he defended his own. The Stationers' Company stoutly resisted any lawless endeavour on the part of one of its members to issue a work which had already been licensed to another. At the same time it was always prepared to sanction the transfer of a licence from one publisher to another by mutual arrangement. But no conscientious scruple deterred members of the Stationers' Company from defying the natural sentiment which would assign to the author some exercise of control over the public fortunes of the written product of his brain.

It is not easy to exaggerate the narrowness of policy which actuated the Elizabethan publisher's treatment of plays. In his crass endeavour to satisfy the new-born taste for the published drama, he ignored not merely the material interest of author or manager, but the intelligent interest of the reader. If he cared little about the manner in which he acquired a copy of a play, he cared not at all whether or no it correctly presented the author's text. Both the author's manuscript and the authentic transcript which was in the hands of the theatrical manager frequently lay beyond the publisher's reach. Often he printed a crude draft of a piece which had been taken down, whether in shorthand or in longhand, by an enterprising visitor to the playhouse, from the actors' lips in course of the performance. Incoherence and confusing omissions commonly characterized the result. It is thus that may best be accounted for the strange defects and perversities of the original editions, printed in Shakespeare's lifetime, of his 'Henry V' (by Thomas Millington) in 1600, of his 'Merry Wives' (by Arthur Johnson) in 1602, and of the first quarto of 'Hamlet' (by Nicholas Ling and John Trundell) in 1603. More frequently the publisher would bribe a scrivener, or perhaps an actor, into procuring for him a rough copy of the play which had been carelessly transcribed for some subordinate purpose of the playhouse. Such a transcript seldom proved faithful to the author's intention. In most instances it was unsparingly abridged, or it was defaced by actors' interpolations, and by ignorant errors of the copyist which the printer's reader made little effort to amend.

The greater number of the quarto editions of Shakespeare's plays which were published in his lifetime seem to have been printed from more or less imperfect and unauthorized playhouse transcripts which were obtained by publishers more or less dishonestly. The quarto of 'Richard III' and 'Second Part of Henry IV,' with the second quarto of 'Hamlet' (although its defects are small compared with those of the first), present versions that were unsatisfactorily abridged. The original impressions of 'Troilus,' 'Othello,' and 'Lear' abound in proofs of copyist's carelessness and printer's incapacity.
incapacity. Comparatively few faults are visible in ‘Love’s Labour’s Lost,’ ‘Much Ado,’ ‘Midsummer Night’s Dream,’ ‘Merchant of Venice,’ ‘Richard II,’ ‘First Part of Henry IV,’ ‘Titus,’ and the 1599 quarto of ‘Romeo and Juliet,’ and in these cases the authorized playhouse transcript or ‘prompt-copy’ may have been at the publisher’s disposal, but none give absolutely convincing evidence at all points of complete authenticity.

Shakespeare cannot be credited with personal responsibility for the issue of any of the quarto editions of his plays. Like most of his fellow dramatists, he often saw bookstalls laden with unwarranted and corrupt versions of his work. The only redress open to him as to other authors was to supplant the piratical ventures by the production of authentic editions under his own auspices. But to such procedure the assent of the theatrical manager was necessary, and that assent was not readily forthcoming. It was also needful to conciliate and perhaps to compensate the piratical publisher, who was first in the field and had it in his power on an appeal to the Stationers’ Company to prevent the substitution of a genuine version by a second publisher for his own corrupt but fully licensed property. It was, therefore, in rare instances that dramatists sought remedy for the injuries that publishers inflicted on their writings. It is certain that Shakespeare endured such wrongs passively and with equanimity. Like Goethe, one of the greatest of his successors, he attached small importance to the fate of his written word.

Yet, despite their unprincipled efforts, publishers of the Elizabethan and Jacobean era sent to press only a fraction of the acted drama of the day. The greater part of it never found its way into print. The bulk of every dramatist’s labours remained in manuscript at his death, and fell as a rule an easy prey to oblivion. Dramatic manuscripts were seldom long preserved; the many which escaped the press remained for a time in the theatrical manager’s coffers, and then, their life on the stage being over, went the way of waste paper. The mass of the acted drama of the epoch has long since perished. Time has only dealt gently with such distinguished examples as held the stage for any length of years. Shakespeare in this regard has probably, as he deserved, fared better than any of his colleagues. He won in his lifetime commanding reputation alike with playgoers and with professional associates. After his death a large number of his plays maintained their position in the repertory of the theatre. The managers of his company cherished his memory as that of a beloved friend, and they took pride in their past association with him and his work. Therein publishers perceived their opportunity. The force of theatrical managers’ objections to publishing the plays that belonged to them dwindled when the dramatist was dead, and his vogue on the stage inevitably diminished, although it might be, as in Shakespeare’s case, by slow degrees.

Seven years after Shakespeare’s death an imposing partnership of publishers conquered the scruples with which the managers of Shakespeare’s company of players regarded the publication of their literary property. With the managers’ full assent the publishers undertook the issue of all the dramatic work by Shakespeare on which they could lay their hands. Shakespeare’s friends and fellow actors engaged in the enterprise as an act of piety.

1 In the years that immediately followed Shakespeare’s death in 1616 publishers trafficked little in his work. No play of his was issued or reissued posthumously until three years had elapsed, and then two pieces reappeared. In 1619 Arthur Johnson produced a second edition of his corrupt version of ‘The Merry Wives,’ and Thomas Parer brought out a fourth edition of ‘Pericles.’ Marked activity however characterized the year 1623, which just preceded the year of the First Folio. Then Matthew Lawe issued sixth editions of both ‘Richard III’ and ‘First Part of Henry VI,’ and Thomas Walkley brought out the previously unprinted ‘Othello’; while Shakespeare’s name first appeared in full on the title-page of a third edition of ‘The Troublesome Raigne of John, King of England,’ a play of which he was not the author. Possibly the insolence of Augustus The
The responsibility for the first attempt to give the world a complete edition of Shakespeare's plays mainly lay with the publishers. John Heminge and Henry Condell, the managers of Shakespeare's company, were ready to furnish all the 'copy' that the playhouse archives afforded. It is clear that the amount under their immediate control was far from representing the whole, but they, as equitable owners of an appreciable part of the 'copy,' signed, in accordance with custom, the dedication to the joint patrons, the earl of Pembroke (the lord chamberlain) and his brother the earl of Montgomery, as well as an address 'To the great Variety of Readers.' But there were well-marked limits to the range of their active participation. They contributed no capital, they disclaimed pecuniary advantage: they merely sought to facilitate an endeavour which they had been brought to believe would do honour to the memory of 'so worthy a friend and fellow alive as was our Shakespeare.' The five members of the publishing fraternity who printed and published the work must be regarded as its effective promoters. They undertook the whole pecuniary burden, and they shared among themselves whatever profits accrued. They searched out such copy as was no longer in the managers' possession and purchased it of its present holders. One or other of them prepared and arranged the plays for press, and corrected the proofs. All were well-established members of their profession, and had shown ambition of the usual unscrupulous kind to publish portions of Shakespeare's work in his lifetime. None had displayed more care or capacity in producing plays than was usual in the trade, and no high level of textual accuracy was to be anticipated from their editorial control.

Chief of this syndicate of promoters was William Jaggard, printer since 1611 to the City of London, who was established in business, first in Barbican, afterwards in Fleet Street at the East end of St. Dunstan's Church. As the piratical publisher of 'The Passionate Pilgrim,' a collection of poems falsely assigned to Shakespeare, he had long known the commercial value of the great dramatist's name. In 1613 he had extended his business by purchasing the stock and rights of a rival publisher, James Roberts, who had printed quarto editions of 'The Merchant of Venice' and 'Midsummer Night's Dream' in 1600, and the revised quarto of 'Hamlet' in 1604. Roberts had enjoyed for nearly twenty years the right to print 'the players' bills' or programmes, and he made over that title to Jaggard, with other literary property. The acquisition of the right of printing 'the players' bills' brought Jaggard into close personal relations with playhouse managers, which lasted from 1613 until his death in 1624. Jaggard associated his son Isaac with the enterprise. They alone of the members of the syndicate were printers. Their three partners were publishers or booksellers only. Two of these, William Aspley and John Smethwick, had already produced plays of Shakespeare. Aspley had, in partnership with another publisher, Andrew Wise, published in 1600 for the first time both 'The Second Part of Henry IV' and 'Much Ado About Nothing,' and in 1609 he took charge of half of Thorpe's impression of Shakespeare's 'Sonnets.' Smethwick, whose shop was in St. Dunstan's Churchyard, Fleet Street, near Jaggard's, had, on November 19, 1607, acquired the publishing rights in 'Hamlet,' 'Romeo and Juliet,' and 'Love's Labour's Lost,' which formerly belonged to Nicholas Ling, and he had accordingly published in 1611 no less than two editions of 'Romeo and Juliet' and one of 'Hamlet.' Edward Blount, the fifth partner, unlike his companions, is known to have had some taste in literature. He had been a friend and admirer of Christopher Marlowe, and had aided in the Mathewes, the publisher of 'The Troublesome Raigne,' in openly assigning it to Shakespeare, helped to persuade his friends of the wisdom of the proposal to bring out an authorized collection of his works.

1 Smethwick and Smethwike are the spellings of the name which its bearer commonly employed, but in the colophon of the First Folio it takes the exceptional form Smithweke.
the posthumous publication of two of Marlowe's poems. In 1601, too, he had published that collection of mystical verse entitled 'Loves Martyr,' by Robert Chester, one poem in which, 'A poetical essay of the Phoenix and the Turtle,' was signed 'William Shakespeare,' and on May 20, 1608, the right to publish 'Pericles' and 'Antony and Cleopatra' had been assigned to him. But he had disposed of his title in 'Pericles' to Henry Gosson of Paternoster Row, who produced two editions of the play in 1609, and he had not availed himself of his title to 'Antony and Cleopatra,' which remained unpublished until it figured in the First Folio 1.

The main part of the First Folio was printed in Jaggard's printing-office near St. Dunstan's Church, but the work was done expeditiously, and probably some presses of Jaggard's friends were requisitioned for parts of the volume. The printing was in progress through the summer of 1623, and was pushed forward so hastily that by November 8 publication was in sight. On that day, Edward Blount and Isaac (son of William) Jaggard took the first step in the final direction by obtaining formal licence from the Stationers' Company to publish sixteen of those plays which were to be now issued for the first time, and had not been previously entered 'to other men' in the Stationers' Company Registers. The pieces, whose early publication was thus announced, were of supreme literary interest. The titles ran: 'The Tempest,' 'The Two Gentlemen of Verona,' 'Measure for Measure,' 'Comedy of Errors,' 'As You Like It,' 'All's Well,' 'Twelfth Night,' 'Winter's Tale,' 'The Third Part of Henry VI,' 'Henry VIII,' 'Coriolanus,' 'Timon,' 'Julius Caesar,' 'Macbeth,' 'Antony and Cleopatra,' and 'Cymbeline.'

A careful scrutiny of this list illustrates the perplexities which characterized the conduct of the enterprise. Two of the enumerated plays, 'As You Like It' and 'Antony and Cleopatra,' had been licensed before, although neither had been printed. It is true that the right to publish 'As You Like It' had been 'stayed' or suspended in 1600, but the order of suspension had lapsed and a new licence seemed supererogatory. On May 20, 1608, Blount had obtained a perfectly regular licence for 'Antony and Cleopatra' which still held good. At the same time the list omitted four pieces about to figure in the First Folio—'The First and Second Parts of Henry VI,' 'King John,' and 'The Taming of the Shrew'—all of which were hitherto unprinted. To two of them, 'The First and Second Parts of Henry VI,' licences had, as in the case of 'As You Like It' and 'Antony and Cleopatra,' been accorded some years earlier. Thomas Millington had acquired the right to publish 'The First and Second Parts of Henry VI' at the opening of the century; but though he had published two other of Shakespeare's histories he did nothing with these two pieces beyond transferring his right in them on 12th April, 1602, to Thomas Pavier, a publisher of evil repute, who had acquired a large interest in Shakespeare's work. Pavier had already issued three editions of a gross perversion of 'Henry V,' and afterwards gained control of 'Titus Andronicus' and 'Pericles,' as well as of two non-Shakespearean plays, 'Sir John Oldcastle' and 'The Yorkshire Tragedy,' on the title-pages of each of which he had unjustifiably set Shakespeare's name. Both 'The First and Second Parts of Henry VI' were revisions by Shakespeare of older plays by other writers. The First Part remained unprinted in any shape before the issue of the First Folio. Nor was any attempt made to print the Second Part after Shakespeare finally recast it; but the earlier and obsolete form of this piece which was known as 'The True Contention' had been published in more than one edition, the last being produced as recently as 1619 by the perverse Pavier. It rested with Pavier, who owned the full licence in the first two parts of ‘Henry VI,’ to give or withhold permission to the syndicate to include them in their collection.

In the case of ‘King John’ and ‘The Taming of the Shrew,’ the remaining two unprinted plays for which no licence was sought by Blount and Jaggard, both were based by Shakespeare on earlier plays of like designation by other hands, and these earlier pieces were already in print. The pre-Shakespearean play of ‘King John’ had indeed been republished as recently as 1622 by one Augustus Mathewes, with Shakespeare’s name fraudulently paraded on its title. The Stationers’ Company’s officers, or the editors of the First Folio, perhaps left these two plays out of account, in the transaction with the Company of November, 1623, because, through similarity of titles, they confused the old pieces by Shakespeare’s predecessors, which had been previously licensed and published, with the genuine plays by Shakespeare which had not yet suffered the like fortune. At any rate Blount and Jaggard failed on November 8 to bring within the purview of the Stationers’ Company the whole of the plays of Shakespeare that they ultimately succeeded in publishing in the First Folio for the first time.

The syndicate had indeed to undertake much other complex negotiation before their path was quite clear. Besides Pavier there were seven publishers outside the ranks of the syndicate who held licences to produce certain plays by Shakespeare, and the exclusive rights of these men could not be safely ignored. Happily copyright in six plays that had previously appeared in quarto was vested in various members of the syndicate itself. Jaggard had command of ‘Midsummer Night’s Dream,’ which he had bought with Roberts’ stock; Aspley had command of ‘The Second Part of Henry IV’ and of ‘Much Ado’; Smethwick owned ‘Hamlet,’ ‘Romeo and Juliet,’ and ‘Love’s Labour’s Lost.’

With the seven outside owners of plays in quarto, the syndicate reached an understanding which was sufficiently good to silence opposition. Aspley no doubt carried weight with Matthew Lawe, who owned copyright in ‘Richard III,’ ‘Richard II,’ and ‘The First Part of Henry IV’; Lawe had bought these copyrights on June 25, 1603, of Andrew Wise, who was at one time Aspley’s partner. The unscrupulous Pavier came to terms with the syndicate in regard alike to ‘Henry V,’ of which he had issued a grossly perverted quarto, to ‘Titus,’ copyright in which he had acquired of Edward White, and to ‘The First and Second Parts of Henry VI,’ which he controlled as owner of the unused licences. The equally disreputable Nathaniel Butter, who had published the careless quarto of ‘Lear’ in 1609 and as well as ‘The London Prodigal’ of 1605, which he falsely ascribed to Shakespeare’s pen, also proved amenable. Nor was difficulty experienced with Arthur Johnson of St. Paul’s Churchyard, who owned the copyright in the corrupt quarto of ‘Merry Wives’; nor with Richard Bonian and Henry Walley of St. Paul’s Churchyard, who owned the copyright of ‘Troilus’; nor with Lawrence Heyes, who had on July 8, 1619, been allotted the copyright in ‘The Merchant of Venice,’ formerly the property of his father, Thomas Heyes; nor finally with Thomas Walkley, who had as lately as October 6, 1621, acquired for the first time the unpublished ‘Othello.’

The only play by Shakespeare that had been previously published in quarto and was not included in the First Folio was ‘Pericles.’ The copyright of ‘Pericles’ was owned in 1623 by Pavier, who had brought out a third quarto edition in 1619 in a volume which also contained ‘The True Contention,’ the obsolete version of ‘The Second Part of Henry VI.’ The syndicate may have either overlooked the piece by inadvertence or they may have deemed the hands of collaborators to be too visible in it to justify them in treating it as Shakespeare’s handiwork. But most probably Pavier perversely refused to sanction its admission.
admission to the First Folio. It was not until long after Pavier and his immediate representatives passed away, and the Folio reappeared in a third impression in 1664, that 'Pericles' was added to the collected plays of Shakespeare 1.

Obvious as are the signs in the First Folio of the syndicate's direct indebtedness to many of the quartos, the First Folio projectors abstained from open acknowledgement of obligation to any versions of Shakespeare's plays that were previously accessible in print. The co-operation of the theatrical managers, it was advertised, placed the playhouse MSS. at the disposal of the publishers and it was left to be inferred that thence alone was the 'copy' derived.

On the title-page of the First Folio, 'Mr. William Shakespere's Comedies, Histories, and Tragedies' were declared to be 'Published according to the True Original Copies.' In the sub-title of the preliminary pages, 'The Workes of William Shakespeare, containing all his Comedies, Histories, and Tragedies,' were said to be 'Truely set forth according to their first Originall.' 'It had bene a thing, we confesse, worthie to haue bene wished,' remarked the actor-managers in their address 'To the great Variety of Readers,' 'that the Author himselfe had liu'd to haue set forth, and ouerseen his owne writings; But since it hath bin ordain'd otherwise, and he by death departed from that right, we pray you do not envie his Friends, the office of their care, and paine, to haue collected & publish'd them.' At the same time the actor-managers warmly, if vaguely, condemned earlier attempts that had been made to print Shakespeare's plays (in quartos). The reading public, they wrote, had been 'abus'd with divers [i.e. some] stolne, and surreptitious copies, maimed, and deformed by the frauds and stealthes of injurious impostors, that expos'd them.' But the day of the corrupt quartos was done. 'Even those, are now offer'd to your view cur'd, and perfect of their limbes; and all the rest, absolute in their numbers, as he conceiued them.' 'Wee haue scarce receiued from him a blot in his papers,' the actors added. Clearly they wished to suggest that the printers worked exclusively from Shakespeare's undefiled autograph.

No greater attention should be paid to these declarations than to work-a-day publishing advertisements, which are commonly prone to exaggeration. When in 1647 the first attempt was made to issue a collected edition in folio of Beaumont and Fletcher's plays, on the model of Shakespeare's First Folio, the publisher Humphrey Moseley gave identical assurances that he presented for the first time 'the perfect full originals without the least mutilation,' and that he had employed the author's own MS., which was 'free from interlining or correction. He added, 'As it is all new, so here is not anything spurious or impos'd. I had the originalls from such as received them from the Authours themselves.' The text of the first folio of Beaumont and Fletcher did not justify these virtuous professions, any more than they were justified in the case of the Shakespeare First Folio. The boast on the part of early seventeenth-century publishers of access to 1 Whatever the concessions made by the quarto publishers to the First Folio promoters, the ownership-rights of the quarto publishers were not extinguished. Long after the appearance of the Folio, plays continued to be produced in quarto by existing owners or their legal representatives, and the copyright in the quartos was freely bought and sold. On August 4, 1656, Pavier transferred his 'right in Shakespeare's plays or any of them' to Edward Brewer and Robert Bird, and Bird, after bringing out a new quarto of 'Pericles' in 1659, sold all his property in Shakespeare's quartos to Richard Cotes, the printer who was mainly concerned in the Second Folio of 1632. Meanwhile, Matthew Lawe re-published 'Richard III' in 1659. Richard Hawkins, who had acquired the copyright of 'Othello' from Walkley, March 1, 1657-8, again brought out that tragedy in 1650 and in the same year Richard Meighen reissued 'Merry Wives.' In 1657 Lawrence Heyes republished the quarto of 'The Merchant of Venice.' Nor did Smethwick, one of the First Folio promoters, and also a partner in the venture of the Second Folio, regard himself as prohibited from republishing his own quartos after their issue in the Folio. In 1653 he reissued 'Love's Labour's Lost' and 'Taming of the Shrew,' the second piece had been first included in the First Folio, and in 1657; 'Hamlet' and 'Romeo and Juliet,'...

INTRODUCTION

a dramatist's uncorrected autographs should be regarded as a trade-convention rather than a serious historic statement.

No genuine respect was paid to a dramatic author's original drafts after they reached the playhouse. Scenes and passages were freely erased by the managers, who became the owners, and other alterations were made for stage purposes. Ultimately the dramatist's corrected autograph was copied by the playhouse scrivener; this transcript became the official 'prompt-copy,' and the original was set aside and destroyed, its uses being exhausted. The copyist was not always happy in deciphering his original, especially when the dramatist wrote so illegibly as Shakespeare, and, since no better authority than the 'prompt-copy' survived for the author's words, the copyist's misreadings encouraged crude emendation on the actor's part. Whenever a piece was revived, a new revision was undertaken by the dramatist in concert with the manager or by an independent author, and in course of time the official playhouse copy of a popular piece might come to bear a long series of new interlineations. Thus stock-pieces were preserved, not in the author's autograph, but in the playhouse-scrivener's interleminated transcript, which varied in authenticity according to the calligraphy of the author's original draft, the copyist's intelligence, and the extent of the recensions on successive occasions of the piece's revival.

1 Many valuable clues to the precise history of the publication of the Shakespeare First Folio are accessible in the first folio edition of Beaumont and Fletcher's 'comedies and tragedies' which was published in 1647. Its preliminary pages are rich in illustrative material. Of the fifty-two plays assigned to Beaumont and Fletcher (the majority of them were really the work of Fletcher either writing alone or in collaboration with Massinger), no more than nine were published—in separate quartos—before Fletcher's death in 1615, while eight others appeared in similar form for the first time between 1615 and 1647. The first folio of 1647 collected all the Beaumont and Fletcher plays that had not been previously printed. No arrangement was reached with the publishers of the seventeen pre-existing quartos by which it was possible to include any of those. Thirty-four new pieces were brought together; the MS. of one—'The Wild Goose Chase'—was not found in time, and was first issued separately five years later. The leading actors of the King's company to which Fletcher had been attached as playwright co-operated in the venture with an enterprising publisher, Humphrey Moseley, who in conjunction with a partner, Humphrey Robinson, paid all expenses and undertook every manner of responsibility. The theatres had been closed owing to the Civil War in 1643, and the playhouse archives had for the most part been long scattered. Moseley, in advertisements from 'The Stationer to the Reader' which he prefixed to the volume, announced how the 'copy' had been dispersed in numerous private hands, how he experienced great difficulty in gathering it together, and how it was only purchasable at high prices. The printed text of the plays failed to answer the hopes that the publisher's protestations of its authenticity roused, and the typography, which, he explained, was under his sole superintendence, showed abundant marks of hasty and careless composition and inefficient revision. The actors who aided the scheme played a very subordinate part in its execution. They did nothing beyond seconding Moseley's efforts in securing the 'copy,' and signing their names—to the number of ten—to the dedicatory epistle which was addressed to the lord chamberlain of the day, Phillip, earl of Pembroke and Montgomery. Shakespeare had himself of old belonged to the same company, and at least four of the signatories had been personally associated with him. The dedicatory epistle avowed that the players who signed it emulated the example of their deceased colleagues, Heminge and Condell, who stood in the same relation to the Shakespeare First Folio as they now sought to stand to the Beaumont and Fletcher first folio. They could have wished to address themselves to the two brothers—William Herbert, earl of Pembroke, formerly lord chamberlain, Philip Herbert, earl of Montgomery—to whom the actors Heminge and Condell addressed themselves in the opening pages of the Shakespeare First Folio. But the earl of Pembroke was dead, and his brother Philip, his successor in that title and in the office of lord chamberlain, alone survived to receive their homage. The dedicatory words ran rather clumsily thus:

But directed by the example of some who once stared in our quality and so fortunately aspired to choose your Honour—joyed with your (now glorified) Brother—Patrons to the then expired sweet Swan of Avon Shakespeare; and since, more particularly bound to your Lordships most constant and diffusive Goodness from which we did for many calm years derive a subsistence to ourselves and Protection to the Scene (now withered and condemned, as we fear to a long Winter and sterility), we have presumed to offer to your Selve what before was never printed of these Authours.

The volume numbered in all 876 pages, i.e., thirty-two fewer than the Shakespeare First Folio. The signatures were continuous throughout, but the pagination was repeatedly begun aforesight and consequently presented much irregularity and repetition. The typographical errors were numerous. A new folio edition of Beaumont and Fletcher's works was published by a number of other stationers in 1679, and that volume included the eighteen plays which had been formerly published in quarto in addition to the contents of Moseley's 1647 edition. The 1679 text was carefully revised.

But
But even if it were the ultimate hope of the publishers of the First Folio to print all Shakespeare’s plays, in the inevitable absence of his autograph MSS., from the finished theatrical transcripts or official ‘prompt-copies,’ their purpose was again destined to defeat by accidents on which they had not reckoned. In 1623 the day was far distant when Shakespeare first delivered his dramatic MSS. to the playhouse manager. In some cases thirty years had elapsed, in none less than twelve, and during the long intervals many misadventures had befallen the company’s archives. Since Shakespeare began his work, the company’s stock of plays had been continually replenished, and the ‘prompt-copies’ of old pieces that had ceased to appeal to the public were quickly discarded. Shakespeare’s plays had a far longer life on the stage than those of any contemporary. But only eighteen (or with ‘Pericles’ nineteen) of his thirty-seven dramas remained in 1623 in the repertory of the theatre. ‘Much Ado,’ ‘The Merry Wives,’ ‘The Taming of the Shrew,’ ‘The Tempest,’ ‘Cymbeline,’ ‘Twelfth Night,’ and ‘Winter’s Tale,’ among comedies; the two parts of ‘Henry IV,’ ‘Henry V,’ ‘Richard III,’ and ‘Henry VIII,’ among histories; ‘Othello,’ ‘Julius Caesar,’ ‘Macbeth,’ ‘Hamlet,’ ‘Lear,’ and ‘Romeo,’ among tragedies, could still count on an appreciative hearing. But the rest of Shakespeare’s plays had lost their theatrical vogue. There is no evidence of the revival in the late years of Shakespeare’s lifetime, or during the years following his death, of any of the eighteen remaining plays of the First Folio. Some of these, like ‘The Two Gentlemen,’ ‘The Comedy of Errors,’ ‘All’s Well,’ ‘King John,’ ‘Richard III,’ the three parts of ‘Henry VI,’ and ‘Titus,’ quickly disappeared altogether from the seventeenth-century stage.

To the official theatrical transcripts of many of Shakespeare’s plays the playhouse manager would therefore have had in normal circumstances no ready means of access in 1623. But the normal difficulties of gathering the ‘copy’ from playhouse archives were increased by a comparatively recent catastrophe. In 1613 fire had demolished the Globe theatre, where the company and its archives had been housed for fourteen years.

The publishers of the First Folio had therefore to depend on other sources than the playhouse in their task of collecting ‘copy.’ Fortunately it was the habit of actors occasionally to secure a more or less perfect transcript of a successful piece either for themselves or for a sympathetic friend. Though some private owners easily mislaid dramatic MSS., others carefully preserved them, and it was clearly through the good offices of private owners that the publishers of the First Folio were able to supplement the defects of the playhouse archives. By such means transcripts, occasionally even ‘prompt-copies,’ of plays that had passed out of the actors’ repertory reached the printers’ hands. Private transcripts were, as a rule, characterized to a greater degree than official transcripts by copyists’ carelessness and by general imperfections: they rarely embodied the latest theatrical revisions; they omitted stage directions. But in 1623 they filled, as far as Shakespeare’s work was concerned, an important gap in the playhouse resources.

Finally, in the case of sixteen of Shakespeare’s plays, the publishers of the First Folio had at their command previously printed quartos, a few of which embodied, by whatever surreptitious means, fairly complete theatrical texts. The First Folio text was therefore derivable from three distinct sources: firstly, the finished playhouse transcripts, or ‘prompt-copies;’ secondly, the less complete and less authentic transcripts in private hands; and thirdly, the quartos.

The sparse appearance in the First Folio of theatrical annotations—i.e. complete divisions of a play into acts and scenes, stage directions, indications of ‘the scene,’ and lists of dramatic personae—proves that the second class of ‘copy,’ the private transcript, was more abundant than the first, the finished playhouse transcript. The theatrical annotations annotations were only set out in detail in a completed playhouse transcript or 'prompt-copy,' and it is rare to find them in entirety in the First Folio. Even so rudimentary a theatrical feature as a full distribution of the text into acts and scenes is only found in twenty-one pieces; the 'copy' of the fifteen plays which lack a detailed distribution of acts and scenes had clearly never been put to theatrical uses. To only seven plays is attached a list of dramatis personae, which is another essential characteristic of a perfect playhouse transcript, and in the case of two of these seven plays, 'Henry V' and 'Timon,' the lists of dramatis personae are printed in such a manner as to indicate that they formed no part of the printer's 'copy'; they were interpolated on detached leaves from other sources after the play was printed. Detailed stage directions are also infrequent. In only a dozen of the more popular pieces are they elaborated. 'The Tempest,' the opening play, which was probably the latest of Shakespeare's efforts, and long remained a favourite stock piece, is especially wealthy in them, and it also shares with 'Measure for Measure' the peculiar distinction of supplying an express indication of the scene. (The scene of 'The Tempest' is 'an uninhabited island,' that of 'Measure for Measure,' 'Vienna?') In a few instances peculiarly distinct traces of theatrical influence on the 'copy' have accidentally survived. In 'The Taming of the Shrew,' in 'Much Ado,' and in 'The Third Part of Henry VI' subordinate players' actual names here and there supplant the names of the characters which fell to their lot. The name of the actor Sincklo figures instead of his rôle—of 'second player' in the first case and 'second keeper' in the second—in both 'The Taming of the Shrew' (Induction, sec. 1, l. 88) and in 'The Third Part of Henry VI' (iii. 1); and in the second play two actor-friends of Sincklo, Humphrey [Jeffes] and Gabriel [Spenser] are mentioned in like manner with himself. Similar confusions are met with in quartos of 'Romeo and Juliet' and 'Much Ado,' which suggest that they were drawn from the playhouse transcript. In the 'Romeo' quartos of 1599 and 1609 Will Kemp's name is substituted for that of his assumed character of Peter, but this error the Folio corrects. In 'Much Ado' (iv. 2), however, not only does the Folio retain the quarto's introduction of the names of the actors Kemp and Cowley in place of their respective rôles of Dogberry and Verges, but in 'Much Ado' (ii. 3) a third actor's name (not mentioned in the quarto) is introduced, that of 'Jacke Wilson,' who filled the singing part of Balthazar. Such eccentricities indicate that the printers worked (whether in quarto or folio), in the case of the plays in which they figure, on more or less official playhouse transcripts which prompter or manager had annotated.

The 'copy' for the First Folio was brought together with difficulty from the various sources that were open to its promoters. When the publication was first suggested, no definite knowledge of the material that would be at the printers' disposal was accessible. Additions were made to their stores while the work was in progress. In some cases the drafts which were first procured were defective, and others had to be found to fill palpable gaps. An epilogue, or a prologue, or a list of dramatis personae, was recovered after the play to which it belonged had been set up, and was hurriedly and clumsily inserted. In the case of 'A Winter's Tale' and 'Troilus and Cressida' the whole play was thrust into the book at the last moment. The promoters were so anxious to avoid delay in the issue of the volume that they left the printers little time in which to obliterate the marks of interpolation.

The First Folio consisted when complete of 454 leaves or 908 pages. Numerous folio volumes of far larger compass were produced at the same period. Every Elizabethan or Jacobean library contained books of greater bulk. In point of typographical elegance and accuracy, too, the book was constantly surpassed in its own day. The failure of the promoters promoters of the First Folio, or of the printers William Jaggard and his son Isaac, to bring the volume into competition with the best book-production of the period, may be assigned to excessive haste in completing the design, which deprived the work of the benefit of adequate revision. None the less, although the publishers were clearly moved in this and other regards by economic considerations, there were signs that they desired the Folio, even if they aimed at no superfine merit, to be within inexpensive limits a presentable volume. The paper was of good although not of the best quality. Prynne complained in his ‘Histriomastix,’ 1633 (‘To the Christian Reader,’ fol. 1 back), that Shakespeare’s plays, which had grown in his day from quarto into folio, were printed on the best crowne paper, better than most bibles. But this is a prejudiced exaggeration. Crown paper was of various kinds. That of the finest and most enduring texture is met with in such a handsome folio as James I’s ‘Works,’ printed by the royal printers Robert Barker and John Bill in 1616; there the elaborate water-mark of a crown surmounting a shield measures more than three inches lengthways. The inferior paper of the First Folio bears a smaller and simpler water-mark of a crown, with a broad bottom band enclosing the initial letters of the papermaker, apparently H. C. The paper throughout is of the same texture, but it was clearly manufactured in two moulds, in one of which the water-mark lacked the bottom band and showed other signs of deterioration.

Ornamental head- and tail-pieces and initial letters appear at the beginning or end of the plays. In all fifteen patterns are employed, but there is nothing distinctive about any of them. Most of them are much worn, and belonged to the stock of ordinary ‘blocks’ and types which was to be found in all well-equipped printing-offices in London and on the Continent. The pattern was usually of early invention and possibly of foreign origin. The archer head-piece, which appears four times in the First Folio (before the dedication, before the ‘catalogue,’ ‘The Tempest,’ and epilogue to ‘Second Part of Henry IV’) is met with in all manner of English books dating between 1590 and 1632, including the Book of Common Prayer (1603) and Spenser’s works (1611). The large tail-piece which is at the end of twenty-five plays is also at the end of the first folio of Spenser’s works, which was printed by Humphrey Lownes for his brother Matthew in 1611, and in books printed at Strassburg and Frankfort. Jaggard, the printer of the Folio, invariably used the majority of the First Folio ornamental blocks in all his large undertakings of similar date. Some of the initial letters (cf. the large F in ‘To the great Variety of Readers’) he had acquired with the stock of James Roberts. Most of the head-pieces and initial letters which figure in the First Folio are met with in Augustine Vincent’s ‘Discoverie of Errores’ (1622), a volume on which Jaggard’s compositors were engaged just before they set to work on the
the First Folio. The large tail-piece appeared in no less than three of Jaggard's recent publications, in Mexia's 'Treasure' (1619), pt. 2, in Brooke's 'Catalogue' (1619), and in 'The Decameron' (1620). There are only two ornaments which cannot be matched in Jaggard's books, or indeed elsewhere: one is the conventionally scrolled head-piece (above Digges' and I. M.'s verses in the preliminary pages), which is repeated at the opening of eleven plays, and may have been newly cut for the volume; the other is the tail-piece on the page containing the actors' names before 'Henry V'; this is a greatly worn block, must have been frequently employed before, is only used on this single occasion in the First Folio, and was doubtless soon afterwards destroyed as worthless 1.

The only pictorial embellishment of the volume is the engraved portrait of Shakespeare (7 1/16 in. x 6 11/16 in.), which is printed on the title-page. The engraver, Martin Droeshout, belonged to a Flemish family of painters and engravers long settled in London, where he was born in 1601. The engraving was therefore produced when the artist had only completed his twenty-second year, and may be regarded as the effort of an apprentice. It followed a painting, possibly the 'Flower' portrait of Shakespeare now in the Memorial Gallery at Stratford-on-Avon. That picture is believed to have been painted in Shakespeare's lifetime, in 1609, by a Flemish artist, who has been conjecturally identified with the engraver's uncle, also named Martin Droeshout. In the verses on the page facing the title of the volume Ben Jonson congratulates the graver on having satisfactorily hit the poet's face. But the impressions that are usually met with are too coarsely printed to give the likeness verisimilitude. Defects in the original design, the disproportion between the dimensions of the head and the half-length of the body, cannot be laid to the engraver's charge. Nor is Droeshout's ability to be fairly judged from the ordinary condition of his engraving. His work was obviously deemed too delicate to bear frequent reproduction, and the plate was coarsely retouched more than once after it left his hands. In the first state the engraving is clear in tone and the shadows are somewhat delicately rendered. The light falls softly on the muscles of the face, especially about the mouth and below the eye. The hair is darker than the shadows on the forehead and flows naturally, although the engraver omitted to make the hair throw any shadow on the collar. In ordinary impressions a shadow has been introduced into the collar, and all the shadows on the face have been darkened by cross hatching and cross dotting, especially about the chin and the roots of the hair on the forehead. The moustache has been roughly enlarged. As a result the expression is deprived of character; the forehead has an unnaturally swollen appearance, and the hair might easily be mistaken for a raised wig. The reproductions in extant copies of the First Folio show many slight variations, but all bear witness to the deterioration of the plate. Only one copy of the engraving in its first state is now known. This was extracted by J. O. Halliwell-Phillipps from a First Folio in his possession, and framed separately by him; it now belongs to the American collector, Mr. Marsden J. Perry, of Providence, Rhode Island, U.S.A. The copy of the First Folio, to which this fine impression of the engraving originally belonged, is now in the Shakespeare Memorial Library at Stratford-on-Avon.

I am indebted to Mr. Horace Hart, the Controller of the Oxford University Press, for the following valuable Notes on the Typography of the First Folio 2:—

The founts of type used in printing the First Folio bear unmistakable marks of Dutch origin. Apart from the display- and catch-lines used in the title-page and in some of the title-headings, five founts are employed. In body, three of these are English and two Dutch. I have numbered them (i) to (v) in the description which follows.

As to the roman and italic fount used for (i) the text of the work in two columns, I am convinced that this is not only Dutch in face, but Dutch in body, viz. that it is Median, equal to 1r-points according to the Didot system; and I suggest that it was specially chosen, for excellent reasons, and could not easily be improved upon if type had to be selected for a similar work to-day. It is condensed, in order to get the metrical lines in without turning over a word or words; and it also shows sufficient space or ‘daylight’ between the printed lines to afford the necessary relief to the reader’s eyes. There is no English type-body equivalent to 1r Didot points. The nearest is pica, which is 11-23; and I am convinced that it is not possible to measure up a column of the First Folio with pica’s. On the other hand, the Dutch Median type fits a column perfectly. Let us imagine ourselves in the position of the printers of the First Folio. Being called upon to undertake so considerable a piece of work, they would specially consult the Dutch founders for the most important type, viz. that with which the text of the work was to be printed; but they would regard the small founts which they probably already possessed, of double-pica, great-primer, and English, as suitable for the unimportant parts which they had to play in the preliminary matter.

Of these less important founts, the italic (ii) used for the Dedication (p. 7) is on a double-pica body, and is, in face and depth, identical with the double-pica of which a specimen is given in T. B. Reed’s Early English Type Foundries (facing p. 96), where it is said to have been ‘cut’ by John Day in 1572. Reed points out 2 that the same italic is also made use of in Binneman’s edition of Walsingham’s Historia; and it seems probable that Day’s type, Binneman’s type, and the Shakespeare double-pica all came from the same source. This double-pica italic is used for the ‘Names of the Principal Actors’ (p. 11), and also throughout the First Folio for the head-lines and cross-headings to the Acts and Scenes.

The address ‘To the great Variety of Readers’ (p. 7) is set up in great-primer type (iii), as well as the lines ‘To the Memorie of the deceased Authour’ (p. 9); where it may be noticed that the italic is too small for the roman, or the latter too large for the italic, for the two do not line together.

The same remark applies to the english fount (iv) used for the verses on pages 13, 14, and 15: the italic in pages 13 and 14, because of its smallness of body, seeming to have greater space between the lines; while the roman in page 15, on the contrary, seems to have the lines closer together. This is mere appearance, however; the body is the same in both cases. The three founts mentioned, although, as I have suggested, probably of Dutch origin, are cast upon English bodies; and all are set solid, as may be proved by observing where descending and ascending letters meet in any two lines. This fact—that the lines of type are set solid, i.e. without any ‘leads’ between the lines—enables one to make measurements with absolute certainty.

One other fount remains to be described. The large roman (v), used in the page opposite the portrait, is cast on the Dutch body called Kleine Kanon, equal to 2r Didot points. No English type-body which I am able to measure fits it; and the face is Dutch. But the absence of the letter W from the fount (the printer had to make it up with two V’s) needs explanation. I hesitate to suggest that this type may have come from Holland to England by way of France; yet Bishop Fell declares that the types which he acquired for his ‘Imprimery’ were procured from ‘Germany, France, and Holland.’

The arguments in these Notes have been hitherto from type-bodies. But the type-faces also—whether they are exhibited on English bodies or on Dutch bodies—can be identified as absolutely Dutch. Let the expert in typography note the peculiar shape of the italic letters which follow,— in the First Folio; and compare them with the characters shown in the Type Specimen Books, &c., of Christofol van Dijck (1683), of Bishop Fell (1693), of Johan Enschedé (1768), as well as with those represented in later times by such modern authorities as Theo. L. de Vинe4 and T. B. Reed.

1 Similar, but not identical, type was employed by Humphrey Moseley in printing the text of the Beaumont and Fletcher first folio of 1647, and he remarked of it: ‘The Work itself is in one continued letter, which tho’ very legible is none of the biggest, because as much as possible we would lessen the bulke of the volume.’—S. INTRODUCTION

The 'rules' used for borders, columns, and head-lines were mostly brass; and the expert will notice, here and there, in the centre column-rule, little projections made by the bodkin of the compositor in correcting the proofs; nor will he overlook the fact that in pages beginning plays, brass was not used for the centre column-rules, but pieces of metal-rule were used instead, doubtless with a view of saving the cutting of the longer brasses. In page 140, beginning Love’s Labour’s Lost, the centre column-rule is made up of as many as nineteen pieces. Occasionally the supply of brass border-lines gave out, and a shorter rule, intended for use immediately after the page-heading, was made to answer the purpose of an outside bottom border-line.

In executing the press-work of the First Folio, the bed of the wooden press probably held two pages, of which the platen only printed one at a time, so that there would be two pulls for each side of the sheet. The faulty register seems to reveal this method.

In accordance with a growing practice among seventeenth-century printers, both capital letters and italics constantly recur with apparently small reason in the text of the plays. Capitals within the sentence distinguish adjectives and verbs as well as substantives. Their number varies greatly in different plays; Romeo and Juliet has on the average one extra capital in every line, while in the first thirteen comedies one extra capital is found on the average in every seven lines. The theory that the extra capital was deliberately introduced to emphasize the word to which it was attached is untenable¹. The irregularity which characterized their usage rather assigns their presence to the individual vagaries of compositors. The employment of extra capitals was indeed an irresponsible typographical fashion which was continuously gaining ground through the seventeenth century; when Shakespeare’s plays were reprinted in folio for the fourth time in 1685, the number of extra capitals had risen from 42,386 (in the First Folio) to 55,545 (in the Fourth). Italic type seems to be employed in the First Folio more methodically than capital letters. It is used in stage directions, in prologues and epilogues, in lyric verse, proper names, letters in prose, speeches in foreign languages, and unfamiliar words, especially those of foreign origin (e.g. caviare and requiem). These rules, although they were not invariably adhered to, were of recognized authority in most printing-offices of the day. Only a single font of italic type appears in the text of the plays, and such inconspicuous variations as have been detected in the aspect of some of the italic letters are the slight and accidental irregularities that are inseparable from the current system of casting types by hand and of inking the forme with balls.

The title and preliminary matter were prepared last. This portion of the volume consists of nine leaves, which were printed apart from the succeeding text of the plays. As was common in folio books, it was intended to make-up the press-work in sheets or quires of six leaves each; but many of the preliminary leaves were separately inserted, and they were consequently bound up in different order in different copies. All are unnumbered; there are signatures A₂, A₃ on only two leaves, which contain respectively the dedication and the address to the readers. Naturally the back of the title-leaf is left blank, but six other of the nine preliminary leaves are peculiar in bearing print on one side only. Probably the opening sheet of the volume was originally designed to consist of the six leaves, supplying the title-page, the dedication, the address to the readers, the catalogue of the plays (or index of contents), and the half-title running The Works of William Shakespeare, containing all his Comedies, Histories, and Tragedies: Truely set forth, according to their first Original, together with a sixth blank leaf for emergencies. Subsequently Shakespeare’s friend Ben Jonson forwarded not merely the fine poem ‘To the memory of my beloved, the Author,’ which was set up on both sides of the unallotted blank leaf, but the lines on the portrait, which were allotted to an inserted fly-leaf, appropriately facing the title. Hugh Holland, a friend of Jonson’s, fired by his example, afterwards sent a commendatory sonnet, which was set up on one side of a second interpolated leaf; and on a later day Leonard Digges and James Mabbe, two admirers of Shakespeare, who were in personal relations with the publisher Blount, paid Blount and Shakespeare jointly the compliment of sending two further sets of commendatory verse, which were brought together on the front side of yet a third detached leaf. Considering the character of the book, and contemporary practice, the supply of preliminary poetic eulogy was exceptionally scanty, but the publishers brooked no delay, and seem to have avoided requests for further poetic commendations which might occasion it. By way of completing the preliminary matter, they finally appended to the half-title, despite the want of connexion, ‘The Names of the Principall Actors in all these Playes,’ arranged in double columns. It is doubtful if any folio volume of the day betrayed greater want of coherence or of satisfactory method in the character or the arrangement of the preliminary leaves.

To economize time the text of the plays was meanwhile printed and made-up in three separate and independent sections. This clumsy device was avoided in the best printed folios of the time. The first section was designed to contain the Comedies, the second the Histories, and the third the Tragedies. Each section was separately and independently paged, and the quires, on which each was printed, bore separate and independent sets of signatures. The signatures of the Comedies ran from A onwards to Z (with additional signatures Aa, Bb, and two leaves only of a quire Cc); the Histories ran from a (ending with ‘Henry VIII’ on an incomplete quire x of four leaves); the Tragedies ran from aa to bbb. But, owing partly to the prevailing carelessness and partly to the hasty interpolation of new matter while the composition of each section was in progress, no section was completed either in the way of signatures or pagination with perfect regularity.

Except in the Histories section, where the plays were arranged in harmony with historic chronology, no rational principle was followed in the order in which the dramas were printed. ‘The Tempest,’ which Shakespeare probably composed last, stood first in the opening section of Comedies. Probably the theatrical managers found the playhouse transcript of that piece, which the printers followed, readier to their hand than any other when the volume was first designed. ‘The Tempest’ was followed by one of the earliest of Shakespeare’s comedies, ‘The Two Gentlemen of Verona,’ and throughout the comedy-section late and early plays are hopelessly intermixed. ‘Love’s Labour’s Lost,’ almost certainly his earliest comedy, figures seventh in the list. ‘Much Ado About Nothing,’ ‘As You Like It,’ and ‘Twelfth Night,’ Shakespeare’s three most finished comedies, which came into being about the same time in the midmost period of his career, are separated from one another as far as is possible. Throughout, the order seems to represent merely that in which chance brought the copy to the printing-office. In the Tragedies the arrangement offers fewer eccentricities, because the bulk of Shakespeare’s tragic dramas belong to a somewhat short single term of his activity. But there was no reasonable ground for making 'Troilus and Cressida' and 'Coriolanus' open the section, nor for permitting Shakespeare's very early work in tragedy, 'Titus' and 'Romeo,' to follow them immediately. Here again the printers appear to have merely kept pace with the theatrical manager's or publisher's discovery and dispatch of the 'copy' to the printing-office.

\[1\] Mabbe only signs his contribution by his initials I.M., but internal and external evidences combine to identify him beyond reasonable doubt.

\[2\] Various exceptional types, as Mr. Horace Hart shows, distinguish the preliminary pages containing the commendatory verses of the Shakespeare First Folio. A like feature characterizes the preliminary pages containing the commendatory verses of the Beaumont and Fletcher folio of 1647. Moseley, the publisher in the latter case, explains the typographical variations thus: —

‘After the Comedies and Tragedies were wrought off, we were forced for expedition to send the Gentlemens verses to several Printers which was the occasion of their different characters.’

In each section there are indications that, after the printers reached what they were led to believe was the end of their 'copy,' new matter arrived, and the labour of composition was continued afresh on the additional material.

The Comedies were originally brought to a close with 'Twelfth Night,' on the eleventh page of quire Z. The twelfth page of the quire was left blank, because the compositor had no 'copy' to set upon it. Subsequently 'copy' for a further comedy, 'A Winter's Tale,' arrived. John Heminge, the manager, had lately contemplated a revival of the piece (August, 1623), but the official MS. 'copy' of the allowed booke or prompt-copy could not be found at the moment. Happily a MS. version, which Heminge credited with adequate authenticity, came to hand, and, after being represented on the stage, was sent to press. The additional 'copy' was started on a new and independent quire of six leaves; the interpolated quire was signed A a, although a very similar signature a a was designed to distinguish the opening quire of the third section of the volume. 'A Winter's Tale' was carried not only through A a, but through a full succeeding quire B b (also of six leaves); and was completed on two detached leaves, of which the first bore the signature C c, and the second was at first unsigned. The reverse page of the second leaf (C c 2) was left blank. Thus blank pages at beginning and end completely isolated 'A Winter's Tale.' The printers showed, however, unusual enterprise in making the pagination of 'A Winter's Tale' (pp. 277–303) continuous from 'Twelfth Night.' In the correctly bound volume, 'A Winter's Tale' follows 'Twelfth Night,' and is immediately succeeded by the Histories section, with new pagination and new signatures (a, b, c, et seq.). But 'A Winter's Tale' still remained an independent segment of the book; and in some instances binders, misled by the signatures, misplaced it, making it precede 'Coriolanus,' which opens the quire bearing the almost identical signature a a (cf. Mr. R. J. Walker's copy, No. XXVI in the Census).

A more awkward irregularity characterizes the section of Histories. It would appear that in this section the printers were supplied in the first instance with only the first two Acts, and half of Act iii of 'The Second Part of Henry IV,' instead of the whole text of the piece, and that they mistook this fragment for the whole play. The copy for the three complete plays, 'King John,' 'Richard II,' and 'The First Part of Henry IV,' with the fragment of 'The Second Part of Henry IV,' filled seven quires (a–g) of six leaves, or twelve pages, each. The numbers of the pages ought to have run from 1 to 84, but the numbers 47–48 were accidentally missed, with the result that p. 47 became p. 49, and so forth until p. 84 became p. 86. When quire g was completed on p. 86, 'Henry V' was begun on the first page of quire h, but the last page-number 86 of the preceding quire g was carelessly misread 68, so that the first page of quire h was erroneously numbered 69; that pagination was continued till the Histories section ended with 'Henry VIII' on p. 232.

Subsequently the quires of the Histories section were brought together and hastily examined in proof. Then there came to light the serious hiatus in the text between the consecutive quires signed respectively g and h. 'Henry V' had been begun too soon. Half the copy for 'The Second Part of Henry IV,' the last half of Act iii, together with Acts iv and v,—had been overlooked; it had in all probability never been delivered to the compositors. The omitted portion of ‘The Second Part of Henry IV’ was sufficient to fill seven leaves, or fourteen pages. It was therefore necessary to insert, between quires g and h, an irregular quire of eight leaves, or sixteen pages (the nearest even number), to which was given the irregular signature gg. The text of the omitted portion of ‘The Second Part of Henry IV’ was not long enough to extend to the eighth leaf of the new quire. Rather than leave that leaf of two pages blank the printers had recourse to a further irregularity. On the obverse of this eighth inserted leaf they placed, in exceptionally large italic type, the epilogue of ‘The Second Part of Henry IV’; and on the reverse they set, probably from a recovered play-bill, ‘The Actors’ Names’ for the succeeding play of ‘Henry V’; this list they spread out so as to cover the whole page. With even greater awkwardness the pages of the new eight-leaved quire gg, up to the end of the text of ‘The Second Part of Henry IV,’ were numbered 87–100, in continuation of the numbers on the regular quire g. The leaf containing the supplementary epilogue and actors’ names was left unnumbered. But the printers did not attempt to harmonize the pagination of the interpolated leaves with that of the succeeding pages of the regular quire h, which were already in type and were numbered 69 et seq. Thus the pagination of the inserted quire gg (pp. 87–100) remained in confusing conflict with that of the immediately following quire h (pp. 69 et seq.).

But it is in the Tragedies section that we find the most convincing proof of the hasty and unconsidered arrangement and re-arrangement of the copy, which attended the preparation of the volume. The compositors were directed to open the Tragedies section with Coriolanus on page 1, on a normal quire of six leaves, which started the fresh set of signatures (aa, bb, et seq.). All went well with Coriolanus and with the next play, Titus Andronicus. But when the third play, ‘Romeo and Juliet,’ reached a point near its close at the end of quire ff, the compositors fell into a confusion for which they themselves and not the furnishers of the copy may be held responsible. They overlooked the four hundred and sixty-one lines that ought to follow quire ff, and began work on a new quire Gg without noticing the textual hiatus. Both the omitted portion and the portion that followed it began with the same word ‘I,’ so that the catchword ‘I’ at the corner of the last page of quire ff did not open their eyes to their careless omission. Luckily the omission was discovered in good time, and two separate leaves signed gg and gg 2 were interpolated to bear the overlooked lines. Nevertheless at least one copy of the First Folio—that now at Oriel College—was accidentally bound up without this necessary insertion. The Oriel copy has the distinction of presenting the observer with a regular succession of signatures, although its text (of ‘Romeo’) is incomplete by two leaves.

But this mistake was venial compared with that which followed. In all copies the last lines of the tragedy of ‘Romeo’ occupy the front page of the opening leaf of quire Gg, which is numbered 79 (a typographical error for 77). On the back of this leaf Gg the printers, in accordance with their original instructions, began to set up ‘Troilus and Cressida.’ Three pages of the play were composed, and the second and third were numbered 79 and 8o, in continuation of the correct number of the last page of ‘Romeo and Juliet.’ But before the composition of ‘Troilus’ advanced much further a halt was called. The overseers of the press withdrew ‘Troilus’ from the compositors altogether, and put aside the type already set. It may have been either that the succeeding copy was mislaid or that the owners of the already published quarto of ‘Troilus’ raised difficulties, or that it was felt incongruous to place a dramatic story of Troy after a dramatic story of mediaeval Italy.
'Troilus and Cressida' is a long play filling twenty-eight pages, and had it been carried to the end at the place in the volume where it was begun, it would have occupied all that remained of quire G gg and the whole of quire h hh, finishing at page 105 on the third leaf of quire i ii. While awaiting directions how to fill the gap which the withdrawal of 'Troilus' caused, the printers passed over the quires h hh and i ii, which 'Troilus' had been roughly estimated to occupy, and went forward to quire k k, on which they began 'Julius Caesar.' The first page of the new piece was tentatively numbered 109 in anticipated correspondence with 'Troilus.' Thenceforth the printing of the Tragedies proceeded with regular signatures through kk to bbb, and, though the pagination was in places confused by typographical misunderstandings, it was plainly intended to make it continuous from 109 to the end. When at length it became imperative to fill the place which the withdrawal of 'Troilus' had left vacant, 'Timon of Athens' was introduced. The last lines of 'Romeo' on the opening quire G gg were set up afresh with many changes of spelling, and at the back of the leaf the text of 'Timon' was begun instead of 'Troilus.' 'Timon' was a comparatively short play filling only twenty-one pages, so that after being continued through all that remained of quire G gg, it ended on the tenth page of the next quire h hh. It did not touch the last leaf of quire h hh, nor any part of quire i ii. The front of the vacant last leaf of quire h hh was ultimately filled by spacing out on it 'The Actors' Names' for 'Timon.' The reverse of this leaf, which closed quire h hh, remained blank. The pages of the text of 'Timon' were numbered 80-98 in precise continuation of 'Romeo,' but the page of 'Actors' Names' and its blank successor went unnumbered. No endeavour was made to bring the signatures or pagination of the succeeding play, 'Julius Caesar,' which had been prematurely started on quire k k at page 109, into harmony with the signatures or pagination of its inserted predecessor. The quire with the signature i ii dropped out of the volume altogether, and in the pagination of the Tragedies section the numbers between 98 and 109 found no place.

But the difficulty was not yet fully met. There still remained unplaced the standing type of part of 'Troilus,' and the whole volume was ready for binding before the total neglect of the half-printed 'Troilus' was realized. The 'catalogue' of contents—the list of the plays—in the preliminary pages, which was one of the last contributions to the book, was printed off without any mention of 'Troilus.' 'Coriolanus' was shown in the 'catalogue' to begin the Tragedies section; 'Timon' to follow 'Romeo,' and 'Julius Caesar' to follow 'Timon.' When the omission of 'Troilus' was recognized at the last minute, it was resolved to place the forgotten piece at the beginning of the Tragedies, before 'Coriolanus.' The type of the first two leaves at least was standing. The front of the first leaf bore the last lines of 'Romeo.' These were removed, and for them was substituted a hitherto unprinted prologue to 'Troilus,' which did not appear in the quarto, and was now set out in exceptionally large italic type so as to occupy the whole page. On the reverse of this first leaf the text of the play began, but some changes were introduced into the old standing type, including a different ornamental head-piece. The next leaf was left in its original state, with its old page-numbers (79-80), which remained to show that 'Troilus,' as first printed, followed 'Romeo.' These two leaves were separate insertions, were unsigned, and formed no part of a regular quire. The fourth page of the play was begun on a new quire of the ordinary dimensions of six leaves. It bore the signature ¶ ¶, which was the acknowledged mark among printers of an irregular and hasty interpolation after a book was printed off. 'Troilus' was continued through a second interpolated quire bearing the signature ¶ ¶, and was completed on the front of a single leaf signed ¶ ¶ ¶, of which the back was left blank. No attempt was made to put any numbers to the pages of the interpolated polated quires \( \| \) or \( \| \| \), or of the interpolated leaf \( \| \| \| \). No less than twenty-six pages thus lacked any sort of number. In the bound volume the interpolated 'Troilus' was immediately followed by 'Coriolanus,' which had been previously in type on the regular quires aa to cc, and had been paged from i onward.

It is to two extant copies of the Folio, which are of exceptional character, that we owe our knowledge of the printers' erratic procedure in the arrangement of the opening section of the Tragedies. In the Sheldon copy belonging to the Baroness Burdett-Coutts, and in the Hartley-Toovey copy belonging to Mr. Pierpont Morgan, the first leaf of 'Troilus and Cressida' accidentally retains its original shape. Although it stands at the head of the Tragedies section, far from the place that it was originally intended to occupy, the first page still bears on its front page the detached concluding lines of 'Romeo and Juliet,' while the text of 'Troilus' begins on the reverse page, the prologue being omitted. In both these copies the last page of 'Romeo' reappears in its second setting in its correct place, and is backed by the opening lines of 'Timon.' The survival of the cancelled last page of 'Romeo,' and the cancelled first page of 'Troilus,' is a curious accident, and brings into broadest relief the haphazard practices which governed printers and overseers, while they were engaged in the production of the volume.

Proofs that the book was printed off without adequate supervision could be multiplied almost indefinitely. Quotations from foreign languages testify with singular completeness to the typographical clumsiness; they are rarely intelligible. Apart from misprints in the text, errors in pagination recur with embarrassing frequency. Many strange ones have been noticed already, and they could be easily matched in awkwardness elsewhere. For example, in 'Hamlet,' page 156 is followed by page 257, and the subsequent pages run on consecutively from 257, so that 100 numbers are missed in the pagination of the Tragedies section.

The following is a full list of other errors in pagination which were uncorrected when the first copies of the impression were issued to the public:—In 'The Merry Wives of Windsor,' pp. 50 and 59 were misprinted 58 and 57; in 'The Comedy of Errors,' p. 86 was misprinted 88; in 'Midsummer Night's Dream,' pp. 153 and 161 were misprinted 151 and 163; in 'The Merchant of Venice,' pp. 164, 165 were misprinted 162, 163; in 'As You Like It,' p. 189 was misprinted 187; in 'Taming of the Shrew,' p. 214 was misprinted 212; in 'All's Well,' pp. 237, 249, and 270 were misprinted 233, 257, and 252; in 'Twelfth Night,' p. 269 was misprinted 273; in 'Richard II,' p. 37 was misprinted 39; in 'The First Part of Henry IV,' pp. 47, 48 were missed altogether; in 'The Second Part of Henry IV,' pp. 89, 90 were misprinted 91, 92; in 'The Third Part of Henry VI,' pp. 165, 166 were misprinted 167, 168; in 'Henry VIII,' p. 218 was misprinted 218; in 'Romeo and Juliet,' pp. 77, 78 were missed in the numbering; in 'Hamlet,' not only is p. 156 followed by 257, but p. 273 was first set up for p. 277, and pp. 277 and 282 were misprinted 279 and 280; in 'King Lear,' p. 308 was misprinted 38 and p. 309, 307; and in 'Cymbeline,' pp. 379, 399 were misprinted 389 and 993; thus the last page bore the number 993 instead of 399.

In the signatures misprints were equally frequent. In addition to the irregularities of signatures already described, in the Comedies section B was originally set up as A; V appeared as V v; in the Histories a 3 appeared as A a 3; m 3 s l 3; in the Tragedies b b 2 was misprinted B b 2; n n and n n 2 appeared as N n and N n 2; o o as O o; t t 2 as t t 3; x x, x x 2 and x x 3 as x, x 2 and x 3; y y 2 and y y 3 as y 2 and y 3; while the signature o o 2 was omitted.
INTRODUCTION

The head-lines are often irregular. The head-line titles of the last two pages of the 'Two Gentlemen of Verona' are wrongly printed 'The Merry Wives of Windsor,' the name of the succeeding play. At p. 121 of the Comedies, in the head-line 'Much adoe about Nothing,' the word 'about' is suffered to figure as 'abot.' In 'Troilus and Cressida' the first three pages give the head-line 'The Tragedie of Troylus and Cressida,' the remaining pages give only 'Troylus and Cressida.' The word 'tragedy' is spelt indifferently 'tragedy' and 'tragodie'; and Anthony in 'Anthony and Cleopatra,' both 'Anthony' and 'Anthonie.' The very first word of the text on the first page of the volume, 'Bote-swaine,' was originally printed with the ornamental B upside down (cf. Mr. Hughes Hilton's copy), and some copies were issued to the public before the correction was made.

The number of extant copies of the volume, which amounts to at least 156, shows that the book was in great demand and that the edition was a very large one. It could hardly have fallen short of 600 copies. Time was consequently needed in working off the sheets, and before that process was ended, it is clear that corrections were occasionally made in the type. There was no systematic revision, but here and there some of the more obvious misprints were amended, and at times the pagination was set right. The sheets that were worked off before the type was corrected were not destroyed; they were bound up indifferently with other sheets that had been revised. This casual method of correction was not uncommon in other printing-offices of the day. In the result few copies of a single edition of a book left the printing-office with the typography identical at all points. The quarto editions of Shakespeare's plays show typographical discrepancies between one copy and another, which are only explicable on the ground that the press was altered while the sheets were being worked off. But the variations among different copies of the First Folio are more numerous than those among copies belonging to the same edition of any other known book of the day.

The pagination and signatures offered the easiest opportunities for correction. In fully half the edition the mistakes in the paging of 'The Taming of the Shrew' (p. 214), 'All's Well' (p. 237), and 'Richard II' (p. 37) were put right. In fully a third of the edition the misprinted signatures V and m 3 were amended. In almost all the copies the initial letter on the first leaf which was printed upside down was reversed, and the misprinted B in the signature of the same leaf was changed to A; the misprinted p. 273 in 'Hamlet' was corrected to p. 277; the misprinted p. 307 in 'Lear' was changed to p. 309. The Chatsworth copy is purged of these defects. Many of its sheets may therefore be regarded as comparatively late impressions. It is one of the few copies in which the omitted signature c 2 on p. 27 of 'Coriolanus' is supplied. Yet some important corrections were made later, and these the Chatsworth copy escaped. Occasionally the misprinted signatures (y 2 and y 3) on p. 355 and p. 357 of 'Antony and Cleopatra' appear in their right form y y 2 and y y 3, although they retain their original irregularity in the Chatsworth copy.

The most singular typographical confusion which was repaired in the course of the printing is met with in 'Othello' (p. 333), and this error also disfigures the Chatsworth as well as at least three other extant copies (belonging respectively to Sir Edwin Durning-Lawrence, Bart., Mr. Maurice Jonas, and Mr. Caldwell, of Pittsburgh, U.S.A.). In the unrevised page of 'Othello' Roderigo, in his great dialogue with Iago (Act iv, Sc. 2, ll. 173 et seq.), is made to remark most inaptly—

'And hell gnaw his bones,
Performances are no kin together.'

In
In the corrected copies the irrelevance of the first line is replaced by Roderigo's apposite words—

'I have heard too much: and your words and
Performances are no kin together.'

The introduction of 'And hell gnaw his bones' is due to the carelessness of the compositor. The words rightly appear in Emilia's angry speech near the beginning of the preceding column, and their unjustified repetition to the exclusion of the right text is a freak of misdirected vision.

Many other corrections made in course of printing touch the text at more important points than the pagination or the signatures. At least eight leaves are extant in two forms, one showing the text as it was first set up, the other showing it as it was subsequently corrected; only a few extant copies contain these leaves uncorrected; in the Chatsworth copy all figure in their amended form. The corrections in these instances variously affect misprints, spelling, punctuation, or use of capital letters. The reason of the alteration is not in every case quite plain.

Of two uncorrected pages of 'As You Like It' (p. 193 and p. 204), only found in three extant copies (Lenox copy No. 1, the Barton copy at Boston, U.S.A., and the copy formerly belonging to Bishop John Vertue, of Portsmouth), p. 193 is wrongly numbered p. 203; and p. 204 is not only misprinted p. 194, but it allots the names of the characters Orlando, Clown, and William to the speeches with hopeless inaccuracy.

The last page (p. 272) of 'The Third Part of Henry VI' in the Histories presents in at least three extant copies (the Ellesmere, the Stratford Memorial, and the New York Tilden copies), three grave mistakes which make nonsense of the text: King stands for Yung (col. 2, l. 4); add (col. 2, l. 13) for and, and 'ris (col. 2, l. 17) for 'kis' (i.e. 'kiss'). In 'King Lear' (Tragedies, p. 309) the stage-direction announcing the hero's death appears variously in different copies as He dis (the commonest form), Hee dis, and He dies.

We have already seen how in the Tragedies section the last page of 'Romeo and Juliet' was ultimately reset when the opening lines of 'Troilus' were detached from the reverse side of the leaf. This last page of 'Romeo' is met with in two forms showing somewhat arbitrary variations. The first setting followed with great literalness the quarto version of 1599. The printers first set up 'pin'd', which they converted into 'pinde' in the second setting (col. 1, l. 4); 'Griefe' was changed into 'Greefe' (l. 5), 'Countie' into 'Countie' (l. 7), 'wild' into 'wilde' (l. 8), 'dire' into 'dyre' (l. 15), 'here' into 'heere' (l. 26), 'intreated' into 'intreated' (l. 28), 'noise' into 'noyse' (l. 32). Here the uncorrected readings seem preferable to the corrected spellings. In other instances, in the same lines, the spelling is improved by the corrections, e.g.:—'banish'd' for 'banisht' (l. 3), 'cittie' for 'cittie' (l. 3), 'houre' for 'hover' (l. 21), 'scarre' [i.e. scare] for 'scar' (l. 31), and 'go' for 'goe' (l. 32). The attendant, whose speech is assigned to Boy in the second setting (l. 40), is called Balt, i.e. Balthazar, in the first setting; and the second attendant, whose speech is assigned to Page in the second setting, is called Boy in the first. Brackets, which are wholly absent from the first setting, are freely used in the second. Capital letters are transferred or introduced anew, e.g. 'so tutor'd' becomes 'so Tutor'd'; 'her kindreds Vault' becomes 'her Kindreds vault'; 'heaven' becomes 'Heaven'; 'a holy man' becomes 'a Holy man.'

Similarly a leaf in Hamlet (pp. 277-78) survives in both a revised and unrevised shape. The leaf is wholly uncorrected in the MacGeorge copy, and in that formerly belonging belonging to Thomas Amyot (cf. Variorum Shakespeare, 1821, vol. xxi, pp. 449-50); parts of it only are corrected in the Marquis of Bath's copy. In this case every change made by the reviser is an obvious improvement. In the earlier setting the page-number 277 appears wrongly as 273, and 'lowles' (col. 1, l. 9 from end) appears as 'lowlas.' These errors were first set right. The next page, 278, which in its original state showed at least eleven bad misprints, was corrected at a later stage. The 'sirh, is' of the old setting (col. 1, l. 17) became 'sir, his' in the new; yearys (l. 20) became 'years'; 'o-n thing' (l. 41) became 'one thing' and 'Coffin' became 'Coffin'; 'Foredo' (col. 2, l. 3) became 'For do'; 'Bride-bed' (l. 30) became 'Bride-bed'; 'and Maide' became 'Maid'; 'Emphasies' (l. 43) became 'Emphasis'; 'wisensse' (l. 52) became 'wisenesse'; 'forebeare' (l. 4 from end) became 'forebeare'; 'Crocadile' (last line) 'Crocadile'.

But, despite such spasmodic efforts of the press-corrector, no thorough revision of the whole volume was attempted; most of the irregularities in pagination and signature remained to the last; offensive misreadings of the 'copy' were untouched and no endeavour was made to harmonize the spelling. Few books of the date supply an equal number of spelling discrepancies. No finity of form was recognized by the printers either in proper names or elsewhere. In one line in the dramatis personae of 'Henry V' the two forms Henry and Henrie appear side by side: 'Prince Henry afterwards Crowned King Henrie the Fift.' 'Anthony' and 'Anthonic;' 'tragedy' and 'tragedie' were always interchangeable. 'Berwick' and 'Barwick;' 'Bollingbrooke' and 'Bullingbrooke;' 'Burdeaux' and 'Burdeux;' 'Calais,' 'Callice,' and 'Callis;' 'Falconbridge' and 'Faulconbridge;' 'Milleane' and 'Millane;' 'Norway' and 'Norwey' are common variants. Ordinary words appear indifferently in two, three, four, and five forms. 'Visor' is spelt 'visard,' 'visor,' 'vizar,' 'vizard,' and 'vizor'; 'adieu' appears as 'adew,' 'adieu,' 'adiec,' and 'adue'; 'bankrupt' as 'bankerout,' 'bankrupt,' and 'banqu'routr'; 'widow' as 'widdowes,' 'widdows,' and 'widows;' 'soldier' as 'solder,' 'soldiour,' and 'souldiour;' 'choice' as 'choice,' 'choise,' and 'choysse;' 'seize' as 'ceize,' 'seaze,' and 'seinse;' 'here' as 'here,' 'hier,' and 'hyre;' 'harbinger' as 'harbenger,' 'harbinger,' and 'herbenger;' 'mongrel' as 'mongrill,' 'mungrel,' and 'mungrell.' Similarly we find 'alchymist' and 'alcumist;' 'bauble' and 'bable'; 'blue' and 'blew;' 'curfewe' and 'curphew;' 'ducat' and 'ducket;' 'enchautt' and 'inchant;' 'fiction' and 'fition;' 'feuer' and 'feauer;' 'friar' and 'fryer;' 'herald' and 'harrold;' 'monarch' and 'monarke;' 'perilous' and 'parlous;' 'smoke' and 'smoake;' 'son' and 'sonne;' 'star' and 'starre.'

Sometimes the misspellings are indistinguishable from misprints, and greatly perplex the reader. In 'King John,' v. 2. 133, 'this un-heard sawinesse' is not seen at a first glance to stand for 'this unhair'd sauciness,' i.e. the sauciness of hairless stripplings. Elsewhere 'uses' for 'oozes' ('Timon,' i. 1. 21), and 'foretell' for 'fertile' (Antony and

A further alleged discrepancy among extant copies is often quoted to show that the date on the title-page sometimes appears as 1633 instead of 1632. But this allegation proves to rest on a misunderstanding. In 1821, Messrs. Arch, London booksellers, wrote of a copy in their possession: 'The title-page (evidently genuine) is dated 1632, but the last page has the usual date 1634' (cf. Variorum Shakespeare, 1821, xxi. 450). This title-page was, some forty years ago, acquired by the New York collector, James Lenox, and was transferred by him to another copy of the volume (with a defective title-page in facsimile) which he purchased in London in 1875. Lenox's copy with the inserted Arch title-page, which has long been reputed to bear the date 1632, is now in the Lenox collection in the New York Public Library. On thorough examination, the supposed date 1652 proves to be a comparatively recent mutilation of 1634. The margins of the title-page have been much abridged, and the page has been inlaid. The tail of the 3 in 1634 has been cut away, and the remaining fragment has been purposely converted into a 2. (Information given by Mr. Victor H. Patsits, of the New York Public Library.)
Cleopatra, i. 2. 41), are equally confusing, and the list might be greatly prolonged. The mere misprints, which illustrate every phase of typographical carelessness, can be reduced to no law. The commonest words are often most completely disguised, and the context at times offers no ready means of recognition (cf. 'Taunt' for 'Giant' in 'Twelfth Night,' i. 5. 218; 'by foule' for 'bi-fold' in 'Troilus and Cressida,' v. 2. 141; 'Bartlet' for 'martlet,' i.e. the martin, in 'Macbeth,' i. 6. 4).

But not all the modes of the spelling or grammatical construction which puzzle the modern reader by their unfamiliarity are considered errors. The text of the First Folio presents some syntactical forms which, though now obsolete, are deliberate and well justified. Sometimes they seem to point to consistent sympathy with archaisms on the part of the copyist or printers, if not on the part of the author. The First Folio abounds in passages where a plural subject has its verb in the singular: cf. 'Love's Labour's Lost,' v. 2. 375, 'Your wits makes wise things foolish'; 'Henry V,' i. 2. 27, 'Gainst him, whose wrongs gives edge unto the swords'; 'Richard III,' ii. 3. 35, 'Untimely stormes, makes men expect a dearth'; 'Romeo,' v. 3. 135, 'Feares comes upon me'; 'Hamlet,' iv. 5. 78, 'When sorrowes comes, they come not single spies'; 'Othello,' iv. 2. 170, 'The messengers of Venice states the meate'; 'Cymbeline,' iv. 2. 353, 'Th' imperious Seas breeds Monsters.' This was a common idiom in early English, but was gradually superseded in Shakespeare's day; and it was not retained when the First Folio was reprinted in 1632. The double negative, which is of constant occurrence in the First Folio, stands on the same footing (cf. 'Much Ado,' ii. 1. 134, 'Nor will you not tell me who you are'; 'Comedy of Errors,' iii. 2. 433, 'Nor to her bed no homage do I owe'). This form of speech too, which was accepted universally at an earlier epoch, grew into a vulgarism and was, like the former construction, expunged for the most part from the Second Folio.

Within nine years of publication, the whole of the large edition of the First Folio was exhausted. A new folio edition of Shakespeare's plays, known as the Second Folio, was taken in hand in 1632 and was rapidly seen through the press. Though the syntax of the First Folio was often modernized in the Second, the text as a whole was reprinted without amendment. The textual changes in the Second Folio are indeed for the most part insignificant, and as a rule are arbitrary and senseless guesses on the printer's part. When an old misprint is removed, a new one is commonly introduced in its near neighbourhood. Proofs of printers' ignorance and carelessness are almost greater in the Second Folio than in the First. It was mainly the work of new hands. Of the five promoters of the First Folio syndicate, only two took part in the publication of the Second Folio. William Jaggard, the printer, had died in 1624, and on the death of his son Isaac in 1627, Isaac's widow at once made over to another firm of printers, Thomas and Richard Cotes, the Jaggards' parte in Shakspeare Playes. Blount also retired from business within a few years of the issue of the First Folio, and on November 16, 1630, he assigned all 'his estate and right' in Shakespeare's works to the bookseller, Robert Allot. The two remaining promoters of the First Folio, William Aspley and John Smethwick or Smithweeke, were still active in the trade for some years longer; and they played again the subordinate parts that they had taken in the publication of the First Folio of 1623 in the new venture of the Second Folio of 1632. The chief promoters in the Second Folio were, however, Thomas Cotes, Jaggard's successor, who printed the volume, and the bookseller, Robert Allot, Blount's successor. Aspley and Smethwick (or Smithweeke) lent some assistance, together with two other booksellers, who now joined them for the first time, Richard Hawkins, who had recently acquired the right to 'Othello,' and Richard Meighen, who had recently acquired the right to the 'Merry Wives.' Most copies of the Second Folio state on the title-page that they were 'printed by Tho. Cotes for Robert Allot'; but in some copies, for Allot's name is substituted that of one of the other part-proprietors—Aspley, Hawkins, or Smethwick. None exerted effective control of the typography; and their evil example encouraged their successors, who produced the Third and Fourth Folios in 1663 and 1685 respectively, to perpetuate the main defects of the First. Dryden, writing in 1673, in his 'Essay on the Dramatic Poetry of the last Age' (p. 160), expressed wonder at the reverence extended to Shakespeare, whose work he only knew in the folios, in view of the fact that every page of the extant editions presented some 'solecism in speech or some notorious flaw in sense.' But in spite of the careless ignorance of printers—their spelling vagaries, their misreadings of the 'copy,' and their inability to reproduce intelligently any sentence in a foreign language—many columns of the First Folio, as of its three successors, can be still perused uninterruptedly with understanding by the careful student of Elizabethan typography and Elizabethan English. Probably no more than one in each thousand lines will present obstacles wholly insurmountable to the expert reader's progress. Shakespeare's writings were inherently of too fertile and too potent an excellence to suffer materially or permanently from the incompetence of those who first undertook their publication. In the eighteenth and nineteenth centuries a long line of able editors set all but a few fragments of the First Folio text on a typographical footing that was sound and intelligible.

The text of the First Folio continues to provoke much conjectural emendation, not all of which is justifiable. The profitable opportunities which the volume offers for new exercises in textual criticism are no longer abundant. It is needful to resist temptation: many a passage which has puzzled the uninitiated reader and has been denounced by him as a corruption of scrivener or compositor has lost its obscurity, even as it stands, in the seeing eye of the trained Shakespearean scholar. At any rate, none should now endeavour to repair the typographical errors of the First Folio who is not very specially equipped for the task. It is requisite to acquire beforehand a thorough knowledge of the orthography, the phraseology, the prosody, the technical vocabulary, the printers' and publishers' methods of work, which were in vogue in Shakespeare's era. The textual critic must be gifted with a natural appreciation of the rhythm of prose and verse. He must above all things have faith in the resources of Shakespeare's genius, and some capacity to realize its working. The typographical defects of the volume should neither be exterminated nor exaggerated; but the unique place that the First Folio holds in the world's literature as the sole surviving source of first-hand knowledge of Shakespeare's noblest writings, gives its text indefeasible right only to be handled in the spirit of reverent scholarship.

The First Folio was four times reproduced in facsimile during the nineteenth century. The first attempt was made in 1806. The result was a very tall and wide folio volume (15 in. × 9\(\frac{3}{4}\) in.) bound in boards, and the inexperienced owner of this reprint has often of late years mistaken it for the original. The paper has the watermark 'SHAKESPEARE,' to which is sometimes appended the name of the paper-manufacturer, 'J. WHATMAN, 1806.' At the back of the portrait appear the words, 'Printed by E. & J. WRIGHT, St. John's Square,' while at the bottom of the last leaf are the words, 'J. Wright, Printer, No. 38 St. John's Square.'

\(^1\) I have to thank Mr. F. J. Payne, who has made a study of the First Folio, for assistance of much value in preparing this Introduction.
INTRODUCTION

Square? The second and best facsimile of the First Folio was that issued by Lionel Booth, at 307 Regent Street, in 1864, in three parts. It was printed by J. Strangeways and H. E. Walden, 28 Castle Street, Leicester Square. At the bottom of each page is a consecutive number. The type is smaller than the original, but it is very clear, and the typography is at all points trustworthy. Both these reproductions were in ordinary print. In 1866 there came out a third large folio reproduction in facsimile by the then newly discovered process of photo-lithography. This was made partly from the Grenville copy at the British Museum and partly from the Ellesmere copy at Bridgewater House. It was executed under the superintendence of Howard Staunton, and was published in London by Day & Son. A fourth and much reduced photographic facsimile in octavo, published by Messrs. Chatto & Windus, appeared in 1876, with an introduction by J. O. Halliwell-Phillipps. The publishers purchased for the purposes of this reproduction a copy belonging to Thomas Hayes, a Manchester bookseller, which they subsequently sold to Mr. Robert Roberts, of Boston, Lincolnshire.

The present reproduction has been made, by kind permission of the Duke of Devonshire, from the copy of the First Folio in the Duke's library at Chatsworth. The Chatsworth copy formerly belonged to the great collector, the Duke of Roxburghe. A full description and history of it is given in the accompanying Census of Extant Copies (No. XXI). It is in all probability the cleanest and freshest exemplar in existence, and lends itself with exceptional effect to photographic reproduction. Every leaf is in the original state, but seven consecutive leaves in the section of the tragedies were inserted from a second shorter copy to fill a gap, which accident at some early date caused in the volume after it came from the press.

September 1, 1902.

 Reasons of space have made it necessary to print the Census of Extant Copies of the First Folio in an Appendix, which accompanies this volume in a separate cover.

1 William Upcott discovered 368 misprints, of which forty are serious mistakes, in this book (cf. Notes and Queries, 1st Series, vol. vii, p. 47, and 3rd Series, vol. vii, p. 139). Mr. H. H. Furness, of Philadelphia, owns a copy with Upcott's MS. collations made in 1832. The 1866 reprint has been frequently Grangerized. In the Barton Library at Boston, U.S.A., is a copy that was Grangerized by John Britton, the antiquary; this was acquired by the well-known collector, T. P. Barton, in 1858, a year after Britton's death.

2 A few pages only—the preliminary leaves and pp. 1-38 of the Comedies—were issued in facsimile in 1893 by photographic process, under the title of The Dallas-type Shakespeare; a reduced facsimile of the First Folio (1613) edition in the British Museum.
To the Reader.

This Figure, that thou here seeest put,
It was for gentle Shakespeare cut;
Wherein the Grauer had a strife with Nature, to out-doo the life:
O, could he but haue drawne his wit
As well in brasse, as he hath hit
His face; the Print would then surpass
All, that was euer writ in brasse.
But, since he cannot, Reader, looke
Not on his Picture, but his Booke.

AND

PHILIP
Earle of Montgomery, &c. Gentleman of his Maiesties Bed-Chamber. Both Knights of the most Noble Order of the Garter, and our singular good LORDS.

Right Honourable,

If we studie to be thankful in our particular for the many favors we have received from your L.L
we are false upon the ill fortune, to mingle two the most diverse things that can bee, feare, and rashnesse; rashnesse in the enterprise, and feare of the success. For when we videow the places your H.H. suffaie, we cannot but know their dignity greater, then to descend to the reading of these trifles, and while we name them trifles, we have depriu'd our selves of the defence of our Dedication. But since your L.L. haue been pleas'd to thinke these trifles some-thing, bereeto-sore; and haue prossequited both them, and their Author living, with so much favour: we hope that (they out-living him, and be not hauing the fate, common with some, to be exequior to his owne writtings,) you will use the like indulgence toward them, you have done unto
The Epistle Dedicatory.

unto their parent. There is a great difference, whether any Book chose his Patrones, or finde them: This hath done both. For, so much were your L.L. likings of the severall parts, when they were acted, as before they were published, the Volume ask'd to be yours. We have but collected them, and done an office to the deaf, to procure his Orphanes, Guardians: without ambition either of selfe-profit, or fame: only to keep the memory of so worthy a Friend, & Fellow alive, as was our Shakespeare, by humble offer of his plays, to your most noble patronage. Wherein, as we have inly observed, no man to come neere your L.L. but with a kind of religious address, it hath bin the height of our care, who are the Presenters, to make the present worthy of your H.H. by the perfection. But, there we must also crave our abilities to be considered, my Lords. We cannot go beyond our owne powers. Country hands reach forth milke, creame, fruites, or what they have: and many Nations (we have heard) that had not gumses & incense, obtained their requests with a leauened Cake. It was no fault to approch their Gods, by what meanes they could: And the most, though meanest, of things are made more precious, when they are dedicated to Temples. In that name therefore, we most humbly consecrate to your H.H. the remains of your servant Shakespeare, that what delight is in them, may be ever your L.L. the reputation his, & the faults ours, if any be committed, by a payre so carefull to show their gratitude both to the living, and the dead, as is

Your Lordshippes most bounden,

John Heminge,

To the great Variety of Readers.

From the most able, to him that can but spell: There you are number'd. We had rather you were weighed. Especially, when the fate of all Bookes depends upon your capacities: and not of your heads alone, but of your purse. Well it is now publique, & you will stand for your privileges wecknow: to read, and cenfur. Do so, but buy it first. That doth best commend a Booke, the Stationer faies. Then, how odd he factor your brains be, or your wisedomes, make your licence the same, and spare not. Judge your fixe-pen'orth, your thillings worth, your fine thillings worth: at a time, or higher; so you rise to the just rates, and welcome. But, what ever you do, Buy. Cenfur will not drive a Trade, or make the jacke go. And though you be a Magilstrate of wit, and sit on the Stage at Black-Friers, or the Cock-pit, to arraigne Playes dailie, know, these Playes have had their triall alreadie, and flood our all Appeals; and do now come forth quitted rather by a Decree of Court, then any purchas'd Letters of commendation.

It had bene a thing, we confesse, worthie to have bene withed, that the Author eirselfe had hied to have let forth, and outseen his owne writings; But since it hath bin ordain'd otherwize, and he by death deceased from that right, we pray you do not envie his Friends, the office of their care, and paine, to have collected & publish'd them, and so to have publish'd them, as where (before) you were abuse'd with divers ftole, and furreptitious copies, maimed, and deformed by the frauds and stales of injurious impostors, that expos'd them: even those, are now offer'd to your view cur'd, and perfect of their limbes; and all the rest, absolute in their numbers, as he conceiv'd them. Who, as he was a happie imitator of Nature, was a most gentle expresser of it. His mind and hand went together: And what he thought, he uttered with that easiness, that we have fear'd receiv'd from him a blot in his papers. But it is not our province, who onely gather his works; and give them to praise him. It is yours that reade him. And there we hope, to your divers capacities, you will finde enough, both to draw, and hold you: for his wit can no more lie hid, then it could be loft. Reade him, therefore; and againe, and againe: And if then you do not like him, surely you are in some manifest danger, not to understand him. And so we leave you to other of his Friends, whom if you need, can bee your guides: if you neede them not, you can leade your felves, and others. And such Readers we wish with him.

TO THE MEMORIE
of the deceased Author Maister
W. Shakespere.

Hake-speare, at length thy pious fellowes give
The world thy Workes: thy Workes, by which, out-line
Thy Tombe, thy name must when that stone is rent,
And Time dissolves thy Stratford Monument,
Here we alone shall view thee still. This Booke,
When Brass and Marble fade, shall make thee looke
Fresh to all Ages: when Posteritie
Shall loath what's new, thinke all is prodegie
That is not Shake-speares; eu'ry Line, each Verse
Here shall revive, redeeme thee from thy Herfe.
Nor Fire, nor cankring Age, as Nafo said,
Of his, thy mit-sfraught Booke shall once invade.
Nor shall I e're beleue, or thinke thee dead
(Though mist) untill our bankront Stage be sped
(Imposible) with some new strains e'ou-do
Passions of Juliet, and her Romeo;
Or till I heare a Scene more nobly take,
Then when thy half Sword parling Romans spake.
Till these, till any of thy Volumes rest
Shall with more fire, more feeling be exprest;
Be sure, our Shake-speare, thou canst neuer dye,
But crown'd with Lawrell, line eternally.

L. Digges.

To the memorie of M. W. Shake-speare.

VVV E.E wondred (Shake-speare) that thou went'st so soone
From the Worlds Stage, to the Graves-Tyring-roome.
Wee thought thee dead, but this thy printed worth,
Tell's thy Spectators, that thou went'st but forth
To enter with applause. An Actors Art,
Can dye, and live, to acte a second part.
That's but an Exit of Mortalitie;
This, a Re-entrance to a Plaudite.

To the memory of my beloved,

The AUTHOR

Mr. William Shakespeare: And what he hath left vs.

O draw no envy (Shakespeare) on thy name,
Am not ample to thy Book, and Fame:
While I confesse thy writings to be such,
As neither Man, nor Muse, can praise too much.
'Tis true, and all men suffrage. But these ways
Were not the paths I mean'd unto thy praise:
For selfish Ignorance on these may light,
Which, when it sounds at best, but echoes right;
Or blind Affection, which doth mere advance
The truth, but grapes, and wrath all by chance.
Or crafty Malice, might pretend this praise,
And thinke to ruine, where it seem'd to raise.
These are, as some infamous Baud, or whore,
Should praise a Matron. What could hurt her more?
But thou art praise against them, and indeed
Above all fortune of them, or the need.
I, therefore will begin. Soule of the Age!
The applause! delight! the wonder of our Stage!
My Shakspcarc, rife; I will not lodge thee by Chaucer, or Spenser, or bid Beaumont lye.
A little further, to make thee a room:
Thou art a Monument, without a weal;
And art alive still, while thy Book doth live;
And we have wits to read, and praise to give.
That I not mixe thee so, my braine excuses;
I mean with great, but disproportion'd Muses:
For, if I thought my judgement were of yeeres,
I should commit thee surely with thy peers
And tell, how farre thou didst out-shine
Of sporting Kid, or Marlowes mighty line.
And though thou hadst small Latine, and baste Greeke,
From thence to honour thee, I would not seek
For names, but call for the bright shining Achilus, Euripides, and Sophocles to us;
Paccuuius, Accius, him of Cordoue dead,
To life againe, to heare thy Buckin tread,
And shake a Stage; or, when thy Stockes were on,
Leave thee alone, for the comparison

Of
Of all that insolent Greece, or haughty Rome
Sent forth, or since did from their altars come.
Triumph, my Britaine, thou hast one to shew,
To whom all Scenes of Europe homage owe.
He was not of an age, but for all time!
And all the Muses still were in their prime,
When like Apollo he came forth to warne
Our cares, or like a Mercury to charm us!
Nature her selfe was proud of his defence,
And joy'd to wear the dressing of his lines!
Which were so richly spun, and woven so fit,
As since, he will vouchsafe no other Wit.
The merry Greeke, tart Aristophanes,
Next Terence, witty Plautus, now not please;
But antiquated, and deserted he
As they were not of Nature's family.
Yet must I not give Nature all: Thy Art,
My gentle Shakespeare, must enjoy a part.
For though the Poets matter, Nature be,
His Art doth give the fashion. And, that he,
Who casts to write a living line, must scarce,
Such as these or, and strike the second Heat
Upon the Muses' anvil: turne the same,
(And himselfe with it) that he thinkes to frame;
Or for the Lawrell, he may gaine a score;
For a good Poet's made, as well as borne.
And such was thee. Look how the fathers face
Lines in his issue, even so, the race
Of Shakespeare's monde, and manners brightnely shined
In his well turned, and true filde lines:
In each of which, he scene to shoke a Lance,
As brandishd as the eyes of ignorance.
Sweet Swan of Auon! what a sight it were
To see thee in our waters yet appeare,
And make those flights upon the banke of Thames,
That so did take Eliza, and our James!
But stay, I see thee in the Hemisphire
Advance'd, and made a Constellation there!
Shine forth, thou Starre of Poets, and with edge,
Or influence, shide or cheer the dropping Stage;
Which, since the flight for hence, hath worn't a like night,
And despair's day, but for thy Volumes light.
Upon the Lines and Life of the Famous Scenicke Poet, Master William Shakespare.

Hope hands, which you fo clapt, go now, and wring
You Britam's brave, for done arc Shakespeare's dayes:
His dayes are done, that made the dainty Playes,
Which made the Globe of heau'n and earth to ring.
Dry'de is that veine, dry'd is the Thespian Spring,
Turn'd all to tears, and Phoebus clouds his rayes:
That corp's, that coffin now besticke those byres,
Which crown'd him Poet first, then Poets King.
If Tragedies might any Prologue have,
All those he made, would scarce make one to this:
Where Fame, now that he gone is to the grave (Deaths pulque tryring-house) the Nuncius is.
For though his line of life went foone about,
The life yet of his lines shall never out.

Hugh Holland.

THE TEMPEST.

A Flu: primus, Scena prima.

A tempestuous noise of Thunder and Lightning heard: Enter a Ship master, and a Bostwaine.

Master.

Bost. Here Master: What cheer?

Master. Good: Speak to't. Mariners: fall astern, yarely, or we run our selves a ground, before, before.

Enter Alfonso, Sebastian, Antonio, Ferdinandos, Gonzalo, and others.

Alfonso. Good Bostwaine have care: where's the Master? Play the men.

Bost. I pray now keep below.

Alfonso. Where is the Master, Befon?

Bost. Do you not heare him? you marre our labours, keep your Cabines: you do assift the storme.

Gonzalo. Nay, good be patient.

Bost. When the Sea is: hence, what cares these roates for the name of King? to Cabine, silence: trouble us not.

Gonzalo. Good, yet remember whom thou hast aboard.

Bost. No more than my self. You are a Counseller, if you can command these Elements to silence, and work the peace of the present, wee will not hand a rope more, vie your authorities: If you cannot, give thanks you have lu'd so long, and make your selfe ready in your Cabine for the mischief of the houre, if it so hap, Cheereely good hearts: out of our way I say.

Exit. Gonzalo.

Gonz. I have great content from this fellow: methinks he hath no drowning marken upon him, his complexion is perfect Gallowe: flond salt good Faste to his hanging, make the rope of his defluing our cable, for our owne doth little advantage: If he be not borne to bee hang'd, our case is miserable.

Exit. Bostwaine.

Bost. Downe with the top-Mast: yare, lower, lower, bring her to TRY with Maine-course. A plague Aery within. Enter Sebastian, Antonio & Gonzalo.

vpon this howling: they are bowder then the weather, or our office: yet againe? What do you heere? Shall we give ore and drown, have you a minde to sink?

Sebastian. A poxe o'your throat, you bawling, blasphe-mous incharitablc Dog.

Bost. Worke you then.

Alfonso. Hang cur, hang you wherefor an infolent Partake, we are left afraid to be drown'd, then thou art.

Gonzalo. Ite warrant him for drowning, though the Ship were no stronger then a Nutshell, and as leasly as an unflanched wench.

Bost. Lay her a hold, a hold, let her two courses off to Sea againe, lay her off.

Enter Mariners set.

Marins. All lott, to prayers, to prayers, all lott.

Bost. What must our mouths be cold?

Gonzalo. The King, and Prince, as prayers, let's assist them, for our cafe is as theirs.

Sebastian. I'am out of patience.

Anf. We are meeerly closed of our lives by drunkards, This wide-chop't-falcall would thou mightest lye drowning the wailing of ten Tides.

Gonzalo. Hee'cl be hang'd yet, Though every drop of water sweare against it, And gaze at wide to glut him. A confused noise within.

Mercy on vs.

We split, we split. Farewell my wife, and children, Farewell brother: we split, we split, we split.

Alfonso, Let's all sink with King.

Sebastian. Let's take leave of him.

Gonzalo. Now would I give a thouand furlongs of Sea, for an Acre of barren ground: Long heath, Browne firrs, any thing: the walls aboute be done, but I would'' none dy a dry death.

Exit. Gonzalo.

Scena Secunda.

Enter Prospero and Miranda.

Miranda. If by your Art (my deere father) you haue Put the wild waters in this Ren;elay them: The skye it teemes would powre down flinking pitch, But that the Sea mounting to th' welkins cheeke, Daftes the fire out. Oh! I have suffered With those that I law suffer: A braue vextell A (Who

Or blessed was't we did?

Prof. Both, both my Girle.

By owle-play (as thou faid'st) were we haud' thence, But blesse'dly holpe him theither.

Mira. O my heart bleedes

To thinke oth're teene that I haue turn'd you to,
Which is from my remembrance, please you, farther.

Prof. My brother and thy vnkle, call'd Athonie:

I pray thee marke me, that a brother should be so perсидous: he, whom next thy felle
Of all the world I lou'd, and to him put
The management of my state, as at that time
Through all the signitures it was the fift,

And Profher, the prime Duke, being so reputed
In dignity; and for the liberal Ars,
Without a parallel; thofe being all my studie,
The Government cast upon my brother,
And to my State grow straunger, being transported
And stapt in secret studies, thy fale vnkle

(Do'lt thou attend mee?)

Cora. Sir, most heedfully.

Prof. Being once perfeated how to grante suites, how to deny them: who t'advance, and who
To trash for over-topp'ing new created
The creatures that were mine, I say, or chang'd 'em,
Or els new form'd 'em; hauing both the key,
Of Officer, and office, fet all hearts i' th' slate
To what tune pleasd his care, that now he was
The lay which had mad my princely Trunk,
And stuck my verdure out on': Thou attend'at not?

Mira. O good Sir, I doe.

Prof. I pray thee marke me:

I thus neglecting worldly ends, all dedicated
To cloesenes, and the bettering of my mind
With that, which but by being so retir'd
Ore-prie'd all popular rate in my falle brother
Awak'd an eunuch nature, and my truft
Like a good parent, did beger of i'n
A falfe-lover in'te more contrarie, as great
As my trufl was, which had indeede no limit,
A confidence fans bound. He being thus Lorded,
Not onely with what my reason new-yelled,
But what my power might els exact. Like one Whom sliding into truth, by telling of it,
Made such a fynner of his memorie
To credite his owne lie, he did beleue
He was indeed the Duke, out o'th' Substitution
And executing th'o'ward face of Reialtie
With all prerogative, thence his ambition growing:
Do'thou laue me?

Mira. Yoursafe, Sir, would cure desenesse.

Prof. To laue no Schreene between this part he plaide,
And him he plaide it, for he needed will be Absolute Millaine, Me (poore man) my Librarie
Was Dukedome large enough: of temporal realtie
He thinks me now incapaible. Confederates
(forde he was for Swa) with King of Naples
To give him Annuall tribute, doe him homage
Subject his Coronet, to his Crownes and bend
The Dukedom ye nbow'd (yal poore Millaine)
To most ignoble flooping.

Mira. Oh the heauen's:

Prof. Marke his condition, and th'ecuent, then tell me
If this might be a brother,

Mira. I should finne

To think but Noble of my Grand-mother,
Good wombs have borne bad sons.

Pro. Now the Condition.

This King of Naples being an Englishman
To me ineretere, hearkens my Brothers suit,
Which was, That they should have a These.

Out of the Duke dome, and confer faire Millane
With all the Honors, on his brother ! Wheten
A therapist Armie lented, one mid-night
Faced to th' purpose, did Anthonio open
The gates of Millane, and th' dead of darknenesse
The minions for th' purpose hurried thence
Me, and th' cryng fell.

Mrs. Alicia, for pity's sake,
I not rememb're how I cry out then
Will cry it o'er againe: it is a hint
That wrings mine eyes too.

Pro. Heare a little further,
And then I will bring thee to the present business
Which now's upon's: without the which, this Story
Were most impertinent.

Mrs. Wherefore did they not
That theare defroy'd vs?

Pro. Well demand'd, wench:
My Tale prouokes that question: Deare, they durst not,
So deare the love my people bore me: nor yet
A marke fo bloody on the business; but
With colours fairer, painted their foule ends.
In few, they hurried vs a-board a Barke,
Boare vs some Leagues to Sea, where they prepared
A rotten carkav of a But, nor rigg'd,
Nor tackle, fayle, nor maff, the very rats
Infinightly have quizz'd it: There they hoyft vs
To cry to th' Sea, that roard to vs; to sign
To th' wrinde, whose pityfulling backe againe
Did vs but losing wrong.

Mrs. Alack, what trouble
Was I then to you?

Pro. O, a Cherubin
Thou wast not that did preferre me; Thou didst not smile,
Infused with a fortitude from heaven,
When I have deked vs the sea with drops full fait,
Vnder my barthen groa'd, which said I me
An vndergoing fomacke, to bear vp Against what should ensue.

Mrs. How came we a shore?

Pro. By prudence divine,
Some food, we had, and some fteh waste, that
A noble Venerable Gonzalo
Out of his Charity, (who being then appointed Mater of this designe) did giv'e vs, with Rich garments, limmens, floues, and necessaries
Which since have fleered much, as of his gentleneesse
Knowing I ou'd my booke, he furnished me
From nine owne Library, with volumes, that I prize above my Dukedom.

Mrs. Would I might
But ever see that man,

Pro. Now I sitt,
Sitt still, and heare the laft of our sea-sorrow:
Here in this land we arr'ed, and heare
Haue I, thy Schoolmaster, made thee more profite
Then other Princes can, that have more time
For vnder howeres; and Tuors, so to carefull.

Mr. Heuen thank you for't. And now I pray you Sir,

For still itis beating in my minde, your reason
For raying this Sea-Horpe?

Pro. Know thus far forth,
By accident moft thronge, bountifull Fortune
(Now my deere Lord) hath mine enemies
Brought to this shore: And by my presentence
I finde my Zenith doth depend upon
A moft auspicious starre, whose influence
If now I court not, but omit, my fortunes
Will euer after droope: Heare ceaze more queisions,
Thou art inclinde to fellpe: 'tis a good dulnesse,
And giue it way: I know thou canst not chue:
Come away, Servants, come; I am ready now,
Approach my Ariell. Come:

Enter Ariell.

Ars. All hale, great Master, graue Sir, hale: I come
To answer thy belte pleasure; be's to fly,
To swim, to diue into the fire: to ride
On the culd clowds: to thy strong bidding, task
Ariel, and all his Qualitie.

Pro. Haft thou, Spirit,
Performd to point, the Tempest that I bad thee.

E. 4. To every Article.
I boarded the Kings ship: now on the Beaue,
Now in the Waffe, the Decke, in every Cabyn,
I flam'd damazements, sometime I'd diuide
And borne in many places; on the Top-maff,
The Yards and Bore-spirit, would I flame distinquitly,
Then meete, and joyne. Ione Lightning, the pretiester
O' th' dreadful Thunder-claps more momentarie
And fights our running were not; the fire, and cracks
Of fulphurous roaring, the most mighty Neptune
Seeme to beifiege, and make his bold waues tremble,
Yes, his dread Trident fhake,

Pro. My braue Spirit,
Who was so firme, to conftant, that this cople
Would not infect his reason?

Ars. Not a loule.
But felt a Faeuer of the madde, and plaid
Some tricks of derperation: all but Mariner.
Plung'd in the foaming bruyne, and quit the weffell;
Then all afire with me the Kings Sonne Ferdinand
With faire vp-flaring (then like reeds, not haire)
Was the firft man that leapt; abide hell is empty,
And all the Duesels are here.

Pro. Why that's my spirit:
But was not this nye shore?

Ars. Clofe by, my Master.

Pro. But are they (Ariel) safe?

Ars. Not a hairer perhapse
On their fufaining garments not a blemish,
But frether then before: and as thou badst me,
In troops I have dispers'd them 'bout the Ile:
The Kings Sonne have I landed by himselfe,
Whom I left cooling of the Ayre with fighs,
In an edde Angle of the Ile, and fitting
His armes in this fad knot.

Pro. Of the Kings ship,
The Mariners, say how thou haft dispof'd,
And all the rest o'th Fleete?

Ars. Safely in harboure
Is the Kings shippe, in the deeppe Nooke, where once
Thou calld me vp at midnight to fetch dewe
From the ill-wort Berowwethes, there her's had;
The Mariners all vnder hatches flowed,
Who, with a Charme joy'd to their suffer'd labour
I haue left alape: and for the rest o'th Fleete

To lay upon the damn'd, which Sycorax
Could not assign to one: it was mine Art,
When I arriv'd, and heard thee, that made pace
The Pyne, and let thee out.
Ar. I thank thee Mafter.
Pro. If thou more murmur'st, I will rend an Oak
And peg-tee in his knotty entrails, till
Thou haft bow'd away twelve winters.
Ar. Pardon, Mafter, I will be correspondent to command
And doe thy spryting, gently.
Pro. Doe fo; and after two daies
I will discharge thee.
Ar. That's my noble Mafter:
What shall I doe? say what? what shall I doe?
Pro. Goe make thy selfe a like a Nymph o' the Sea,
Be subject to no fight but thine, and make it insupportible
To every eye-ball else: goe take this Shape
And hithe come in't: goe: hence
With diligence.
Exit.
Pro. Awake, deere hart awake, thou haft slept well, Awake.

The strangenes of thy story, poor
Hame-nelle in me.
Pro. Shake it off: Come on,
We'll visit Caliban, my flawe, who never Yields vs kind answeres.
Mrs. This is a villain Sir, I do not love to look on
Pro. But be'ts: We cannot muffle him: he do's make out fire,
Fench in our wood, and sentences in Offices
That profites: What was: Caliban:
Thou Earth, thou: speake.
Cal. within. There's wood enough within.
Pro. Come forth Talty, I lay, there's other busines for thee:
Come thou Talty, when? Enter Ariel like a water-
Fine apperson: my quent Ariel,
Nymph, Hector in thine ear.
Ar. My Lord, it shall be done. Exit.
Pro. Thou poysonous flawe, got by thy dissemblifie
Upon thy wicked Dam: come forth. Enter Caliban.
Cal. As wicked dewe, as ere my mother bruished
With Raens feather from vnwholefome Pen
Drop on you both: A Southwell blow on yee,
And blither you all aye.
Pro. For this be sure, to night thou shalt have cramps,
Sides, stitches, that shall pen thy breath up, Vexations
Shall for that vail of night, that they may worke
All exercise on thee: thou shalt be pinch'd
As chiefe as hony-combe, each pinch more flinging
Then Bees that made'em.
Cal. I must eat my dinner:
This Island's mine by Sycorax my mother,
Which thou talk it from me: when thou canst not fancy,
I thoufked it, & made much of me: wouldst not have What with berries in't: and teach me how
To name the bigger Light, and how the lefle
That burne by day, and night: and then I thou'd thee
And shew'd thee all the qualities o' th' Isle,
The freth Springs, Brine-pits; barren place and fertile,
Curd's be' that did fo: All the Charmes
Of Sycorax: Toades, Beetles, Bats light on you:
For I am all the Subjectts that you have,
Which first was min owne King: and here you fy me:
I in this hard Rocke, whilst you doe keepe from me
The rest o' th' Island.
Pro. Thou
For. Thou most lying slave,
Whom stripes may move, nor kindness I have willed thee (Fifth as thou art with humane care, and lodg'd thee
In mine own cell, till thou didst seek to violate
The honor of my child.

Cal. Oh, ho, oh, ho, wouldst have done done:
Thou didst prevent me, I had people'd else
This life with Caliban.

Mira. Abhorred Slave,
Which any pint of good-natured wilt not take,
Being capable of all ill, I pitied thee,
Took pains to make thee speak, taught thee each hour
One thing or other: when thou didst not (Savage)
Know thine own meaning; but wouldst Talk, gabbled, like
A thing most brutish, I endow'd thy purpose:
With words that made them know me: But thy wild race
(Thou didst learn) had that in't, which good natures
Could not abide to be with; therefore waff thou Defireely conf'd into this Rocke, who hadst
Defireely more than a prision.

Cal. Thou taught me language, and my profit on't
Is, I know now how to curse: the red-plague rid you
For learning me your language.

Prof. Haggard, hence:
Fetch vs in Frevell, and be quicke thou'r bell
To answer other buihelnes: shrug't thy whale (Malice)
If thou neglect it, or doth unwillingly
What I command, I'll rack thee with old Cramipes, Fill thy bowels with Aches, make thee rare,
That beaks shall tremble at thy dyn.

Cal. No, play the.
I must obey, his Arts is of such pow'r,
It would command my Damned stomach,
And make a valuable of him.

Pro. So flate, hence.

Enter Ferdinand & Ariel, in aptly playing & singing.

Ariel Song. Come into the yellow fanter,
And thou takest heed.

Cass. Behold the ruffle, and be thy
The vile waves what is:

Fools of flashy hours, and there, and sweetest Spriites beare the burthen.
Burthen disburthen.

Har. har. boughs wrough the watch Dog sets back,

At. Har. har. I hear the frame of rusting Chants like cry cockade done.

For. Where should this Musick be? I th'air, or the earth?
It sounds no more: and fare it wavy upon
Some God's 0'f'hand, sitting on a banke,
Weeping against the King my Fathers wracke,
This Museke crept by one upon the waters,
Allaying both their fury, and my passion
With it's sweet art: thence I have followed it (Or it hath drawn me rather) but'tis gone
No, it begins again.

Ariel Song. Full sadlom talks the Father lies.

Of his house are Core all made:
These are parcels that were busier,
Nothing of them but these fade,
But dailie fitter & Steer change
Into something rich & for ages
Sea. Nimfhe beauty ring his head.
Burthen: ding dong.

Har. har. I hear them, ding-dong bell.

For. The Dirty do's remember my chown'd father.
This is no mortal former, nor to be found

That the earth owes: I hear it now above me,
For. The fringed Curtaines of thine eye adjuice,
And say what thou art (all you

Mira. What is't a Spirit?
Lord, how it looks about: Belicere me sir,
It carries a brause forme. But it's a spirit.

For. No wench, it eats, and sleeps, & hath such senses
As we have: fuch, This Gallant which thou seest
Was in the wracke: and he's sometyme staid
With greefe (that's beauties canker) might't call him
A goodly person: he hath left his fellows,
And prays et at to finde'em.

For. I might call him
A thing divine, for nothing natural
I swear to no Noble.

For. It goes on fee
As my soul prompts it: Spirit, fine spirit, Ile free thee
Within two dayes for this,

For. Most faire the Goddeffe
On whom these ayes attend: Vouchsafe my prays
May know if you remaine upon this Island,
And that you will some good instruction give
How I may beare me here: my prime request
(Which I do last pronounce) is (O you wonder)
If yon be Mayd, or no?

Mira. No wonder Sir,
But certainly a Mayd.

For. My Language? Heauens!
I am the bell of them that speake this speech,
Were I but where 'tis spoken.

For. How the bell?
What wer't thou if the King of Naples heard thee?

For. A fingle thing, as I am now, that wonders
To hear the speake of Naples: he do's hear me,
And that he do's, I wepe: my selfe am Naples,
Who, with mine eyes (never lince at ebe) beheld
The King my Father wrack't.

Mira. Alache, for mercy.

For. Yes faith, & all his Lords, the Duke of Milaine
And his brave some, being twaine.

Pro. The Duke of Milaine
And his more brauer daughter, could control she,
If now twere fit to do't. At the first sight
They have chang'd eyes: Delicate Ariel,
I'll see thee free for this. A word good Sir,
I fear you have done your selfe some wrong: A word.

Mira. Why speakes my father so vengently this Is the third man that ere I saw; the first
That ere I figh'd for a puny mouse my father
To be enclin'd my way.

For. O, if a Virgin,
And your affection not gone forth, Ile makke you
The Queen of Naples.

Pro. Soft fit, one word more.
They are both in eythers pow'res: But this spirit busines
I must vnesse take, lead too right winning
Make the prize light. One word more: I charge thee
That thou attend mee: Thou art of here villeane
The name thou ow'nst, and hast put thy selfe
Upon this Island, as aspy, to win it
From me, the Lord don't.

For. No, as I am a man.

Mira. That's nothing all, can dwell in such a Temple,
If the ill-spirit have fasly a house.

Good things will fume to detor this.

For. Follow mee, the guard me. You.
Ile manacle thy necke and fetce together:
Sea water shalt thou drink: thy food shall be
The fresh-brooke Muffels, wither'd roots, and huskes Wherein the Acorne craddled. Follow.

Exeunt.
Mina, O dear Father,
Make not too rash a trial of him, for Hec's gentle, and not unfaull.

Prof. What I say,
My foote my Tutor? Put thy sward vp Traitor,
Who mak'st a shew, but dar'ft not striker thy conffience
Is to pooffelt with guilt: Come, from thy ward,
For I can heere difamine thee with this ficke,
And make thy weapon drop.

Mina. Befeech you Father,
Prof. Hence: hang not on my garments,
Mina. Sir haue pity,
Ile be his furye.

Prof. Silence: One word more
Shall make me chide thee, if not hate thee: What,
An advocate for an Impofitor? Ha!:
Thou think'ft there is no more fuch shapes as he,
(Having fene him but he and Caliban:) Foolifh wench,
To th'moft of men, this is a Caliban,
And they to him are Angels.

Mina. My affections
Are then moft humble: I haue no ambition
To fee a goodlier man.
Prof. Come on, obey;
Thy Nerus are in their infancy againe,
And haue no vigour in them.

Fir. So they are:
My spirits, as in a dreame, are all bound vp 1
My Fathers loffe, the weakneffe which I feele,
The wracke of all my friends, or this mans threats,
To whom I am subdue, are but light to me,
Might I burnethrough my prifon once a day
Behold this May: all cornes elfe o'th'Earth
Let liberty make vs of: space enough
Haue I in fuch a prifon.

Prof. It workes: Come on.
Thou haft done well, fine Ariel: follow me,
Harke what thou elfe that do mee.

Mina. Be of comfort,
My Fathers of better nature (Sir)
Then he appeares by speech: this is runyoned
Which now came from him.

Prof. Thou shalt be as free
As mountaine windes; but then eafily do
All points of my command.

Ariel. To thy willable.

Prof. Come follow: speake not for him.

Enter Alonfois, Sebastian, Antonio, Gonzalo, Adriaus,
Francois, and other.

Gen. Befeech you Sir, be merry; you haue caufe,
(But haue we all) of joy; for our eftape

Is much beyond our losse; our hinct of wo.
Is common, every day, some Sayers wife,
The Maffets of some Merchant, and the Merchant
Haue left our Theame of wo: But for the miracle,
(I meane our prefuation) few in millions
Can speake like vs; then wifely (good Sir)weigh
Our forrow, with our comfort,

Ariel. Prethee peace,

Seb. He receiues comfort like cold porridge,

Ant. The Visitor will not give him ore fo

Seb. Looke, he's winding vp the watch of his wit,
By and by it will strike.

Gen. Sir,

Seb. One: Tell.

Gen. When every greffe is entertained,
That's offer'd comes to the entertainer.

Seb. A dollor.

Gen. Doleoure cometh to him indeed, you haue spoken true, then you purpos'd,

Seb. You haue taken it wifelier then I meant you should,

Gen. Therefore my Lord,

Ant. Pie, what a spend-thrift is he of his tongue,

Ain. I pre-thee pare.

Gen. Well, I haue done: But yet

Seb. He will be talking,

Ant. Which, of fee, or Adrian, for a good wager,

First begins to crow.

Seb. The old Cocke.

Ant. The Cockrell.

Seb. Done: The wager?

Ant. A Laughter.

Seb. A match.

Ant. Though this I haunt seeme to be desart.

Seb. Ha.ha.ha,

Ant. So: you're paid.

Ant. Vanisable, and almost inacceffible.

Seb. Yet

Ant. Yet

Ant. He could not misle't.

Adr. A muff needs be of subtle, tender, and delicate temperance.

Ant. Temperance was a delicate wench.

Seb. I, and a subtle, as he most learnedly delies'd

Adr. The aire breathes vpvp vs here most sweetly.

Seb. As if it had Lungs, and rotten ones.

Ant. Or, as'twere perfum'd by a Pen.

Gen. Here is every thing advantageous to life.

Ant. True, false meanes to liue.

Seb. Of that there's none, or little.

Gen. How lustfull and lusty the gracie looks?

How greene?

Ant. The ground indeed is tawny,

Seb. With an eye of greene in't,

Ant. He misle not much.

Seb. No: he doth but mislike the truth totally.

Gen. But the rarity of it is, which is indeed almost beyond creditt.

Seb. As many would rancies are.

Gen. That our Garments being(as they were) drencht in the Sea, hold notwithstanding their freshneffe and gloaffes, being rather new dy'd then flain'd with false water.

Ant. If but one of his pockets could speake, would it not say by heyes?

Seb. I, or very falsely pocket vp his report.
The Tempest.

The faults your owne.

Alarum. So is the deit' doth loss.

Gen. My Lord Sebastain.

The truth you speake doth lack some gentlenesse,
And time to speake it in: you rub the sore,
When you should bring the plaster.

Sey. Very well.

Ant. And most Chirurgeon,

Gen. It is soe. weather in vs all, good Sir,

When you are cloudy.

Sey. Fowlie weather?

Ant. Very soule,

Gen. Had I plannation of this Isle my Lord,

Ant. He'd fow't with Nestle-led.

Sey. Or dockes, or Mallowes,

Gen. And were the King on't. what would I do?

Sey. Scape being drunke, for want of Wine.

Gen. I' th'Commonwealth I woul'd (by contraries)

Execute all things: for no kinde of Traffike
Would I admit: No name of Magistrate:
Letters should not be knowne : Riches, potters,
And vie of servitude, none: Contract, Succession,
Borne, bound of Land, Title, Vineyard none:
No vie of Metrall, Corne, or Wine or Oyle:
No occupation, all men idle, all:
And Women too, but innocent and pure:
No Soueraignty.

Sey. Yet he would be King on't.

Ant. The latter end of his Common-wealth forgets the beginning.

Gen. All things in common Nature should produce Without Iwars or endeavours: Treacon, felony,
Sword, Pike, Knife, Gun, or neede of any Engine
Would I have not: but Nature shoule bring forth
Of it owne kinde, all foroy, all abundance
To feed my innocent people.

Sey. No marrying mong his subiects I

Ant. None (man) all idle; Whores and knaves,

Gen. I woul'd with such perfection gouerne Sir:

T'Excell the Golden Age.

Sey. 'Saue his Maiesty.

Ant. Long liue Gonzalo.

Gen. And do you mark me, Sir? (me.

Alarum.
Pre-thee no more: thou doest talk nothing to Gonzalo: do I deluece your Highnesse, and did it To minister occasion to these Gentlemen, who are of such fesible and nimble Lungs, that they always vie to laugh at nothing.

Ant. 'Twas you we laugh'd at,

Gen. Who, in this kind of merry feeling am nothing to you so you may continue, and laugh at nothing still.

Ant. What a blow was there given?

Sey. And it had not faine flat-long.

Gen. You are Gentlemen of braue mettal: you would lift the Moone out of her spheare, if she would continue in it five weeks without changing.

Enter Arstel playing semeine Musicke.

Sey. We would so, and then go a Bat-fowling.

Ant. Nay good my Lord, be not angry.

Gen. No I warrant you, I will not aduenture my discretion so weakly: Will you laugh me asleepe, for I am very heauy.

Ant. Go sleep, and hear vs.

Alarum. What, all so soone asleepe? with mine eyes
Would (with themselfes) flut up my thoughts,
I finde they are inclin'd to do so.

Sey. Please you Sir,

Do not omit the heauy offer of it.

It filleth vs with sorrow, when it doth, it is a Comforter.

Ant.
Ant. We two my Lord, will guard your person,
While you take your rest, and watch your safety.

Alm. Thank you: Wondrous heavy.

Seb. What a strange dream vision诗fes them?

Ant. It is the quality o'th' Climacteric.

Seb. Why

Dost it not then our eye-lids sink? I finde
Not my felfe dispoo'd to sleep.

Ant. Nor, I, my spirits are nimble:
They fell together all, as by consent
They dropt, as by a Thunder-stroke: what might Worthy Sebellian? O, what might? no more:
And yet, me thinks I see it in thy face,
What thou shouldest be: th'occasion speaks thee, and
My strong imagination sees a Crowne
Dropping upon thy head.

Seb. What art thou waking?

Ant. Do you not hear me speak?

Seb. I do, and fully
It is a sleepy Language: and thou speakest Out of thy sleepe: What is it thou didst say?
This is a strange repose, to be asleep
With eyes wide open: standing, speaking, moving:
And yet to find asleep.

Ant. Noble Sebellian,
Thou let's thy fortune sleepe: die rather: winkle
While thou art waking.

Seb. Thou do'ost sincere difficulty,
There's meaning in thy noes.

Ant. I am more serious then my custome: you
Muff be too, if heed me: which to do,
Troubles thee o're.

Seb. Well? I am flanding water.

Ant. I teach you how to flow.

Seb. Do fale: to ebb

Hereditary Sloth infructes me.

Ant. O!
If you knew how you the purpose cherishe
Whiles thus you mocke it: how in tripping it
You more inuest in: ebbing men, indeed
(Most often) do to neere the bottome run
By their owne feare, or fluch.

Seb. 'Pre-thesey fay on,
The fettling of thine eye, and cheefe proclaime
A matter from thee; and a birth, indeed,
Which throws the me much to yeild,

Ant. Thus Sir:
Although this Lord of weake remembrance; this
Who shall be of as little memory
When he is earely'd, hath here almost perswaded
(For he's a Spirit of perfwation, onely Professeth to perfwade) the King his fonne's alieue,
'Tis as imposible that hee's vnfound'd;
As he that fleepes here, swins.

Seb. I have no hope
That hee's vnfound'd.

Ant. O, out of that no hope,
What great hope have your! No hope that way, is Another way so high a hope, that even Ambition cannot pierce a winke beyond
But doubt dilcouver there. Will you grant with me
That Ferdinand is drown'd.

Seb. He's gone.

Ant. Then tell me, who's the next heire of Naples?

Seb. Claribel.

Ant. She that is Queen of Tunis: she that dwells

Ten leagues beyond mans life; she that from Naples
Can have no note, unless the Sun were post:
The Man I'th Moone's too low, till new-born chimis
Be rough, and Razor-able: She that from whom
We all were sea-swallow'd, though some call againe,
(And by that defining) to performe an &
Whereof, what's past is Prologue; what to come
In yours, and my discharge.

Seb. Whatuffling is this? How fay you?
'Tis true my brothers daughter's Queene of Tunis,
So is the heyre of Naples, twixt which Regions
There is some space.

Ant. A space, whole eu'ry cubit
Scenes to cry out, how shall that Claribell
Measure vs back to Naples? it keepes in Tunis,
And let Sebellian wake. Say, this were death.
That now hath feiz'd them, why they were no worfe
Then now they are: There be that can rule Naples:
As well as he that sleepe's: Lords, that can prace
As amply, and vnceeeealy
As this Gonzalo: I my felle could make
A Chough of a deep e chat: O, that you bore
The minde that I do; what a sleepe were this
For your advancement? Do you understand me?

Seb. Me thinks I do.

Ant. And how do yours content
Tender your owne good fortune?

Seb. I remember
You did upplamt your Brother Prospero.

Ant. True:
And looke how well my Garments fit vpon me,
Much fester then before: My Brothers servants
Were then my fellowes, now they are my men,

Seb. But for your confience.

Ant. Sir: where lies that? If'twere a kybe
'Twould put me to my flipper: But I feele not
This Deity in my bofome: 'Twentie confiences
That fland' twixt me, and Milliane, candid be they,
And melt e're they mollet: Heree lies your Brother,
No better then the earth he lies vpon,
If he were that which now he's like (that's dead):
Whom I with this obedient fircle (three inches of it)
Can lay to bed for ever: whiles you do thusing,
To the perpetuall winke for aye might put
This ancient monfell: this Sir Prudence, who Should not vnbrand our course: for all the reft
They'll take luguflion, as a Cat laps milke,
They' tell the clorcke, to any businesse that
We faybles the houre.

Seb. Thy cafe, deere Friend
Shall be my prudence: As thou get't Milliane,
I'll come by Naples: Draw thy sword, one stroke
Shall free thee from the tribute which thou paifet,
And I the King shall loue thee.

Ant. Draw togethe'r
And when I reare my hand, do you the like
To fall it on Gonzalo.

Seb. O, but one word,

Enter Ariel with Musicke and Song,

Ariel. My Master through his Art forefete the danger
That you (his friend) are in, and sends me forth
(For eile his proiect dies) to keepe them living.

Sings to Gonzalo; end.

Whil and you were do frowning ly,
Open-e'yd Comperion
His time deakuings:
Enter Caliban, with a bartholom of wood (as you of Thunder heard.)

Col. All the infections that the Sunne furnishes up From Fogs, Fens, Flats, on Proper fall, and make him Baffy-mare a doleful; his Spirits heare me, And yet I needs must curse. But they'll not pinch, Frighted with Vrelche-shews, pitch me I thimble, Nor lead me like a fire-brand, in the darke Out of my way, unless he bid'em; but For every criple, are they left upon me, Sometime like Apes that moe and chatter at me, And after bite me; then like Hid-hogs, which Lye tumbling in my bare-foot way, and mount Their pricks at my foot-foot: sometime am I All wound with Adders, who with cloven tongues Doth hie me into madness: I now Lo, Enter Here comes a Spirit of his, and to torment me Tempest. For bringing wood in flowly: I'll fall flat, Perchance he will not minde me.

Trin. Here's neither burth, not thrub to bear off any weather; scal: and another Storme burning, There is a finge'th' wind: yond fame blacke cloud, yond huge one, looks like a foule bombard that would file his licour: I fift should thunder, as it did before, I know not where to hide my head; yond fame cloud cannot choose but fall by pales-fids. What have we here, a man, or a fish? dead or alue? a fish, hee smels like a fish: a very ancient and fish-like finell, a kind of, not of the newer? poore-John: a strange fish: were I in England now (as once I was) and had but this fish painted; not a holiday-folle there but would giue a price of fluer: there, would this Calibb, make a man: any strague beast there, makes a man: when they will not giue a doit to relieve a man Beggar, they will lay out ten to see a dead Indian: Leg'd like a man; and his Fins like Armes: warme o' my tooth: I doe now let loose my opinion; hold it no longer; this is no fish, but an Insander, that hath lately suffered by a Thunderbolt: Alas, the flame is come againe: my best way is to creepe under his Gibberdine: there is no other shelter hereabout: Malery acquisitions a man with strange bedfellows: I will here throw till the dregers of the flame be falt.

Enter Stephano singing.

Ste. I shall no more to sea, for sea, here shall I dye ashore. This is a very feurtune tune to sing at a mans Farewell: well, here's my comfort, Drinkes, Singes. The Master, the Swabber, the Boute, fainnes & I; The Gunner, and his Mate. Lead'd Mall, Meg, and Monanna, and Margers, But none of we can'd for Kate. For she had a tongue with a tang, Would cry to a Sailor gee hang: She look'd was the favour of Tur nor Pitch, Yet a tailor might scratch her where the fire did itch. Then to Sea Bays, and let her goe hang. This is a feurtune tune too: But here's my comfort. drink.

Col. Does not torment me: oh. Ste. What's the matter? Have we duels here? Does you put trickes vpon with Saluges, and Men of Inde? ha! I have not scap'd dwindling, to be aloud now of your fourc legges: for it hath bin said; as proper a man as euer went on fourc legs, cannot make him goe ground: and it shall bepaid to againe, while Stephano breathes at noesflitts.

Cal. The Spirit tormentes me: oh. Ste. This is some Master of the life, with fourc legs: who hath got (as I take it) an Ague: where the duell should he learn our language? I will give him some reliefe if it be but for that if I can recover him, and keep him tame, and get to Naples with him, he's a Present for any Emperor that euer trod on Neeter-leather.

Cal. Does not torment me: prether: I'd bring my wood home faster.

Ste. He's in his fit now; and don't not talk after the wight: hee shall rate of my Bottles: if hee have neuer dranke wine afore, it will goe neter to remove his fit: if I can recover him, and keep him tame, I will not take too much for him; hee shal pay for him that hath him, and that soundly.

Cal. Thou don't me yet but little hurt; thou wilt a non, I know it by thy trembling: Now Proper works upon thee.

Ste. Come on your ways: open your mouth: here is that which will glue language to you Cat: open your mouth; this will make your shaking, I can tell you, and that soundly: you cannot tell who's your friend; open your chaps again.

Trin. I should know that voyce? It should be.
But he is dround; and these are divel; O defend me.

Sir. Four legs and two voyces: a most delicate Monstr. his foremost voyce now is to speake well of his friend; his backward voyce, is to etter foule speeches, and to detraet: if all the wine in my bottle will recover him. I will helpe his Ague: Come: Amen, I will pour fome in thy other mouth.

Tri. Stephano.

Ste. Dost thy other mouth call me? Mercy, mercy! This is a duitel, and no Monstr: I will leave him, I haue no long Spone.

Tri. Stephano; if thou bee't Stephano, touch mee, and speake to mee: for I am Trinculo; be not afraid, thy good friend Trinculo.

Ste. If thou bee't Trinculo: come forth: I'le pull thee by the letter legges: if any be Trinculo's legges, these are they: Thou art very Trinculo indeed: how can't thou to be the sige of this Moone-cafe? Can he vent Trinculo?

Tri. I remoke him to be kill'd with a thunder-atrek; but art thou not dround Stephano? I hope now thou art nothing: Is the Storme ouer-browned? I had mee under the dead Moone-Celies Gaberbedone, for faire of the Storme: And art thou living Stephano? O Stephano, two Neprilapstes fcep'd?

Ste. Perthee do not turne mee about, my fromake is not conftant.

Cal. There be fine things, and if they be not spierius: that's a brave God, and beares Celestiall I will kneele to him.

Ste. How didn't thou scape? How can't thou hit her?

Sware by this Bottle how thou canst hit her: I recei'd upon a But of Sacke, which the Sylors heazed o're-board, by this Bottle which I made of the barker of a Tree, with mine owne hands, since I was call a-shore.

Cal. I'le sware upon that Bottle, to be thy true fub-ject, for the liquer is not earthy.

Ste. Here's the exame then how thou escap'd:

Tri. Soun afore (man) like a Ducke: I can swim like a Ducker I'le be twoeme.

Ste. Here, kiffe the Bookes.

Though thou canst swim like a Ducker, thou art made like a Goose.

Tri. O Stephano, ha'nt any more of this?

Ste. The whole But (man) my Cellar is in a rocke by the Sea side, where my Wine is hid.

How now Moone-Cafe, how do's thine Ague?

Cal. Ha'lt not dretpt from heauen?

Ste. Out o'th Moone I doe affure thee. I was the Marth Moone, when time was.

Cal. I haue scene thee in her: and I doe adore thee: My Miftrefs shew'd me thee, and thy Dog, and thy Buff, Ste. Come, sware to that: kiffe the Bookes: I will furnifh it inon with new Contentes: Sware.

Tri. By this good light, this is a very shalow Mon-ster. I sware of him? a very weake Monstr: The Maith Moone?

A most poore croundous Monfer:
Well drawne Monser, in good footh.

Cal. I shew thee every fettill ych 'oth Island: and I will kiffe thy foute: I prethee be my god.

Tri. By this light, a most perdition, and drunk'en Monfer, when's god's a sleepe he'll rob his Bottle.
He's a face for these three hours.

\[\text{Fer.}\]

Oft on that deere Miftris,

Th' Sun will set before I shall discharge

What I must strive to do.

\[\text{Mif.}\]

If you'll sit downe

Ile bear the Logges the while: pray giue me that,

and carry it to the pile.

\[\text{Fer.}\]

No precious Creature,

I had rather cracke my fines, breake my backe,

Then you should such dis hon or undergee,

While I sit lazy by.

\[\text{Mif.}\]

It would become me

Asswnt as it do's you; and I should do it

With much more ease: for my good will is to do,

And yours it is againft.

\[\text{Fer.}\]

Poore womeu thou art infected,

This vifitation heues it.

\[\text{Mif.}\]

You looke wearely.

\[\text{Fer.}\]

No, noble Miftris, 'tis fresh morning with me

When you are by at night: I do befeech you

Cheelelye, that I might leat all my prayers,

What is your name?

\[\text{Mif.}\]

Miranda, O my Father,

I have broke your heft to lay you.

\[\text{Fer.}\]

Admir'd Miranda,

Indeede the top of Admiratio,worth

What's deere to us the world: full many a Lady

I have ey'd with beft regard, and many a time

Th' harmony of their tongues, hath into bondage

Brought my too diligent ear: for feuerall vertues

Hau'e I lik'd if feuerall women, never any

WVith so full foule, but some defift in her

Did quarter with the noblest grace ever ou'd,

And put to it the foule. But you, O you,

So perfect, and so poetifle, are created

Of cuttie Creatures beft.

\[\text{Mif.}\]

I do not know

One of my fexe: no womans face remember.

Sawe from my glaffe, mine owne: Nor haue I eene

More that I may call men, then you good friend,

And my deere Father: how features are abroad

I am skillefe of; but by my modeifie

(The Jewell in my doore) I would not with Any Companion in the world but you:

Nor can imagination forme a fhape

Besides your felle, to like of: but I pratte

Something too wildeley, and my Fathers precepts

I therein do forget.

\[\text{Fer.}\]

I am, in my condition

A Prince (Miranda) I do thinke a King

(I would not fo) and would no more endue

This woden finerie, then to suffer

The flielf-flie blow my mouth there my foule speake.

The very infant that I sawe you, did

My heart fliet to your fervise, there refiues

To make me fliate to it, and for yourfake

Am I this patient Logge-man.

\[\text{Mif.}\]

Do you loue me?

\[\text{Fer.}\]

O heaven! O earth, beare witness to this found,

And crowne what I professe with kinde event

If I speake true: if hollowly, insert

WVhat beets is loadde me, to mischief: I,

Beyond all limit of what else I would Do true, prize, honor you.

\[\text{Mif.}\]

I am a fool.

To wepe at what I am glaid of.
The Tempest.

Trin. Lord, quoth be? that a Monster should be such a Natural?
Cal. Loes, loe againe: bite him to death I prethee.
Ste. Trinculo, keep a good tongue in your head: If you know a wantonner, the next Tree: the poore Monter's my subiect, and he shall not suffer indignity.
Cal. I thank my noble Lord. Wilt thou be pleas'd to hearken once againe to the suit I made to thee?
Ste. Merci will I kneele, and repeate it,
I will stand, and do still Trinculo.

Enter Arieil invisibly.
Cal. As I told thee before, I am subiect to a Tarrant,
A Sorcerer, thst by his cunning hath cheatd me
Of the Island.
Arieil. Thou lyest.
Cal. Thou lyest, thou lying Monkey thou:
I would my valiant Master would destroy thee.
I do not lyse.
Ste. Trinculo, if you trouble him any more in tale,
By this hand, I will supplant some of your teeth.
Trin. Why, I said nothing.
Cal. Most I say, and no more: proceed.
Cal. I say by Sorcery he got this title
From me, he got it. If the Greatesse will Reuenge it on me, (for I know thou dair't)
But this thing dore not.
Ste. That's most certaine.
Cal. Thou shalt be Lord of it, and I ferue thee.
Ste. How now shall this be compassid?
Canst thou bring me to the party?
Cal. Yea, yea my Lord, I lye yield him this asleepe,
Where thou maist knocke a nail into his head.
Arieil. Thou liest, thou canst not.
Cal. What a playde Nimio's this? Thou scurvy patch:
I do belch thy Greatesse gue him blowes,
And take his bottle from him: When that's gone,
He shall drinke nought but brine, for he not shew him
Where the quicke Fieshes are.
Ste. Trinculo, run no further danger:
Interrupt the Monster one word further, and by this hand,
He turne my mercie out of doore, and make a Stockof of thee.

Trin. Why, what did I? I did nothing:
He go farther off.
Ste. Didst thou not fay he lyed?
Arieil. Thou liest.
Ste. Do I o? Take them then,
As you like this, give me the lay another time.
Trin. I did not gue the lie: Out of your wittes, and hearing too?
A pox o'your bottle, this can Sacke and drinking doo:
A murren on your Monster, and the duelli take your fingers.
Cal. Ha,ha,ha.
Ste. Now forward with your Tale: prethee stand farther off.
Cal. Beare him enough: after a little time
He beat him too.
Ste. Stand farther: Come proceede.
Cal. Why, as I told thee, 'tis a couteau with him
I that atmoone to sleepe: there thou maist braine him,
Haung first feiz'd his books: Or with a legge
Botte his skull, or punch him with a flake,
Or cut his weasand with thy knife. Remember
Foul to poffifie his Books; yet without them
Here's but a Sot, as I am; nor hath not
One Spirit to command: they all do hate him
As roodly as 1. Bunne but his Booke,
He's a braue Venus for so he calleth them
Which when he's a house, he'll deeke withall.
And that moft deeply to consider, is
The beautie of his daughter: he himselfe
Cals her a non-parel: I never saw a woman
But only Syraxes and Dam, and she;
But she as farre lurpasheth Syraxes,
As great it do's leaft.
Ste. Is it to braue a Laff?
Cal. 1 Lord, she will become thy bed, I warrant,
And bring there forth braue brood.
Ste. Monster, I will kill this man: his daughter and I will be King and Queene, fawe our Graces: and Trinccolo and thy selle shall be Vice-royes:
Doft thou like the plot? Trinculo?

Trin. Excellent.
Ste. Gue me thy hand, I am foory I beate thee:
But while thou hast keepe a good tongue in thy head,
Cal. Within this halfe house will he be asleepe,
With whom deffire him then?
Ste. I am mine honour.
Arieil. This will I tell my Master.
Cal. Thou mak'st me merry: I am full of pleasure,
Let vs be lodain. Will you trouble the Catch?
You taught me but whiles.
Ste. At thy requit Monstre, I will do reason,
Any reason: Come on Trinculo, let us sing.
Sings.
Flout c'm, and count c'm: and singh c'm, and flout c'm,
Thought is free:

Cal. That's not the tune.

Arieil. Plesse the tune on a Tabor and Pipe.
Ste. What's this fame?
Trin. This is the tune of our Catch, plaid by the picture of Nobody.
Sings.
Streif vray befit a man, show thy selfe in thy likenes:
If thou be a duelli, tak's thee that shout.

Trin. O fume me in my bowes.
Ste. He that dus payes all debts. I delie thee,
Mercy upon vs.

Cal. Art thou affraid?
Ste. No Monstre, not I.
Cal. Be not affraid, the lie is full of myteres, Souds, and sweet aires, that ye chere delight and hurt not:
Sometimes a thousand Evangeries Instruments
Will hum about manes ears: and sometim voices,
That if I then had walk'd after long sleepes,
Will make me sleepe againe, and then in dreaming,
The clouds methought would open, and they riches
Ready to drop upon me, that when I wak'd
Icride co dreame againe.

Ste. This will prove a braue kinsman to me,
Where I shall have my Musick for nothing.

Cal. When Prospero is destroy'd,
Ste. That shall be by and by: I remember the time.

Trin. The found is going away,
Lets follow it, and after do our work.

Ste. Lead Monstre,
Wc'1 I follow: I would I could see this Taboret, Helayes it on.

Trin. Will come?
He follow Stephano.
Scena Tertia.

Enter Alonso, Sebastian, Antonio, Gonzalo, Adrian, Francesca, &c.

Gas. By your leave, I can go no further. Sir, my old bones ask: here's a maze trod indecide
Through each right, and Meaders: by your patience, I needes must rest mee.

Al. Old Lord, I cannot blame thee,
Who, and my selfe attach'd with wearineffe
To th' dulging of my spirits: Sit downe, and reft:
Even here I will put off my hope, and keepe it
No longer for my Flutterer: he is drown'd
Whom thus we stray to finde, and the Sea mocks
Our fruiterous search on land: well, let him goe.

Ant. I am right glad, that he's to out of hope:
Does not for one repulse forgive the purpose
That you sol'd to effect.

Séb. The next advantage will we take thouthly.

Ant. Let it be to-night,
For now they are oppress'd with travaile, they Will not, nor cannot vie such vigilance
As when they are freth.

Salome and strange Musick: and Prosper on the top (insolent)
Enter several strange musick bearing on a Banket:
And dance about it with gentle actions of salutation, and Inviting the King, &c., they depair.

Ant. I say to night: no more.

Al. What harmony is this? my good friends, harke.

Gas. Marvellous sweet Musick.

Al. Guesse what kind keepers, heardest what were they?

Séb. A singing Drolery now I will beleue
That there are Vincentors, in that araba
There is one Tree, the Phoenix throwes, one Phoenix
At this house residing there.

Ant. He beleue both:
And what do's else wefert credit, come to me.
And he belewome, 't is true: Travellers were did lyce,
Though fools as home condemne em.

Gas. If in Naples
I shoule report this now, would they beleue me?
If I should say I saw such Isles;
(For certes, these are people of the Island)
Who thought they were of monstrous shape, yet note
Their manners are more gentle, kind, then of
Our humane generation you shall finde
Many, as almost any.

Pro. Honest Lord,
They haue paid well: for some of you there present;
Are wrothe then diuels.

Al. I cannot too much mufhe
Such shape, such gulfure, and such found expressing (Although they want the like of tongue) a kindes
Of excellent dumbb discourse.

Pro. Praise in departing.
Fr. They vanished strangely.

Séb. No matter, since
They have left their viands behinde: for we have stor.
Wilt please you taste of what is here?

Al. Not jo. (Boyce)

Gas. Faith Sir, you neede not feare: when we were
Who would beleue that there were Mounstaysmeers,
Dew-lapt, like Bulls, whose throats had hanging aem
Wallets of flejes: for that there were such men

Whose heads stood in their backs? which now we finde
Each puffer out of fue for one, will bring ye
Good warrant of.

Al. I will stand to, and seeke,
Although my lad no matter, since I seeke
The belt is pai asc: brother: my Lord, the Duke,
Stand too, and doe so.

Thunder and Lightning. Enter Ariel (like a Harpy) claps his wings upon the Table, and with a quiet dance the Banquet vanifies.

'Ar. Ye are three men of name, whom deftiny
That hath to instrument this lower world,
And what is in't: the newer suster Sea,
Hath caus'd to belch vp you; and on this land,
Where men doth not inhabit, you isghtt men,
Being numb vols to live; I hav'e made you mad;
And even with fuch like vairour, men hang, and drowne
Their proper felues: you foolises, and I your fellowes.
Are miniflers of Fate, the Elements
Of whom your swords are temper'd, may as well
Wound the loud winde, or with bemockt-at. Stabs
Kill the still closing waters, as diminifh
One dowlie that's in my; jumbe: My fellow miniflers
Are like-invaluerable: if you could hurt,
Your swords are now too maffe for your strengthes,
And will not be uplifted: But remember
For this's my bulferre to you: that you thurce
From Melone did fupplant good Prospero,
Expo'd into the Sea (which hath requir'd it)
Him, and his innocent child: for which foule deed,
The Powres, delaying (not forgetting) have Inced's the Sea, and Shores: yes, all the Creatures
Against your peace: Thee of thy Sonne, Alonfo
They have bereft; and doe pronounce by me
Lingering perdition (worse then any death)
Can be at once) shall flee, by ftep attend
You, and your waifes, whole wafts to guard you from,
Which hire, in this most defolate Ile, elle fade
Upon your heads, is nothing but hearts-forrow,
And a cheerfull life enfuing.

He vanish'd in Thunder: then (to felf Musick.) Enter the Shapes of ymage, and dance (with maffes and movem) and carrying out the Table,

Pro. Bravely the figure of this Harpy, haft thou
Perform'd my: Arie!'s grace: it had deuouring:
Of my Infruction, haft thou nothing bared
In what thou hadst to say: so with good life,
And observation strange, my meareer miniflers
Thus nearall kindes haue done: my high charmes work,
And thefe (mine enemies) are all knit vp
In their dilutations: they now are in my powre;
And in thefe fits, I leave them, while I visit
Young Ferdinand (whose they supposse is drown'd)
And his, and mine lou'd darling.

Gas. Who is name of something holy, Sir, why stand you
In this strange place?

Al. O, it is monstrous: monstrous:
Me thought the bilouews spoke, and told me off,
The winde did sing it to me: and the Thunder
(That deepe and dreadfull Organ-Pipe) pronounce'd
The name of Prosper: it did baie my Trelpaffe, Therefore my Sonne the Duke is bedded: and Tie seek him deeper then ere plunemat lounded,
And with him there I am muddes,

Séb. But one feed at a time,
He fight his Legions ere.
Enter Prospero, Ferdinand, and Miranda.

Pros. If I have too atterly punisht you, Your compensation makes amends, for I Have given you here, a third of mine owne life, Or that for which I line: who, once againe I tender to thy hand: All thy vexations Were but my trials of thy love, and thou Hast strangely stood the test: there other heaven I transtite this my rich guite: O Ferdinand, Do not smile at, that I boil at her, For thou shalt finde she will out-drip all praise And make it half behind her.

Pros. I doe beleive it Against an Oracle.

Pros. Thence, my guest, and shine owne acquisition Worthily purchas'd, take my daughter: But If thou do't break her Virgin-knot, before All clandestine ceremonies may With full and holy right, be ministred, No sweet apersion shall the heavens let fall To make this contract: your, but barraine hate, Sower'-ey'd disdain, and discord shall betwixt The vision of your bed, with weeds so loathly That you shall hate it both: therefore take heed, As Hymens Lamp's shall light you.

Pros. As I hope For quiet days, faire Ifue, and long life, With such love, a 'tis now the muskief deny, The most opportune place, the strong suggestion, Our wonder Genius can, shall never melt Mine honor into lust, to take away The edge of that days celebration, When I shall think, or Phantom Seeds are founded, Or Night kept chain'd below.

Pros. Fairly spoke; Sit then, and talk with her, she is thine owne; What Ariell? my indistinctus female Ariell. Enter Ariell.

Ars. What would my potent master? here I am.

Pros. Thou, and thy meaner fellows, your last seruice Did worthily performe: and I must wele you In such another trick: goe bring the rabble (Ore whom I give thee power) here, to this place: Incite them to quicke motion, for I must Beftow upon the eyes of this yong couple Some vanity of mine Ar: it is my promise, And they expect it from me.

Ars. Presently?

Pros. I with a twineke.

Ars. Before you can say come, and goe, And breathe twice; and cry, lo: Eacch one tripping on his toe, Will be here with mop, and move. Do you love me Master? no?
The Tempest.
Enter Prospero (his Magus robe) and Ariel.

Pro. Now do my project gather to a head:
My charms cracke not; my Spirits obey, and Time
Goes upright with his carriage: how's the day?
Ah. On the fire hvorow, at which time, my Lord
You find our worke should cease.

Pro. I did say so,
When first I rais'd the Tempest: say my Spirit,
How fares the King, and his Followers?
Ah. Confir'd together
In the same passion, as you gaue in charge,
I will as you left them: all prisoners Sir
In the Line-ware which weather-fends your Cell,
They cannot budge till your releas: The King,
His grace, and yours; abide all three distract
And the winder mourning over them,
Brim full of sorrow, and dismay: but chiefly

The Tempest.

Str. Put off that gowne (Trinacra) by this hand I'll have that gowne.

Thy grace shall hau'ae it.

(meane)

The drapery drowne this foole, what doe you
To douse thus on such luggage! do'ts alone.
And do the madmen first: if he awake,
From foot to crown he'll fill our skins with pinches,
Make vs strange stufte.

Be you quiet (Moniter) Miftirs line, is not this my Leekin: now is the Leekin under the Leekin:
now Leekin you are like to lose your haire, &prose a bald Leekin.

Then. Doe, doe: we feele by lynen, and leeuell, and't like your grace.

Sir. I thank thee for that leek, heere's a garnet for't.
Wit shall not goe unrewarded while I am King of this Country: Steale by line and leeuell, is an excellent pass of pace: there's another garnet for't.

Trin. Moniter, come put some Line upon your fingers, and away with the rett.

Cal. I will have none on't: we shall holfe our time,
And all be tourn'd to Barbleses, or to Ages.
With foreheads villainous low.

Str. Moniter, lay to your fingers: he helps to brace this away, where my hoof-head of wine is, or let you out of my kingdom: goe to, carry this.

Trin. And this,
Sir. 1, and this.

A noyle of Hunters heed. Enter divers Spirits in shape
Of Dogs and Hounds, lancing them about: Profpiro and Ariel sitting therness.

Pro. Hey, Mountains, hey.
Ari. Siluer where it goes, Siluer.
Pro. Fury, Fury: there Tyrant, there: harke, harke.
Goe, charge my Goblins that they grinde their joynts
With dry Convulsions, shorten up their fences
With aged Cramps, & more pinch-spotted make them,
Then Pard, or Cat o'Mountain.

Ari. Harke, they roce.
Pro. Let them be hau't and soundly: At this house
Lies at my mercy all mine eneimes:
Shortly shall all my labours end, and thou Shalt haue the ayre at freedome: for a little
Follow, and doe me successe.

Exit.
The Tempest.

1. Did thou, Manco, yfe me, and my daughter:
   Thy brother was a further in the Aft,
   Thou art pitch'd for't now Sebastian. Fleth, and blood,
   You, brother mine, that entertaine ambition,
   Expeid, remorse, and nature, whom, with Sebastian (Who are inwardly pens'd therefore are most strong)
   Would have here and kill'd your King: I do forgive thee.
   Vnaturally though thou art. Their understanding.
   Begins to swell, and the approaching tide
   Will shortly fill the reasonable shore
   That now, foul, and muddy: not one of them
   That yet looks on me, or would know me.
   Fetch me the Hat, and Rapiers in my Cell.
   I will dispose of thee, and my felce present.
   As I was sometime Minias: quickly Spirit,
   Thou hast best long be free.

   Ariel sings, and helps to attick him.

   Where the Bee sakes, there suck I,
   In a Cowslips bed, sit me.

   There Iewed when Owles doe evie,
   On the Battes head I doe fie

   After Somere merry.

   Merry, merrily, shall I live now,
   Ver the boughs that hang on the Bow.

   Pro. Why that's my dauntly Ariel: I shall misse
   Thee, but yet shou'd that shou'd be done: lo, lo, lo,
   To the Kings ship, insiduous as thou art;
   There that finde the Manusines sleepe.

   Ariel and the Miserable and the Boat-swaine
   Being awake, enforce them to this place;
   And presently, I preethe.

   Ar. I drink the aire before me, and returne
   Or ere your pulse twice beate.

   Exit. Gen. All torment, trouble, wonder, and amazement.

   Inhabit thence: some heavenly power guide us
   Out of this fearsome Country.

   Pro. Behold Sir King

   The wronged Duke of Misland, Prospero.

   For more assurance that a hating Prince
   Do's now speake to thee, I embrace thy body,
   And to thee, and thy Company, I bid
   A hearty welcome.

   Alo. Where thou bee'st he or no,
   Or some inchant'd triflle to abuse me,
   (As late I have bene) I not know: thy Pulfe
   Beats as of fleth, and blood: and since I saw thee, Thy ill breath of my minde amends; with which I fcarce a madneffe held me: this must ceaze
   (And if this be at all) a most strange story.

   Thy Dukedom I resigne, and doe entreat

   Thou pardon me my wronges: But howshold Prospero

   Beliuing, and be heare?

   Pro. First, noble Frend,
   Let me embrace thine age, whose honor cannot
   Be mean'd of, or confin'd.

   Gen. Whether this be,
   Or be noe. I'm not fweene.

   Pro. You doe yet take

   Some subtileties o' the life, that will nor let you

   Believe things certaine: Welcome, my friends all,

   But you, my brace of Lords, were I so minded

   I here could plucke his Highnesse frowne vpon you

   And itifie you Trarours: at this time

   I will not tell noes.

   Pro. The Diuell speaks in him:

   Ser. The Diuell speakes in him:

   Pro. No:

   For you (most wicked Sir) whom to call brother
   Would even infect my mouth, I do forsake
   Thy rankell fault: all of them: and require

   My Dukedom of thee, which, perforce I know

   Thou wilt restore.

   Alo. If thou beeth Prospero

   (The particular parts of his dissemblament,

   How thou haft mett vs there, whom three howres since

   Were wrackt upon this shore? where I have left

   (How sharp the point of this remembrance is)

   My deere sonne Ferdinand.

   Pro. I am woe for't, Sir.

   Alo. Irreparable is the losse, and patience

   Sies, it is past her cure.

   Pro. I rather thinke

   You have not taught her helpe, of whose soft grace

   For the like losse, I heare her common aid,

   And reit my felce content.

   Alo. You the like losse?

   Pro. As great to me, as late, and supportable

   To make the deere losse, haue I means much weaker

   Then you may call to comfort you; for I

   Have lost my daughter.

   Alo. A daughter?

   Oh heauens, that they were loosing both in Nalpes.

   The King and Queene there, that they were, I with My felce were mudded in that out of bed,

   Where my fonnes lies: when did you lose your daughter?

   Pro. In this last Tempes. I perceiue these Lords

   At this encounter doo so much admire,

   That they dewrue their reafon, and scarce thinke

   Their eies doe offices of Truth: Their words

   Are natural breath: how winnow'st you have

   Been suffled from your fences, know for certain

   That I am Prospero, and that very Duke

   Which was thrust forth of Misland, who most strangely

   Upon this shore (where you were wrackt) was landed

   To be the Lord on't: No more ye of this,

   For'tis a Chronicle of day by day,

   Not a relation for a break-fait, nor

   Before this swift meeting: Welcome, Sir;

   This Cell's my Court: here haue I few attendants,

   And Subjectes none abroad, pray you looke in:

   My Dukedom since you have given me againe,

   I will require you with as good a thing,

   As least bring forth a wonder, to content ye

   As much, as me my Dukedom.

   Here Prospero discoveries Ferdinand and Miranda, playing as Caleps.

   Mrs. Sweet Lord, you play me false.

   Fer. No my dearest loue,

   I would not for the world:

   Come, you, for the Court of Kingdomes, you should

   And I would call it faire play.

   Alo. If this proue

   A vision of the Island, one deere Sonne

   Shall I twice looke at.

   Serk. A most high miracle.

   Fer. Though the Seas threaten they are mercifull,

   I have eas'd them without cause.

   Alo. Now all the blessings

   Of a glad father, commaifie thee about

   Arie, and say how thou camst it here.

   Mrs. O wonder

   How many goodly creatures are there here.

   How beauteous mankinde is? O brave new word

   That

V. i. 72—183

35
That hath such people in't.

Pro. This new thee, (play?)

Alarum. What is this Maid, with whom thou wast at

Your own converse cannot be three hours:

Is she the goddesse that hath fet eu'd vs,

And brought vs thus together?

For Sir, she is mortall;

But by immortall prudence, she is wise;

I chose her when I could not ask my Father;

For his advice, nor thought he'd one:

She Is daughter to this famous Duke of Milane,

Of whom, so often I have heard renowne,

But never saw before: one of whom I have

Recus'd a seconde life; and seconde Father

This Lady makes him to me.

Alarum.

I am hers,

But O, how odly will it found, that I

Maft ask my childe foruenelle?

Pro. There Sir hop,

Let vs not burthune our remembrances, with

A heareneffe that's gone.

Gev. I have inly wept,

Or should have spoke ere this: looke downe you gods

And on this couple drop a blessed crowne;

For it is yeou, that haue chalk'd forth the way

Which brought vs hither.

Alarum.

I say Amen, Gonadae.

Gev. Was Milane threat from Milane, that his Ifue

Should become Kings of Naples? O reioyce

Beyond a common joy, and let it downe.

With gold on latting Pillers: In one voyaige

Did Iarboell her husband finde at Tunis,

And Ferdinand her brother, found a wife,

Where he himfelle was lost: Prospero, his Duke

Dome in a poor life; and all of vs, our felues,

When no man was his owne.

Gev. Give me your hands:

Let grieve and sorrow full embrace his heart,

That doth not wish you joy.

Gev. Be it so, Amen,

Enter Ariel, with the Master and Sea-worn

amaz'dly following.

O looke Sir, looke Sir, here is more of vs:

I prophesie, if a Gallows were on land,

This fellow could not drowne: Now blasphemy,

That sweat't Grace are on board, not an oath on shore,

Hast thou no mouth by land?

What is the newes?

But, The bell newes is, that we have safely found

Our King, and company: The next: our Ship,

Which but three gillies flie, we gave out split,

Is styl, and yare, and bravely rig d, as when

We first put out to Sea.

Sir, all this servisse

Hawe I done since I went.

Pro. My trickkey Spirit.

Alarum. These are not natural events, they strengthen

From strange, to stranger: say, how came you hither?

For. If I did think, Sir, we were well awake,

I'll flirue to tell you: we were dead of sleep,

And (though we know not) of letter under hatches,

Where, but even now, with strange, and feuerall noyses

Of roaring, thrashing, bowling, glingling chains,

And mordurette of founds, all horible.

We were awak'd: straight way, at liberty;

Where we, in all our trim, frely beheld

Our royal, good, and gallant Ship: our Master

Caring to eye her; on a piece, to pleasure you,

Rien in a dreame, were we dazzeled from them,

And were brought noiseing hither.

Alarum. Was't well done?

Pro. Bravely (my diligence) thou shalt be free,

Alarum. This is as strange a Maze, as ere men trod,

And there is in this businesse, more then nature

Was euer coupled of: some Oracle

Must reckeke our knowledge.

Pro. Sir, my Leige,

Do not inflent your minds, with beating on

The strangeness of this businesse, at pikes leafe.

(Which shall be shortly fingle) I'll reioyce you,

(Which you shall feme probable) of every

These happen accidents: till when, be cheerfully

And think of each thing well: Come hither Spirit,

Set Caliban, and his companions free.

Vinye the Spell: How fates your gracious Sir?

There are yet muffing of your Company

Some few odd Lads, that you remember not.

Enter Ariel, dressing in Caliban, Stephane, and Trinculo in their Beflow Apparel.

Sir. Every man shift for all the cell, and let

No man take care for himselfe: for all:

But fortune: (Anglo Bully Monife Carafa)

Try. If th'le be true spies which I weare in my head,

This is a gally fight.

Col. O set of Kings, be brave Spirits and ede:

How line my Master is? I am afraid

He will chaffifie me.

Seb. Ha, ha,

What things are these, my Lord Anthony?

Will money buy em?

Anor. Very like: One of them

1 a plains Fith, and no doubt marketable.

Pro. Make but the badges of these men, my Lords,

Then say if they be true: This naphaen knowes;

His Mother was a Witch, and one fo strong

That could controulle the Moone; make fioxes, and obs

And deed in her command, without her power:

These three have rob'd me, and this denny-duell;

(For he's a bastard one) had plotted with them

To take my life: two of thefe Fellowes, you Must know, and owne, this Thing of darkelle, I

Acknowledg mine.

Col. I shall be purge to death.

Alarum. Is not this Stephano, my drunken Butler?

Seb. He is drunken now;

Where had he wine?

Alarum. And Trinculo is reeling rype: where should they Find this grand Liquor that hath gild'd em?

How can't thou in this pickel?

Try. I have bin in fact a pickel since I saw you last,

That I here will never out of my bones:

I shall not teare fly-blowing;

Seb. Why how now Stephano?

Try. O touch me not, I am not Stephano, but a Scamp.

Pro. You'd be King of the Ile, Sirha?

Seb. I should hate bin a fore one then.

Alarum. This is a strange thing as ever I look'd on.

Pro. He was disproportion'd in his Manners

As in his face: Goe Sirha, to my Cell,

Take with you your Companions: as you looke

To have my pardon, trim it handomely.

Col. I that will: and lle be wise hereafter, And
And seek for grace: what a thrice double Asle
Was I to take this drunken off a god?
And worship this dull fool?

Pro. Go to, away.

Alas! Hence, and below your luggage where you Set. Or hallow each other.

Pro. Sir, I suite your Highness, and your traine
To my poor Cell; where you shall take your seat
For this omernight, which part of it. I lewaite
With such discourse, as I do not, shall make it
Goe quicke, (and the rest) of my life,
And the particular accidents, gon by
Since I came to this Cell: And in the morn
I'll bring you to your ship, and to Naples,

Where I have hope to see the nuptiall
Of thee, our deere-belov'd, solemnized,
And thence retire me to my Millaine, where Every third thought shall be my grace.

Alas! I long
To hear the story of your life; which must Take the care strangely.

Pro. I'll deliver all,
And promise you calme Seas, auspicious gales,
And faire, so expediteons, that shall catch
Your Royall fleete farre off: My Ariel; chieke
That is thy charge: Then to the Elements
Be free, and fare thou well: pleased you draw thee.

Excut omnes.

EPILOGUE,
spoken by Prospero.

Now my Charms are allre-thrown,
And what strength I haue, mine owne,
Which is most faire: now is true
I must be our confin'd by you,
Or sent to Naples, let me not Since I haue my Dukedom got,
And pardon'd the deliuers, dwell
In this bare Island, by your Spell
But releafe me from my bands
With the helpes of your good hands:
Gentle breath of yours, my Saillies
Muff fard, or else my proiect faiers,
Which was to please: Now I want
Spirits to enforce: Art to inchant,
And my ending is despare,
Vainly I beleue'd by prayer
Which pierces so, that it assaile
Mercy it falle, and frees all faults.
As you from crimes would pardon'd be,
Let your Indulgence set me free.

FINIS.
THE
Two Gentlemen of Verona.

Actus primus, Scena prima.

Valentine: Probus, and Speed.

Valentine:
Safe to perforce, my loving Probus;
And home-keeping youth, I have ever homely wits,
Yet not affection changes thy tender days
For the sweetest of all thy honour'd Loue,
I rather would entreat thy company,
To see the wonders of the world abroad,
Then living dully fugg'd dia'd at home.
Weare out thy youth with spaggette and bene.
But since thou loo'rt; love still, and thine therein,
Even as I would, when I to loue begin.

Pro. Will thou be gone? Sweet Valentine adieu,
Think of thy Probus, when thou'sh'pily feell
Some rare note-worthy object in thy trouble.
With me partaker in thy happiness,
When thou do'lt meet good hap; and in thy danger,
(If ever danger doe enuiron thee)
Commend thy grievance to my holy prayers,
For I will be thy beadle-man, Valentine.

Val. And on a loue-booke pray for my successe?
Pro. Upon some booke I loue, I'le pray for thee.
Val. That's on some ffellow Store of depe loue,
How yong Leander crost the Hallesfoot.
Pro. That's a depe Store, of a deeper loue,
For he was more then other-thooses in loue.
Val. Tis true; for you are ouer-bootes in loue,
And yet you never swom the Hallesfoot.
Pro. Ouer the Bootes? may give me not the Bootes.
Val. No, I will not; for it bootes thee not.

Pro. What? (groans)
Val. To be in loue; where fome is bought with toy looks, with heart-fare fighes: one fading moments
With twentie watchfull, weary tedious nights: (mirth, Haply won, perhaps a haplife gaine);
If loth, why then a grueous labour won;
How euer; but a folly bought with wit,
Or else a wit, by folly vanquished.

Pro. So, by your circumstance, you call me foole.
Val. So, by your circumstance, I fear you'll proue.
Pro. This Loue you caull at, I am not Loue.
Val. Loue is your matter, for he matters you;
And he that is so yoked by a foole,
Methinks should not be chronicle for wife.

Pro. Yet Writers say; as in the sweetest Bud,
The eating Canker dwells; so eating Loue
Inhabits the finest wits of all.
Val. And Writers say; as the most forward Bud
Is eaten by the Canker ere it blow,
Even fo by Loue the yong, and tender wit
Is turn'd to folly, blasing in the Bud,
Loosing his verdure, even in the prime,
And all the faire effets of future hopes.
But wherefore waffe I time to countilate thee
That art a rotary to fond desire?
Once more adieu, my Father at the Road
Expects my comming, there to see me slip'd.

Pro. And thither will I bring thee Valentine.

Val. Sweet Probus, no: Now let vs take our leave;
To Milian me let me heare from thee by Letters
Of thy successe in loue; and what news else
Besides here in abstinence of thy Friend:
And Likewise will viisit thee with mine.

Pro. All happyhelle behance to thee in Milian,
Val. As much to you at home: and so farewell. Exit.
Pro. He after Honour hunts, I after Loue;
He leaves his friends: to dignifie them more;
I loue my selfe, my friends, and all for loue:
Thou Infall, thou hast metamorphis'd me:
Made me neglge't my Studies, looses my time;
Waste with good counaile; let the world at awoth;
Made Wit with muting, weake, hast fick with thought.

Sp. Sit Probus: loue you; saw you my Master?
Pro. But now he parted hence to embarque for Milian.
Sp. Twenty to one then, he is ship'd already,
And I have plaid the Sheepe in loosing him.

Pro. Indeede a Sheepe doth very often stray,
And if the Shephered be awhile away.

Sp. You conclude that my Mafters a Shepheard then, and I Sheepe?

Pro. I doo.
Sp. Why then my hones are his hones, whether I wake or sleepe.

Pro. A fillly anfwer, and fitting well a Sheepe.
Sp. This proves me still a Sheepe.

Pro. True: and thy Mafter a Shepheard,
Sp. Nay, that I can deny by a circumstance.
Pro. It shall goe hard but ile prove it by another.
Sp. The Shepheard feekes the Shepheard, and not the Sheepe the Shepheard; but I feke my Mafter, and my Mafter feekes not me: therefore I am no Sheepe.

Pro. The Sheepe for foster follow the Shepheard,
The Shepheard for foode follows not the Sheepe: thou for wages followst thy Mafter, thy Mafter for wages followes not thee: therefore thou art a Sheepe.

Sp. Such another proofe will make me cry ba.

Pro. But do'thou heare: gau'rth thou my Letter to Julia?

Sp. I
Scena Secunda.

Enter Ilindia and Lucetta.

Lucetta. But say Lucetta (now we are alone)
Wouldst thou then confound me to fall in love?

Lucet. Madam, so you think not withoutfully.

I. Of all the faire refors of Gentlemen,
That every day with parle encounter me,

In thy opinion which is worthiest love?

I. Lu. Please you repeat their names, I'll flex my minde,
According to my shallow simple skill.

I. Lu. What thinkst thou of the faire Sir Eglamour?

I. Lu. As of a Knight, well-spoken, neat, and fine;
But were I you, he never should be mine.

I. Lu. What think'st thou of the rich Mercatio?

I. Lu. Well of his wealth; but of himself, so, so.

I. Lu. What think'st thou of the gentle Prothenu?

I. Lu. Lord, Lord; to see what folly reignes in vs.

I. Lu. How now! what means this passion at his name?

I. Lu. Pardon deare Madam, 'tis a paling shame,
That I (vaworthy body as I am)
Should cenfure this on lovely Gentlemen.

I. Lu. Why not on Prothenu, as of all the rest?

I. Lu. Then thus: of many good, I think him best.

I. Lu. Your reason?

I. Lu. I have no other but a womans reason;
I think him so, because I think him so.

I. Lu. And wouldst thou have me cast my love on him?

I. Lu. I, if you thought your love not cast away.

I. Lu. Why he, of all the rest, hath never mou't me.

I. Lu. Yet he, of all the rest, I think he best loves ye.

I. Lu. His little speaking, shews his love but small.

I. Lu. Fire that's clofeft kept, burns most off all.

I. Lu. They do not love, that do not chew their love.

I. Lu. Oh, they love least, that let men know their love.

I. Lu. I would I knew his minde.

I. Lu. Permit this paper Madam.

I. Lu. To Julia: say, from whom?

I. Lu. That the Consents will flow.

I. Lu. Say, say: who gaue it thee?

I. Lu. Sir Valentines page: &t cie; I think from Prothenu;
He would have giv'n it you, but I being in the way,
Did in your name receive it: pardon the fault I pray.

I. Lu. Now (by my modesty) a goodly Broker!
Dare you presume to harbour wanton lines?
To whisper, and confpire against my youth?

Now trust me, 'tis an office of great worth,
And you an officer fit for the place:
There: take the paper: fee it be return'd,
Or else return no more into my sight.

I. Lu. To plead for loue, deferves more fee, then hate.

I. Lu. Will ye be grieved?

I. Lu. That you may ruminate. Exit.

I. Lu. And yet I would I had one look'd the Letter;
It was a shame to call her backe againe,
And pray her to a fault, for which I chide her.

What fool is he, that knowes I am a Maid,
And would not force the letter to my view?

Since Maides, in modestly, say no, to that,
Which they would have the profferer confire, I,
Fix, fix: how wayward is this foolish love;
That (like a teffile Babe) will fresh the Nurse,
And pretely, all humbled kiffe the Rod?

How cheerfully, I chide Lucetta hence,
When willingly, I would have had her here?
How angrily I taught my browe to frowne,
When inward joy enforce'd my heart to faire?

My pensance is, to call Lucetta backe
And ask remiffion, for my folly past.

What ho: Lucetta.

Lucetta. What would your Ladiship?

I. Lu. It's necer dinner time?

I. Lu. I would it were,
That you might kill your stamace on your meat,
The two Gentlemen of Verona.

And not upon your Maid.

Lu. What is't that you

Tonk vp fo gingerly?

Lu. Nothing.

In. Why didst thou foope then?

Lu. To take a paper vp, that I let fall,

In. And is that paper nothing?

Lu. Nothing concerning me,

In. Then let it ly, for though it concerns

Lu. Madam, it will not lye where it concerns,

Vulture it haue a false Interpreter.

In. Some loute of yours, hath writ to you in Rime.

Lu. That I might fing it (Madam) to a tune:

Give me a nose, your Ladiship can let

In. A little by such toyes, as may be possible:

Beft fing it to the tune of Light O, L PO.

Lu. It is too heavy for to light a tune,

In. Heavy? belike it hath some burden then?

Lu. I: and melodious were it, would you fing it,

In. And why not you?

Lu. I cannot reach fo high,

In. Let's see your Song:

How now Minion?

Lu. Repepe tune there till, to you will sing it out.

Any one thinks I do not like this tune?

In. You do not?

Lu. No (Madam) tis too sharpe.

In. You (Minion) are too faucie.

Lu. Nay, now you are too flat;

And misthe the concord, with too harf in a deficient:

There wanteth but a Meane to fill your Song,

In. The meane is drown by your unlyke base,

Lu. Indeed I bid the base for Proverbs.

In. This babble shall not henceforth trouble me;

Here is a colde with protestation:

Go, get you gone: and let the papers lye;

You would be finging them, to ange me.

Lu. She makes it thrage, but she would be best pleas'd

To be so angred with another Letter.

In. Nay, would I were to angred with the same:

On hatefull hands, to ease foule injuring words;

Inusurious Waspes, to feede on such sweet honey,

And kill the Bees that yeilded it, with your wings;

Ile kiffe each furealler paper, for amends:

Look, here is writ, kinde Inula: vnkinde Inula,

As in respite of thy ingratefult,

I throw thy name against the breathing-foames,

Trampling contemptuously on thy disdain;

And here is writ, Love wounded Proverbs.

Poore wounded name: my boleme, as a bed,

Shall lodge thee till thy wond be throughly heal'd;

And that I search it with a furious kiffe

Buttwice, or thrice, vsa. Proverbs written downe:

Be calme (good winde) blow not a word away,

Till I have found each letter, in the Letter,

Except mine owne name: That, some whiles winde beare

Vnto a ragged, fearfull, hanging Rocke,

And throw it thence into the raging Sea.

Loe, here in one line is his name twixt writ:

Poores Fortune Proverbs, passionate Proverbs:

To the sweet Inula: that Ie reare away:

And yet I will not, sith so prettily

He couples it, to his complaining Names;

Thus will I fold them, one upon another;

Now kiffe, embrace, content, doe what you will.

Lu. Madam: dinner is ready: and your father flaires.

In. Well, let vs goe.

Lu. What shall these papers lye, like Tel-tales here?

Lu. If you respect them; best to take them vp.

Lu. Nay, I was taken vp, for laying them downe.

Yet here they shal not lye, for catching cold.

In. I fee you have a months minde to them.

Lu. (Madam) you may say what frights you see;

I fee things too, although you judge I wink.

Lu. Come, come, will please you goe.

Scene Tertia.

Enter Antonio and Partheno. Proverbs.

Ant. Tell me Parthene, what sad tale was that,

Where with my brother held you in the Clayter?

Pan. Twas of his Nephew Proverbs, your Sonne.

Ant. Why what of him?

Pan. He wondered that your Lordship

Would not suffer, to spend his youth at home,

Where other men, of slender reputation,

Put forth their Sones, to feake preferment out.

Some to the warres, to try their fortune there;

Some, to discouer Islands farre away;

Some, to the fludious Universities;

For any, or for all these exercises,

He said, that Proverbs, your Sonne, was meet;

And did request me, to importune you

To let him spend his time no more at home;

Which would be great impeachment to his age,

In hanging knowne no trauaille in his youth.

Ant. Nor need't thou much importune me to that,

Whereon this month I have bin baiming.

I have confider'd well, his losse of time,

And how he cannot be a perfect man,

Not being tryed, and tardy in the world:

Experience is by industry atheud,'

And perfecled by the twift course of time;

Then tell me, whether were I best to fend him?

Pan. I thinke your Lordship is not ignorant

How his companion, youthfull Valentins,

Attends the Emperor in his roayl Court.

Ant. I know it well.

Pan. Twere good, think you, your Lordship sent him

There shall he prachife Tides, and Turnaments;

Hearc sweet discourse, concurie with Noble-men,

And be in eye of every Exercise,

Worthy his youth, and noblestesse of birth.

Ant. I like thy counsile: well haft thou aduised;

And that thou maist perceiue how well I like it,

The execution of it shall make knowne;

Even with the speddell expedition,

I will dispatch him to the Emperors Court.

Pan. To morrow, may it please you, Don Alphons,

With other Gentlemen of good estate

Are journing, to salute the Emperor,

And to commend their forces to his will.

Ant. Good company: with them shall Proverbs go:

And in good time: how will we breake with him.

Pan. Sweet Loue, sweet lines, sweet life,

Here is her hand, the agent of her heart;

Here is her oath for love, her honors pance;
O that our Fathers would applaud our louses!
To seal our happiness with their contents.
Pro. Oh heavenly Twixt;
Ant. How now? What Letter are you reading there?
Pro. May's, please your Lordship, 'tis a word or two
Of commendations sent from Valentine;
Deliect'd by a friend, that came from him.
Ant. Lend me the Letter: Let me see what news.
Pro. There is no phexes (my Lord); but that he writes
How happily he lives, how well-belov'd;
And daily grazed by the Emperor;
Willing me with him, partner of his fortune.
Ant. And how stand you affected to his wish?
Pro. As one relying on your Lordships will,
And not depending on his friendly wish.
Ant. My wish is something forrow'd with his wish:
Male not that I thus foitainly proceed:
For what I will, I will, and there an end:
I am resolu'd, that thou shalt spend some time
With Valentine, in the Emperors Court:
What maintenance lie from his friends receiv's,
Like exhibition thou shalt have from me,
To morrow be in an amiable, to goe,
Excuse it not: for I am peremptory.
Pro. My Lord I cannot be fo late provided,
Please you deliver a day or two.
Ant. Look what thou wanst 'till thee sent after thee:
No more of stay: to morrow thou must goe;
Come on Paulinus; you shall be implo'd,
To haften on his Expedition.
Pro. Thus haue I found the fire, for fear of burning,
And drench'd me in the sea, where I am drown'd,
I fear'd to shew my Father Initial Letter,
Least he should take exceptions to my love,
And with the vantage of mine owne excuse
Hast he excepted most against my love.
Oh, how this spring, this loue referreth both
The vane Shirley of an April day,
Which now shews all the beauty of the Sun,
And by and by a clouded takes all away.
Paulinus, your fathers call's you for's,
He is in haft, therefore I pray you go.
Pro. Why this is it: my heart accords thereto,
And yet a thousand times it answer's no.

Actus secundus: Scena Prima.

Enter Valentine, Speed, Silvia.

Speed. Sir, your Giance.

Val. Not mine: my Glances are on,
Sp. Why then this may be yours: for this is but one.
Val. Ha! Let me see; I gave it me, it's mine:
Sweet Ornament, that deckes a thing divine,
Ah Silvia, Silvia.

Sp. Madam Silvia; Madam Silvia.

Val. How now Silvia?

Sp. She is not within hearing, Sir.

Val. Why sir, who call'd you her?

Sp. Your worship sir, or doth he call so?

Val. Well, you shall be too forward.

Sp. And yet I was II sudden for being too slow.

Val. Go to sir, tell me: do you know Madam Silvia?

Sp. Sheer that your worship louses?

Val. Why, how know you that I am in love?

Sp. Marry by these special marks: first, you have Learn'd (like Sir Proverbs) to wreak your Armes like a Male-content: to relish a Love-long, like a Robin-redbreast: to walk alone like one that had the peltines:
To fish, like a Schoole-boy that had lost his A. B. C. to Weep like a yong wench that had buried her Grandam:
To fast, like one that takes diet: to watch, like one that
FEARS ROBBING: TO SPEAKE PULING, LIKE A BAGGAR AT HALLOWS:
Maffe: You were wont, when you laught, to crow
Like a cocke: when you walk'd, to walk like one of the Lions: when you fasted, it was prettiness after dinner:
When you look'd sadly, it was for want of money: And Now you are metamorphis'd with a Miftis, that when I
Looke on you, I can hardly thinke you my Master.

Val. Are all these things perceiv'd in me?

Sp. They are all perceiv'd without ye.

Val. Without me? they cannot.

Sp. Without you? nay, that's certaine: for without You were so fimple, none else would: but you are
So without those follies, that these follies are within you,
And thine through you like the water in an Vineall: that
Not an eye that sees you, but is a Physician to comment
On your Malady.

Val. But tell me, don't you know my Lady Silvia?

Sp. See that you gaze on fo, as the sun at supper?

Val. Haft thou obfu'd that? eu'n she I mean.

Sp. Why sir, I know her not.

Val. Do't thou know her by my gazing on her; and Yet know'ft her not?

Sp. Speed. Is the not hard-faou'r'd, sir?

Val. Not to faire (boy) as well faou'r'd.

Sp. Sir, I know that well enough.

Val. What dost thou know?

Sp. Speed. That fire is not to faire, as (of you) well faou'r'd?

Val. Speed. I mean that her beauty is exquite,
But her faou'r infinite.

Sp. Speed. That's because the one is painted, and the other
Out of all count.

Val. Speed. Marry sir, so painted to make her faire, that no man Counts of her beauty.

Val. Speed. How frec's'thou me? I account of her beauty.

Sp. Speed. You neuer saw her since she was deform'd.

Val. Speed. How long hath the beene deform'd?

Sp. Speed. Euer since you lou'd her.

Val. I haue lou'd her euer since I saw her,
And stell I see her beautifull.

Sp. Speed. If you loue her, you cannot see her.

Val. Speed. Why?

Sp. Speed. Because Loue is blinde: O that you had mine eyes, or your owne eyes had the lights they were wont to have,
When you chide at Sir Proverbs, for going Blinde.

Val. Speed. What should I see then?

Sp. Speed. Your owne preferment solly, and her passing de formity: for hee being in loue, could not see to garter
His hofe; and you, being in loue, cannot see to put on Your hofe.

(ning)

Val. Speed. Belike (boy) you are in loue, for I se,
You could not see to wipie my fhooes.

Speed. True sir: I was in loue with my bed, I thank you, you twing'd me for my loue, which makes mee the bolder bolder to chide you, for yours.

Val. In conclusion, I stand affected to her.

Speed. I would you were fict, so your affection would cease.

Val. Last night the envoy'd me,
To write some lines to one the ladies.

Speed. And have you?

Val. I have.

Speed. Are they not lamely writ?

Val. No (boy) but as well as I can do them:

Peace, here the fongs comes.

Speed. Oh excellent motion; oh exceeding Puppet:
No dead will he interpret to her.

Val. Madam & Miftres, a thousand good-morrows.

Speed. Oh, give ye good-ev'n: hear a million of manners.

Sil. Six Valentine, and fervant, to you two thousand.

Speed. He should give her interest: & the gives it him.

Val. As you injoy'd me: I have writ your Letter
Write the fecret, names of yours:

Which I was much in willing to proceed in,
But for my duty to your Ladifhip. (done)

Sil. I thank you (gentle Servant): 'tis very Cleary.

Val. Now truth me (Madam) it came hardly off:
For being ignorant to whom it goes,

I writ at randome, very doubtfully.

Sil. Perchance you think too much of so much pains?

Val. No (Madam) I've it need you. I will write (please you command) a thousand times as much:

And yet...

Sil. A pretty period: well I gheffe the requell;
And yet I will not name it; and yet I care not.

And yet, take this againes: and yet I thank you:
Meaning henceforth to trouble you no more.

Speed. And yet you will: and yet, another yet.

Val. What means your Ladifhip?

Do you not like it?

Sil. Yes: yes: the lines are very quitely writ,
But (once unwillingly) take them againes.

Nay, take them.

Val. Madam, they are for you.

Sil. I, if you writ them Sir, at my requell,
But I will none of them: they are for you:
I would have had them writ more modestly:

Val. Please you, I write your Ladifhip another.

Sil. And when it's writ: for my fakes read it over,
And if it please you, for if not: why so?

Val. If it plesse you, (Madam) what then?

Sil. Why if it plesse you, take it for your labour;
And to good-morrow Servant.

Ext. Sil.

Speed. Oh left onfence irresolute: inuiifible,
As a nole on a mans face, or a Wetherroke on a fleape:
My Master fues to her: and the hath taught her Sutor,
He being her Pupill, to become her Tutor.

Oh excellent defign, was there ever heard a better?

That my matter being feive,
To himelfe should write the Letter?

Val. How now Sir?

What are you reasoning with your felfe?

Speed. Nay, I was faying: 'tis you: have the reafon.

Val. To do what?

Speed. To be a Spokel-man from Madam Silvia.

Val. To whom?

Speed. To your felfe: why, the fews you by a figure.

Val. What figure?

Speed. By a Letter, I should fay.

Val. Why the hath not writ to me?

Speed. What need the,
When thee hath made you write to your felfe?

Why, do you not perceiue the left?

Val. No, beleue me,

Speed. No beleuing you indeed Sir:

But did you perceiue her earneft?

Val. She gave me none, except an angry word.

Speed. Why he hath given you a Letter.

Val. That's the Letter I write to her friend.

Speed. And ye letter hath the deliver'd, & there an end.

Val. I would it were no worse.

Speed. Ile warrant you, 'tis as well:

For ofen have you writ to her: and the in modestly,
Or elfe for want of idle time, could not ageine reply,
Or fearing els some mellenger, ' might her mind discover
Her felf hath taught her Loue himfelfe, to write unto her.
All this I speak in print, for in print I found it. (louer:

Why mufe you not, 'tis dinner time.

Val. I haue dy'd.

Speed, but hearken fir: though the Carleon Loue

Can feed on the ayre, I am one that am nourifhed by my victuals: and would faie haue meate: oh bee not like your Miftrflee, be mowed, be mowed.

Scena secunda.

Enter Profebus, Julia, Pantclion.

Pro. Have patience, gentle Julia:

Int. I know where is no remedy.

Pro. When possibly I can, I will return.

Jul. If you turne not: you will return the founer:

Keep this remembrance for thy Julia's fake.

Pro. Why then we'll make exchange;

Here, take you this:

Jul. And fale the bargain with a holy kiffe.

Pro. Here is my hand, for my true confiance:

And when that howe ore-flips me in the day,

Wherein I figh not (Julia) for thy fake,

The next enfuing howe, some founle mifchance

Torment me for my Loues forgetfulneffe:

My fasket flates my comming: anfwere not:

That tide is now; nay, not thy tide of teares,

That tide will flay me longer then I flould.

Julia, farewel: what, gone without a word?

I, fo true loue fhould doe: it cannot speake,

For truth hath better deeds, then words to grace it.

Pantb. Six Profebus: you are faid for.

Pro. Go: I come, I come:

Alas, this parting strikes poor Louers dumbe.

Scena Tertia.

Enter Lannece, Pantclion.

Lannece. Nay, 'twill bee this howre ere I have done weeping: all the kinde of the Lannece, have this very fault: I have receiued'd my proportion, like the prodigious some.

The two Gentlemen of Verona

Sonne, and am going with Sir Dextra to the Imperialls Court: I think Cribby's my dog, he be the lowest-natured dogge that lives: My Mother weeping: my Father crying: my Maid bowling: our Catte wringing her hands, and all our house in a great perplexity, yet did not this cruellest-hearted Curré shied one tear: he be a stone, a very pibble stone, and has no more pity in him then a dogge: I heard have wept to have see her: our parting: why my Grandam having no eyes, looke you, wept her selfe blinde at her parting: nay, Hee threw you the manner of it. This dogge is my father: no, this left dogge is my father: no, this left dogge is my mother: nay, that cannot bee so neather: yes, it is so, it is so: it hath the worser foole: this dogge with the hole in it, is my mother: and this my father: a vancagion on't, there's fit: Now sir, this stagg is my stagg: for, looke you, this is as white as Lally, and as small as a wand: this hat is Now our maid: I am the dogge: no, the dogge is himselfe, and I am the dogge: oh, the dogge is me, and I am my self: I: so, so: now come I to my Father: Father, your blushing: now should not the stagg speake a word for weeping: now should I kiss my father: well, bee weepes on: Now come I to my Mother: Oh be that the speake now, like a woman: well, I kiss her: why there's, here's my mothers breath vp and downe: Now come I to my stagg: marke the moame the makes: now the dogge all this while shed no tears: nor speakes a word: but see how I lay the dust with my teares.

Panth. Lawns away, away: a brood: thy Mathe is ship'd, and thou art to post aifter with oares: what's the matter? why weep't thou man: away safe, you'll loose the Tide, if you tarry any longer.

Lawn. It is no matter if the tide were lost, for it is the vnkindlest Tide, that ever any man tide.

Panth. What's the vnkindlest tide?

Lawn. Why, he's that's here, Crib by my dog.

Pant. Tut, man: I mean thou'll loose the flood, and in loosing the flood, loose thy voyages, and in loosing thy voyages, loose thy Mathe, and in looking thy Mathe, loose thy service, and in looking thy service: why dost thou flop my mouth?

Lawn. For seare thou shouldest loose thy tongue.

Panth. Where shouldest thou loose my tongue?

Lawn. In thy Tale.

Panth. In thy Tale.

Lawn. Loose the Tide, and the voyages, and the Mathe, and the Service, and the tide: why man, if the River were dry, I am able to fill it with my teares: if the wind were downe, I could drive the boate with my fighthes.

Panth. Come: come away man, I was sent to call thee.

Lawn. Sir: call me what thou dar'st.

Pant. Wilt thou goe?

Lawn. Well, I will goe.

Scene Quarta.

Enter Valentine, Silvia, Timon, Speed, Duke, Pretheus.

Sil. Servant.

Val. Miftres.

Spec. Master, Sir Tho's browes on you.

Val. I Boy, it's for love.

Spec. Not of your love.

Val. O my Mistrefle then.

Spec. Twere good you knock't him.

Sil. Servant, you are sad.

Val. Indeed, Madam, I see'm so.

Thy. See me you that you are not?

Val. Ha'ly I doe.

Thy. So doe Counterfeits.

Val. So doe you.

Tim. What see'm I that I am not?

Val. Wife.

Tim. What instance of the contrary?

Val. Your folly.

Tim. And how quost you my folly?

Val. I quost it in your kerkin.

Thy. Your Kerkin in a doublet.

Val. Well then, I'll double your folly.

Thy. How?

Sil. What angry, Sir Tho's, do you change colours?

Val. Do me leave, Madam, he is a kind of Cnelomel.

Tim. That hath more mind to feed on your blood, then live in your ayre.

Val. You have said Sir.

Tim. I Sir, and done too for this time.

Val. I know it well Sir, you always end ere you begin.

Sil. A fine volly of words, gentlemen, & quickly shut off.

Val. Tis indeed, Madam, we thank the gier.

Sil. Who is that Servant?

Val. Your Sel'f(sweet Lady) for you gave the fire, Sir Tho's, borrow'd his wit from your Ladyships lookes, and spends what he borrowes kindly in your compny.

Thy. Sir, if you spend word for word with me, I shall make your witt bankrupt.

(Word's)

Val. I know it well Sir: you have an Exchequer of And I thinke, no other treasure to give your followers. For it appears by their bare Literes, That they live by your bare words.

Sil. No more, gentlemen, no more: Here comes my father.

Duck. Now, daughter Silvia, you are hard bem't.

Sil. Valentine, your father is in good health, What say you to a Letter from your friends Of much good newes?

Val. My Lord, I will be thankfull,

To any happy messenger from thence.

Duck. Know ye Don Antonio, your Countriman?

Val. I, my good Lord, I know the Gentleman To be of worth, and worthy estimation, And not without deferent to well reputed.

Duck. Hath he not a Sonne?

Val. I, my good Lord, a Son, that well deserves The honor, and regard of such a father.

Duck. You know him well?

Val. I knew him as my selfe: for from our Infancies We have conversed, and spent our Howres together, And though my selfe have beene an idle Treant, Omitting the sweete benefit of time To cloath mine age with Angel-like perfection: Yet hath Sir Pretho's (for that's his name) Made vie, and faire advantage of his daies: His yeares but yong, but his experience old; His head vn-mellowed, but his judgement ripe; And in a word (for far behind his worth Comes all the praisef that I now bellow.)
The Two Gentlemen of Verona.

He is compleat in feature, and in mind,
With all good grace, to grace a Gentleman,
Dob. Behalf me for, but if he make this good
He is as worthy for an Empereur loose,
As we are an Empereur Counsellor.
Wit. very this Gentleman is come to me
With Commendation from great Potentates,
And here he means to spend his time a while,
I think he is no vnder welcome newes to you.
Dob. If I shoule have with'd a thing, it had been he.
Dob. Welcome him then according to his worth:
Silvio, I speake to you, and you Sir Tho.
For Valentine, I need not cite him to it,
I will send him hither to you presently.
Dob. This is the Gentleman I told your LadiSHIP
Had come along with me, but that his Mistresse
Did hold his eyes, lockt in her Chastifall looke.
Sil. Be-like that now she hath enfranchis'd them
Upon some other payne for fealty.
Val. Nay sure, I think she holds them princes still.
Sil. Nay then he should be blind, and being blind
Hath given the key, to him who hath unlock'd him out
Val. Why Lady, Loue hath twenty pair of eyes.
Thur. They say that Loue hath not an eye at all.
Val. To see such Louers, Thur, as your felic,
Upon a homely oboe, Loue can wink.
Sil. Have done, have done, here comes a gentleman.
Val. Welcome, deere Protesse: Mistresse, I beleeeh you Confirm his welcome, with some speciall favor.
Sil. His worth is warrant for his welcome better,
If this be he you oft haue willed to hear from.
Val. Mistresse, it is a sweet Lady, entertain him
To be my fellow-fauntant to your LadiSHIP.
Sil. Too low a Mistresse for to high a fauntant.
Val. Not so, sweet Lady, but too meeste a fauntant
To haue a looke of such a worthy a Mistresse.
Val. Leave off discouer of diffidante.
Sil. Sweet Lady, entertain him for your Servant.
Val. My deare will I boaste of, nothing else.
Sil. And durie neere ye yet did want his mind.
Servant, you are welcome to a worthelie Mistresse.
Sil. Die on him that faileth fo but your felic.
Sil. That you are welcome?
Val. That you are worthelie.
(You.
Thur. Madam, my Lord you father would speak
With me: I waint upon his pleasure: Come Sir Tho.
Goe with me: once more, new Servant welcome; I leaue you to conuerse of home affaires,
When you haue done, we looke too heare from you.
Val. We'll both atten upon your LadiSHIP.
Val. Now tell me: how do al from whence you came?
Val. Your friends are well, haue the much commended.
Val. And how do yours?
Sil. I left them all in health.
Val. How does your Lady? how thrivees your loue?
Val. My tales of Loue were wont to weaie you,
I know no joy nor in a Loue-discouer.
Val. I Protesse, but that life is alter'd now,
I haue done penance for contemning Loue,
Whose high emperous thoughts haue punisht me
With bitter fates, with penitentiall groans,
With nightly teares, and daily hart-fare lighees,
For in sense of my contempt of loue.
Loue hath this'd sleepe from my embraide eyes,
And made them watchers of mine owne hearts sorrow.
Gentle Protesse, Loue's a mighty Lord,
And hath so humbled me, as I confess.
There is no woe to his correction,
Nor to his Service, no such joy on earth:
Now, no discouer, except it be of loue:
Now, no meane, except it be of my heart.
Upon the very naked name of Loue.
Val. Enough; I read your fortune in your eye:
Was this the IdoL, that you worship for?
Val. Even She; and is she not a heavenly Saint?
Val. No; But she is an earthly Paragon.
Val. Call her divine.
Val. I will not flatter her,
Val. Of flatter me: for Loue delights in praises.
Val. When I was sick, you gave me bitter pills,
And I must minifter the like to you.
Val. Then speake the truth by her; if not divine,
Yet let her be a principalitie,
Soveraigne to all the Creatures on the earth.
Val. Except my Mistresse.
Val. Sweet: except not any,
Except thou with except against my Loue.
Val. Have I not reason to prefer mine owne?
Val. And I will help thee to prefer her to:
She shall be dignified with this high honour,
To bear my Ladies traine, left the base earth
Should from her vertue chance to feale a knife,
And of so great a favor growing proud,
Didstane to rout the Sommer-dwelling flowers,
And make rough winter euerlasting.
Val. Why Valentine, what Bragad sime is this?
Val. Pardon me, (Protesse) all I can is nothing,
To her, whose worth, make other worthies nothing;
Sire is alone.
Val. Then let her alone.
Val. Not for the world: why man, she is mine owne,
And as rich in hauing such a Jewell
As two yeares, all their land were pasture,
The ware, Nectar, and the Rocks pure gold,
Forgue me, that I doe not dreame on ther,
Because thou breakst my dure upon my loue:
My foolish Russel tirst her better likes.
(Onely for his possession are so huge)
Is gone with her along, and I must after,
For Loue (thou know it is full of sea-foastic.)
Val. But the loues you?
(Howre.
Val. And, we are betroath'd: may more, our marriage
With all the cunning manner of our flight
Determined of: how I must climb her window,
The Ladder made of cords, and all the means
Plotted, and I agreed on for my happineffe.
Good Protesse, goe with me to my chamber,
In these affaires to aide me with thy comforne.
Val. Goe on before: I shall enquire you forth;
I must into the Road, to dis-embarque
Some necessaries, that I needs must use,
And thou or one of thy attendants.
Val. Will you make haste?
Val. I will.
Even as one heate, another heate expels,
Or as one made, by strength drives out another.
So the remembrance of my former Loue
Is by a newer object quite forgotten,
It is mine, or Valentine praise?
Her true perfection, or my falle distraction?
That makes me sofolde, so reason this?
Shee is faire: and so itFollows that I love,

Thar.

Enter Speed and Launce.

Speed. Launce, by mine honest welcome to Padua.

Launce. Farewell, not thy selfe, sweet youth, for I am not welcome. I reckon this alwayes, that a man is never known till he be hang'd, nor never welcome to a place, till some certaine ffort be paid, and the Hostes say welcome.

Speed. Come on you m'd-cap; Ile to the Ale-house with you presently; where, for one shot of five pence, thou shalt have five thousand welcomes: But firba, how did thy Master part with Madam Julia?

Launce. Marry after they clos'd in earnest, they parted very fairly in self.

Speed. But shall the marry him?

Launce. No.

Speed. How then? shall he marry her?

Launce. No, neither.

Speed. What, are they broken?

Launce. No; they are both as whole as a fishe.

Speed. Why then, how stands the matter with them?

Launce. Marry thus, when it stands well with him, it stands well with her.

Speed. What an affe art thou, Inderland thee not.

Launce. What a blocke art thou, that thou canst not?

My stafe vnderstands me?

Speed. What thou saist?

Launce. I, and what I do too: looke thee, Ile but jeane, and my stafe vnderstands me.

Speed. It stands wether wether.

Launce. Why, stande-vnder: and stande-stands is all one.

Speed. But tell me true, will't be a match?

Launce. Ask me my dogge, if he say I, it will: if he say no, it will: if he make his talle, and say nothing, it will.

Speed. The conclusion is then, that it will.

Launce. Thou shalt never get such a secret from me, but by a parable.

Speed. Tis well that I get it for; but Launce, how shifft thou that my master is become a notable Loure?

Launce. I never knew him otherwife.

Speed. Then how?

Launce. A notable Lubber: as thou reportest him to bee.

---

Lau. Why, thou whorish Ale, thou milks't me.

Lau. Why, Fools! I raise not thee, I meant thy Master.

Speed. I tell thee, my Master is become a hot Loure.

Lau. Why, I tell thee, I care not, though hee burne himselfe in Loure. If thou wilt goe with me to the Alehouse: if not, thou art an Hebrew, a Jew, and not worth the name of a Christian.

Speed. Why?

Lau. Because thou hast not so much charity in thee as to goe to the Ale with a Christian? Wilt thou goe?

Speed. At thy seruice.

Pro. To leave my Julia: shall I be forsworne?

To loue faire Silvia; shall I be forsworne?

To wrong my friend, I shall be much forsworne.

And ev'n that Ponze which gave me fifth ny oath

Prookes me to this three-fold perjur.

Loue bad mee sweare, and Loue bids me forswere;

O sweete suggelling Loue, if thou haft found

Teach mee tempered subiect to excite it.

At first I did adore a twinkling Stare,

But now I worship a celestial Sunne:

Vn-needfull vowes may hecchfully be broken,

And he wants wit, that wants resolve d will,

To leane his wit, to exchange the bad for better;

Fie, fie, yone ered tongue, to call her bad;

Whose foure aigysty oft thou haft prefered,

With twenty thousand soule-confirming oaths,

I cannot leave to lone; and yet I doe;

But there I lente to lone, where I should loue.

Julia I looke, and Valentine I looke,

If I kepe them, I needes must loose my selfe;

If I loose them, Thus finde I by their loffe,

For Valentine, my selfe: for Julia, Silvia;

Ito my selfe am dearer then a friend;

For Loue is still most precious in it selfe,

And Silvia (witnesse heauen that made her faire)

Shewes Julia but a swarthy Ethiop;

I will forget that Julia is alie,

Remembering that my Loue to her is dead.

And Valentine Ie hold an Enemy,

Ayning at Silvia as a sweeter friend.

I cannot now prove constant to my selfe,

Without fome treacherys vs'd to Valentine.

This night he meanes with a Corded-ladder

To clime celestial Silvia's chamber window;

My selfe in countsafe his comptetst.

Now presentl Ile glue her father notice

Of their disputing and pretended flight:

Who (all ing'd) will banish Valentine:

For Thoash he intends shall wed his daughter,

But Valentine being gone, Ile quickly croste

By some the tricke, blunts Thoash's dull proceeding.

Loue lend me wings, to make my purpose swift

As thou hast lent me wit, to plot this drift.

Exeunt.
Enter Duke, Thurio, Proverbs, Valentine, Launce, Speed.

Duke Sir Thurio, give vs leave (I prays) while, We have some secrets to confer about. Now tell me Proverbs, what's your will with me? Pre. My gracious Lord, that which I would discover, The Law of friendship bids me to conceal, But when I fail to minute some gracious favour Done to me (under your name) I my dutie pricks me on to vntie the knott Which else, no worldly good should draw from me; Know (worthy Prince) Sir Valentine my friend This night intends to stifle away your daughter My selfe am one made privy to the plot. I know, you haue determin'd to bellow her On Thurio, whom your gentle daughter hates, And should the thrusts before hand from you. It would be much vexation to your age. Thus (for my duties sake) I rather chose To croste my friend in his intendt drift, Then (by concealing it) heap on your head A pack of sorrowes, which would preffe you downe (Being unperceived) to your timeleffe grace. Proverbs. Duke, Proverbs, I thank thee for thine honest care, Which to requite, command me while I live. This love of theirs, my selfe have often seen, Happly when they have judg'd me fit alleape, And oftentimes have purposed to forbid
Sir Valentine her companie, and my Count:
But leaving left my inclinat sygne might erre,
And do (writworthily) disgrace the man.
(A raffhfeffe that I ever yet have lurn'd)
I gave him gentle lookes, thereby to finde
That which yhe felfe hath now discordes to me.
And that thou mayst perceive my fearse of this,
Knowing that tender youth is foone suggestted,
I nightly lodge her in an upper Tower,
The key whereof, my felle, hauue ever kept:
And then, as he cannot be comody'd away.
Pro. Know (oble Lord) they have drunke's a meane
How he her chamber-window will ascend,
And with a Corded-ladder fetch her downe:
For which, the youthful Leuer now is gone,
And this way comes he with it presently,
Where (if it please you) you may intercept him.
But (good my Lord) doe it so cunningly
That my discovery be not aimed at:
For, loye of you, not hate vnto my friend,
Hath made my publishers of this perjury.
Duke. Vpon mine Honor, he shall never know
That I had any light from thee of this,
Pro. Adieu, my Lord, Sir Valentine is comming.
Duk. Sir Valentine, why hast thou so fell?
Val. Pleas it your Grace, there is a Messflenger
That stayes to bear my Letters to my friends,
And I am going to deliver them.
Duk. Be they of much import?
Val. The tenure of them doth but signifie
My child, and happy being at your Court.
Duk. Nay then no matter: stay with me a while,
I am to brake with thee of some affairs
That touch me more: wherein thou must be secret.
'Tis not unknown to thee, that I have fough't
To match my friend Sir Thewry, to my daughter.
Val. I know it well (my Lord) and like the Match
Were rich and honourable: besides, the gentleman
Is full of Vertue, Bounty, Worth, and Qualities
Beforening such a Wife, as your faire daughter:
Duke. May your Grace win her to fave him?
Duk. No, truf't me. She is peneuh, fallen, froward,
Proud, disfobedient, filbunete, lacking duty,
Neither regarding that she is my child,
Nor fearing me, as if I were her father:
And may I fay to thee, this pride of hers
(Vpon aduice) hath drawnye my louver from her,
And where I thought the remnant of mine age
Should have beene cherished by her child-like dutye
I now am full refold'd to take a wife,
And turn her out, to who will take her in:
Then let her beautie be her wedding dewre;
For me, wid'd my poftenions the efemenes nore.
Val. What would your Grace have me to do in this?
Duk. There is a Lady in Venice here
Whom I affett: but she is nice, and coy,
And nought efemenes my aged elocution
Now therefore will I have thee to my Tutor
(Of long agoone I have forgot to count,
Besides the fuffion of the time is chang'd)
Hauing and which way I may befor diggelefl
To be regarded in her flat-bright eye.
Val. Win her with gifts, if the refrefc not words,
Dume Jewels offen in their silent kindes
More then quicke words, do more a wamens minde.
Duk. But the foie forcing a preffent that I fent her.
Hallo, I'm a helpful assistant and I can read this document naturally for you. Please provide the document and any specific instructions you have.
The two Gentlemen of Verona.

Sp. Marry, the son of my Grand-father.
La. Oh! Illiterate boyster; it was the sonne of thy Grand-mother; this proves that thou canst not read.
Sp. Come hark, come; try me in thy paper.
La. There and S. Nicholas be thy speed.
Sp. Inprimis, the can milke.
J. I that the can.
Sp. Item, the brewes good Ale.
La. And let goe of the drawer be: (Blushing of your heart, you brew good Ale.)
Sp. Item, she can lowe.
La. That's as much as to say (Can she so?)
Sp. Item, she can knit.
La. What needs a man care for a flock with a wrench, when she can knit him a flocke?
Sp. Item, she can wash and scource.
La. A speciall verse: for then shee neede not be washed, and scourd.
Sp. Item, she can spin.
La. Then may I set the world on wheeles, when she can spin for her living.
Sp. Item, she hath many namelesse virtues.
La. That's as much as to say Baghdad-towers: that indeed know not their fathers; and therefore have no names.
Sp. Here follow her verses.
La. Close at the heeles of her verses.
Sp. Item, her is not to be falling in respect of her breath.
La. Well: that fault may be mended with a breakfast: read on.
Sp. Item, she hath a sweet mouth.
La. That makes amends for her foure breath.
Sp. Item, she doth take in her sleepe.
La. It's no matter for that; so shee sleepe not in her tale.
Sp. Item, she is flow in words.
La. Oh villain, that set this downe among her verses;
To be flow in words, is a womanes onely verse: I pray thee out with't, and place it for her chiefe verse.
Sp. Item, she is proud.
La. Out with that too.
It was Eneas legacie, and cannot be tane from her.
Sp. Item, she hath no teeth.
La. I care not for that neither: because shee can write.
Sp. Item, she is curst.
La. Well; the beest is, the had no reeds to bite.
Sp. Item, she will often praise her liquor.
La. If her liquor be good, she shall: if she will not,
I will; for good things should be praised.
Sp. Item, she is too liberall.
La. Of her tongue she cannot; for that's wit downe she is flow of: of her purse, she shall not, for that he keeps that: Now, of another thing shee may, and that cannot I helpe. Well, proceede.
Sp. Item, she hath more haires then wit, and more faults then haires, and more wealth then faults.
La. Stop there: I heare her: she was mine, and mine, twice or thrice in that last Article: rehearse that once more.
Sp. Item, she hath more haires then wit.
La. More haires then wit: it may be ile proue it: The cover of the fait, hides the Oak, and therefore it is more then the fait; the haires that coves the wit, is more then the wit; for the greater hides the leffe: What's next?

Sp. And more faults then haires.
La. That's monstrous: oh that that were out.
Sp. And more wealth then faults.
La. Why that word makes the faults gracious.
Well, he loose her: and if it be a match, as nothing is impossible.
Sp. What then?
La. Why then, will I tell thee, that thy Master stays for thee at the North gate.
Sp. For me?
La. For thee! who art thou? he hath said for a better man then thee.
Sp. And must I goe to him?
La. Thou must run to him; for thou hast said so long, that goeing will erase ferre the turne.
Sp. Why diid not tell me sooner? 'pox of your love Letters.
La. Now will he be swing'd for reading my Letters:
An unmanerly base, that will thrust himselfe into feets. I shall in a little, to reioyce in the boyes correctio.
Exeunt.

Scena Secunda.

Enter Duke, Thurio, Protheus.

Du. Sit Thurio, feare not, but that she will love you.
Now Valentine is banish'd from her sight.
To. Since his exile the depth of me most,
Forsoome my company, and will not to me,
That I am delierate of obtaining her.
Du. This weake impeffe of Lour, is as a figure Trenched in ice, which with an hours heat
Diffuses to water, and doth loose his forme,
A little time will melt her frozen thoughts,
And worthless Valentine shall be forgot.
How now sir Protheus, is your countreman
(According to our Proclamation) gon?
Pro. Goon, my good Lord.
Du. My daughter takes his going grieoussely?
Pro. A little time (my Lord) will kill that griefe.
Du. So I beleue; but Thurio thinks not to:
Protheus, the good concei I hold of thee,
(For thou hast showne some signe of good defect)
Makes me the better to confer with thee.
Pro. Longer then I proue loyal to your Grace,
Let me not line, to looke upon your Grace.
Du. Thou know'lt how willingly, I would effeet
The match betweene fit Thurio, and my daughter t
Pro. I doe my Lord.
Du. And also, I thinke, thou art not ignorant
How the opposes her against my will?
Pro. She did my Lord; when Valentine was bere.
Du. I, and perffectly, the perforueres to:
What might we doe to make the girl forget
The loue of Valentine, and loue fit Thurio?
Pro. The blett way is, to flander Valentine,
With falfhood, cowardize, and poore difcount:
Three things, that women highly hold in hate.
Du. I, but she'll thinke, that it is spake in hate.
Pro. I, if his enemy deliuer it.
Therefore it must with circunstances be spoken
By one, whom the eftimeth as his friend.
Du. Then you must undertake to flander him.
Proe. And that my Lord I shall be glad to do,
Proe. but my Lady shall be glad I can do it.
Proe. You value precept [my Lord] I can do it,
Proe. but my Lady shall be glad I can do it. She shall follow you, and do you follow me. And she shall follow you. And you shall follow me.
Proe. And that my Lady I shall be glad to do,
Proe. but my Lady shall be glad I can do it. She shall follow you, and do you follow me. And she shall follow you. And you shall follow me.
And being haply, jocundly there,
Then to Silvia, let us sing,
That Silvia is exceeding;
She excels each mortal thing
Upon the dull earth dwelling.
To her let us Garland bring.

Hey. How now! are you sadder then you were before;
How do you, man? the Musicke likes you not.
In. You mistake; the Musician likes me not.
Hey. Why, my pretty youth?
In. He plies false (father.)
Hey. How, out of tune on the strings?
In. Not so: but yet
So false that he grieues my very heartstrings.
Hey. You sue a quicke care.
In. I, I would I were deafe: it makes me have a slow
Hey. I perceive you delight not in Musicke.
In. Not a while, when it was so.
Hey. Harke, what fine change is in the Musicke.
In. I, that change is in the night.
Hey. You would have them always play but one thing.
In. I would always have one play but one thing.
But Hoft, dothis Sir Probus, that we talk on,
Often retort unto this Gentlewoman?
Hey. I tell you what Lunsce his man told me,
He lound her out of all nickes.
In. Where is Lunsce?
Hey. Gone to seek his dog, which to morrow, by his Matters command, hee must carry for a preferent to his Lady.
In. Peace, Iland aside, the company parts.
Pro. Sir Eurocles, scarce you, I will so please,
That you shall say, my cunning drift excels.
Th. Where meet we?
Pre. At Saint Gregoryes well.
Th. Farewell.
Pro. Madam: good euino to your Ladyship.
Sid. I thank you for your Musicke(Gentlemen)
Who is that that spake?
Pro. One (Lady) if you knew his pure hearts truth,
You would quickly learn to know him by his voice.
Sid. Sir Probus, as I take it.
Pro. Sir Probus(gentle Lady)and your Servuant.
Sid. What's your will?
Pro. That I may compose yours.
Sid. You have your wish: my will is even this,
That presently you lie you home to bed:
Thou subtile, perierd, d'afle, disloyall man:
Think 't thou I am so shallow, so conceited,
To be seduced by thy flattery,
That hast deceive'd so many with thy vows?
Returne, returne, and make thy loute amends:
For me(by this pale queene of night I weare)
I am so farre from granting thy request,
That I despife thee, for thy wrongfull fuite;
And by and by intend to chide my selfe,
Even for this time I spend in talking to thee.
Pre. I grant (sweet love) that I did louse a Lady,
But she is dead.
In. To waste false, if I should speake it
For I am sure he is not buried.
Sid. Say that the be: 1yet Valentine thy friend
Surreuice, to whom (thy selfe art witness)
I am betroth'd: and art thou not afrais't
To wrong him, with thy inportunity?

The two Gentlemen of Verona.
The Two Gentlemen of Verona.

Pr. I likewise hear that Valentine is dead.
Syl. And so suppose am I; for in her grace
Affure thy selfe, my loue is buried.
Pr. Sweet Lady, let me take it from the earth.
Syl. Go to thy Ladies grace and call hers thence, and
Or at the least, in her sepulcher thine.

Sir. He heard not that.
Pr. Madam: if your heart be so obdurate:
Vouchsafe me yet your Picture for my loue,
The Picture that is hanging in your chamber
To that I feake, to that I sigh and weep:
For since the sub stance of your perfect selfe
Is else daunted, I am but a shadow;
And to thy shadow, will I make true loue.
Pr. If there be a sub stance you would secure deceiue,
And make it but a shadow, as I am.
Syl. I am very loath to be your Idol Sir:
But, since your falshood shall become you well
To worship shadows, and adore false shapes,
Send me in the morning, and I tend it:
And so; good rest.
Pr. As wretches have one night
That wait for execution in the morning.
Syl. Hah! will you goe?
Ho. By my haldisone, I was fast asleep.
Syl. Pray you, where lies Sir Problem?
Ho. Marry, at my house.

Truf me, I think 'tis almost day.
Syl. Not so: but it hath bin the longest night
That ere I watch'd, and the most heinous.

Sceena Tertia.

Enter Egline, Silvia.

Eg. This is the house that Madam Silvia
Entreated me to call, and know her mind:
Ther's some great matter she'll employ me in Madam, Madam.
Syl. Who calls?
Eg. Your seruant, and your friend.
One that attendes your Ladiship's command.
Sir Egline, a thousand times good morrow.
Eg. As many (worthy Lady) to your selfe:
According to your Ladiship's imploge,
I am thus early come, to know what service
It is your pleasure to command me.
Syl. Oh Egline, thou art a Gentleman:
Thank not I Baster (for I swears I do not)
Valiant, wise, remore-full, well accomplishd,
Thou art not ignorant what else good will
I bear unto the banished Valentine.
Nor how my father would enforce me marry
Vaine Thunto (whom my very soule abhor'd.)
Thy selfe haue lou'd, and I haue heare the say
No griefe did euer come so meere thy heart,
As when thy Lady, and thy true-love die,
Upon whose faith and honor, I repose;
Verges not my fathers anger (Egline)
But thinks upon my griefes (a Ladies griefes)
And on the justice of my flying hence,
To keep me from a most wholy match,
Which heaven and fortune still rewards with plagues,
I doe desire thee, even from a heart
As full of sorrowes, as the Sea of sands,
To beare me company, and goe with me:
If not, to hide what I have faileth thee,
That I may venture to depart alone.

Eg. Madam, I pity much your grievances,
Which, since I know they vertuously are plac'd,
I give content to goe along with you,
Wreaking as little what betides me,
As much, with all good before you.
When will you goe?
Syl. This evening comming.
Eg. Where shall I meete you?
Syl. At Sir Patsick Cell.
Where I intend holy Confession,
Eg. I will not faile your Ladiship:
Good morrow (gentle Lady.)
Syl. Good morrow, kind Sir Egline.  Exeunt.

Sceena Quarta.

Enter Lamme, Problem, Julia, Silvia.

Lam. When a mans seruant shall play the Cure with him (looke you) it goeth hard: one that I brought vp of a puppy one that I faue'd from drowning, when three or four of his blinde brothers and fiftes went to it: I haue taught him (even as one would say precisely, thus I would teach a dog) I was sent to deliver him, as a pre-tent to Missis Silvia, from my Master; and I came no further into the dyning-chamber, but he steps me to her Trencher, and seales her Capons-leg; O, 'tis a foole thing, when a Cure cannot keep himselfe in all companies: I would have (as one should say) one that takes vp upon him to be a dog indeede, to be, as it were, a dog at all things: if I had not more weeke then he, to take a fault upon me that he did, I thinke verily hee had bin hang'd for't: sure as I live he had suffer'd for't: you shall judge;
Hee thruffs him selfe into the company of three or four gentleman-like dogs, under the Dukes table: hee had not bin there (bleste the mark) a piping while, but all the chamber fustieth him out with the dog (faies one) what cut is this (faies another) whip him out (faies the third) hang him vp (faies the Duke.) I haue bin acquainted with the smelle before, knew it was Crab; and goes me to the fellow that whips the dogsgeys: friend (quoth he) you mean to whip the dog: I marry doe I (quoth hee) you doe him the more wrong (quoth he) I was did the thing you wot of; he makes men more sade, but whips me out of the chamber: how many Masters would doe this for his Seruant Pray, ie be twome I haue fat in the flockes, for puddinges he hath floone, otherwise he had bin executed: I haue fix'd on the Pillores for Greffe he hath kil'd, otherwise he had suffer'd for't; thou think'st not of this now: say, I remember the tricke you far'd me, when I took me leave of Madam Silvia: did not not I bid thee still make me, and doe as I say;when didst thou see me, heauen vp my leg, and make water against a Gentlewoman in the Barrage? didst thou ever see me do such a trick?

Pro. Sebastian is thy name: I like thee well, and will employ thee in some service presently.

In. In what you please, I do what I can.

Pro. I hope thou wilt.

How now you whor-son pezant, Where have you bin these two days loystering?

La. Marry Sir, I carried Mistress Silvia the dogge you bad me.

Pro. And what fates lie to my little Jewell?

La. Marry she faire your dog was a cur, and tells you currish thanks is good enough for such a prent.

Pro. But she receiv'd my dog?

La. No indeede did he not:

Her haue I brough't him backe againe.

Pro. What didst thou offer her this from me?

La. Sir, the other Squirlis was holne from me

By the Hangmans boyes in the market place, And then I offer'd her mine owne, who is a dog

As big as ten of yours, & therefore the guilt the greater.

Pro. Go, get thee hence, and finde my dog againe, Or your returne againe into my sight.

Away, I say: play lest thou to vexe me here;

A Slave, that fill an end, turnes me to shame:

Sebastian, I have entertain'd thee,

Pastly that I haue neede of such a youth,

That can with some discretion doe my business:

For 'tis no trusting to yond foolish Low:

But chiefly, for thy face, and thy behaviour,

Which (if my Augury decree me not)

Witness good bringing vp, fortune, and truth:

Therefore know thee, for this I entertain thee, Go quite, and take this Ring with thee, Deliver it to Madam Silvia;

She lound me well, delivered it to me.

In. If fames you lound not her, not let her token:

She is dead belike?

Pro. Not fo: I thinkk thelines.

In. Alas.

Pro. Why do'thou cry alas?

In. I cannot choose but pity her.

Pro. Wherefore should'though pity her?

In. Because, methinks that she lound you as well

As you doo lystate your Lady Silvia:

She dreames on him, that has forgot her loue,

You dooaste on her, that cares not for your loue.

Tis pity Loue, should be so contrary;

And thinking on it, makes me cry alas.

Pro. Well: give her that Ring, and therewithall

This Letter that's her chamber: Tell my Lady, I claim the promise for her heavenly Picture:

Your message done, hye home into my chamber, Where thou shalt finde me, and felicite.

In. How many women would doe such a message?

Alas poor Pruehew, thou haue entertained

A Foxe, to be the Shepheard of thy Lambs;

Alas, poor foole, why doe I pity him

That with his very heart despight me?

Because he loves her, he despight me;

Because I love him, I must pity him.

This Ring I gau'de him, when he parted from me,

To bide him to remember my good will:

And now am I (unhappy Melfinger).

To plead for thee, which I would not obtaine;

To carry thee, which I would have refused;

To praise his faith, which I would have disprais'd.

I am my Masters true confidante, Loue,

But cannot be true servient to my Master,

Vnleffe I proue false traitor to my selfe.

Yet will I woe for him, but yet so coldly,

As (heaven it knowes) I would not hate him speed.

Gentlewoman, good day; I pray you be my meane

To bring me where to speake with Madam Silvia.

Sil. What would you with her, if that be the f?

In. If you be thee, I doe intent your patience

To heare me speake the message I am sent on.

Sil. From whom?

In. From my Master, Sir Pruehew, Madam,

Sil. Oh: he sends you for a Picture?

In. 1, Madam.

Sil. Y'fals, bring my Picture there,

Goe, give your Master this: tell him from me,

One Inda, that his changing thoughts forget

Would better fit his Chamber, then this Shadow.

In. Madam, pleaste you peruse this Letter?

Pardone me (Madam) I have visadus'd

Deliter'd you a paper that I should not;

This is the Letter to Madam Silvia;

Sil. I pray thee let me looke on that again.

It may not be of good Madam pardon me.

Sil. There, hold:

I will not looke upon your Masters lines;

I know they are filled with protestations,

And full of new-found oaths, which he will breake

As easily as I doe tearce his paper.

In. Madam, he sends your Ladieship this Ring.

Sil. The more fame for him, that he sends it me;

For I have heard him say a thousand times,

His Inda gave it him, at his departure:

Though his falle finger haue prophan'd the Ring,

Mine shall not doe his Inda so much wrong.

Sil. She thanks you.

Sil. What faileth thou?

In. I thank you Madam, that you tender her:

Poor Gentlewoman, my Master wrongs her much.

Sil. Doth it know her?

In. Almost as well as I doe know my selue.

To thinke upon her woes, I doe protest

That I have wept a hundred fower full times.

Sil. Behold the things that Pruehew hath forsook her?

In. I thinke she doth; and that's her cause of sorrow.

Sil. Is she not passing faire?

In. She hath bin fairer (Madam) then she is;

When shee did thinke my Master lould her well;

She, in my judgement, was a faire as you.

But since she did negleect her looking glasse,

And threw her Sun-expelling Malque away,

The ayre hath flared the roes in her cheeks,

And pinch'd the lilly-enclore of her face,

That now she is become so blacke as I.

Sil. How tall was she?

In. About her stature: for at Penterees,

When all our Pageants of delight were plaid,

Our youth got me to play the womans part,

And I was trim'd in Madam Inda gowne,

Which furred me as fit, by all mens judgements,

As if the garment had bin made for me:

Therefore I know she is about my height,

And at that time I made her wepe a good,
The two Gentlemen of Verona.

For I did play a lamentable part.
(Madam)'twas Arden, passioning,
For Thebus perservy, and whist flight;
Which I to Hurdy acted with my teares;
That my poor Mistres mowed there withall;
Wepen bitterly: and would I might be dead,
it I in thought felt not her very sorrow.

Sir, She is beholding to thee (gentle youth)
Alas (poore Lady) defolate, and left;
I wepe my sefe to thinke upon thy words:
Here youth: there is my purle; I give thee this (well.
For thy sweet Misfris sake, because thou lou't her. Fare.
In.
And the shall thank you too, if ere you know
A virtuous gentlewoman, mild, and beautiful. (her.
I hope my Matter suit will be but cold,
Since she respects my Mistres loue so much,
Alas, how loue can trifle with it sefe;
Here is her Picture: let me feel, I thinke
If I had much a Tyre, this face of mine
Were full as lovely, as is this of hers;
And yet the Painter flatter'd her a little,
Vnleffe I flatter with my sefe too much.
Her haire is Amber, pure, and perfect Yellow;
It that be all the difference in his loue,
Ile get me such a bellorl'd Perrysiag:
Her eyes are grey as glaffe, and so are mine;
I, but her fore-head's low, and mine's as high:
What should it be that he respects in her,
But I can make respecte in my sefe?
It this fond Loue, were not a blinded god.
Come shadow, come, and take this shadow vp,
For'tis thy fall; O thou felceille fortune,
Thou shalt be worship'd, kid'd, lou'd, and ador'd;
And were there fence in his Idolaty,
My substance should be flatable in thy head.
Ile vie thee kindly, for thy Mistres sake
That w'd me so: or else by loue, I vow,
I should have feratch'd out your vengeance eyes,
To make my Matter out of loue with thee. Exeunt.

Actus Quintus, Scena Prima.

Enter Eglamoure, Silvia.

Egl. The Sun begins to guild the westerm skie,
And now it is about the very houre
That Silvia, at Fryer Patrick Cell should meet me,
She will not sefe; for Loues breake not houres,
Vnleffe it be to come before their time,
So much they spur their expedition.
See where she comes: Lady a happy euening.
Sil. Amen, Amen: goo on (good Eglamoure)
Out at the Poulterne by the Abbey wall;
I fear I am attended by some Spies.
Egl. Fear not: the Forrest is not three leagues off,
If we recouer that, we are fare enough. Exeunt.

Scena Secunda.

Enter Threo, Proctor, Julia, Oake.

Th. Sir Proctora, what sakes Silvia to my suit?

Pro. Oh Sir, I finde her milder then she was,
And yet she takes exceptions at your person.
Th. What? that my leg is too long?
Pro. No, that it is too little.
(der.
Th. Ile weare a Boote, to make it somewhat round.
Pro. But loue will not be spard to what it loathes.
Th. What fates sfe to my face?
Pro. She sfaies it is a faire one.
Th. Nay then the wanton eyes: my face is blackes.
Pro. But Pearles are faire; and the old saying is,
Blacke men are Pearles, in beauteous Ladies eyes.
Th. 'Tis true, such Pearles as put out Ladies eyes,
For I had rather winke, then looke on them.
Th. How likes thee my discourse?
Pro. Ill, when you talk of war.
Th. But well, when I discourse of loue and peace.
Jul. But better indeed, when you hold you peace.
Th. What fayes sfe to my valour?
Pro. Oh Sir, the makes no doubt of that.
Jul. She needs not, when the knowes it cowardize.
Th. What fayes sfe to my birth?
Pro. That you are well dere'd.
Jul. True: from a Gentleman, to a foole.
Th. I confiders the my Offerions?
Pro. Oh, I, and pitteis them.
Th. Wherefore?
Jul. That such an Affe should owe them.
Pro. That they are out by Leafe,
Jul. Here comes the Duke.
Du. How now Sir Proctor, how now Threo?
Which of you saw Eglamoure of late?
Th. Not I.
Pro. Nor I.
Du. Saw you my daughter?
Pro. Neither.
Du. Why then
She's fled viso that pezant, Valentiene;
And Eglamoure is in her Company;
'Tis true: for Fryer Laurence met them both.
As he in palemace wander'd through the Forrest:
Him he knew well: and gueld that it was she,
But being mask'd, he was not sure of it.
Besides the did intend Confession
At Patrick Cell this euening, and there she was not.
Threo, I pray you haine, not to discourse,
But mounty you presently, and meece with me
Upon the rising of the Mountain foote.
That looks toward Mantua, whether they are fled:
Disparche (sweet Gentleman) and follow me.
Th. Why this is it, to be a precyous Girle,
That flies her fortune when it follows her:
Ille after; more to be recover'd on Eglamoure,
Then for the loue of reck-leffe Silvia.
Pro. And I will follow, more for Silvia loue
Then harte of Eglamoure that goes with her,
Jul. And I will follow, more to croffe that loue
Then hate for Silvia, that is gone for loue. Exeunt.

Scena Tertia.

Sthnia, On-Love.

(ont. Come, come be pacient.
The Merry Wives of Windsor.

We must bring you to our Captns.

SIL. A thousand more mischances then one
Have learn'd me how to brooke this patiently.

2 OvIV. Come, bring her away.

SIL. Where is the gentleman that was with her?

2 OvIV. Being nimble footed she hath cutt vs.

But Mafis and Valentine follow him;

Goe thou with her to the West end of the wood,
There's our Captns: We'll follow him that's fled,
The Thicket is befe, he cannot escape.

1 OvIV. Come, I must bring you to our Captns sure.

Fear not: he bears an honourable mind.

And will nor be a woman lawfully.

SIL. O Valentine: this I endure for thee.

Exeunt.

Scena Quarta.

Enter Valentine, Prothusa, Silvia, Ilota, Duce, Throst, Our-laws.

Val. How well doth breed a habit in a man?

This shadowy desert, unrespected woods
I better brooke then looking people Townes:
Here can I for the, vn-scene of any,
And to the Nightingales complaining Notes
Tune my diffrettes, and record my woes,
O thou that dost inhabit in my bref,
Leave not the Manion so long Tenamentle,
Left growing ruinous, the building fall,
And leave no memory of what it was,
Repair me, with thy presence, Silvia:
Thou gentle Nymph, cherish thy for-lorne swaine,
What hallowing, and what flier is this to day?
These are my mates, that make their wills their Law,
Have some unhappie passenger in clace;
They loue me well: yet I have much to doe
To keepe them from vntrul soultages.

Withdraw thee Valentine: who's this comes here?

Pro. Madam, this service I have done for you (Though you respekt not aught your servant doth.)
To hazard life, and reskew you from him,
That would haue for'd your honour, and your loue,
Vouchsafe me for my meade, but one faire looke:
(A smaller boone then this I cannot beg,
And lette this, I am sure you can not give.)

Val. How like a dreame is this! I see and hear:
Loue, lend me patience to forbear a while.

SIL. O miserable, vnhappy that I am.

Pro. Unhappy were you (Madam) ere I came:

But by my comming, I have made you happy.

SIL. By thy approach thou mak'st me most vnhappy.

Val. And me, when he approacheth to your presence,

SIL. Had I bee ceas'd by a hungry Lion,
I would have beene a break-fall to the Beaf,
Either then have false Proutena reskew me:
Oh heauen be judge how I love Valentine,
Whose life is as tender to me as my soulle,
And fall as much (for more there cannot be)
I doe detest false pealest Proutena:

Therefore be gone, sollicite it no more.

Pro. What dangerous action, flood it next to death
Would I not vndergoe, for one calme looke:
Oh 'tis the curse in Loue, and still approvd.

When women cannot loue, where they're below'd.

SIL. When Proutena cannot loue, where he's below'd;
Heaue on Indias heart, (by first belft Loue)
For whole desire fake, thou didst then rend thy faith
Into a thousand oaths, and all those oaths,
Descended into perjury, to loue me,
Thou hast no faith left now, vnlesse thou didst two,
And that's faire worse then none: better be one
Then plural faith, which is too much by one:
Thou Counterfeits, to thy true friend.

Pro. In Loue,

Who respekt's friend?

SIL. All men but Proutena.

Pro. Nay, if the gentle spirit of moving words
Can no way change you to a milder forme+
Ille wooro you like a Souldier, at armes end,
And loue you'gainst the nature of Loue: forset ye.

SIL. Oh heauen.

Pro. Ile force thee yield to my desire.

Val. Ruffian: let goe that rude vacuill touch,
Thou friend of an ill fashion.

Pro. Valentine,

Val. Thou comon friend, that's without faith or loue,
For such is a friend now: a treacherous man,
I hope haft beguill'd my hopes; noorth but mine eye
Could have persuad'd me: now I dare not say
I have one friend alive; thou wouldst proove me,
Who should be trusted, when ones right hand
Is periur'd to the Bo'me? Proutena
I am forry I must never trueth thee more,
But count the world a stranger for thy sake:
The private wound is deepest: oh time, most secure.
'Mongst all foes that a friend should be the worst!

Pro. My shame and guilt confounds me:

Froge me Valentine: if hearty sorrow
Be a sufficient: Randome for offence,
I rend'mt her heart: I was as truely sufferer,
As ere I did commit,

Val. Then I am paid:

And once againe, I doe receive thee honest:
Who by Repenance is not satisfied,
Is nor of heauen, nor earth; for these are pleas'd:
By Penitence th' Eternalls wrath's appeas'd:
And that my loue may appease plaine and free,
All that was mine, in Silvia, I gue die.

Inf. Oh me vnhappy.

Pro. Looke to the Boy,

Val. Why, Boy?

Why wage, how now? what's the matter? I look vp: speake,

Inf. O good sir, my master charg'd me to deliver a ring to Madam Silvia: (out of my neglect) was never done.

Pro. Where is that ring? boy?

Inf. Heree'tis: this is it.

Pro. How? let me see.

Why is this the ring I gau'd to Silvia.

Inf. Oh, cry you mercy sir; I have mistooke
This is the ring you sent to Silvia.

Pro. But how can't thou by this ring? at my depart
I gav this vno Indias.

Inf. And Indias her felle did giue it me,
And Indias her felle hath brought it hither.

Pro. How? Indias?

Inf. Behold her, that gave syme to all thy oats, and Entersind 'em deeply in her heart.

How oft haue thou with periure cleft the roote?

Oh Proutena, let this habit make thee bluffs.

D
Bethou aisham’d that I have tooke upon me,
Such an immodel rayment of shame liue
In a difguis of love?
It is the leffer blot modestly fnder,
Women to change their fhape,then men their minds.
Pro. Then men their minds?is true;oh heuen, were man
But Conffant,he were perfect; that one error
Fils him with faults: makes him run through all this fins;
Inconfamcy falls-off, ere it begins:
What is in Silvia’s face, but I may fpe
More frefh in Junta’s, with a conffant eye?
Val. Come,come a hand from either:
Let me be bleft to make this happy clofe:
Twere pitty two such friends should be long foes.
Pro. Beare witnes (heaven) I have my wish for ever.
Jun. And I mine.
Out.—A pris’se a pris’se a pris’se.
Val. Forbeare,forbeare I fay: It is my Lord the Duke.
Your Grace is welcome to a man disgrac’d;
Banifhed Valentine.
Duke. Sir Valentine?
Val. Yonder is Silvia; and Silvia’s mine.
Val. Thurio, give backe: or elle embrace thy death:
Come not within the meafure of my wrath:
Does not name Silvia thine; if once againe,
Verona shall not hold thee: here the bands,
Take but poiftion of her, with a Touch:
I dare thee, but to breath upon my Loe.
Thur. Sir Valentine, I care not for her; I Hold him but a foolie that will endanger
His Body, for a finge that loves him not:
I claim her not,and therefore flie is thine.
Duke. The more degrerate and base art thou
To make fuch meanes for her, as thou haft done,
And leave her on fuch fligbt conditions.

Now, by the honor of my Anceftry,
I doe applaud thy spirit, Valentine,
And thine performance of an Emprefle lare:
Know then, I heere forget all former greedef,
Canel all grudge, repeale thee home ageine,
Plead a new State in thy vyn-rial d merit,
To which I thus subscribe: Sir Valentine,
Thou art a Gentleman, and well defcri’d.
Take thou thy Silvia, for thou haft defred’her.
Val. I thank your Grace; ¥ gift hath made me happy:
I now befearch you (for your daughters fate)
To grant one Boone that I shall take of you.
Duke. I grant it (for thine owne) what ere it be.
Val. Thefe banifh’d men, that I have kept withall,
Are men endu’d with worthy qualities:
Forgue them what they have committed here,
And let them be recall’d from their Exile:
They are reformed, ciufll, full of good,
And ffit for great employment (worthy Lord.)
Duke. Thou haft prefuatd, I pardon them and thee:
Dispofe of them, as thou knowst their defects.
Come,let us goe, we will include all irares,
With Triumphes, Mirth, and rare folemnity,
Val. And as we walke along, I dare be bold
With our discourse, to make your Grace to fhine,
What thinke you of this Page (my Lord?)
Duke. I think the Boy hath grace in him, he blufhes.
Val. I warrant you (my Lord) more grace, then Boy,
Duke. What meane you by that faying?
Val. Please you, let tell you, as we passe along,
That you will wonder what hath fortuned:
Come Proteus, tis your penance, but to heare
The fory of your Loues difcovered,
That done, our day of marriage fhall be yours,
One Fear, one house, one mutuall happiness.

The names of all the Actors.

FINIS.

THE Merry Wives of Windsor.

Actus primus, Scena prima.

Enter Justice Shallow, Slender, Sir Hugh Evans, Master Page, Falstaff, Bardolph, Nym, Pitude, Anne Page, Mistrefe Ford, Mistress Page, Simple.

Shal. No, Sir I Hugh, peruse me not: I will make a Star Chamber matter of it, if he be twenty Sir John Falstaff, he shall not abuse Robert Shallow Equire. (Coram.

Slen. In the County of Glocefter, Justice of Peace and Shal. I (Coten Slender) and Chief-justice. (Coram. Shal. I, and Rato lorum too; and a Gentleman borne (Master Patlon) who writes himselfe Armitage, in any Bill, Warrant, Quittance, or Obligation, Armigero. Shal. I that I doe, and have done any time these three hundred yeares.

Slen. All his succeffors (gone before him) hath done: and all his Ancestors (that came after him) may: they may give the dozen white Luces in their Coate. Shal. It is an olde Coate.

Evan. The dozen white Lowifes doe become an old Coate well: it agrees well pallant: It is a familiar beaute to men, and dignifies Loue. Shal. The Lute is the fresh-fish, the salt-fish, is an old Coate.

Simple. I may quarter (Cox.). Shal. You may, by marrying. Evan. It is marrying indeed, if he quarter it. Shal. Not a whit.

Evan. Yes per-lady: if he has a quarter of your coat, there is but three Skirts for your fettle, in my simple concei- ctures: but that is all one: if Sir John Falstaffe have committed disparagements vnto you, I am of the Church and will be glad to do my benevolence, to make attone- ments and compensates betweene you. Shal. The Countell shall heare it, it is a Riot. Evan. It is not meet the Countell heare a Riot: there is no feste of Got in a Riot: The Countell (looketh you) shall deify to heare the face of Got, and not to heare a Riot: take your viza-mentes in that.

Shal. Ha! o' my life, if I were yong age, the sword should end it.

Evan. It is petter that friends is the sword, and end it: there is also another device in my praine, which peraduenture prings good disfrections with it. There is Anne Page, which is daughter to Master Thoms Page; which is pretty viiginity.

Mistrefe Page: she has brown hair, and speakes small like a woman.

Evan. It is that ferry person for all the ord, as full as you will deifie, and feuen hundred ponds of Monetys, and Gold, and Siluer, is the Grand-fire vpon his death-bed, (Got deliver to a joyfull resurrection) giue, when he is able to outtake fourteen age yeares old. It wase a good motion, if we leave our pribles and prabbles, and deifie a marriage betweene Master Abraham, and Mistrefe Anne Page.

Shal. Did her Grand-fire leave her feaus hundred pound?

Evan. I, and her father is make her a petter penny. Shal. I know the young Gentlewoman, she has good gifts.

Evan. Seven hundred ponds, and possibilities, is good gifts.

Shal. Well, do we see honest Mr Page: is Falstaffe there?

Evan. Shall I tell you a lye? I doe despise a lyer, as I doe despise one that is false. They are the true: the Knight Sir John is there; and I befeech you by your well-willers; I will pear the doore for Mr. Page. What hoa? Got-pellsie your house here.

Mr. Page. Who's there?

Evan. Here is go'ts pleffing and your friend, and Ju- dice Shallow, and heere young Master Slender: that perad- ventures shall teell you another tale, if matters grow to your likings.

Mr. Page. I am glad to see your Worships well: I thank you for my Verilson Master Shallow.

Shal. Master Page, I am glad to see you: much good doe it your good heart. I wish'd your Verilson better, it was ill kill'd; how doth good Mistrefe Page? I thank you alwaies with my heart, la: with my heart.

Mr. Page. Sir, I thank you.

Sir. Thank you: by yea, and no I doe.

M.Pa. I am glad to see you, good Master Slender. Shal. How do's your fellow Greyhound, Sir, I heard fay he was out-run on Catfaff?

M.Pa. It could not be indig'd, Sir.

Shal. You'll not confesse? you'll not confesse.

Shal. That he will not, 'tis your fault, 'tis your fault: 'tis a good dog. e.

Shal. Sir: he's a good dog. and a faire dog, can there be more said? he is good, and faire. Is Sir John Falstaffe here?

M.Pa. Sir, he is with in: and I would I could doe a good office be twene you.

Evan. This spoke as a Christians ought to speake.

Shal. He hath wrong'd me (Master Page).

M.Pa. Sir, he doth in some fort confesse it.
Shal. If it be confessed, it is not reddres'd: and is not that so (M. Page?) he hath wrong'd me, indeed he hath, at a word - he believe me, Robert Shallow Esquire. Soth, he is wronged.

Fal. Now, Master Shallow, you'll compel me to the King?

Shal. Knight, you have beaten my men, kill'd my deere, and broke open my Lodge.

Fal. But not kill'd your Keepers daughter?

Shal. Yea, a piteus this shall answer'd.

Fal. I will answer't, I have done all this:

That is now answer'd.

Shal. The Councell shall know this.

Fal. 'Twere better for you if it were known in coun-cell - you'll be laugh'd at.

Em. Pancras: (Sir John) good words.

Fal. Good words! good Cabbage; Slander, I broke your head: what matter have you against me?

Slen. Marry sir, I have matter in my head against you, and against your coney-catching. Bawbee, Barlaud, Nym, and Puffail.

Bar. You Banbery Cheese.

Slen. 1, it is no matter.

Puff. How now, Mephistophilus?

Slen. 1, it is no matter.

Nym. Slice, I say; pace, pace. Slice, that's my humor.

Slen. Where's Simple man? can you tell, Cofin? Em. Peace, I pray you: now let us understand; there is three Vampires in this matter, as I understand it; that is, Master Page (fideliciet Malter Page,) & there is my felle, (fideliciet my selfe) and the three party is (lastly, and finnally) mine Hoof of the Garter.

Ma. Pa. We three to hear it; & end it between them.

Em. Ferry goody', I will make a preie of it in my note-booke, and we will afterwards orke upon the caufle, with as great discreetness as we can.

Fal. Puffall.

Puff. He hears with ears.

Em. The Tenill and his Tam: what phrase is this? he hears with care? why, it is affections.

Fal. Puffall, did you pick M. Slanders purse?

Slen. 1, by thee! glouses did he, or I would I might never come in mine owne great chamber against elle, of feauen grosses in mill-fitinx, and two Edward Shouelboords, that coat me two shilling and two pence a piece of Tread Miller; by thee glouses.

Slen. Is this true, Puffall?

Em. No, it is falle, if it is a picke-purse.

Puff. Ha, thou mountaine Forreynier: Sir John, and Master mine, I combat challenge of this Latine Bilboe: word of denall in thy labors here; word of denial, froth, and foun thou lief.

Slen. By thee! glouses, then was he.

Nym. Be avis'd sir, and passe good humours: I will say marry trap with you if you know the nut-books hu-umor on me, this is the very note of it.

Slen. By this hat, then he in the red face had it: for though I cannot remember what I did when you made me drunke, yet I am not altogether an affe, Fal. What say you Scarlet, and John?

Bar. Why, sir, (for my part) I say the Gentleman had drunke him! he ou't of his fute sentences.

En. It is his fute fenes; f. what the ignorance is.

Bar. And being fay sir, was (as they fay) cafered: and so condictions pa'the Car-eies.

Slen. I, you spoke in Latten then; but its no mater; he neere be drunke whilst? I live againe, but in honest, civile, godly company for this tricke; if he be drunke, lie be drunke with thofe that haue the feare of God, and neer with drunken knaues.

Em. So get-udge me, that is a vertuous mind.

Fal. You heare all these matters den'd, Gentlemen; you heare it.

M. Page. Nay daughter, carry the wine in, we'll drink within.

Slen. Oh heauen: This is Misstrife. Ano. Page.

M. Page. How now Miftreffe Fowd?

Fal. Miftreffe Ford, by your troth you are very wel met: by your leau ngood Miftris.

M. Page. Wife, bid the gentlemen welcome: come, we have a hot Venion paffe to dinner - Come gentlemen, I hope we shall drink downe all unkindneffe.

Slen. I had rather then forty thullings I leade my book of Songs and Sonnetes here: How now Simple, where have you beene? I must wait on my felle, muft i? you have not the booke of Riddles about you, have you?

Em. Book of Riddles? why did you not lend it to Alice Short-cake upon Alhallowins laft, a fortnight af-fore Michaelmas.

Slen. Come Coz, come Coz, we pray for you: a word with you Cozi marry this; Coz: there is a thou a tender, a kind of tender, made a face-off by Sir Hugh here; doe you underftand me?

Slen. Sir, you shall finde me reasonable; if it be so, I shall doe that is season.

Shal. Nay, but underftand me.

Slen. So I doe Sir.

Em. Give ear to his motions; (M. Slander) I will descriptio the matter to you, if you be capacity of it.

Slen. Nay, I will doe as my Cozen Shallow saies: I pray you pardon me, he's a judifie of Peace in his Coun-trie, limple though I stand here.

Em. But that is not the quefion: the quefion is concerning your marriage.

Shal. I, there's the point Sir.

Em. Marry is it: the very point of it, to Mi. An Page.

Slen. Why if it be so, I will marry her upon any reasonable demands.

En. But can you affection the 'oman, let vs command to know that of your mouth, or of your lips: for divers Philosophers hold,that the lips is parcel of the mouth: therefore precipitely, can you carry your good will to misd? Slen. Cofin Abraham Slander, can you lose her?

Slen. I hope fir, I will do as it shall become one that did doe reason.

Em. Nay, go'ts Lords, and his Ladies, you must speake profitable, if you can carry-her your desires towards her.

Shal. That you must:

Will you, (upon good dowry) marry her?

Slen. I will doe a greater thing then that, upon your request (Cozen;) in any reason.

Shal. Nay conceive me, conceive mee, (sweet Coz):

what I do is to please you (Cozi:) can you louse the maid?

Slen. I will marry her (Sir;) at your request; but if there bee no great lose in the beginning, yet Heauen may decaele it upon better acquaintance, when we are married, and have more ocassion to know one another: I hope upon familiarity will grow more content: but, if you say marry-her, I will marry-her, that I am freely di folued, and disfoltely.

En. It
The Merry Wives of Windsor.

Ex. Nay, it is better yet; give her this letter for it is a woman that altogether acquaintance with Miffiris Anne Page; and the Letter is to desire, and require her to oblige your Masters desires, to Miffiris Anne Page: I pray you be gone: I will make an end of my dinner, then's Pippins and Cheese to come.

Scena Tertia.

Enter Falstaff, Ho! Ho! Bardolph, Nym, Pistol, Page.

Fal. Mine Ho! of the Garrett.

Ha. What makes my Bully Roque? he speake chollerly, and wisely.

Fal. Truely mine Ho! I must turn away some of my followers.

Ha. Dashard (bally Herecutter) cafeher; let them wag, trot, trot.

Fal. I sit at ten pouuds a week.

Ha. That's an Emperor (Cefar, Keiser and Phalexar) I will entertaine Bardolph: he shall draw, he shall play. I well (bally Helleter?)

Fal. Doe to (good mine Ho!)

Ha. I have spake; let him follow; let me see the froth, andblue: I am at a word: follow.

Fal. Bardolph, follow him: a Tapfer is a good trade: an old Crosse, makes a new Jerkin: a wthcir's St. Enginman, a fresh Tapfer: goe, a dew.

Ha. It is a life that I have deir'd: I will thrive.

Pistol. O bale hungarian wight: why the fp. got wield.

Ha. He was gotten in drink is not the humor desired.

Fal. I am glad I am to acquit of this Tinderbox. This Thiefs were too open: his fishing was like an Ashkintill Singer, he kept not time.

Ni. The good humor is to fcale at a minutes refl.

Pistol. Conny the wife it call: Steale fol: a fico for the phraxe.

Fal. Well fir, I am almoft out at hecel.

Pistol. Why then let Kibes enufe.

Fal. There is no remedy: I must comitche, I must fliuft.

Pistol. Yong Rauens must hate foode,

Fal. Which of you know Ford of this Towne?

Pistol. I ken the wight: she is of substance good,

Fal. My honest Ladies, I will tell you what I am about.

Pistol. Two yards, and more.

Fal. No quips now Piftof. (Indeed I am in the waife two yards about: but I am now about no waife: I am about thrife) briefly: I doe men to make lowe to Fords wife: I fipre entertainment in her: fipe fipre: fipe courfe: fipe the leere of imitation: I can continue the action of her familier fife, & the hardie voice of her behaviour (to be English'd rightly), I am Sir John Falstaff.

Pistol. He hath flid his will, and tranflated her will: out of honesty, into Englifh.

Ni. The Anchor is deep: will that humor pass?

Fal. Now, the report goes, she has all the rule of her husbands Purfe: he hath a legean of Angels.

Pistol. As many dilies entertain: and to her Boy say I.

Ni. The humor rifer it is good humor me the angels.

Fal. I have writ me here a letter to her: & here another to Pages wife, who even now gave mee good eyes too examin'd my parts with all judicious illufions: sometimes the beam of her view, guided my foote: sometimes my porly belly.
The Merry Wives of Windsor.

P.S. Then did the Sun on dung-burnt shine.

Vsal. Here's fare for such a humour.

Cel. O the did so course o're my exteriors with such a greedy intention, that the appetite of her eye, did scene to scourch me vp as a burning-glasse; here's another letter to her: She beares the Pastle too. She is a Region in Gaieta: all gold, and bountie; I will be Cheaters to them both, and they shall be Excliqueurs to mee: they shall be my Easf and West Indies, and I will trade to them both: Goe, beare thou this Letter to Milfris Pages; and thou this to Milfris Ford: we will thrive (Lads) we will thrive.

P.S. Shall I Sir Pandaraw o' Troy become,
And by my fide were Steele? then Lucifer take all.

Vsal. I will run no base humor: here take the humor-Letter; I will keep the humor of reputation.

Cel. Hold Sirdia, beare you these Letters tightly, Saire like my Pinnasle to these golden shores.

Rogues, hence, aununt, vanilh like halie-stones ioe, Trudge; pld away th' hoole: seek e fether, packe:
Falseffe will lerne the honor of the age,
French-thrift, you Rogues, my felle, and skirred Page.

P.S. Let Vultures gripe thy guts: for gourd, and Fullam holds?c high and low begauges the rich & poor,
Tefer ile haue in pouch when thou shalt lroke,
Bafe Phegmum Turke.

Vsal. I have oppetions,
Which be humors of reuenge.

P.S. Wilt thou reuenge?

Vsal. By Welkin, and her Star.

P.S. With wit, or Steele?

Vsal. With both the humors, I:
I will difcouver the humour of this Loue to Ford.

P.S. And to Page shall eke vnfold
How Falseffe (variety stale)
His Doue will proue: his gold will hold,
And his foft couch defile.

Vsal. My humour shall not coole: I will incite Ford to deale with payson: I will posdele him with yollow-nelle, for the reuelt of mine is dangerous: that is my true humour.

P.S. Thou art the Mars of Malecontents: I second the: troup on.

Scene Quarta.

Enter Milfriss Quickly, Simple, John Rugby, Doctor, Cafta, Froton.

Qu. What, John Rugby, I pray thee goe to the Cafe-ment, and fee if you can see my Master, Master Doctor Cafta comning: if he doe (I think) and finde any body in the house, there will be an old abusing of Gods patience, and the Kings Englih.

R. Ie goe vrack.

Qu. Goe, and we'll have a peel for't: foone at night,
(in faith) as the latter end of a Sea.-cole-fire: An honest, willing, kinde fellow, as enter futtaue shall come in houeth withall: and I warrant you, no tel-tale, nor no breamdote, his wor: fault is, that he is giuen to prayer; hee is some thing peculiac that way: but no body but has his fault: but let that passe. Peter Simple, you say your name is?

St. I: for fault of a better.

Qu. And Master Slenere's your master?

St. I forsooth.

Qu. Do's he not weare a great sound Beard, like a Glowers pairing-knife?

St. No forsooth: he hath but a little wee-ace; with a little yellow Beard: a noine coloured Beard.

Qu. A foftly-priviledged man, is he noe?

St. I forsooth: but he is as tall a man of his hands, as any is betwene this and his head: he hath sought with a Warner.

Qu. How say you: oh, I should remember him: do's he not hold vp his head (as it were) and frut in his gate?

St. Yes indeede do's he.

Qu. Well, heaven send Anne Page, no worse fortune:
Tell Master Parfon Evans, I will doe what I can for your Master: Anne is a good girl, and I wish —

Rw. Out alas; here comes my Master.

Qu. We shall all be feint: Run in here, good young man: goe into this Clofon: he will not fly long: what John Rugby? John: what Ioan I say? goe John, goe enquire for my Master, I doubt he be not well, that hee comes not home: (and demme Anne, demme a. Grce.
Ca. Vat is you ling? I doe not like des-toyes: pray you goe and vetch me in my Clofon, vnboycone vee;
be a Groenne-a-Box: do intend vat I speke? a greene-a-box.

Qu. I forsooth ile fetch it you:
I am glad hee went not in himselfe: if he had found the young man he would haue bin horne-mad.

Ca. Fine, fine, formaylle, it was for channo, I am man vo le Cauo la grand a faires.

Qu. Is it this Sir?

Ca. Guyettte le au mon poche, de-Meetch quickly:
Vecis is the knaus Rugby?

Qu. What John Rugby, John?

Rw. Here Sir.

Ca. You are John Rugby, and you are Jacke Rugby:
Come, take-youe, your Rapier, and come after me heele to the Court.

Rw. This ready Sir, here in the Porch.

Ca. By my troth: I carry too long: od's-me: que as is soublie: dere is some Simples in my Clofon, dat I will nor fly for the world: I shall lecture behinde.

Qu. Ay-me, he'll finde the yong man there, & be mad.
Ca. O Diable, Diable: vat is in my Clofon?
Villania, la roone: Rugby, my Rapier.

Qu. Good Master be content,

Ca. Wherefore shall I be content—a:

Qu. The yong man is an honest man.

Ca. What shall de de honest man do in my Clofon: dere is no honest man dat shall come in my Clofon,

Rw. I befeech you be not so forgiving: heare the truth of it. He came of an errand to mee, from Parfon Hugh.

Ca. Vell.

St. I forsooth: to defire her to—

Qu. Peace, I pray you,

Ca. Peace-a-your tongue: speake-a-your Tale.

St. To defire this honest Gentlewoman(your Maid) to speake a good word to Milfris Anne Page, for my Master in the way of Marriage.

Qu. This is all indeed-le: but ile ne re put my finge-ner in the fire, and neede not.

Ca. Sir Hugh fend-a you? Rugly, ballow me some paper: tarry you a litte-a-while.
The Merry Wives of Windsor.

 Qui. I am glad he is so quiet; if he had bin thoroughly moulid,you should have heard him so loud, and so melancholy: but notwithstanding man, I doe yoe your Mafter what good I can: and the very yea, & the nois, y French Doctor my Mafter. (I may call him my Mafter, looke you, for I keepe his houle; and I wash, ring, brew, bake, feeoure, dress mee, and drink, make the beds, and doe all my felte.)

 Simp. This is a great charge so come vnder one bodies hand.

 Qui. Are you a uisit o'that? you shall finde it a great charge: and to be vp early, and downe late: but notwithstanding, (to tell you in your eare, I wold have no words of it) my Mafter him selfe is in love with Mystris Anne Page: but notwithstanding that I know not mind, that's neither heere nor there.

 Casu. You, Jack Nape; giue a this Letter to Sir Henry, by gar, it is a challange: I will cut his treet in de Parke, and I will teach a scurril Jack-a-nape Priet to meddle, or make: — you may be gon; it is not good you tarry here: by gar I will cut all his two fiones: by gar, he shall not have a stone to throw at his dogge.

 Qui. Alas: he spaketh but for his friend.

 Casu. It is no matter a ver dat: do you not tell a me dat I shall haue Anne Page for my selwe? by gar, I will kill de Jack-Priet: and I have appointed mine Hoft of de larteer to measure our weapon: by gar, I will my selwe haue Anne Page.

 Qui. Sir, the maid louses you, and all shall bce well: We muft giue folkes leaue to prate: what the good-tert. Casu. Rugge, come to the Court with me by gar, if I have not Anne Page, I shall turn your head out of my dore: follow my hercles, Rugbe.

 Qui. You shall have Anne—fooles head of your owne: No, I know Anne mind for that: never a woman in Winds- ter knowes more of Anne mind: then I doe, nor can doe more then I doe with her, I thanke heuen.

 Fenton. Who's with in there, hoa?

 Qui. Who's there, I trau? Come neere the house I pray you.

 Fent. How now (good woman) how do all thou?

 Qui. The better that it please your good Worship to ask?

 Fent. What newes? how do's prettie Miftris Anne?

 Qui. In truth Sir, and free is prettie, and honell, and gentle, and one that is your friend, I can tell you that by the way, I prafie heuen for it.

 Fent. Shall I doe any good thinkst thou? shall I not joole my Mafter?

 Qui. Trott Sir, all is in his hands aboute: but notwithstanding (Mafier Fenton) Ile bee vnowne on a booke free louses you: haue not your Worship a warr aboute your eye?

 Fent. Ye Saturday I, what of that?

 Qui. Well, thereby hangs a tale: good faith, it is such another Now; (but I deceipt) an honest maid as ever broke bread: wee had an hoeures talke of that war: I shall never laugh but in that maids company: but (indeed) free is giuen too much to Althoyle and muffering: but for you — well — goe too.

 Fent. Well, I shall fee hee to day: hold, there's money for thee: Let me haue thy voice in my behalfe: if thou feell her before me, commend me.

 Qui. Will I? I faith that woe will: And I will tell your Worship more of the War, the next time we have confidence, and of other wooers.
praise womans modestly: and gave such orderly and welbeheaved reprove to all vnaughtiness, that I would have sworne his disposition would have gone to the truth of his words: but they do no more adhere and keep place together, then the hundred Dolphins to the tune of Greensleeues: What temperf (I trea) threw this Whale, (with so many Tuns of oyle in his belly) a throse at Windsor?
How shal I bee reunged on him? I thinke the bell way were, to entertaine him with hope, till the wicked fire of luft have melted him in his owne grace: Did you eer hear the like?
Miss Page. Letter for letter; but that the name of Page and Ford differs so thy great comfort in this mystery of ill opinions, here's the twin-brother of thy Letter: but let thine inherit sink, for I profess mine never shall: I warrant he hath a thousand of these Letters, writ with blanke-space for different names (fure more): and these are of the second edition: hee will print them out of doubt: for he cares not what hee puts into the preffe, when he would put vs two: I had rather be a Giantess, and lye vnder Mount Pelion: Well: I will find you twen-tie Discretion, with Turtles are one chaff-e man.
Miss Ford. Why this is the very same: the very hand:
the very words: what doli he think of vs?
Miss Page. Nay I know not: it makes me almoft readict to wrangle with mine owne honesty: I entertaine my selfe like one that I am not acquainted withall: for fure verelle hee knowe some draine in me, that I know not my selfe, hee would never have boorded me in this furie.
Miss Ford. Boordine, call you it? Ie bee lye to keepers him above decke.
Miss Page. So will I: if thee come vnder my hatches, Ie never to Sea again: Let's bee reung'd on him: let's appoint him a meeting: give him a show of comfort in his Suit, and lead him on with a fine bated delay, till hee hath pawn'd his horfes to mine Hob of the Garter.
Miss Ford. Nay, I will confent to aday my villany against him, that may not fully the charitell of our honesty: oh that my husband saw this Letter: it would glue earlernal
fod to his ileafuie.
Miss Page. Why look where he comes; and my good man too: he's as farre from ileafuie, as I am from giving him caute, and that (I hope) is an vnmeasurable distance.
Miss Ford. You are the happier woman.
Miss Page. Let's consult together against this greaft
Knight: Come hither.
Ford. Well: I hope, it be not so.
Miss Hope is a curst-dog in some faires:
Sir John affects thy wife.
Ford. Why sir, my wife is not young.
Miss Ford. He woodes both high and low,both rich & poor, both yong and old, one with another (Ford) he loues the Gally-mawfr(y) (Ford) permend.
Ford. Loue my wife?
Miss Ford. With liuer, burning hot: present;
Or goe thou like Sir Allan be, with Ring-wood at thy hecles: Oiousius is the name.
Ford. What name Sir?
Miss Ford. The home I say: Farewell:
Take heed,haue open eye, for theeuys doe foot by night,
Take heed,ere sommer comes, or Cuckoo-birds do sing.
Away for Corpsecall Nime:
Believe it (Page) he speakes fenc.
Ford. I wil be patient: I will find out this.

\[\text{Nim.}\] And this is true: I like not the humor of llying:
hee hath wronged mee in some hurnors: I should haue borne the humour'd Letter to her: but I have a fword:
and it shall bite upon my necessities: he loues your wife;
There is an end of the samethe long: My name is Corporall Nime: I speake, and I souche: this true: my name is Nim:
and Falsaffe loues your wife: sиеue, I loue not the humour of bread and chees: adieu.

Page. The humour of it (quoth's) here's a fellow frights English out of his wit.
Ford. I will secke out Falsaffe.
Page. I never heard such a drawling-affecting rogue.
Ford. If I doe finde it: well.
Page. I will not beleue such a Caturn, though the Prieft o'th' Towne commended him for a true man.
Ford, 'Twas a good fenfible fellow: well;
Page. How now Cmeg?
Miss Page. Whether goe you (George) harke you,
Miss Ford. How now (sweet Frank) why art thou melancholy? Ford. I melancholy: I am not melancholy:
Get thee home: goe,
Miss Ford. Fart, thou haft some crochets in thy head,
Now: will you goe, Miss Page?
Miss Page. Haue with you: you will come to dinner
George: Looke who comes yonder: shal belee our Meflenger to paltire Knigbe,
Miss Ford. Truft me, I thought on her; she'll fit it.
Miss Page. You are come to see my daughter Anne?
Qu. Torloofth: and I pray how doo's good Miftrefte Anne?
Miss Page. Go in with vs and see: we have an heurces tale with you.
Page. How now Master Ford?
Ford. You heard what this knaue told me, did you not?
Page. Yes, and you heard what the other told me?
Ford. Doe you think there is truth in them?
Page. Hang'em flues: I do not think the Knight would offer it: But thee that accuse him in his intent towards our wifes, are a yoke of his disordered men: ve-ty rogues, now they be our of servite.
Ford. Would they his men?
Page. Marry were they.
Ford. Like it neuer the better for that,
Do's he lye at the Garter?
Page. I marry do's he: if hee should intend this voyage towards my wife, I would turne her loose to him;
and what hee gets more of her, then sharpe words, let it lye on my head.
Ford. I doe not misdoubt my wife: but I would bee loath to turne them together: a man may be too confident: I would have nothing lye on my head: I cannot be thus satisfied.

Page. Looke where my ranting-Holf of the Garter comes: there is eyther liquor in his pate, or mony in his purce, when hee looks so merrily: How now mine Holf?
Holf. How now Bully-Rooke: thou'st a Gentleman
Cauleiro-Justice, I say.
Sed. I follow, (mine Holf) I follow: Good-even, and twenty (good Master Page,) Master Page, wilt you goe with vs: we have sport in hand.
Holf. Tell him Cauleiro-Justice: tell him Bully-Rooke.
Sed. Sir, there is a fray to be sought, betweene Sir
Hugh the Welsh Priest, and Caule the French Doctfr.
Ford. Good
The Merry Wives of Windsor.

Scena Secunda.

Enter Falstaffe, Puffall, Robin, Quickly, Bardolph, Ford.

Ford. Good mine host Hoy o'th'Master Garter: a word with you.

Host. What faist thou, my Bully-Rooke?

Fal. Will you goe with vs to behold it? My merry Host hath had the measuring of their weapons; and (I think) hath no negociated them contrary places: for (beleeue mee) I haue the Parson is no Jester or harle, I will tell you what our sport shall be.

Host. Haft thou no fuit aginst my Knightly guest-Cauleire?

Fal. None, I profess: but I laie you a pottle of burn'd fackes, to give me recourse to, and tell him my name is Broome: only for a reft.

Host. My hand, (Bully:) thus shalt haue egriffe and regrette, (said I well) and thy name shall be Broome. It is a merry Knight: will you goe An-heares?

Fal. Haue with you mine Host.

Page. I haue heard the French-man hath good skill in his Rapier.

Fal. Tut fur: I could haue told you more: in these times you stand on distancce: your Paffes, Stoccado's, and I know not what: 'tis the heart (Master Page) 'tis here, 'tis here: I haue lerne the time, with my long-towrd, I would haue made you howe farr fellowes shippke like Ractes.

Host. Haue ye boyes, heere, heere: shall we wag?

Page. Haue with you I: I laded rather them f. old, then figh.

Fal. Though Page be a secure foole, and stands fo firmly on his wines frailty; yet, I cannot put-off my opinion fo easily: fie was in his company at Pages house: and what they made there, I know not. Well, I will looke further into's, and I have a difficuitie, to found Falstaffe; if I finde her bene, I looke not my labor: if the be otherwife, 'tis labour well beflowed.

Exeunt.

II. i. 210—II. ii. 96.
The Merry Wives of Windsor.

Better plight for a Lender, than you are: the which hath something emboldened me to this venificent intimation: for they stay, if money go before, all waifs doe lie open.

Fal. Money is a good Souldier (Sir) and will on.
Ford. Trueth, and I have a bag of money hereon troublesome me: if you will help to bear it (Sir John) take all; or haile, for calling me the carriage.
Fal. Sir, I know not how I may deserve to bee your Porter.
Ford. I will tell you sir, if you will giue me the heareng.
Fal. Speake (good Master Broune) I shall be glad to be your Seruant.
Ford. Sir, I heare you are a Scholler: (I will be briefe with you) and you have bene a man long knowne to me, though I had never so good manners as desirr, to make my felic acquainted with you. I shall discourse a thing to you, wherin I must very much lay open mine owne improbable. But (good Sir John) as you have one eye upon my follies, as you heare them unfold, turne another into the Register of your owne, that I may passe to a reproove the easier, fish you your felic now how ease it is to be such an offender.
Fal. Very well Sir, proceed.
Ford. There is a Gentle woman in this Towne, her husbands name is Ford.
Fal. Well Sir.
Ford. I have long loud her, and I protest to you, abused much on her: followed her with a dooes observance: Ingrate opportunitie to meete her: she descrie every flight occasion that could but negligently give mee sight of her; not only bought many pretences to giue her, but have giuen largely to many, to know what flees would have giuen: briefly, I have purd her, as Loue hath purd mee, which hath been on the wing of all occasions; but whatsoever I have merited, either in my minde, or in my meanes, need I am sure I have received none, valese Experience be a Lebanon, that I have purchased at an infinite rate, and that hath taught mee to fly this.

"Love like a shadow fleeth, when influence Love pursueth, Proving that that flies, and flying what pursueth."

Fal. Have you receiued no promis of satisfaction at her hands?
Ford. Neuer.
Fal. Have you importun'd her to such a purpuse?
Ford. Neuer.
Fal. Of what qualitie was your love then?
Ford. Like a fair house, built on another mans ground, so that I have loft my edifice, by mistaking the place, where I erected it.

Fal. To what purpuse have you unfolded this to mee?
For. When I have told you that, I have told you all: Some say, that though she appeare honest to mee, yet in other places she enlarges her minde to farre, that there is shewed confucion made of her. Now (Sir John) there is the heart of my purpuse: you are a gentleman of excellent breeding, admirable discurse, of great admiration, authenticke in your place and person, generally allow'd for your many warlike, court-like, and learned preparutions.
Fal. O Sir.
Ford. Beleucie it, for you know it: there is money, spedd it, spedd it, spedd more, spedd all I have, only giue
The Merry Wives of Windsor.

Rog. 'Tis paste the hour (Sir) that Sir Hugh promis'd to meet.

Cass. By gas, he has face his foul, dat be is no come; he has pray his Pible well, dat he is no come: by gas (Jack Rover) he is dead already, if he be come.

Rog. He is his wife Sir: hee knew your worship would kill him if he came.

Cass. By gas, de herring is no dead, so as I will kill him: take your Rapiers, (Jack) I will let you how I will kill him.

Cass. VillAIN, take your Rapiers.

Rog. Forbear thee, hee's company.

Shal. 'Sau you Mr. Doctor CASSIO.

Page. Now good Mr. Doctor.

Sten. 'Give you good-morrow, sir.

Cass. Vate be all you one, two, three, four, come for? Have. To see thee fight, to see thee forge, to see thee transfuse, to see thee here, to see thee there, to see thee paaste thy puncho, thy flrick, thy tearete, thy distance, thy mortants: he is dead, my Ethipian? Is he dead, my Francico? Hully! what faires my Escolapius? my Solomon's heart of Elders? ha! is he dead bully? stale he is dead?

Cass. By gas, he's de Coward-Jack. Prettis of desyrd: he is not show his face.

Hoff. Thou art a Casti-nion. VRINAIL: Historian of Greece (my Dog).

Cass. I pray you beare wissefell, that we haue flay, flay or feuon, two tree howres for him, and bee into-come.

Shal. He is the wifes man (M. Doctor) he is a crier of foules, and you a curer of bodies if you shoud fight, you goe against the haires of your professions is it not true, Master Page?

Page. Master Shallow, you have yeere the been a great fighter through noe small of peace.

Shal. Body-kings M. Page, though I now be old, and of the peace; if I set a sword out, my finger itches to make one, though wee are luffices, and Doktours, and Church-men (M. Page) wee have some falta of our youth now, we are the sons of women (M. Page).

Page. 'Tis true, Mr. Shallow.

Shal. It will be found (M. Page) M. Doctor CASSIO. I am come to fetch you home: I am sworn of the peaces you haue shrowd your selfe a wife Physicke, and Sir Hugh hath bowne himselfe a wife and patient Church-man who may live with me, M. Doctor.

Hoff. Par.

Hoft. Pardon, G reef-Inj ickle ; a Mounfier M ockewater.
Sh. Mock-water ? vat is dat ?
Hoft. Mock-water, in our English tongue, is Valour (Bully.)
Cai. By gas, then I have as much Mock-wateras de Englishman: feeyun.-jack-dog-Priek: by gai, weel cut his ear.
Hoft. He will Clapper-claw thee tightly (Bully.)
Cai. Clapper-claw ? vat is dat ?
Hoft. That is, he will make thee amends.
Cai. By-gar, me doe lookie hee shall clapper-claw me, for by-gar, me weel haue it.
Hoft. And I will prouoke him to 't, or let him wag.
Cai. Metanck you for dat.
Hoft. And moreover, (Bully) but first, M. G nieff, and M. Page, Becke Caufalero Slender, goo you through the Towne to Fragmore.
Page. Sit Hugh is there, is he ?
Hoft. He is there, fee what humor he is in: and I will bring the Doctor about by the Fields: will it doe well ?
Sh. We will doe it.
All. Adieu good M. Doctor.
Cai. By-gar, me weel kill de Dreff, for he speake for a Jack-an-Ape to Anne Page.
Hoft. Let him diet feathery his patience: throw cold water on thy Choller : goe about the fields with mee through Fragmore, I will bring thee where Miltons Anne Page is, as a Farmhoufe Fealting: and thou shall woue he: Cride-game, said I well?
Cai. By-gar, mee dancke you for dat: by gari I loue you: and I shall procure you a de good Gueft de Edie, de Knight, de Lords, de Gentlemen, my patients.
Hoft. For the which, I will be thy aduytory toward Anne Page: said I well?
Cai. By-gar,'tis good: well said.
Hoft. Let vs wag then.
Cai. Come at my heeles,2Jack Rugby.

Enter Evan, Simple, Page, Shallow, Slender, Hoft, Casus, Rugby.

Evan. I pray you now, good Master Shallow, Sovereign-man, and friend Simple by your name; which way haue you look'd for Master Caine, that calls himselfe Doctor of Phisick.
Sim. Marry Sir, the pittie-ward, the Parke-ward: euery way: olde Windsor way, and euery way but the Towne-way.
Evan. I moft vehemently deire you, you will also looke that way.
Sim. I will fir.
Evan. Pleece my soule: how full of Chollors I am, and trembling of minde: I shal be glad if he have decrived mee how melancholies I am? I will knog his Virinall about his kniues coffard, when I have good opportunities for the onke: Pleece my soule: To Shallow Rivers to whose fault: melodious Birds sing Meddigalls: There will we make one Pid of Raishe: and a boome and fragrant poife. To Shallow: 'Mercie on mee, I have a great disposition to cry.

Mst. Page, Robin Ford, Page, Shallow, Slender, Host, Emme, Cunl.

Mst. Page. Nay keep your way (little Gallant) you were wont to be a follower, but now you are a Leader: whether had you rather lead mine eyes, or eye your masters heels?

Rob. I had rather (forsooth) go before you like a man, then follow him like a dwarf. (Courtes.)

M. Pa. You are a flattering boy, now I see you are a Ford. Well met mistis Page, whether you go.

M.Pa. Truly Sir, to see your wife, she's at home?

Ford, and as idle as the way hang together for want of company: I think if your husbands were dead, you two would marry.

M. Pa. Be sure of that, two other husbands.

Ford. Where had you this pretty weather-coke?

M. Pa. I cannot tell what (the dickens) his name is my husband had him of, what do you call sol Knights name Rob. Sir John Falstaff, Ford. Sir John Falstaff.

M.Pa.He,he, I can never hit on her name; there is such a league between my gentleman, and he; is your wife at Ford. Indeed she is.

M. Pa. By your leave Sir, I am ficker till I see her.

Ford. Has page any brains? Hath he any eyes? Hath he any thinking? Sure they steep him, he hath no eye of them: why this boy will carry a letter twenty miles as saile, as a Canon will shoot point-blanke twice score: he pieces out his wives inclination; she gives him folio motion and advantage: now she's going to my wife, & Falstaff boy with her: A man may heare this shewe sing in the winde; and Falstaff boy with her is: good plot, they are like, and out revoluted wives flame damnation together. Well, I will take him, then torture my wife, plucke the borrowed rade of moyste from the so-feeming Mst. Page, divulge Page himselfe: for a secure and

M. Page. Quickly, quickly: Is the buck-basket—

M. Page. Come, come, come.

Mst. Ford. Here, set it downe.

M. Page. Give your men the charge, we must be briefe.

M. Ford. Marrie as I told you before (John & Robert) be ready here hard-by in the Brew-house, & when I doth call you, come forth, & (without any pause, or staggering) take this basket on your shoulders: & done, trudge with it in all hast, & carry it among the Whistlers in Datchet Mead, and there empty it in the maddie ditch, close by the Thames side.

M. Page. You will do it? (direction.

M. Ford. I ha told them out and out, they lack not The Merry Wives of Windor.

Be gone, and come when you are call'd.
M. Page. Here comes little Robin. (with you?)
M. Page. You little lack-a-lent, have you bin true to vs Rob. I. Ile be sworne: my Master knowes not of your being here: and hath threatened to put me into curru-ling liberty, if I tell you of it: for he feares he'll turne me away.
M. Page. Thou is a good boy: this secrecy of thine shall be a Tailor to thee, and shall make thee a new doublet and hose. Ile go hide me.
M. Ford. Do so: go tell thy Master, I am alone: Miftis Page, remember you her. Din.
M. Page. I warrant thee, if I do not ad it, little me.
M. Ford. Go too then? we'll se this vnwholsome humidity, this groffe-watry Pompion; we'll reach him to know Turtles from Jeyes.
Fal. Have I caugh thee, my heavenly Jewell? Why now let me die, for I have liv'd long enough: This is the period of my ambition: O this blest house.
M. Ford. O sweet Sir John,
Fal. What that Iall cog. I cannot prize (M. Ford) now shall I fin in my wight: I would my Husband were dead, Ile speake it before the being Lord, I would make thee my Lady.
M. Ford. I your Lady Sir John? alas, I should bee a pittifull Lady.
Fal. Let the Court of France chwe such another: I see how thine eye would emulante the Diamond: Thou haft the right arched-beauty of the brow, that becomes the Ship-tyre, the Tyre-valiant, or any Tire of Venetian admittance.
M. Ford. A plains Kercsche, Sir John: My browes become nothing else, nor that well neither.
Fal. Thou art a tyrant to say so: thou wouldst make an absoluite Courtier, and the firme fixture of thy foule, would give an excellent motion to thy gate, in a semi-circled Farthingale. Ie see what thou wert in Fortune thy foe, were not Nature thy friend: Come, thou canst not hide it.
M. Ford. Beleeue me, there's no such thing in me.
Fal. What made me lose thee? Let that passewade thee. There's something extraordinary in thee: Come, I cannot cog, and say thou art this and that, like a manie of the sliping-headsorne buds, that come like women in mens apparel, and simile-like. Bucklers-berry in simile-time I: I cannot, but I lose thee, none but thee; and thou delerit it.
M. Ford. Do not betray me sir, I fear you lose M. Page.
Fal. Thou mightest as well lay, I loue to walke by the Counter-gate, which is as halftone to me, as the recke of a Lime-kiln.
M. Ford. Well, heauen knowes how I loue you, And you shall one day finde it.
Fal. Keep in that mind, Ile defende it.
M. Ford. Nay, I must tell you, so you doe; Or else I could not be in that mind.
R.L.Mistis Ford,Mistis Ford: here is Miftis Page at the doore, fweating, and blowing, and looking wildly, and would needs speake with you presently.
Fal. She shall not see me, I will enconce me behinde the Artes.
M. Ford. Pray you do so, she's a very taling woman, What's the matter? How now?
M. Page. O mistress Ford what have you done?
You r'sham'd, you're outthrowne, you're vdone for ever,
M. Ford. What's the matter, good Miftis Page?
M. Page. O wealday, mist.Ford, having an honest man to your husband, to give him such cause of suspicion,
M. Ford. What cause of suspicion?
M. Page. What cause of suspicion? Our vpnon you:
How am I mislookt in you?
M. Ford. What (alas) what's the matter?
M. Page. Your husband's comming hether (Woman) with all the Officers in Windor, to search for a Gentle- man, that he layses is here now in the houfe; by your consent to take an ill advantage of his absence: you are mislookt.
M. Ford. Tis not so, I hope,
M. Page. Pray heuen it be not so, that you have such a man here; but 's most certaine your husband's comming, with halfe Windor at his heecles, to search for such a one, I come before to tell you: If you know your felfe cleere, why I am glad of it: but if you have a friend here, counte, counte him out. Be not asaiz'd, call all your fencies to you, defend your reputation, or bid farwell to your good life for ever.
M. Ford. What John? Do? There is a Gentleman my deere friend, and I feare not mine owne frame so much, as his perill. I had rather then a thousand pound he were out of the houfe.
M. Page. For shame, never stand (you had rather, and you had rather) your husband's heare at hand, bethinke you of some conuenynce; in the houfe you cannot hide him. Oh, how haue you deci'd me? I looke, heere is a basket, if he be of any reasonable natur, he may crepe in heere, and throw fowle linnen upon him, as if it were going to bucking: Or it is whiting time, lend him by your two men to Datches Meade.
M. Ford. He's too big to go in there: what shall I do?
Fal. Let me see'll, let me see'll, O let me see'll;
Ile in. Ile in: Follow your friends counsell, Ile in.
M. Page. What Sir John Fauffe ? are these your Let- ters. Knight?
Fal. I loue thee, help mee away: let me creep in heere: ile neuer——
M. Page. Help sea your master (Boy:) Call your men (Mist. Ford:) You enshambeling Knight.
M. Ford. What John, Robert, John; Go, take vp thire clothes here, quickly: What's the Cowlie selfe? Look how you drumbie? Carry them to the Landaffe in Datche mede; quickly, come.
Fal. Praise you come never? I suspect without cause, Why then make sport at me, then let me be your left, I defende it: How now? Whether beare you this?
Ser. To the Landaffe fortooth.
M. Ford. Why, what have you to do whether they bear it? You were belt meddle with buck-washing.
Fal. Buckes how could I wahf my jell of 's buckes, buckes, bucke. I warrant you Bucke, And of the feaston too; it shal appear.

Ford. A Buck-basket?

Fal. Yes: a Buck-basket: ram'd mee in with foule Shirts and Smocks, Socks, foule Stockings, grease Naphtha, that (Master Brown) there was the tankell compound of villains smell, that ever offended no flire.

Ford. And how long lay you there?

Fal. Nay, you shall here (Master Brown) what I have suffered, to bring this woman to stille, for your good: Being thus burnt in the Basket, a couple of Ford's knaves, his Hiddes; were call'd forth by their Mis firs, to carry mee in the name of foule Cloathes to Dutch-tote: they took me on their shoulders; met the jealous knave their Master-in-the-doore; who ask'd them once or twice what they had in their Bal-ket? I quack'd for: fear lest the Lunaticke Knave would have search d it: but Fate (ordering he should be a Cuckold): held his hand; well, on went he, for a search, and away went I, for foule Cloathes; but make the sequel (Master Brown) I suffered the pangs of three generall deaths: First, an insupportable fright, not to be detected with a fealous Bellsweather:
Next to be compar'd like a good Bilbo in the circumference of a Pecke, hilt to point, heele to head. And then take hops in like a strong distillation with Bunking Cloathes, that frett in their owne grease:
thinke of that, a man of my Kidney; think of that,
that am as sublichest heath as butter; a man of conmial distillation, and thaw: it was a miracle to finge, suffocation. And in the height of this Bath (when I was more then half feed in grease like a Dutch-diff) to be thrown into the Thames, and could, glowing-hot, in that finge like a Hori-fio, thinke of that; buffeting hard; thinke of that (Master Brown).

Ford. In good fadnife Sir, I am sorry, that for my fake you have sufferd all this. My fuite then is desperate: You'll under take her no more?

Fal. Master Brown: I will be thrown into Enemy, as I have beene into Thames: ere I will leave her thus; her Husband is this morning gone a Birding: I have received from her another ambaffe of meet-in; to night eight and nine is the hour (Master Brown).

Ford. 'Tis past eight already Sir.

Fal. Is't? I will then addreffe mee to my appointment: Come to mee at your conuenient leasure, and you shall know how I speeded: and the conclution shall be crowned with your enjoying her; adieu: you shall have her (Master Brown) Master Brown, you shall catchold Ford.

Ford. Humnrs? Is this a vision? Is this a dream? doe I sleepe? Master Ford awake, awake Master Ford: ther's a hole made in your beft costume (Master Ford) that's to be married; this to have Lyinnen, and Back-baskets: Well, I will proclaime my felle what I am:
I will now take the Leacher: hee is at my house: hee cannot fcape me; 'tis impoffible hee fhould: hee cannot crepe into a half-penny purle, nor into a Pepper-Boat: But leaft the Dwil that guides him, foild side him, I will search impoffible places: though what arc'}m, I cannot accurre; yet to be what I would not, fhill not make me tame: If I have horfes, to make one mad, let the proverbe goe with me, ille be hone-mad.

Fal. Mist. Ford, Your sorrow hath eaten vp my suffrance; I fee you are obstinacious in your lye, and I proffer requity to a hairies breadth, not onely Mist. Ford, in the simple office of lye, but in all the accoutrement, complement, and ceremony of it: But are you sure of your husband now?

Mist. Ford, Hee's a binding (sweet Sir John.)

Mist. Ford, Step into the chamber, Sir John.

Mist. Page. How now (sweete heart) whole at home besides your selfe?

Mist. Ford, Why none but mine owne people.

Mist. Page. Indeed.

Mist. Ford, No certaynly: Speake louder.

Mist. Page, Truly, I am so glad you have no body here.

Fal. Mist. Ford, Why?

Mist. Page, way woman, your husband is in his olde lyes against he to yeeter. Flyer with my husband, to sides against all married mankind: to curs every one daughters, of what complexion toover; and do buttettes himselfe on the for-head: crying pearce-pearce, pearce-out, that any madnest I ever yet beheld, seem'd but tame-nesse, cuality, and patience to this his dissembler he is in now: I am glad the fat knight is not here.

Mist. Ford, Why, do's he talk of him?

Mist. Page, Of none but him, and sweare he was caried out the last time hee search'd for him, in a Basket: Procel's to my husband he is now here, & hath drawne him and the rest of their company from their sport, to make another experiment of his tulipion: But I am glad the Knight is not here noe shall fee his owne footere.

Mist. Ford, How where is he Mistres Page?

Mist. Ford, Harly, all night end: he will be here anon.

Mist. Ford, I am vsed to the Knight is here.

Mist. Page, Why then you are veryly tham'd & hee's but a dead man? What a woman are you? Away, with this away with him: Better thrane, then wicher.

Mist. Ford, Which way should he go? How should I bellow him: Shall I put him into the basket again?

Fal. No, lile come no more to the basket.

Mist. Page, Also: three of Mist. Ford brothers watch the doore with Pilots, that none shall issue out: other wise you might flie away ere hee came: But what make you here?

Fal. What shall I do? lle creepe vp into the chimney.

Mist. Ford, There they alwayes vie to discharge their Birding-pieces: creepe into the Kill-hole.

Fal. Where is it?

Mist. Ford, He will seeke there on my word: Nay ther Prefreen, Chief, Trunk, Wail, but he hath an ablack for the remembrance of such places, and goe to them by his Note: There is no hiding you in the house.

Fal. lle go out then.

Mist. Ford, If you goe out in your owne fesemblance, you die Sir John, unlesse you go out disguis'd.

Mist. Ford, How might we disguise him?

Mist. Page, As the day I know not, there is no woman growne bigge enough for him: other wise he might put out, as a mugger, and a ketchifie, and fo escape.

Fal. Good master, devise something: any extreme, rather then a mischife.

Mist. Ford, My Maids Aunt the fat woman of Brainford, has a growne above.

Mist. Page, On my word it will serve him: thees as big as he is: and there's her thrum'd hat, and her mugger too: run vp Sir John.

Mist. Ford. Go, goo, sweet Sir John: Mistres Page and I will looke some linnen for your head.

Mist. Page. Quecke, quecke, we'll come dere you first put on the gowne the while.

Mist. Ford, I would my husband would mee him in this shape: he cannot abide the old woman of Brainford he sweare his a witch, forbad her my house, and hath threatened to beate her.

Mist. Page, Heauen guide him to his husbands cudgel: and the diueld guide his cudgel afterwards.

Mist. Ford, But is my husband coming?

Mist. Page, I in good fadness he is, and talkes of the basket too, howsoever he hath had intelligence.

Mist. Ford, We'll try that: for lle appoint my men to carry the basket against, to mee him at the door with it, as they did last time.

Mist. Page, Nay, but hee be here pretty lest's go drebbe him like the witch of Brainford.

Mist. Ford, lle first direct mee my men, what they shall doe with the basket: Goe vp, lle bring linnen for him straight.

Mist. Page, Hang him dishonest Varlet, We cannot misufe enough:

We'll leave a prooie by that which we will doo,

Wifes may be merci, and yet honest too:

We do not ały that often, left, and laugh,

This old but true, Stilt Swine eats all the draugh.

Mist. Ford, Go Sirs, take the basket againe on your shoulders: your Maiter is hard at doore: if thee bid you set it downe, obey him quickly, dispatch.

Page. Why, this paffes. M. Ford: you are not to goe look any longer, you muft be gone now.

Enact. Why, this is Lunatrick: this is mad, as a mad dogge.

Skull. Indeed M. Ford, this is not well indeed.

Ford. So I say too Sir, come hither Miftiris Ford, Miftiris Ford, the honest woman, the modestwife, the veritu-cous creature, that hath the idleous foole to her husband;
I suspect without caufe (Miftiris) do I?

Mift. Ford. Heauen be your vitonne you doe, if you suspect me in any dishonesty.

Ford. Well said Brazen-face, hold it out: Come forth forth.

Page. This pasles.

Mift. Ford. Are you not affhamed, let the cloths alone,
Ford. I shall finde you anon.

Enact. 'Tis unreasonoble; will you take vp your wives clothes? Come, away.

Ford. Emptie the basket I say.

M. Ford. Why man, why?

Ford. Mifter Page, as I am a man, there was one conyays out of my houfe yearday in this basket: why may not he be there againe, in my houfe I am sure he is;
my Intelligence is true, my jealousie is reasonable, pluck me out all the linnen.

Seif. Ford. If you find a man there, he shall dye a Fieas debth.

Page. Heer's no man.

Skull. By my fideliety this is not well Mr. Ford: This wronges you.

Enact. Mr. Ford, you must praty, and not follow the imaginations of your owne heart: this is jealousies.

Ford. Well, hee's not here; I feke for.

Page. No, nor no where else but in your braine.

Ford. Help to search my house this one time? I find not what I feke, thew no colour for my extremity: Let me for euer be your Table-fport: Let them say of me, as jealous as Ford, that search'd a hollow Wall-nut for his wifes Leman. Satisfie me once more, once more ferch with me.

M. Ford. What hoa (Miftris Page) come you and the old woman downe: my husband will come into the Chamber.

Ford. Old woman? what old woman that?

M. Ford. Why it is my maids Aunt of Brainford.

Ford. A witch, a Queane, an olde cowzening queane:
Haue I not forbid her my houfe? She comes of errands do's the? We are simple men, wee doe not know what's brought to paffe under the profession of Fortune-telling.
She workes by Charmes, by Spela, by th'Figure, & such dawny as this, is beyond our Element: wee know nothing. Come downe you Witch, you Hagge you, come downe I say.

Mift. Ford. Nay, good sweet husband, good Gentlemen, let him strike the old woman.

Mift. Page. Come mother Prat, Come give me your hand.

Ford. Ile Prat her: Out of my doore, you Witch, you Ragge, you Baggage, you Poulce, you Runmon, out, our: Ile conjure you, Ile fortune-tell you.

Mift. Page. Are you not asshamed?

I think you haue kill'd the poore woman.

Mift. Ford. Nay he will doe it, 'tis a goodly credite for you.

Ford. Hang her witch.

Enact. By yes and no, I think the o'man is a witch in-deede: I like not when a o'man has a great peard, I pie a great peard under his muffler.

Ford. Will you follow Gentlemen, I beftech you follow: see but the issue of my jealousie: If I cry out thus upon no trute, never trust me when I open againe.

Page. Let's obeie his humour a little further:

Come Gentlemen.

Mift. Page. Trust me he beate him most pitifullly

Mift. Ford. Nay by th'Mafe that he did not: he beate him most unpitifullly, me thought.

Mift. Page. He have the endig'll hallow'd, and hung over the Altar, it hath done meritorious seruice,

Mift. Ford. What think you? May we with the warrant of woman-hood, and the witnesse of a good confi-pence, pursu him with any further seruence?

M. Page. The spirit of wamonnesse is sure feard out of him, if the diuell have him not in fee-simple, with fine and recouery, he will never (I thinke) in the way of waffe, attempt vs againe.

Mift. Ford. Shall we tell our husbands how wee haue feru'd him?

Mift. Page. Yes, by all meanes: if he but to scrape the figures out of your husbands brainen: if they can find in their hearts, the poore vnwertuous Sir Knight shall be any further afflicted, wee two will still bee the ministers.

Mift. Ford. Ile warrant, they'll have him publique ly shan'd, and me thinke there would be no period to the leaff,should he not be publike shan'd.

Mift. Page. Come, to the Forge with it, then shape it:
I would not have things soole.

Bar. Sir, the Germane defires to have three of your horses: the Duke himselfe will be to morrow at Court, and they are going to meet him.

Hoft. What Duke should that be comes so secretly?
I heare not of him in the Court: let mee speake with the Gentlemen, they speake English?

Bar. I Sir, Ie call him to you.

Hoft. They shall have my horses, but Ie make them pay: Ie fance them, they have had my horses a week at command: I haue turn'd away my other guests, they must come off, Ie fawce them, come.

Enter Page, Ford, Miftiris Page, Miftiris Ford, and Enact.

Enact. 'Tis one of the beft deirections of a o'man as e-cuer I did looke upon.

Page. And did he fend you both these Letters at an instantial?

Mift. Page. Within a quarter of an houre.

Ford. Pardon me (wife) henceforth do what I wilt: I rather will fuppet the Sunne with gold,

Then thee with wamonnesse: Now doth thy honor stand

(1)
The Merry Wives of Windsor.

(in him that was of late an Heretike)
As firm as faith.
Page. 'Tis well, 'tis well, no more:
Be not as extremist in demolition, as in offence,
but let our plot go forward: Let our wiles
Yet once again (to make vs publike sport)
Appoint a meeting with this old fat-fellow,
Where we may take him, and disgrace him for it.
Ford. There is no better way then that they spoke of.
Page. How to fend him word they'll meete him in the Parke at midnight? Fie, fie, he'll never come.
Em. You say he has bin throwne in the Rivers: and has bin greeuously peacen, as an old o'eman: I thee thinks there should be terror in him, that he should not come:
Me-thinks his felf is punifd, hee shal have no de-

Page. So think I too.
M. Ford. Deuife but how you'l fave him whe he comes,
And let vs two deuife to bring him thecher.
Miff. Page. There is an old tale goes, that Herne the Hunter (sometimes a keeper here in Windsor Forest)
Doth all the winter time, at full midnight
Walk round about an Oak, with great rag'd-hornes,
And there he blasts the tree, and takes the fable,
And make melch-kinde yeeld blood, and makes a chaine
In a most hideous and dreadful manner.
You have heard of fuch a Spirit, and well you know
The superflitious idle-headed-Eld
Receive'd, and did deluere to our age
This tale of Herne the Hunter, for a truth.
Page. Why yet there want not me no fatee
In deepne of night to walk by this Herne's Oak:
But what of this?
Miff. Ford. Marry this is our deuife,
That Falaffe at that Oak shal meete with vs.
Page. Well, let it not be doubted but he'll come,
And in this flame, when you haue brought him thecher,
What shal be done with him? What is your plot?
Miff. Page. That likewife haue we thought upon: & thus:
Near Page (my daughter) and my little Sone,
And three or foure more of their growth, we'll drifte
Like Vrchia, Ouphes, and Fairies, green and white,
With rounds of wasen Tapers on their heads,
And rattles in their hands: upon a fudden,
As Falaffe, fife, and I, are newly met,
Let them from forth a faw-pit tw at once
With fome diffufed fong: Upon their fight
Wetwo, in great amazement fhe'll flye:
Then let them all encircle him about,
And Fairy-like to pinch the vncaul Knight
And jakie him why that hour of Fairy Renell,
In their feated pathes, he dares to tread
In fpace propleane.
Ford. And till he tell the truth,
Let the fuppoft Fairies pinch him, found,
And burne him with their Tapers.
Miff. Page. The truth being knowne,
We'll all pricket our felves; dif-horne the fpirit,
And mocke him home to Windsor.
Ford. The children muff
But this will do to this, or 'they'inn't dones, Em. I will teach the children their behauiours: and I will be like a Locke-an-Apes also, to burne the Knight with my Taber.
Ford. That will be excellent,
He goe buy them vizards.

Miff. Page. My Nan shall be the Queene of all the Fairies, fainfly attired in a robe of white.
Page. That fille will I go buy, and in that time Shall M.Slender (bequea my New away,
And marry her at Eaton: go, fende to Falaffe (straight)!
Ford. Nay, Ile to him againe in name of Broomes,
He'll tell me all his purpofe sure hee'lo come.
Miff. Page. Fear not you that: Go get vs properties
And tricking for our Fayries.
Em. Let vs about it,
It is admirable pleasures, and ferre honest nhauteries.
Send quickly to Sir John, to know his minde
Lete to the Doctor, he hath my good will,
And none but he to marry with New Page:
That Slender (though well landed) is an Idiot:
And he, my husband beft of all affects:
The Doctor is well monied, and his friends
Potent at Court: he, none but he shall haue her,
Though twenty thousand worthier come to ceruche.

Scena Quinta.

Enter Hoff, Simle, Falaffe, Bardolfe, Emant, Caus, Quickly.

Hoff. What wouldft thou haue? (Boore) what? (thick skin) speaks, breahte, difcante: breathe, short quicker, snap.
Simp. Marry Sir, I come to speake with Sir John Fal-affe from M. Slender.
Hoff. There's his Chamber, his Houfe, his Castle, his flanding-bed and truckle-bed: this painted about with the flory of the Prodigall, frefh and new go, knock and call: hee'll speake like an Anthroplopogamin into thee: Knocke I fay.
Simp. There's an olde woman, a fat woman gone vp into his chamber: Ile be fo bold as fay Sir till she come downes; I come to speake with her unde.
Hoff. Ha a fat woman? The Knight may be robb'd:
Ile call, Bully-Knight, Bully Sir John: speake fromy Lungs Military: Art thou there? It is thine Hoff, thine Ephebean calls.
Fal. How now, mine Hoff?
Hoff. Here's a Bohemian: Tartar tories the comming downe of thye fat-woman: Lette her defend (Bully) let her defend: my Chambers are honourable: Fie, prufy-Fie.
Fal. There was (mine Hoff) an old fat-woman even now with me, but she's gone.
Simp. Pray you Sir, was't not the Wife-woman of Brainford?
Fal. I marry was't (Mufiel-fnell) what would you with her?
Simp. My Mafter (Sir) my mafter Slender, fent to her feeing her go thorough the streets, to know (Sir) whether one Nm (Sir) that beguil'd him of a chaine, had the chaine, or no.
Fal. I speake with the old woman about it.
Simp. And what fayes he, I pray Sir?
Fal. Marry fhee fayes, that the very fame man that beguil'd Mafter Slender of his Chaine, cozen'd him of it.
Simp. I would I could have spoken with the Woman her selfe. I had other things to have spoken with her, too, from him.

Fal. What are they? Let vs know.

Hoft. I come quicker.

Fal. I may not conceale them (Sir.)

Hoft. Conceale them, or thou diu't.

Sim. Why sir, they were nothing but about Missiris

Page, to know if it were my Masters fortune to have her, or no.

Fal. 'Tis, 'tis his fortune.

Sim. What Sir?

Fal. To have her, or no: goe, say the woman told me.

Sim. May I be bold to say to Sir?

Fal. I see she who more bold.

Sim. I thank your worship: I shall make my Matter ghve these thyngs.

Hoft. Thou art clearly: thou art clearly (Sir John) was there a woman with thee?

Fal. I that there was (mine Host) one that hath caught me more wit, than ever I learn'd before in my life: and I paid nothing for it neither, but was paid for my learning.

Bar. Out alas (Sir) cozenage: meere cozenage.

Hoft. Where be my horses? speake well of them varetto.

Bar. Run away with the cozeners: for so foone as I came beyond Eaton, they threw me off, from behinde one of them, in a slough of myre; and set spurrees, and away: like three Germane-duels: three Doler Fauflafers.

Hoft. They are gone but to meet the Duke (villaine) do not say they defled: Germans are honest men.

Sim. Where is mine Host?

Hoft. What is the matter Sir?

Evan. I have a care of your entertainments: there is a friend of mine come to Towne, tells mee there is three, Coren-Iermans, that has cozened all the Host of Reading, of Maidenhead; of Cole-brooke, of horses and money: I tell you for good well (looke you) you are wife, and full of gibes, and vluoting-stocks: and 'tis not cozenement you should be cozened: Fare you well.

Cat. Ver is mine Host de lacerrre?

Host. Here (Mather Dollar) in perplexitie, and doubful ly.

Cat. I cannot tell vse it dat: but it is tell a me, dat you make grand preparation for a Ducle de lannimie: by my troth: der is no Duke that the Courtis know, to come: I tell you for good will: adieu.

Hoft. Huy and cry, (villaine) goe: affliit me Knight, I am vn-done: fly: run, huy, and cry (villaine) I am vndone.

Fal. I would all the world might be cozened, for I have beene cozened and beaten too: if it should come to the care of the Court, how I have beene transformed; and how my transformation hath bene wash'd, and cudged, they would melt mee out of my fat drop by drop, and liquor Firestems-boots with me: I warrant they would whip me with their fine wits, till I were as trel-faine as a dride-pearce: I neuer prospred, for I forsooke my selfe at Primero: well, if my windes were but long enough! I would repent: Now? Whence come
you?

Qui. From the two parties forsooth.

Fal. The Diewell take one partie, and his Dam the other: and so they shall be both befolowed: I have fulsent'd more for their takes: more than the villanous incostancy of my more disputation is able to bear.

Qui. And have not tipp (sir?) Yes! I warrant; specious one of them; Missiris Page (good heart) is beaten
blacke and blew, that you cannot see a white spot about her.

Fal. What tell'st thou me of blacke, and blew? I was beaten my felle into all the colours of the Rainbow: and I was like to be apprehended for the Witch of Brainford, but that my admirable dexterity of wit, my counterfeiting the action of an old woman deliuer'd me: the house Comitable had set me till Stocks, th'com-mon Stocks, for a Wrenchfell.

Qua. Sir; let me speake with you in your Chamber, you shall heare how things goe, and (I warrant) to your content; here is a Letter will say somewhat: (good-hearts) what a-doe here is to bring you together? Sure, one of you do's not torne heauen well, that you are so cropp'd.

Fal. Come vp into my Chamber.

Scene Sixth.

Enter Fenton, Host.

Hoft. Mafter Fenton, talk not to mee, my minde is heavy: I will gue over all.

Fen. Yet heare me speake: affliit me in my purpose,
And (as I am a gentleman) ile gue thee
A hundred pound in gold, more then thy softe.

Hoft. I will heare you (Mather Fenton) and I will (at the least) keep you weeke.

Fen. From time to time, I have acquainted you
With the deare loute I heare to faire Anne Page,
Who, mutually, hath anfwer'd my affection,
(So faire forth, as her selfe might be her chooser)
Euen to my wish: I haue a letter from her
Of such contents, as you will wonder at;
The mirth whereof, so laied with my matter,
That neither (fingly) can be manifester
Without the shew of both: far fallaffe
Hath a great Scene; she image of the left Ile show you here at large (harke good mine Host?)
To night at Hermes-Oly, juft twist: polce and one,
Must my sweet Nan present the Faerie-Queene;
The purpose why, is here: in which disguise
VWhile other Iefts are some ranks on foote,
Her father hath commanded her to flip
Away with Slander, and with him, at Eaton
Immediately to Marry: She hath confered: Now Sir,
Her Mother, (even strong against that match
And form for Doctor Cune) hath appointed
That he shall likewise shuffe her away,
While other Iefts are tacking of their mindes,
And at the Donny, where a Chief attends Strait marry her: to this her Mothers plot
She seemingly obediently) likewise hath
Made promis to the Dollar: Now, thus it reff,
Her Father meane she shall be all in white;
And in that habit, when Slander sees his time
To take her by the hand, and bid her goe,
She shall goo with him: her Mother hath intende

For they must all be mask'd, and vizarded)

Enter Falstaff, Missis Page, Missis Ford, Evans. Anne Page, Fairies, Page, Ford, Quickly, Slender, Fenstt, Cais, Fuller.

Fal. The Windsor-bell hath broke twice: the Minute draws on now: the hot-blooded Gods affix me: Remember Louse, thou wast but a Ball for thy Europa, Louse set on thy homys. One overfull Louse, that in some respects makes a Beast a Man: in some other, a Man a beast. You were also (Jupiter) a Swan, for the louse of Leda: Omnipotent men? For me, I am heere a Windsor Staggre, and the fastest (I thynke) i th forest. Send me a coole tust-tume (loue) or who can blame me to pifie my Tallow? Who comes heere my Doe?

M.Ford. Sir Iobt! Art thou there (my Deere?)
M.My male-Deere.
Fal. My Doe, with the blacke Scut? Let the skie raise Portatoes: let it thunde, to the tume of Greeneflueces, haile-kissing Comfits, and how Eringoes: Let there come a tempeft of prouocation, I will thelfer mee heere.
M.Ford. Mrithins Page is come with me (tweat hart.)
Fal. Diside me like a brdBucke, eacH a Haunch:
I will keep my fides to my selfe, my sowders for the fellow of this walke: and my horses I boogheart my hursds. Am I a Woodman, ha? Speake I like Herne the Hunter? Why, now is Capid a child of confidence, he makes refolution. As I a true spirt, welcome,
M.Page. Alas, what waits?
M.Ford. Heauen forgive our finnes,
Fal. What shoulde this be?
Fal. I think the dumel will not have me damn’d,
Least the oyle that’s in me should set fire on fire;
He would never else croffe me thus.
Enter Fairies.
Qu. Fairies blacke, gray, green, and white,
You Moone thone thrullers, and plates of night,
You Orphan heires of fixde flettyng,
Attend your office, and your quailty.
Crier Hob-goblyn, make the Fairy Oyes.
Pife. Elyes, lift your names: Silence you strie toys.
Cricker, to Windsor-chinnies that you leape;
Where fires thou fin’d’t vnra’k’d, and heerth vnwept,
There pinch the Maids as blew as Bill-berry,
Our radiant Queene, hates Sluts, and Shuttery.
Fal. They are Fairies,he that speaks to them shall die,
He winke,and cough: No man their works must eie.
Qu. What’s Tede? Go you, and where you find a maid
That ere the flepee has thriste her prayers said,
Rafpe vp the Orans of her fantasie,
Sleepe the as found as carelesse infancte,
But tho’le as flepee, and thynke not on their fins,
Pinch them armes, legs, backes,shoulders, fides, & thins.
Qu. About, about;
Search Windsor Castle (Elses) within, and out.
Strew good lucke (Ouphes) on every facted roome,
That it may fland till the perpetuall doome,
In flate as wholesome, as in flate ’tis fit,
Worthy the Owner, and the Owner it.
The feterall Chaires of Order, looke you scowre
With myce of Balm; and every precious fower,
Each faire Infalmit, Coate, and feu’rall Creff,
With loyall Bizzon, euermore be bled.
And Nightly-meadow-Fairies, looke you sing
Like to the Girites-Compaie, in a ring,
The’prelude that heere: Greene let it be,
Mote fereft-fresh then all the Field to fee:
And, Howe Seet Qui Mal-y-Princes, write
In Emeral’d-tusses, Flowres purple, blew, and white,
Like Sapphire-pearle, and rich embrodierie,
Buckled below faire Knight-hoods bending knee;
Fairies wfe Flowres for their charactery.
Away, difperre: But till ‘tis one a clocke,
Our Dance of Cuffome, round about the Oke
Of Herne the Hunter, let us not forget.
(lect.
Fal. Heauen defend me from that Wilds Fairy,
Leath he transforms me to a peece of Cheefe, Pife. Vilde worme, thou wart ore-looke’d even in thy birth.
Qu. With Triall-fire touch me his finger end:
If he be chaffe, the flame will backe defend
And turne him to no paine: but if he flart,
It is the fleeth of a corrupted hart.
Pife. A triall, come,
Eua. Come, will this wood take fire?
Fal. Oh, oh, oh.
Qu. Corrupt, corrupt, and tinted in defire,
About him (Fairies) fing a forefull rime,
And as you trip, till pinch him to your time.

The Song.
Fie on sunnefullphantaffe: Fie on Luft, and Luxuries;
 Luft is no but a bloody fire, kindled with emaciate desire,
Fed in hearts whose flames aspire,
As thoughts do blow them higher and higher.
Pinch him (Fairies) mutuall: Pinch him for love vnlaice,
Pinch him, and borne him, and turne him about,
Till Candle, & Star-light, & Moones fines be one.

Page. Nay do not fye, I thinke we haue watcht you now:
Vill none but Herne the Hunter fete your turne?
M.Ford. I praye you come, hold vp the left no higher.
Now (good Sir Iobt) how like you Windsor wives?
See you thefe husband? Do not thefe faire yoakes
Become the forest better then the Towne?
Ford. Now Sir, whole a Cuckold now?
M.Broune, Fairhoffs a Knawe, a Cuckoldly knawe,
Here he his horns Mafter Broune:
And Mafter Broune, he hath enjoyed nothing of.
Ford, but his Buck-basket, his cudgel, and twenty pounds of money, which must be paid to Mr. Broune, his horses are arrested for it, Mr. Broune.
M.Ford. Sir Iobt, we have had ill lucke: wee could never meete: I will never take you for my Lout against, but I will always count you my Deere.
Fal. I do begin to perceive that I am made an Afse.
Page. I, and an Ox too: both the proofes are extant.
Fal. And these are not Fairies:
I was three of foure times in the thought they were not Fairies, and yet the guiltineffe of my minde, the loade furtize of my powers, droue the groffenesse of the fopper ity into a receiued belief, in delight of the teeth of al time and reason, that they were Fairies. See now how wit may be made a Lacke-a-Lent, when he is of full importance.
Eua. Sir Iobt Falhoffs, fete Got, and leave your defires, and Fairies will not pinne you.
Ford. VWell said Fairy Kysg, Eua. And leave you your isdlouzies too, I pray
you.
The Merry Wives of Windsor.

Ford. I will never mistrust my wife againe, till thou art able to woo her in good English.

Fal. Have I laid my braine in the Sun, and dri'd it, that it wants matter to prevent to groffe ore-reaching as this? Am I ridd from a Welch Gost? 0 se, shall have a Coxeymboll of Prize? 'Tis time I were choode with a piece of toasted Cheefe.

En. Stelle is not good to guise pater; your belly is al pater.

Fal. Stelle, and Putter? Have I lli'd to hand at the taut of one that makes Fritters of English? This is enough to be the decay of luff and late-walking through the Realme.

Mist. Page. Why Sir John, do you thinke though wee would have thrull venture out of our hearts by the head and shoulders, and have guine our fulles with us, &amp; gone to hell, that euer the devil could have made you our delight?

Ford. What, a hodge-pudding? A bag of flax?

Page. Old, cold, witch'd, and of intolerable en- tralies?

Ford. And one that is as flanderous as Satan?

Page. And as poore as lob?

Ford. And as wicked as his wife?

Enam. And given to Fornications, and to Tavernes, and Sacke, and Wine, and Methembis, and to drinking and swareings, and laughings? Pribles and prables?

Fal. Well I am your Thame: you haue the flare of me, Lam deiceted: I am not able to answere the Welch Flamnell, Ignorance it selfe is a plummet to me, vie me as you will.

Ford. Marry Sir, we'll bring you to Windsor to one Mr Brome, that you haue cozen'd of money, to whom you should have bin a Pander: over and abone that you haue suffier'd, I thinke, to repay that money will be a biting afflicthin.

Page. Yet be cheerfull Knight: thau hadt est a poffet to night a my house, where I will define thee to laugh at my wife, that now laughes at thee: tell her Mr Slender hath married her daughter.

Mist. Page. Doctors doubt this?

If Anne Page be my daughter, she is (by this) Docteur Cains wife.

Stelm. Whos hee, hohe, Father Page?

Page. Sonne? How now? How now Sonne, Hauet you dispaiche'd?

Stelm. Dispaiche'd? Ile make the beet in Glottershire know on't: would I were hang'd la, eche.

Stelm. I came yonder at Elton to marry Mistris Anne Page, and she's agreed with a boy. If it had not been this Church, I would have hung'd him, or be hauet hauet hauet hauet hym. If I did not thinke it had ben Anne Page, would I might neuer thirde, and 'tis a Post-masters Boy.

Page. Upon my life then, you tooke the wrong.

Stelm. What need ye tell me that? I think for, when I tooke a Boy for a Girle: If I had bene married to him (for all hauet was in womans apparel) I would not haue had him.

Page. Why this is your owne folly, Did not I tell you how you should know my daughter, By her garments?

Stelm. I went to her in green, and cried Mum, and the crise bidding, as Anne and I had appointed, and yet it was not Anne, but a Post-masters boy.

Mist. Page. Good George be not angry, I knew of your purpose: turn'd my daughter into white, and indeed this is now with the Doctor at the Deanerie, and there married.

Cai. Ver is Mistris Page: by gar I am cozened, I haue married an Cartoon, a boy; oon peart, by gar. A boy, it is not Anne Page, by gar, I am cozened.

Mist. Page. Why did you take her in white?

Cai. I bee gar, and 'tis a boy: be gar, It raie all Windsor.

Ford. This is strange: Who hath got the right Anne?

Page. My heart mitigues me, here comes Mr Fenton.

How now Mr Fenton?

Anne. Pardon good father, good my mother pardon

Page. Now Mistris: How chance you went not with Mr Slender?

Mist. Page. Why went you not with Mr Doctor, madam?

Fen. You do amaze her: hear the truth of it, You would haue married her most shamefully, Where there was no proportion held in louse: The truthis, the false and I (long fince contracted) Are now to sure that nothing can dissuave vs: The offence is holy, that the hath committed, And that deces lootes the name of craft, Of disobedience, or vurdacious rule, Since therein the death extaste and flun.

A thousand and irregulous curved hours

Which forced marriage would have brought upon her,

Ford. Stand not amaz'd, here is no remedy:

In Loue, the heuens themselves do guide the hate,

Money buyes Lands, and wines are told by face.

Fal. I am glau, though you have tane a special stand to strike at me, that your Arrow hath glaued.

Page. Well, what remedy? Fenton, heauen gheue thee joy, what cannot be echew'd, must be embrac'd.

Fal. When night-dogges run, all forts of Deere are chac'd.

Mist. Page. Well, I will make no further: Mr Fenton, Heauen gheue you many, many merry dayses:

Good husband, let vs every one go home,

And laugh this sport oere by a Countrie fire,

Fen. and all.

Ford. Let it be so (Sir John)

To Matter Bronze, you yet shall hold your word,

For he, to night, shall lie with Mistris Ford:

There is a kinde of Character in thy life,
That to th'ofter, doth thy history
Fully unfold: Thy selfe, and thy belongings
Are not thine owne fo proper, as to waste
Thy selfe upon thy vertues: they on thee;
Heauen doth with vs, as we, with Torches doe,
Not light them for themselves: For if our vertues
Did not go forth of vs, twice all alike
As if we had them not; Spirits are not finely touch'd,
But to fine ifues: nor nature never lends
The smallest scruple of her excellence,
But like a thriftif goddesse, she determines
Her felicest glory of a creditor,
Both thanks, and vfe; but I do beaide my speech.

Our halfe from hence is of so quickes condition,
That it prefers it selfe, and leues vnqueslion'd
Matters of needfull value: We shall write to you
As time, and our concernings shall importune,
How it goes with vs, and doe looke to know
What doth befall you here. So fare you well:
To th' hopefull execution doe I leave you,
Of your Commission,
Ang. Yet giue leasue (my Lord):-
I list we may bring you something on the way.
Duke. My haff may not admit it,
Nor neede you (on mine on) not have to doe
With any scruple: your scope is as mine owne,
So to enforce, or quallifie the Laws
As to your soule femmes good: giue me your band,
He priously away: I loue the people,
But doe not like to itage me to their eyes:
Though it doe well, I doe not reliisf well
Their lowd applause, and Aues vehement:
Nor doe I thinke the man of safe direction
That doe's affect it. Once more fare you well,
Ang. The heauen giue safety to your purpose.
Esf. Lead forth, and bring you backe in happiness.
Exit.
Duke. I thank you, fare you well,
Esf. I shall desire you, Sir, to giue me leave
To have free speech with you; and it concernes me
To looke into the bottome of my place:
A powre I haue, but of what strength and nature,
I am not yet instructes.
Ang. 'Tis so with me: Let vs with draw together,
And we may foone our satisfacion have Touching that point.
Esf. Ile wait vpon your honor.

Scena Secunda.

Enter Lucius, and two other Gentlemen.

Lucius. If the Duke, with the other Dukes, come not to composition with the King of Hungary, why then all the Dukes fall upon the King, whom

1. Gent. Heaven grant his peace, but not the King of Hungary.

Lucius. Thou conclud'st like the Sanctionious Pirate, that went to rescue the ten Commandements, but scrap'd one out of the Table.

1. Gent. Thou shalt not steal?

Lucius. I, that he raz'd?

1. Gent. Why? 'twas a commandement, to command the Captain and all the rest from their functions: they put forth to feele: There's not a Soul'dier of all, that in the thanksgiving before meat, doth callish the petition well, that praiseth for peace.

2. Gent. I never heard any Soul'dier dislike it.

Lucius. I believe thee: for I think thou wast not where Grace was said.

2. Gent. No? a dozen times at least.

1. Gent. What? in meeter?

Lucius. In my proportion, or in any language.

1. Gent. I think, or in any Religion.

Lucius. I, why not? Grace's Grace, despight of all controversy: as for example: Thou think'st art a wicked villain, despight of all Grace.

1. Gent. Well: there went but a pair of shecres between us.

Lucius. I grant: as there may betweene the Lifts, and the Veluet. Thou art the Lift.

1. Gent. And thou the Veluet: thou art good veluet: thou'rt a three-ply-piece I warrante thee: I had as lirre be a Lyth of an English Kersey, as be pil'd, as thou art pil'd, for a French Veluet. Do I speakfe feelingly now?

Lucius. I think thou don't: and indeed with most painfull feeling of thy speech: I will, out of charity own confequence, learn to begin thy health; but, whilst I have not to drink after thee.

1. Gent. I think I have done my selfe wrong, have I not?

2. Gent. Yes: thou hast him: whether thou art tainted, or free.

Enter Bawd.

Lucius. Behold, behold, where Madam Mitigation comes. I hear purchas'd as many diseases under her Roofe,

As to come

2. Gent. To what I pray?

Lucius. Judge.

2. Gent. To three thousand Dollours a yeare.

1. Gent. And more.

Lucius. A French crown, and more.

1. Gent. Thou art always figuring diseases in me, but thou art full of error, I am found.

Lucius. Nay, not (as one would say) healthy: but so found, as things that are hollow; thy bones are hollow; Impiety has made a feast of thee.

1. Gent. How now, which of your hips has the most profound Catarca?

Bawd. Well, well: there's one yonder arrested, and carried to prison, was but a hundred thousand of you all.

2. Gent. Who's that I pray?

Bawd. Mandy Sir, that's Claudius, Signior Claudius.
Measure for Measure.

Like rats that rayn downe their proper Bane,
A thirsty eilill, and when we drinke, we die.

Luc. If I could speake so wifely ynder an arret, I would bend for certaine of my Creditors; and yet, to say the truth, I had as lief haue the foppery of freedome, as the mortallity of imprisonment: what's thy offence, G"indo?

Cia. What (but to speake of) would offend againe.

Luc. What, is't murder?

Cia. No.

Luc. Lecherie?

Cia. Call it fo.

Pro. Away, Sir, you must goo.

Cia. One word, good friend:

Lucio, a word with you.

Luc. A hundred!

If they'll doe you any good: Is Lecherie to look'd after?

Cia. Thus stands it with me: upon a true contract
I got possession of Intelet bed,
You know the Lady, she is faft my wife,
Sure that we doe the denunciation lacke
Of outward order. This we came not to,
Onely for propragion of a Dowre
Remaining in the Cofer of her friends,
From whom we thought it meet to hide our Lone Till Time had made them for vs. But it chances
The felow of our mutt mutual entertainment
With Character too groffe, is writ on Intelet.

Luc. With child, perhaps?

Cia. Unhappily, even so.

And the new Deputie, now for the Duke,
Whether it be the fault and glimpe of newnes,
Or whether that the body publique, be
A horfe whereon the Governour doth ride,
Who now in the Seate, that it may know
He can command; lets it first feel the fpur
Whether the Turanny be in his place,
Or in his Eminence that fills it vp
I stagger in: But this new Governour
Awakes me all the inrolled penalties
Which haue (like vn-crow'd d'Armour) hung by th'wall
So long, that nineteen Zodiacks have gone round,
And none of them beene wonted; and for a name
Now puts the drowzie and neglected Act
Firesliy on me 'tis surely for a name.

Luc. I warrant it: And th'horfe flonds so tickle on th'you, that a milke-maid if she be in loue, may fight it off: Send after the Duke, and appeale to him.

Cia. I have done fo, but hee's not to be found.

I prethee (Lucio) doe me this kinde service:
This day, my fitter fhould the Cloyfter enter,
And thence receive her approbation:
Acquit her with the danger of my fate,
Implore her, in my voice, that the make friends
To the virtu desirous: bid her felle allay him,
I haue great hopes in that: for in her youth
There is a prone and speechlefe dialect,
Such as mouse men: besides, she hath prosperous Art
When fhe will play with reason, and discourse,
And well she can pfervade.

Luc. I pray thee may: I swell for the encouragement of the like, which eell would fland ynder greeuous impostion; as for the enjoying of thy life, who I would be forry thou should bee thus foolishly loft, or a game of tic-tacke. Ille to her.

Cia. I thank you good friend Lucio.
Scena Quinta.

Enter Isabella and Francesca a Nun.

O. And have you News no further pruniledges?
Nun. Are not these large enough?
O. Yes truly; I speak not as defying more,
But rather with all more strict restraint.
Upon the Sisterhood, the Visitations of Saint Clare,
Luc. victim.
Is. Hoa? peace be in this place.
Nun. Who's that which calls?
O. It is a mans voice: gentle Isabella.
Turn you the key, and know his business of him;
You may; I may not: you are yet unworne:
When you have vowed, you must not speake with men,
But in the presence of the Prior eat.
Then if you speake, you must not show your face;
Or if you show your face, you must not speake.
He calls againe: I pray you answere him.
Is. Peace and prosperitie: who's is that call?
Luc. Haile Virgin, (if you be) as those chekke-Roies
Proclaimed you are not of estate can you did mee,
As bring me to the fight of Isabella.
A Notice at this place, and the faire Sister
To her vnhappy brother Claudius?
Is. Why her vnhappy Brother? Let me aske,
The rather for I now must make you know
I am that Isabella, and his Sister.
Luc. Gentle & faire: your Brother kindly greets you;
Not to be weary with yee he's in prision.
O. Woe me; for what?
Luc. For that, which if ay felte might be his Judge,
He should receive his punishment, in thankes:
He hath got his friend with childe,
Is. Sir, make me not your frie.
Luc. This true; I would not, though 'tis my familiar sin,
With Maidens to ease the Lap-wing, and to left Tongue, far from heart: play with all Virgins to.
I hold you as a thing en-skied, and fiend'd,
By your renunciation, an immotal spirit
And to be call'd with inercity,
As with a Saint.
Is. You doe blaspheme the good, in mocking me.
Luc. Do not beleue it: fewen, and truth; 'tis thus,
Your brother, and his loutre haue embrac'd
As thole that feed, grow full as blossomming Time
That from the feedes, the bare felloe brings
To teeming foyfon: even so her plenteous wombe
Expresseth his full Tith, and husbandry.
Is. Some one with child by him? my cofen Juliete?
Luc. Is he your cofen?
Is. Adop'tedly, as schoole-maids change their names
By wise, though sp affection.
Luc. She it is.
Is. Oh, let him marry her.
Luc. This is the point.
The Duke is very strangely gone from hence;
Bore many gentlemen (my selfe being one)
In hope, and hope of action: but we doe learne,
By thole that know the very Nerues of State,
His guing-ous, were of an infinite distance
From his true meant designe: vpon his place,

(And with full line of his authority.)
Gouernes Lord Angelo; A man, whose blood
Is very snow-broth: one, who never feels
The wanton flings, and motions of the fence;
But doth rebate, and blunts his natural edge
With profits of the minde: Studie, and fall
He to glue fear to life, and libertie,
Which later, for long, runn, by the hideous law,
As Mynce, by Lyons: hath lick out an a.sh,
Vnder whose heavy fence, your brothers life
Falls into forfit: he arrestes him on it,
And followes close the rigor of the Statute
To make him an example: all hope is gone,
Vnneile you haue the grace, by your faire prier
To felon Angelo: And that's my pith of buinelle
'Twixt you, and your poorer brother.
Is. Doth he so.
Seeke his life?
Luc. Has censur'd him already,
And as I heare, the Prouoid hath a warrant
For his execution.
Is. Alas: what poore
Abilitie's in me, to doe him good.
Luc. Affay the powre you have.
Is. My power fail, I doubt.
Luc. Our doubts are traitors
And makes us lose the good we oft might win,
By fearing to attempt: Go to Lord Angelo
And let him learne to know, when Maidens sue
Men give like gods: but when they wepe and kneele,
All their petitions, are as freely theirs
As they themselfes would owle them.
Is. I fee what I can doe.
Luc. But speedily.
Is. I will about it fraight?
No longer stayinge, but to guie the Mother
Notice of my affairs: I humbly thank you:
Commend me to my brother: loose at night
Ile send him certaine word of my successe,
Luc. I take my lease of you.
Is. Good sir, adieu.

Exeunt.

Actus Secundus. Scena Prima.

Enter Angelo, Eflabon, and servants, Justice.
Ang. We must not make a fear-crow of the Law
Setting it up to fear the Birds of prey,
And let it keepe one shape, till sometime make it
Their peace, and not their terror.
Efl. I, but yet
Let us be cene, and rather cut a little
Then fall, and bruise to death: alas, this gentleman
Whom I would have, had a most noble father,
Let but your honour know
(Whether I believe to be most frant in vertue
That in the working of your owne affections,
Had time concord with Place; or place with willing,
Or that the refolute acting of our blood
Could have straining the effect of your owne purpose,
Whether you had not sometyme in your life
E'd in this point, which now you censur him,
And puld the Law upon you.)
Ang. 'Tis one thing to be tempted (Eflabon)

Another
Another thing to fall: I tis not deny
The jury passing on the Prisoners life
May in the worse-worse case have a thief, or two Guiltier then him they try, what's open made to justice,
That justice ceizes: What knowes the Lawes
That theues do pass on theecus? 'Tis very pregnant,
The Jewell that we finde, we foope, and take'
Because we see it; but what we do not see,
We trespounce, and newthand think of it.
You may not to extenuate his offence,
For I have had such faults, but rather tell me
When I, that confesse him, do so offend,
Let mine own judgement passe out my death,
And nothing come in partiall, Sir, he must dye.

Enter Prussell.

Efc. Be it as your wife dose will.

Ang. Where is the Prussell?

Pro. Here it like your honour.

Ang. Seecthan Claudio

Be executed by nine to morrow morning,
Bring him his Confessor, let him be prepare'd,
For that's the vnmoist of his pilgrimige.

Efc. Well: heauen forgive him; and forgie vs all.

Some rife by force, and some by vertue fall:
Some run from brakes of Ice, and afe to were none,
And some condemned for a fault alone.

Enter Elbou, Froth, Conwe, Officers.

Elb. Come, bring them away: if thee be good people
In a Common-weale, that do nothing butiere their abuses in common houses, I know no law: bring them away.

Ang. How know Sir, what's your name? And what's the matter?

Elb. If it please your honour, I am the poore Dukes Constable, and my name is Elbou; I doe leane upon Justice Sir, and doe bring in here before your good honor, two notorious Benefactors.

Ang. Benefactors? What Benefactors are th? Are they not Malefactors?

Elb. If it please your honour, I know not what they are: But prefeas villanies they are, that I am sure of; and void of all propagation in the world, that good Christians ought to hate.

Efc. This comes off well: here's a wife Officer.

Ang. Go to, what quality are they of Elbou is your name?

Why do you, you not speake Elbou?

Cla. He cannot sir, he's out at Elbou.

Ang. What are you Sir?

Elb. He Sir a Tapler Sir: parcell Bard: one that serves a bad woman: whose house Sir was (as they say) pluckt downe in the Suborbs: and now thee professes a hot-houfe; which I thinke is a very ill houfe too.

How know you that?

Ang. My wife Sir? whom I detest before heauen, and your honour.

Efe. How? thy wife?

Elb. Sir? whom I thank heauen is an honest woman.

Efe. Do you detest her therefore?

Elb. I say Sir, will detest my felowe also, as well as she, that this houfe, if it be not a Bawds houfe, it is pitty of her life, for it is a naughty houfe.

Efe. How don't thou know that, Constable?

Elb. Marry Sir, by my wife, who, if she had bin a woman Cardinaly guen, might have bin accus'd in forni-
Measure for Measure.

Eff. 1. Sir, very well.

(2.) Nay, I beseech you mark it well.

Eff. Well, I do so.

Clo. Doth your honor see any harm in his face?

Eff. Why no.

Clo. Ile be uplifted upon a book, his face is the worst thing about him: good then: if his face be the worst thing about him, how could Master Froth doe the Constables wife any harm? I would know of that of your honour.

Eff. He's in the right (Constable) what say you to it?

Ellb. And it like you, the house is a respected house; next, this is a respected fellow; and his Mithris is a respected woman.

Clo. By this hand Sir, his wife is a more respected person then any of vs all.

Ellb. Varlet, thou lyest: thou lyest wicked varlet: the time is yet to come that thee was ever respected with man, woman, or child.

Clo. Sir, she was respected with him, before he married with her.

Eff. Which is the wiser here: Infinit or Infinitis? Is this true?

Ellb. O thou cattiss, O thou varlet: O thou wicked Hannibal, I respected with her, before I was married to her? If ever I was respected with her, or file with me, let not your worship think mee the poor Dukes Officer: proue this, thou wicked Hannibal, or else iche have mine action of Barry on thee.

Ellb. If thee took thee a box 'oth' eare, you might have your action of slander too.

Ellb. Marry thanke thy good worship for it: what is't your Worships pleasure I shall doe with this wicked Cattiss?

Eff. Truly Officer, because he hath some offences in him, that thou wouldst disfigure, if thou couldst, let him continue in his course, til thou knowest what they are.

Ellb. Marry I thankke your worship for it: Thou feelist thou wicked varlet now, what's come vpone thee. Thou art to continue now thou Varlet, thou art to continue.

Eff. Where wee re you borne, friend?

Froth. Here in Vienna, Sir.

Eff. Are you of fourcorder pounds a score?

Froth. Yes, and 'tis please you sir.

Eff. So: what trade are you of, sir?

Clo. A Tapster, a poore widdowes Tapster.

Eff. Your Mithris name?

Clo. Mithris Outer- doon.

Eff. Hath she had any more then one husband?

Clo. Nine, sir: Outer- doon by the last.

Eff. Nine? come hether to me, Master Froth; Master Froth, I would not have you acquainted with Tapsters; they will draw you Master Froth, and you will hang them: get you gone, and let me hear no more of you.

Froth. I thanke your worship: for mine owne part, I never come into any room in a Tap-house, but I am drawne in.

Eff. Well: no more of it Master Froth: farewell: Come you hether to me, Mr. Tapster: what's your name Mr. Tapster?

Clo. Pompey.

Eff. What else?

Clo. Tamm, Sir.

Eff. Truth, and your barm is the greatest thing about you, so that in the beastliest fence, you are Pompey the great: Pompey, you are partly a bawd, Pompey; howsoever colour is in being a Tapster, are you not? come, tell me true, it shall be the better for you.

Clo. Truly Sir, I am a poore fellow that would live.

Eff. How would you live Pompey? by being a bawd? what do you think of the trade Pompey? is it a lawfull trade?

Clo. The Law would allow it, sir.

Eff. But the Law will not allow it Pompey; nor it shall not be allowed in Utopia.

Clo. Do's your Worships meanes to gole and splay all the youth of the City?

Eff. No, Pompey.

Clo. Truely Sir, in my poore opinion they will too: if your worship will take order for the drabs and the knaves, you need not to fear the bawds.

Eff. There is pretty orders beginning I can tell you: It is but heading, and hanging.

Ellb. If you head, and hang all that offend that way but for ten years together: you'll be glad to give out a Commission for more heads: if this law hold in Utopia ten yeare, ile rent the fairest house in yet three pence a Bay: if you like to see this come to passe, say Pompey told you to.

Eff. Thanke you good Pompey; and in requital of your prophetic, thanke you: I aduise you let me not finde you before me againe upon any complaint: whatsoever, no, not for dwelling where you doe; if I doe Pompey, I shall best you to your Tent, and proue a shrewd Cager to you: in plaine dealing Pompey, I shall have you whip; for this time, Pompey, fare you well.

Clo. I thanke your Worships your good counsell; but I shall follow it as the flesh and fortune shall better determine. Whip me? no, no, let Carman whip his Lade, The valiant heart's not whip out of his trade. Exe.

Eff. Come hether to me, Master Elbow: come hither Master Constable: how long hauest you bin in this place of Constable?

Eff. Seven yeare, and a halfe Sir.

Eff. I thought by the readiness in the office, you had continued in it some time: you say seaven yeares together.

Ellb. And a halfe Sir.

Eff. Alas, it hath beene great paines to you: they do you wrong to put you ovt of vs'r. Are there not men in your Ward sufficient to ferue it?

Ellb. Faith Sir, few of any wit in such matters: as they are chosen, they are glad to choose them for them: I doe it for some peace of money, and goe through with all.

Eff. Lookke you bring me in the names of some five or seaven, the most sufficient of your parishes.

Ellb. To your Worships houe Sir?

Eff. To my houe: fare you well: what's a clocke, thinke you?

Ins. Eleven, Sir.

Eff. I pray you come to dinner with me, Sir.

Ins. I humbly thanke you.

Eff. It grieveth me for the death of Claudio.

But there's no remedie:

Ins. Lord Angelo is seere, Sir.

Ins. It is but needfull.

Mercy is not it selle, that oft looks so,

Pardon is all the nurse of second woe:

But yet, poore Claudio; there is no remedie.

Come Sir.

Exeunt.

Scene II. i. 162—309.
Scene Secunda.

Enter Prouse, Servant.

Sir, hee’s hearing of a Caue ; he will come straight, I’ll tell him of you.

Pro. ‘Pray you doe; I know
His pleasure, may be he wil relent; alas
He hath but as offended in a dreame,
All Selfs, all Ages sack of this vice, and he
To die for’t?

Enter Angelo.

Ang. Now, what’s the matter Prouse?

Pro. Is it your will Claudio shall die to morrow?

Ang. Did not I tell thee yes t’hadst thou not order?

Why do’st thou ask again?

Pro. Left I might be too rash:
Vader your good correction, I have seene
When after execution, Judgement hath Repented ore his doome.

Ang. Go to; let that be mine,
Doe you your office, or give vp your Place,
And you shall well be spair’d.

Pro. I crave your Honour pardon:
What shall be done Sir, with the groaning Juliet?
She’s very neere her howre.

Ang. Dispose of her
To some more fitter place ; and that with speed.

Ser. Here is the sifter of the man condemn’d,
Defires access to you.

Ang. Hath he a Sitter?

Pro. I my good Lord, a very virtuous maid,
And to be shorthe of a Sitter hood.
If not alreadie,

Ang. Well: let her be admitted,
See you the Fornicatre be remond’d,
Let her have needfull, but not lauifh meanes,
There shall be order for’t.

Enter Lucio and Isabell.

Pro. ‘Sauze your Honour, (will I?

Ang. Stay a little while: I’ye are welcome: what’s your

Isab. I am a wofull Sitter to your Honour,

Please but your Honour hear me

Ang. Well: what’s your fute.

Isab. There is a vice that moft I doe abhere,
And moft defire should meet the blow of Justice;
For which I would not plead, but that I muft,
For which I muft not plead, but that I am
At warre, twixt will, and will not,

Ang. Well: the matter?

Isab. I haue a brother is condemn’d to die,
To doe beforthe you let it be his fault,
And not my brother.

Pro. Heaven giue thee mourning graces.

Ang. Condemne the fault, and not the actor of it,
Why cery fault’s condemn’d ere it be done:
Mine were the very Cipher of a Function
To finde the faults, whole fine flinds in record,
And let goe by the Actor.

Isab. Oh fault, but fevere Law;
I had a brother then; heauen keep your honour.

Luc. Giue’t not ore fo to him againe, entreat him,
Kneele downe before him, hang upon his gowne,
You are too cold: if you should need a pin,

You could not with more tame a tongue defiere it:
To him, I say.

Isab. Mult he needs die t

Ang. Maiden, no remedie.

Isab. Yes: I doe think that you might pardon him,
And neither heauen, nor man giuete at the mercy.

Ang. I will not doe.

Isab. But can you if you would?

Ang. Looke what I will not, that I cannot doe.

Isab. But might you doe’t & do the world no wrong
If so your heart were touch’d with that remorse,
As mine is to him?

Ang. Hee’s sentenc’d, tis too late.

Luc. You are too cold.

Isab. Too late: why no: I that doe speak a word
May call it again: well, beleue this
No ceremony that to great ones longes,
Not the Kings Crowne; nor the deputed sword,
The Marshalls Truncheons, nor the Judges Robe
Become them with one halfe fo good a grace
As mercie does: or he had bin as you, and you as he,
You would have flapt like him, but he like you
Would not have beene fo flerne.

Ang. Pray you be gone.

Isab. I would to heauen I had your potencies,
And you were Isabell: should it then be thus?
No: I would what were to be a judge,
And what a prisoner.

Luc. I, touch him: there’s the maine.

Ang. Your Brother is a forfeit of the Law,
And you but waffe your words.

Isab. Alas, alas:
Why all the foules that were, were forfeit once,
And he that might the vantage beft have tooke,
Found out the remedie: how would you be,
If he, which is the top of judgement, should
But judge you, as you are? Oh, thinke on that,
And merrie then will breathe within your lips
Like men new made.

Ang. Be you content, (faire Maid)
It is the Law, not I, confound your brother,
Were he my kinman, brother, or my fonne,
It should be thus with him: he must die to morrow.

Isab. To morrow? oh, that’s fadaine,
Spare him, spare him:
Hee’s not prepar’d for death: even for our kitchen
We kill the fowle of feaon: shall we ferue heaven
With leffe respect then we doe minifter,
To our greffe feline? good, good my Lord, be thinke you;
Who is it that hath di’d for this ofience
There’s many have committed it.

Luc. I, well saide.

Ang. The Law hath not bin dead, though it hath flapt
Thofe many had not dar’d to doe that euill
If the fift, that did th’Edict infringe
Had anfwer’d for his deed: now ‘tis awake,
Takes note of what is done, and like a Prophet
Lookes in a glaffe that fhowes what future euils
Either now, or by remiflenesse, new concei’d,
And fo in progreffe to be hate’d, and borne,
Are now to have no succifellue degrees,
But here they haueto end.

Isab. Yet fliew some pitie.

Ang. I fiew it moft of all, when I fhow Justice;
For then I pitie thofe I doe not know,
Which a dimifs’d ofience, would after gaue

And
And doe his right, that answering one foule wrong,
Lues not to act another. Be satisfied;
Your Brother dies to morrow, be content.
Ifab. So you must be for that gives this sentence,
And hee, that suffers: Oh, it is excellent
To have a Giants strength: but it is tyrannous
To vie it like a Giant.
Luc. That's well said.
Ifab. Could great men thunders
As lowe himselfe do's, you would never be quiet,
For every petting petty Officer
Would vie his heauen for thunders;
Nothing but thunder: Mercifull heauen,
That rather with thy sharpe and sulphurous bolt
Splits the wan-edgable and garneted Oke,
Then the soft Merrill: But man, proud man,
Dreft in a little briefe authoritie,
Moft ignorant of what he's most affurd,
(His glauff Efficence) like an angry Ape
Plaies such phantastique tricks before high heauen,
And makes the Angels weep, who with our splenes;
Would all themselves laugh morcell.
Luc. Oh, to him, to him wench: he will relent,
Hes comming: I perceive't.
Pro. Pray heauen hee may win him.
Ifab. We cannot weigh our brother with our selfe,
Great men may set with Saints res riot in them,
But in the lattis selfe prophanation.
Luc. Thou art right (Gentle) more o'that.
Ifab. That in the Captains but a chancellors word,
Which in the Souldier is flat blasphemy.
Luc. Art asud o'that? more o't.
Ang. Why do you put these sayings upon me?
Ifab. Because Authoritie, though it err as others,
Hath yet a kinda of medicine in it selfe
That sking the vice o'th top: goe to your boonne,
Knoock there, and ask your heart what it doth know
That's like my brothers fault: if it confesse
A naturall guiltiness, such as is his,
Let it not found a thought upon your tongue
Against my brothers life.
Ang. Shee speaks, and 'tis such fenceness
That my Sence breeds with it; fare you well.
Ifab. Gentle my Lord, turne backe.
Ang. I will bethank me: come againe to morrow.
Ifab. Hark, how he brie your good Lord turne back.
Ang. How? brie me?
Ifab. I, with such gifts that heauen shall share with you,
Luc. You had mar'd all else.
Ifab. Not with fond Sickles of the tefted gold,
Or Stones, whose roote are either rich, or poore.
As fancie values them: but with true prayers,
That shall be vp at heauen, and enter there.
Ere Sunne sse: prayers from preferred foules,
From falling Muses, whose lines are dedicate
To nothing temporall.
Ang. Well, come to me to morrow.
Luc. Go to: they will agay.
Ifab. Heaven keepes your honour safe.
Ang. Amen.
For I am that way going to temptation,
Where prayers strofe.
Ifab. At what howe to morrow,
Shall I attend your Lordship?
Ang. At any time fore-noone.
Ifab. Save your Honour.

Scena Tertia.

Enter Duke and Prouofi.
Duke. Haile to you, Prouofi; so I thinke you are.
Præ. I am the Prouofi: what's your will, good Friet?
Duke. Bound by my charity, and my beatit acier,
I come to visit the afflieted spirits
Here in the prison: doe me the common right
To let me see them: and to make me know
The nature of their crimes, that I may ministe
To them accordingly.
Præ. I would do more then that, if more were needfull.
Enter Later.

Looke here comes one: a Gentlemaman of mine,
Who falling in the flaves of her owne youth,
Hath blisster her report: she is with childe,
And he that got is, tenden'd: a yong man,
More fit to doe another such offence,
Then dye for his.
Duke. When must he dye?
Præ. As I do think to morrow.
I have provide you for, stay a while
And you shall be conduced.
Duke. Repent you (faire one) of the sin you carry?
Ind. I doe: and beare the faine moft patiently.
Duke. I'll teache you how you shall assigne your conscience
And try your penitence, if it be found,
Or hollowly put on.
Ind. I' will gladly learn.
Duke. Love you the man that wrong'd you?
Ind. Yes, as I love the woman that wrong'd him.
Duke. So then it forma your most offence full a
Was mutually committed.
Ind. Mutually.
Duke. Then was your sin of heavier kind then his.
Ind. I doe confesse it, and repent it (Father.)

Duke. Ti.
To pardon him, that last from nature stolen
A man already made, as to remit
Their fatal sin, whereon the last were heav'n Image
In flames that are forbid: 'tis as easy,
Fall'ly to take away a life true made,
As to put mettle in restraints made
To make a false one.

Isab. 'Tis set downe fo in heav'n, but not in earth.

Ang. Say you so: then I shall poze you quickly.

Which had you rather, that the most hift Law
Now tooke your brothers life, and to redeeme him
Give vp your body to such sweet uncleanness
As fits that he hath made?

Isab. Sir, believe this.

I had rather give my body, then my soule.

Ang. I take not of your soule: our conspil'd fins
Stand more for number, then for accompl.

Isab. How lay you?

Ang. Nay lie not warrant that: for I can speake Against the thing I say: Anfwere to this,
I now the voype of the recorded Law.

Prone to a sentence on your Brothers life,
Might there not be a charitie in fame,
To save this Brothers life?

Isab. Please you to doo's,
Ile take it as a perill to my soule,
It is no finne at all, but charitie.

Ang. Pleade you to doo's, at perill of your soule
Were equal poize of finne, and charitie.

Isab. That I do beg his life, if the finne
Heauen let me berae it: you granting of my fuit,
If that be fin, Ile make it my Morte-prayer,
To have it added to the faults of mine,
And nothing of your anwer.

Ang. Nay, but heare me,
Your fentence partes not mine: either you are ignorant,
Or fee me fo crafty; and that's no good.

Isab. Let be ignorant, and in nothing good,
But gravely to know I am no better.

Ang. Thus wildome wilifies to appeare most bright,
When it doth taxe it selfe: As these blacke Masques
Proclaime an en-field beauty ten times louder
Then beauty could displace: but marke me,
To be receiue plaine, Ie speake more groffe:
Your Brother is to dye.

Isab. So.

Ang. And his offence is fo, as it appeares,
Accountant to the Law, ypon that paine.

Isab. True.

Ang. Admit no other way to faue his life
(As I subscribe not that, nor any other,
But in the loue of question) that you, his Sifter,
Finding your selfe defi'd of such a person,
Whose credite with the Judge, or owne great place,
Could fetch your Brother from the Manacles
Of the all-building-Law: and that there were
No earthly means to faue him, but that either
You must lay downe the treasures of your body,
To this suppos'd, or else to let him suffer:
What would you doe?

Isab. As much for me poore Brother, as my selfe;
That is: were I vnder the terrors of death,
Th'impression of keen stikkes, I'd weare as Rubies,
And dripp my selfe to death, as to a bed,
That longing hane bin fickle for, ere I'd yeeld
My body vp to shame.

Ang. That.
Ang. Then must your brother die.
Ifa. And 'twill the cheaper way:
Better it were a brother died at once,
Then that a suffer, by redeeming him
Should die for ever.

Ang. Were not you then as cruel as the Sentence,
That you have flander'd so?
Ifa. Ignominious in rancome, and free pardon
Are of two bounties: lawfull mericie,
Is nothing kin to foulde redemption,

Ang. You feem'd of late to make the Law a tirant,
And rather plow'd the liding of your brother
A meritment, then a vice.

Ifa. Oh pardon me my Lord, it oft fails out
To have, what we would have,
We speake not what we meane;
I something do excele the thing I hate,
For his advantage that I dearly love.

Ang. We are all fraile.
Ifa. Else let my brother die,
Ifnot a fadari but only he
Owe, and succeed thy weakneffe.

Ang. Nay, women are fraile too.
Ifa. I, as the glaftes where they view themselues,
Which are as easie broke as they make fornes:
Women Help heauen: men their creation marre
In profiting by them: Nay, call vs ten times fraile,
For we are lost, as our complexions are,
And credulous to false prints.

Ang. I think it well:
And from this testimonie of your owne sex
(Since I suppose we are made to be no stronger
Then faults may frayke our framers) let me be bold;
I do arret your words. Be that you are,
That is a woman; if you be more, you'r name.
If you be one (as you are well expreit
By all externall warrants) shew it now,
By putting on the defin'd Lituerie.

Ifa. I have no tongue but one; gentle my Lord,
Let me entreat you speake the former language.

Ang. Plainlie conceiue I love you.
Ifa. My brother did loue Inlet,
And you tell me that he shall die for't.

Ang. He shal not Ifabell if you give me loue.
Ifa. I know your verue hath a licence in't,
Which semieth a lesser fouler then it is,
To placke on others.

Ang. Believe me on mine Honor,
My words expresse my purpoze.

Ifa. Hath little honor, to be much beleu'd,
And most permitious purpoze: seeming, seeming,
I will proclaime thee Ifabell, loue for't.
Signe me a present pardon for my brother,
Or with an out-Hretch throate I'll tell the world aloud
What man thou art.

Ang. Who will beleuе thee Ifabell?
My vnfold name, thy beneficence of my life,
My vouch against you, and my place in this State,
Will fo your accusation over-weigh,
That you shall little in your owne report,
And smell of calamitie. I have begun,
And now I guese my sensual race, the tense,
Fit thy content to my hearty appetit.
Lay by all niceties, and proflious blustres
That banish what they use for. Redeem thy brother,
By yeeding vp thy bodye to my will,

Or else he must not onelie die the death,
But thy vnkindneffe shall his death draw out
To lingering sufferance: Anfwer me to morrow,
Or by the affection that now guides me, me,
Ille prove a Tirant to him. As for you,
Say what you can; my falle, ore-weighs your truee. Exit.

Ifa. To whom should I complaine? Did I tell this,
Who would beleue me? O perillous mouchar
That base in them, one, and the feilefame tongue,
Either of condemnation, or approoche.
Bidding the Lawmake curtie to their will,
Hooking both right and wrong to th'apparite.
To follow as it drawes, Ile to my brother,
Though he hath falene by promtude of the blood,
Yet hath he in him such a mine of Honor,
That had he twenty heads to tender downe
On twenty bloodie blockes, he'll yield them vp,
Before his fitter fhou'd hurl his bodie Rough
To such abloind pollution.

Then Ifabell live chaffe, and brother die;
'More then our Brother, is our Chaffe.
Ile tell him yet of Angelo's requit,
And fit his mine to death, for his foules refl., Exit.

Actus Tertius. Scena Prima.

Enter Duke, Claudio, and Pronzi.

Duc. So then you hope of pardon from Lord Angelo?
Cla. The miserable have no other medicine
But only hope: I haue hope to live, and am prepar'd to die.

Duc. Be absolute for death: either death or life
Shall thereby be the sweeter. Reafon thus with life:
If I do loue thee, I do loue a thing
That none but loues would keepe: a breath thou art,
Sentile to all the skye-influences.
That doth this habitation where thou kepest
Honrely afflict: Meereely, thou art death's fool,
For him thou labou'rest by thy flight to flym,
And yet runnest toward him still. Thou art not noble,
For all thy accommodatons that thou behast,
Are naught by bafineffe: Thou'rt by no meanes valiant,
For thou dost feare the lost and tender farke
Of a poor worme: thy beth of self is fleere,
And that thou oft preuoyd, yet groifie thecaft
Thy death, which is no more. Thou art not thy selfe,
For thou exilts on marne a thousand graines
That issue out of dout. Happie thou art not,
For what thou haft not, full thou frit't to get,
And what thou half forgett. Thou art not certaine,
For thy complexion shift's to strange effects,
After the Moone: If thou art rich, thou art poore,
For like as Aife, whose backe with Ingos bowes
Thou beart thy beautie riches but a lourne,
And death violence thee; Friend haft thou none.
For thine owne bowels which do call thee, fire
The meree effusion of thy proper loines
Do curze the Gowe, Sapego, and the Rheume
For ending thee no sooner. Thou haft nor youth, nor age
But as it were an after-dinner sleepe
Dreaming on both, for all thy bleffed youth
Becomes as aged, and doth begge the almes
Of palpied-Ed: and when thou art old, and rich

Thou
Measure for Measure.

Thou hast neither heate, affection, limb, nor beautie
To make thy riches pleasant: what's yet in this
That bears the name of life? Yet in this life
Lies hid mee thousand deaths; yet death we feare
That makes these oddes, all cuen.

Cla. I humbly thank you,
To sic to die, I finde I seek to die,
And seeking death, finde life: Let it come on,
Enter Isabella.

Ifa. What have I? Peace here, grace, and good compe.

Pro. Who's there? Come in, the watch descrea a welcome.

Duke. Deere sir, ere long lihe vifit you againe.

Cla. Most holie Sir, I thank you.

Ifa. My bufineffe is a word or two with Clauda.

Pro. And very welcome: lookke Signior, here's your fitter.

Duke. Prouoost, a word with you,
Pro. As man as ye please.

Duke. Bring them to hear me speake, where I may be conveale.

Cla. Now fitter, what's the comfort?

Ifa. Whys, As all compotes are: most good, most good indeede, Lord Angora having affairs to heauen Intends you for his wisft Ambassador, Where you fhall be an ever latting Leiger; Therefore your next appointment make with speede,
To Morrow you feron.

Cla. Is there no remedie?

Ifa. None; but fuch remedie, as to save a head
To cleare a heart in twaine:

Cla. But is there anie?

Ifa. Ye brotheer, you may liue;
There is a divellish merce in the Judge,
If you implore it, that will free your life,
But feeter you till death.

Cla. Perpetuall durance?

Ifa. Iff, perpetuall durance, a reftraint Through all the world's yellowd you bad
To a determined scope.

Cla. But in what nature?

Ifa. In such a one, as you confenting too't,
Would barke your honor from that trunke you beare,
And leave you naked.

Cla. Let me know the point.

Ifa. Oh, I do fear thee Clauda, and I quake,
Least thou a feature of life thou'll't entertaine,
And fice or feates winters more repelfed
Then a perpetuall Honor. If thou die too It's fene of death is mot in apprehension,
And the poore Beetle that we tread epon
In corporall fuffereance, finds a pang as great
As when a Giant dies.

Cla. Why gie you me this fhame?

Think you I can a refolution fetch From flawlie tenderneffe? If I muff die,
I will encounter darkneffe as a bride,
And hugghe in mine armes.

Ifa. There fpeak thy brother: there my fathers grave Did vteer forth a voice. Yes, thou muff die:
Thou art too noble, to confene a life
In basu appliances. This outward fainted Deputie,
Whofe fetted vifage, and delicate word
Nips youth th' head, and follies doth emmew

As Falcon doth the Fowle, is yet a duell:
His fhith within being caft, he would appear
A pond, as depe as hell.

Cla. The prenzie, Angella?

Ifa. Oh, he's the cunning Liriterie of hell,
The damneft bodie to inuent, and couer
In prenzie gardes; doft thou thinke Clauda's
If I would yeald him my virginitie Thou might't be freed?

Cla. Oh heauen, it cannot be.

Ifa. Yes, he would giue thee; from this rank offence
So to offend him still. This night's the time
That I should do what I abhorre to name,
Or else thou dieft to morrow.

Cla. Thou thinke not do.

Ifa. Oh, were it but my life,
I'd throw it downe for your deliuereance
As frankly as a pin.

Cla. Thaunke thee dear Ifabel.

Ifa. Be reade my hand, for your death to morrow.

Cla. Yes. Has he affocations in him,
That thus can make him bire, the Law by th' hone,
When he would force it? Sire it is no faine,
Or of the deadly feuen it is the leafe.

Ifa. Which is the leafe?

Cla. If it were damnable, he being to wife,
Why would he for the momentarie tricke
Be perpactible finne? Oh Ifabel.

Ifa. What faies my brother?

Cla. Death is a feareful thing.

Ifa. And thamned life, a harte full.

Cla. I, but to die, and go we know not where,
To lie in cold obftruction, and torro,
This fensible warme motion, to become
A kneaded cloath; And the delighted fpirit
To bate in fierie floods, or to recede
In thrilling Region of thicke-ribbed ice,
To be imprifon'd in the viewleffe winderes
And blowne with reftles death violent round about
The pendant worlds: or to be wore then word
Of thofe, that lawfull and uncertain thought,
Imagine howling, 'tis too horrible,
The wearei, and moft loathed worldly life
That Age, Ache, perjury, and imprifonment
Can lay on nature, is a panache
To what we feare, or death.

Ifa. Alas, alas.

Cla. Sweet Sifter, let me liue.

What finne you do, to fave a brothers life,
Nature dispentes with the deade to farre,
That it becomes a Vereue,

Ifa. Oh you beast.

Oh faithleffe Coward, oh difhonest wretch,
Wilt thou be made a man, out of my vice?
Is't not a kinde of Inceft, to take life
From chine owne fifters fhamce? What should I thinke, Heaven shield ye Mother plaid my Father fairs:
For fuch a warpe flip of wilderneffe
Nere infl'd from his blood. Take my defiance,
Die, periffe: Might but my bending downe
Repare thee from thy fate, is to proceede.
He pray's a thoufand prayers for thy death,
No word to faue thee.

Cla. Nay hear me Ifabel.

Ifa. Oh fie, fie, fie:
Thy finn's not accidental, but a trade.

Mercie
Mercy to thee would prove it selle a Bawd,
'Tis better that thou diet quickly.

Cla. Oh heare me Msgraffu.

Duk. Vouchsafe a word, young Rister, but one word.

Ifa. What is your Will.

Duk. Might you dispence with your leaflure, I would by and by have some speech with you: the satisfaction I would require, is likewise your owne benefit.

Ifa. I have no superfluous leaflure, my tlay must be stolen out of other affaires: but I will attend you a while.

Duk. Soe, I have hear, heard what hath past between you & your Rister, Angelo had never the purpofe to corrupt her; onely he hath made an affay of her wavage, to prafifice his judgement with the disposition of nature.

She (hauing the truth of honour in her) hath made him that gracious deniel, which he is most glad to receive. I am Conffessor to Angelo, and I know this to be true, therefore prepare your felle to death: do not fatisflie your Rolution with hopes that are fallible, to morrow you muft die. goe to your knees, and make ready.

Cla. Let me ask my fifters pardon. I am too out of love with life, that I will frue to be rid of it.

Duk. Hold you there: fattiell: Proufe, a word with you.

Pro. What's your Will (father?)

Duk. That now you are come, you will be gooial me a while with the Maid, my mindes promife within habit, no loffe shall touch her by my company.

Pro. In good time, Exeunt.

Duk. The hand that hath made you faire; hath made you good: the goodnes that is cleane in beauty, makes beauty briefe in goodness; but grace being the foule of your complexion, shall keep the body of it euer faire: the affaults that Angelo hath made to you. Fortune hath consuaid to my understanding: but that frailty hath examples for his falling, I should wonder at Angelo, how will you doe to content this Sublitude, and to sate your Brother?

Ifa. I am now going to relide him: I had rather my brother die by the Law, when my Rome should be unlawfullie borne. But (oth) how much is the good Duke deceased in Angelo: if ever he returne, and I can speake to him, I will open my lips in vaine, or discover his government.

Duk. That fiall not be much smite: yet, as the matter now standes, he will avoid your accufation; he made trial of you once. Therefore fatten your care on my affiduous, to the loue I haue in doing good; a remeide prefente it felle. I doe make my felle beleue that you may moft vprightly do a poor wronged Lady a required benifit: redeem your brother from the angry Law; doe no fhame to your owne gracious perfon, and much pleafe the abfent Duke, if peradventure he fhall euer return to have hearing of this busineffe.

Ifa. Let me heare you speake farther: I have fpirit to do any thing that appeares not fowe in the truth of my spirit.

Duk. Vertue is bold, and gooodnes never fearefull: Have you not heard speake to Mariana the fifter of Frederick the great Soulieur, who muffacri'd at Sea?

Ifa. I have heard of the Lady, and good words went with her name.

Duk. She fhould this Angelo have maried: was affienced to her oath, and the nuptiall appointed: between which time of the contract, and limit of the solemnity, her brother Frederick was wrack'd at Sea, hauing in that perished vellell, the dowry of his fitter: but make how heauily this befall to the poore Gentlewoman, there the loft a noble and renowned brother, in his loue toward her, euer most kind & natural: with him the portion and all of her fortune, her marriage dowry: with both, her combinate-husband, this well-feeing Angelo.

Ifa. Can this be fo? I did Angelo to leave her?

Duk. Left her in her teares, & died not one of them with his comfort: swallowed his vowes whole, pretending in her, difcoueries of dishonor: in fewe, buttowd her on her owne lamentation, which she yet weares for his fake: and he, a marbie to her teares, was wafted with them, but releas not.

Ifa. What a metrice were it in death to take this poore maid from the world? what corruption in this life, that it will let this man like? But how out of this can ftree a qualte?

Duk. It is a rupture that you may eafefully heal: and the cure of it not onely fates your brother, but keeps you from dishonor in doing it.

Ifa. Shew me how (good Father.)

Duk. The good fore-named Maid is yet in her: the continuation of her fift affection: his wifhit unhinder'd (that in all reafon shou'd have quenched her loue) hath (like an impediment in the Current) made it more violent and vanyly: Go to you to Angelo, anfwere his requirings with a prablease obedience, agree with his demands to the point; onely referre your felle to this aduantage; frift, that your flay with him may not be long: that the time may haue all shado, and silence in it and the place anfwerre to comenance: this being granted in courfe, and now follows all. wee shall aduise this wronged maid to feed vp your appointment, goe in your place: if the encountre acknowledge it felle hereafter, it may compell him to her recompence; and here, by this is your brother tazed, your honor vartained, the poore Mariana advanaged, and the corrupt Deputy feale. The Maid will I frame, and make fit for his attempts: if you think well to carry this as yow may, the doublenes of the benefite detends the deceit from reproue. What thank you of it?

Ifa. The image of it giveth me content already, and I trufl it will grow to a most prouerious perfection.

Duk. It is not much in your holding vp: battle you speecply to Angelo, if for this night he interest you to his bed, give him promife of fatisfa{tion: I will prefentry to S. Lukes, there at the moated-Grange reciteth this decreted Mariana; at that place call wp me, and dispatch with Angelo, that it may be quickly.

Ifa. I thank you for this comfort: fare you well good father.

Exit.

Enter Elbow, Clemen, Officers.

Elb. Nay, if there be no remedy for it, but that you will needes buy and fell men and women like beefes, we shall have all the world drinke browne & white battard.

Duk. Oh heauen, what waftue is here.

Clm. Twas never merry world before, of two viuies the merrief was put downe, and the wrothef allow'd by order of Law; a furd goune to keep him warme, and furd with Foxe and Lamb & kinne too, to signifie, that craft being richer then Innocency, flands for the faeling.

Elb. Come your way fit: bleffe you good Father Friar.

Duk. And you good Brother Father, what offence hath this man made you, Sir?

Elb. Marry
Measure for Measure.

Eib. Marry Sir, he hath offended the Law; and Sir, we take him to be a Thief too Sir: for wee have found upon him Sir, a strange Padlock, which we have lent to the Deputy.

Duke. Fie, sirrah, a Bawd, a wicked bawd, The euel that thou castleft to be done, That is thy meanes to liue. Do thou but thinke What's to crom a maw, or cloath a bawde, From such a ficthe vice: say to thy selfe, From their abominable and beastly toughness, I drink, I eate away my felle, and liue. Canst thou beleue thy living is a life, So finckingly depending: Go mend, go mend. Cla. Indeed, it do's finck in some sort, Sir, But yet Sir I would profce.

Duke. Nay, if the diuell have graven thee proofs for sin Thou wilt profce his. Take him to prison Officers: Correction, and Instruction must both worke Ere this rude beast will profce.

Eib. He mulf before the Deputy Sir, he ha's given him warning the Deputy cannot abide a Whore-maister: if he be a Whore-manger, and comes before him, he was as good go a mule on his errand.

Duke. That we were all, as some would seeme to bee From our faults, as faults from seeming free. Enter Lucio.

Eib. His necke will come to your waist, a Cord Sir. Cla. I top comfort, I cry baile: Here's a Gentleman, and a friend of mine.

Luc. Now how noble Pompey? What, at the wheels of Caesar? Art thou led in triumph? What is there none of Prodigant Images newly made woman to bee had now, for putting the hand in the pocket, the clutches? What reply? Ha? What faileth thou to this Tune, Matter, and Method? Is't not drown'd 1th last time? Ha? What faileth thou Toot? Is the weighth as it was? Man? Which is the vay? Is't sad, and few words? Or how? The tricke of it?

Duke. Still thus, and thus I'll vorse.

Luc. How doth my deere Morfell, thy Multris? Procures the bill? Ha?

Cla. Troth Sir, thee hath eaten vp all her beeef, and she is her felle in the tub.

Luc. Why is't good? It is the right of it: it must be so. Euer your freth Whore, and your pouder'd Baud, an vnfron'd conuenience, it must be so. Art going to prison Pompey?

Cla. Yes faith Sir.

Luc. They 's not amifsst. Pompey: farewell, goe say I sent thee theret: for debt Pompey? Or how?

Eib. For being a bau'd, for being a bau'd.

Luc. Well, then imprison him: If imprisonment be the due of a bau'd, why 's this right? Bau'd is he double-leffe, and of antiquity too: Baud borne. Forwell good Pompey: Commend me to the prison Pompey, you will turne good husband now Pompey, you will keepe the hau'e.

Cla. I hope Sir, your good Worship will be my baiit.

Luc. No indeed Sir: I not Pompey, it is not the wear: I will pray (Pompey) to encreas't your bondage if you take it not patiently: Why, your mettle is the more: Adieu truefth Pompey, Bleffe you Friastr.

Duke. And you.

Luc. Do's Broider paint bill, Pompey? Ha?

Eib. Come your waies Sir, come.

Cla. You will not baile me then Sir?

Luc. Then Pompey, nor now: what newes abroad Friar? What newes?

Eib. Come your waies Sir, come.

Luc. Go to kennell (Pompey) goe: What newes Friar of the Duke?

Duke. I know none: can you tell me of any?

Luc. Some lay he is with the Emperor of Russia: other some, he is in Rome: but where is he thinke you?

Duke. I know not where: but wherefouer, I with him well.

Luc. It was a mad fantastical tricke of him to fleaze from the State, and vspar the beggerie lee was never borne to: Lord Angelo Dukes it well in his abience: he putts tranfgeffion too.

Duke. He do's well Sir,

Luc. A little more knitted to Lecherie would doe no harme in him: Something too crabbed that way, Friar.

Duke. It is too general a vice: and euereit must cure it.

Luc. Yet in good fough, the vice is of a great kindred; it is well allied, but it is impossiiable to extirpe it quite, Friar, till eaying and drinking be put downe. They say this Angelo was not made by Man and Woman, after this downe-right vay of Creation: is it true, thynke you?

Duke. How should he be made then?

Luc. Some report, a Sea-maid spawn'd him, Some, that he was begge betweene two Stock-fifties. But it is certaine, that when he makes water, his Vrines is congeal'd ice, that I know to bee true: and he is a motion genetrical, that's infallible.

Duke. You are pleasent Sir, and speake apace.

Luc. Why, what a subtle life thing is this in him, for the rebellion of a God-piece, to take away the life of a man? Would the Duke that is abift have done this? Ere he would have hang'd a man for the getting a hundred Baffards, he would haue paide for the Nursing a thousand. He had some feeling of the sport, hee knew the fe, and that instructed him to mercie.

Duke. I never heard the abift Duke much detected for Woman, he was not enclisht that vay.

Luc. Oh Sir, you are deceied.

Duke. 'Tis not possible.

Luc. Who, not the Duke? Yes, your beggar of fifty: and his wife was, to put a ducket in her Clack-dish; the Duke had Crochets in him. Hee would be drunke too, that let me informe you.

Luc. Sir, I was an inward of his: a fabe fellow was the Duke, and I beleue I know the cause of his vvwdraving.

Duke. What (I prethee) might be the cause?

Luc. No, pardon: 'Tis a secrett must be lock'd with in the teeth and the lippe's; but this I can lett you under-stand, the greater file of the subject held the Duke to be vvie.

Luc. A very superficial, ignorant, vnweighing fellow.

Duke. Either this is Emuie in you, Folly, or misliking: The very freame of his life, and the businesse he hath helmed, must vpon a warranted necece, give him a better proclamaition. Let him be but semelomied in his owne bringings forth, and hee shall appeare to the enuisous, a Scholler, a Statefman, and a Soldier: therefore you speake unskilfully: or, if your knowledge bee more, it is much darkned in your malice.
Measure for Measure.

Luc. Sir, I know him, and I love him.

Duke. Loue talks with better knowledge, & knowledge with deare loue.

Luc. Come Sir, I know what I know.

Duke. I can hardly beleue that, since you know not what you feake. But (as ever the Duke returne) as our praiers are he may let mee define you to make your answer before him : if he bee honnf of you have spake, you have courage to maintain it : I am bound to call upon you, and I pray you your name?

Luc. Sir my name is Lucio, well known to the Duke.

Duke. He shall know you better Sir, if I may live to report you.

Luc. I tear you not.

Duke. O, you hope the Duke will returne no more: or you imagine me to vnhurtfull an opposit but indeed I can doe you little harme : You'll for-faire this a-gage?

Luc. Ibe hang'd! Tho' you are deecu'd in mee Friar. But no more of this: Cauft thou tell if Claudio die to morrow, or no?

Duke. Why should he die Sir?

Luc. Why? For filling a bottle with a Timme-drift: I would the Duke we takke of were return'd againe: this vengeful Agent will vn-people the Province with Contiuence. Sparrows mult not build in houte-ces, because they are lecherous: The Duke yet would haue darike deeds darkeclie answered. hee would never bring them to lights; would hee were return'd. Marrie this Claudio is condemned for entriving, farwell good Friar, I prethee pray for me: The Duke (I say to thee againe) would eat Mutton on Fridays. He's now pat it, yet (and I say to thee) hee would month with a beggner, though five faine browne-bred and Garlske: by that I said I: Farewell.

Duke. No might, nor greatnesse in mortality
Can enure escape : Back-wounding columnne
The white fo vertue strikes. What King so strong,
Can tie the gall vp in the flanderous tong?
But who cometh here?

Enter Effendius, Provost, and Bawd.

Eff. Go, away with her to prison.

Bawd. Good my Lord be quiet to me, your Honor is accounted a mercifull man: good my Lord.

Eff. Double, and trebble admonition, and still for-feite in the same kinde? This would make merry swear and play the Tarant.

Pro. A Bawd of eleven yeares continuance, may it please your Honor.

Bawd. My Lord, this is one Lucio's information against me, Mirtha Kate Kepeped was with child by him in the Duke's time, he promis'd her marriage : his Childe is a yeare and a quarter oldle come Philip and Is-cade: I haue kept it my selfe; and see how he goes about to abufe me.

Eff. That fellow is a fellow of much License : Let him be call'd before vs. Away with her to prison: Go to no more words. Proof, my Brother. Angelo will not be alter'd, Claudio must die to morrow: Let him be furnish'd with Dietines, and haue all charitable preparatition. If any brother wrought by my pitie, it should not be so with him.

Pro. So please you, this Friar hath bene with him, and adults him for th entertainement of death.

Eff. Good even, good Father.

Duke. Biffle, and goodnesse on you.

Eff. Of whence are you?

Duke. Not of this Countrie, though my chance is now
To vie it for my time: I am a brother
Of gracious Order, late come from the Sea,
In special businesse from his Holinesse,

Eff. What news abroad i'th World?

Duke. None, but that there is so great a Favour on goodnesse, that the dissolution of it must cure it. No-velle is onely in requitest, and as it is as dangerous to be aged in any kinde of cause, as it is vertuous to be constant in any undertaking, there is scarce truth enough alue to make Societies secure, but Securetie enough to make Fellowships accurst: Much upon this riddle runs the wisedome of the world: This newses is old enough, yet it is quere dizes newses. I pray you Sir, of what disposition was the Duke?

Eff. One, that above all other strifes,
Contended especialy to know himselfe.

Duke. What pleasure was he given to?

Eff. Rather rejoicing to see another mercy, thy-merrie at anie thing which proffest to make him rejoice, A Gentleman of all temperance. But leave wee him to his events, with a praier they may prove properous, & let them define to know, how you finde Claudio prepared?
I am made to vnderstand, that you have lent him vtilation.

Duke. He proffesses to have receiv'd no finitter mesure from his Judge, but most willingly humbles himselfe to the determination of Justice: yet had he framed to himselfe (by the instruction of his trustye) manie deceyving promises of life, whereby (by my good pleasure) have directred to helpe: and now he refolvd to die.

Eff. You have paid the heauens your Function, and the prisoner the vere debt of your Calling. I have la-bour'd for the poore Gentleman, to the extremest shore of my modestie, but my brother Justice haue I found so fevere, that he hath forc'd me to tell him, hee is indeede litlle.

Duke. If this owne life,
Anwere the frightnesse of his proceeding,
It shall become him well: whereof if he chance to faile
he hath entenc'd himselfe.

Eff. I am going to visit the prisoner, Fare you well.

Duke. Peace be with you.

He who the sword of Heaven will bear,
Should be as holy, as ferueare:
Patterne in himselfe to know,
Grace to hand, and Vertue go:
More, nor leafe to others paying,
Then by selfe-offences weighing.
Shame me, there, whole crueli striking,
Kills for faults of his owne liking:
Twice trebble shame on Angelo,
To weede my vice, and let his grow.
Oh, what may Man within him hide,
Though Angel on the outward side?
How may likenesse make in crimes,
Making pruche on the Times,
To draw with ylde Spiders firings
Most ponderous and substanstial things?
Craft against vice, I must apple.
With Angelo to night shall ye
His old betrothest (but deforind.)
So diguise shall by th'disguised
Pay with falshood, false exacting,
And perforne an olde constellating.
Scene Prima.

Enter Mariana, and Boy singing.

Song.

Take, oh take those lips away,
That so sweetly were forsworn,
And those eyes: the break of day;
Light that doe mislead the Maure;
But let those lips bring againe, bring againe,
Scales of love, that seal'd in vaine, seal'd in vaine.

Enter Duke.

Mar. Break off thy song, and haste thee quiet away,
Here comes a man of comfort, whole advice
Hath often fill'd my brawling discontent.
I cry you mercy, Sir, and well could wish
You had not found me here to murkall
Let me excuse me, and beleve me so,
My witch it much displeas'd, but pleas'd my wo.
Duk. This good, though Muffick oft hath such a charm
To make bad good, and good prove to a harme.
I pray you tell me, hath any body enquir'd for mee here today;
Much vpon this time have I promis'd here to meete.

Mar. You have not bin enquir'd after: I have fat here all day.

Enter Isabella.

Duk. I doe confidently beleve you; the time is come even now.
I shall crave your forbearance a little, may be
I will call vpon you anon for some advantage to your self.

Mar. I am always bound to you.

Duk. Very well met, and well come:
What is the newes from this good Deputie?

Ifab. He hath a Garden circummur'd with Bricke,
Whose western fide is with a Vineyard back'd,
And to that Vineyard is a plachede gate,
That makes his opening with this bigger Key:
This other doth command a little doore,
Which from the Vineyard to the Garden leads,
There haue I made my promise, vpon the Heavy midle of the night, to call vpon him.

Duk. But shal you on your knowledge find this way?

Ifab. I haue tane a due, and wary note vpon't,
With whispering, and most guilitie diligence,
In action all of precepts, he did show me
The way twice oare.

Duk. Are there no other tokenes
Betwene you greed, concerning her obseruance?

Ifab. No: none but only a repairie isth darke,
And that I haue posset him, my most flay
Can be but briefe: for I have made him know,
I have a Seruant comes with me along
That flies vpon me; whose pervertisation is,
I came about my Brother.

Duk. Tis well bene vpon vp.
I have not yet made knowyne to Mariana Enter Mariana.

A word of this: what hoa, withinge; come forth,
I pray you be acquainted with this Maid,
She comes to doe you good.

Ifab. I doe deffe the like.

Duk. Do you perivade your selfe that I respect you?

Scene Secunda.

Enter Provost and Clowne.

Pro. Come hither sirrah; can you cut off a mans head?

Clo. If the man be a Bachelor Sir, I can:
But if he be a married man, he's his wifes head,
And I can never cut off a womans head.

Pro. Come sir, loose me your snatches, and yield mee
A direct answere. To morrow morning are to doe
Claude and Barnardine: here is in our prison a common executioner,
Who in his office lackes a helper, if you will take it on you to assist him,
I shall redeeme you from your Gynes: if not, you shall have your full time of imprisonme,
And your delieuerance with an unspotted whipping;
For you have beene a notorious bawd.

Clo. Sir, I have beene an unlawfull bawd, time out of Minde, but yet I will bee content to be a lawfull hangman: I would bee glad to receive some inducement from My fellow partner.

Pro. What hoa, Abhorsen; where's Abhorsen there?

Enter Abhorsen.

Abh. Do you call sir?

Pro. Sirrah, here's a fellow will helpe you to morrow
In your execution: if you thinke it meet, compound with him by the yeere, and let him abide here with you: round Vf him for the present, and dismissed him, he cannot plead his exculpation with you the bath beeene a Bawd.

Abh. A Bawle Sir? By vpon him, he will discredit our mysteries.

Pro. Go to sir, you weighe qualitie: a feather will turne the Scale.

Clo. Pray sir, by your good favour: for surely sir, a good favour you haue, but that you have a hanging look:

Does you call sir, your occupation a MYSTERE ?

What say you to this Sir?

Duke. What is that Bernardine, who is to be executed tomorrow?

Pro. A Bohemian borne: But here must vp & bred,

One that is a prisoner nine yeeres old.

Duke. How came it, that the absente Duke had not either deliver'd him to his libertie, or executing him? I have heard it was ever his manner to do so.

Pro. His friends still wroght Repreences for him:

And indeed his fact till now in the government of Lord Angelo, came not to an undoubted full proffes.

Duke. It is now apparent?

Pro. Most manifest, and not denied by himselfe.

Duke. Hath he borne himselfe penitently in prison?

How seems he to be touch'd?

Pro. A man that apprehends death no more dreadful fully, but as a drunken sleepe, careless, wakelefe, and fearelefe of what's pall, pretent, or to come: infensible of mortality, and desperately mortal.

Duke. He wants advice.

But he must die to morrow?

Pro. None Sir, none.

Duke. As near the dawning, Prouost, as it is.

You shall hear more ere Morning.

Pro. Happely

You gрешing know: yet I believe there comes

No countermand: no such example have we:

Besides, upon the verie finge of suflfere,

Lord Angelo hath to the publicke care

Profeft the contrarie.

Duke. I know them both.

Duke. The Contents of this, is the returne of the Duke; you shall anon over-read it at your pleasure: where you shall finde within the two daies, he will be hence. This is a thing that Angles knowes not, for hee this very day receiues letters of strange tenor, per-

Measure for Measure.

After him (Fellowes) bring him to the blocke.

Pro. Now Sit, how do you finde the prisoner?
Duke. A creature vntrue-pard, vnmeet for death,
And to transport him in the mind he is,
Were damnable.

Pro. Here in the prison, Father,
There died this morning of a cruel Feusuor,
One Ragazone, a most notorious Pirate;
A man of Claudio's yeares; his beard, and head
Iust of his colour. What if we do omit
This Reprobate, til' he were wel enchi'd,
And satisfy the Deputie with the vifage
Of Ragazone, more like to Claudio?
Duke. Oh, 'tis an accident that heaven provideth;
Dispatch it presently, the hour draws on Prefift by Angelo: See this be done,
And sent according to command, whilst I
Perfwade this rude wretch willingly to die.

Pro. This shall be done (good ffather) prefently:
But Barnardine muft die this afternoone,
And how shall we continue Claudio,
To tune me from the danger that might come,
If he were knowne alioe?
Duke. Let this be done,
Put them in secret holds, both Barnardine and Claudio,
Ere twice the Sun hath made his iournall greeting
To yonder generation, you shall finde
Your safetie maniFested.

Pro. I am your free dependant.
Duke. Quicke, dispatch, and send the head to Angelo
Now will I write Letters to Angelo.
(Th'Proouff he shal bear then) whose contents
Shall witnessse to him I am noere at home:
And that by great Inunotions I am bound
To enter publiquely: him Ile defire
To meet me at the confercated Fount,
A League betweene the Citie: and from thence,
By cold gradation, and weele-ballance'd forme.
We shall proceed with Angelo.

Enter Procus.

Pro. Here is the head, Ile carrie it my felfe.
Duke. Conuenient is it: Make a swift returne,
For I would commune with you of fuch things,
That want no eare but yours.
Pro. Ile make all speede.
Ifabell within.

Ifa. Peace hoa, be here.
Duke. The tongue of Ifabell. She's come to know,
If yet her brothers pardon be come hithe:
But I will keep her ignorant of her good,
To make her heavenly comforts of dispaire,
When it is least expected.

Enter Ifabell.

Ifa. Hoa, by your iee.
Duke. Good morning to you, faire, and gracious daughter.
Ifa. The better gien me by fo holy a man,
Faft yet the Deputie fent my brothers pardon?
Duke. He hath releas'd him, Ifabell, from the world,
His head is off, and fent to Angelo.
Ifa. Nay, but it is not fo.
Duke. It is no other,
Shew your wisdome daughter in your clofe patience.
Ifa. Oh, I wil to him, and plucke out his eyes.
Duke. You shall not be admitted to his fight.
Ifa. Unhappie Claudio, wretched Ifabell.

Inußious world, most damned Angelo.
Duke. This nor hurts him, nor profits you a lot,
For he is therefore, give your caufe to heaven,
Mark what I fay, which you fhall finde
By every fillable a faithful verifie.
The Duke comes home to morrow: nay drie your eyes,
One of our Couent, and his Confeffor
Gives me this infance: Already he hath carried Notice to Escalus and Angelo,
Who do prepare to meete him at the gates, (downe)
There to guie vp their power: If you can pace your wife
In that good path that I would it go,
And you shall have your bomfe on this wretch,
Grace of the Duke, reuenges to your heart,
And general Honor.
Ifa. I am directed by you.
Duke. This Letter then to Frier Peter glue,
'Tis that he fent me of the Duke returne:
Say, by this token, I defire his company
At Moras's houfe to night. Her caufe, and yours
He perfich him withall, and he fhall bring you
Before the Duke; and to the head of Angelo
Accusfhe him home and home. For my poore felfe,
I am combined by a Sacred Vow,
And fhall be afiene. Wendi you with this Letter:
Command thefe fretting waters from your eies
With a light heart; trufi not my hoile Order
If I percur your course: whole heares?

Enter Lucius.

Luc. Good even;
Frier, where's the Provouff?
Duke. Not within Sir.
Luc. Oh prettie Ifabell, I am pale as mine heart, to See thine eyes so red: thou muft be patient; I am faine
To dine and flup with water and bran: I dare not for my Heart fill my belly. One fruitful Meale would fete mee too: but they fay the Duke will be here to Morrow.
By my troth Ifabell I'ld tythe brother, if the ride fantastic Duke of darkie corners had bene at home, he had liued.
Duke. Sir, the Duke's numerous little beholding
To your reports, but the belt is, he lues not in them.
Luc. Frier, thou knowest not the Duke fo wel as I do: he's a better woodman then thou tak't him for.
Duke. Well: you fhall answer this one day, Fare ye well.
Luc. Nay tarry, I'll go along with thee,
I can tell thee pretty tales of the Duke.
Duke. You haue told me so many of him already far
If they be true: if not true, none were enough.
Lucia. I was once before him for getting a Wench
With childe.
Duke. Did you fuch a thing?
Luc. Yes marrige did I: but I was faine to forswear it,
They would elie marrige me to the rosten Medler.
Duke. Sir your company is fatter then honest, ree you well.
Luc. By my troth I'le goe with thee to the lanes end:

Duke. These Letters at fit time deliver me. The Proouff knowes our purpose and our plot, The master being a foote, keep your inftruction And hold you euer to our spacial drift, Though sometimes you doe blench from this to that. Ascause doth minifter : Go call at Flauia's house, And tell him where I stay : give the like notice To Valentine, Rawland, and to Craffon, And bid them bring the Trumpets to the gate: But send me Flauia first.

Peter. It shall be speeded well.

Enter Varrius.

Duke. I thank thee Varrius, thou haft made good haft, Come, we will waikte : There's other of our friends Will greet vs hereon soon : my gentle Varrius. Exeunt.

Scena Sexta.

Enter Isabella and Mariana.

Isab. To speak to indirectly I am loath, I would say the truth, but to accuse him so That is your part, yet I am advis'd to doe it, Heartes, to vass full purpose.

Mar. Be ruled by him.

Isab. Besides he tells me, that if peraduenture He speake against me on the aduenture tide, I should not thinke it strange, for 'tis a phyfeke That's bitter, to sweet end.

Enter Peter.

Mar. I would Frier Peter

Isab. Oh peace, the Frier is come.

Peter. Come I have found you out a stand moift fit, Where you may have such vantage on the Duke He shall not passe you: Twice have the Trumpets sounded, The generous, and grauent Citizens Have hent the gates, and very neere upon The Duke is entering : Therefore hence away. Exeunt.

Allus Quintus. Scena Prima.

Enter Duke, Varrius, Lords, Angelo, Euslus, Lucio, Citizens at Generall draers.

Duk. My very worthy Colen, fairely met, Our old, and faithfull friend, we are glad to see you.

Ang. &c. Happy returne be to your royall grace.

Duk. Many and b Carte Thankings to you both : We haue made enquirie of you, and we haue Such good neuen of your Justice, that our foule Cannot but yeeld you forth to publique thanks For running more requital.

Ang. You make my bonds still greater.

Duk. Oh your defect speaks loud, & I should wrong it To locke it in the wards of covert boleome When it deuertes with characters of braffe A forteed rellence 'gainst the tooth of time, And raze of oblivion : Give we your hand At I let the Subiecte be, to make them know That outward ceritenees would saine proclaime Favourous that keepe with in : Come Euslus, You must walke by vs, on our other hand : And good supporter are you.

Enter Peter and Isabella.

Peter. Now is your time

Speak loud, and kneele before him. Isab. Justice, O royall Duke, rule your regard Vpon a wrong'd (I should haue faie a Maid) Oh worthy Prince, dishonor not your eye By throwing it on any other obiect, Till you have heard me, in my true complaint, And given me Justice, Justice, Justice.

Duk. Relate your wrongs; In what, by whom? be briefe: Here is Lord Angelo shall glaue you Justice, Reuende your felle to him. Isab. Oh worthy Duke, You bid me speake redemption of the diuell, Heare me your selle : for that which I must speake Must either punifh me, or being beleu'd, Or wring redresse from you: Heare me: oh heare me, heere.

Ang. My Lord, her wis I feare me are not firme She hath bin a suitor to me, for her Brother Cut off by course of Justice. Isab. By course of Justice.

Ang. And she will speake most bitterly, and straghe.

Isab. Most
Ifab. Most strange: but yet most truly will I speak,
That Angelo's torturer, is it not strange?
That Angelo's a murderer, is't not strange?
That Angelo is an adulterous thief,
An hypocrite, a virgin violator,
Is it not strange? and strange?
Duke. Nay it is ten times strange?
Ifa. It is not true he is Angelo,
Then this is all as true, as it is strange;
Nay, it is ten times true, for truth is truth.
To the end of reckoning,
Duke. Away with her: a poor soul
She speaks this, in th'infirmity of sense.
Ifa. Oh Prince, I conjure thee, as thou believest
There is another comfort, then this world,
That thou neglect me not, with that opinion
That I am touch'd with madness: make it not impossible
That which but seems unlike, 'tis not the ground
But one, the wickedest caitiff on the ground:
May seem as fine, as grace, as dull, as absolute:
As Angelo, even so may Angelo
In all his dressings, caraets, titles, forms,
Be an arch-villain: Belieue it, royal Prince
If he be leafe, he's nothing, but he's more,
Had I more name for badness.
Duke. By mine honesty
If he be mad, as I belieue no other,
Her madness hath the oddeft frame of sense,
Such a dependancy of thing, on thing,
As e're I heard in madness.
Ifab. Oh gracious Duke
Harpe not on that; or do not banish reason
For inequality, but let thy reason ferue
To make the truth appeare, where it seems hid,
And hide the fallie femeas true.
Duke. Many that are not mad
Have fure more lacke of reason:
What would you fay?
Ifab. I am the Sifer of one Lucio,
Condemn'd upon the Act of Formation
To leave his head, condemn'd by Angelo,
I, in (probation of a Siftership)
Was lent to by my Brother: one Lucio
As then the Meflenger.
Luc. That's I, like your Grace:
I came to her from Lucio, and deire her,
To her gracious fortune with Lord Angelo,
For her poore Brothers pardon.
Ifab. That she indeede.
Duke. You were not bid to speake.
Luc. No, my good Lord,
Nor with'd to hold my peace.
Duke. I wish you now then,
Pray you take note of: and when you have
A businesse for your felfe: pray heauen you then
Be perfec't.
Luc. I warrant your honor.
Duke. The warrant's for your felfe: take heed to:
Ifab. This Gentleman told me what of my Tale,
Luc. Right.
Duke. It may be right, but you are not the wrong
To speake before your time: proceed,
Ifab. I went.
To this pernicious Caiiffes Deputye.
Ifab. That's somewhat madly spoken.
Ifab. Pardon it,
Measure for Measure.

Of a strange Fever: upon his knees request

Being come to knowledge, that there was complaint

Intended 'gainst Lord Angelo, came I hither

To speake as from his mouth, what he doth know

Is true, and false: And what he with his oath

And all profession will make vp fullleare

Whensoever he's contented: First for this woman,

To inflifie this worthy Noble man:

So vulgarly and personally accus'd,

Her thall you hear disprised to her eyes,

Tell her shee confess in.

Duk. Good Frier, let's hear it:

Do you not at this time, Lord Angelo?

Oblique, the vanity of wretched looles,

Give vs some testes, Come, c一旦 Angelo.

In this I shall impart all: you judge

Of your owne Cause: Is this the Witnes Frier?

Enter Mariana.

First, let her shew your face, and after, speake.

Mar. Pardon my Lord, I will not shew my face

Vntill my husband bid me.

Duk. What, are you married?

Mar. No, my Lord.

Duk. Are you a Maid?

Mar. No my Lord.

Duk. A Widow then?

Mar. Neither, my Lord.

Duk. Why you are nothing then neither Maid, Widow, nor Wife?

Luc. My Lord, she may be a Puncke: for many of them, are neither Maid, Widow, nor Wife.

Duk. Silence that fellow: I would he had some cause to prattle for himselfe.

Luc. Well my Lord.

Mar. My Lord, I do confess I here was married,

And confess besides, I am no Maid,

I have known my husband, yet my husband

Knowes not, that euer he knew me.

Luc. He was drunk then, my Lord, it can be no better.

Duk. For the benefit of silence, would you were to so.

Luc. Well my Lord.

Duk. This is no witness for Lord Angelo.

Mar. Now I come to't, my Lord.

She that accuseth him of Fornication,

In selfe-fame manner, doth accuse my husband,

And charges him, my Lord, with such a time,

When I'le depose I had him in mine Armes

With all its effect of Loue.

Ang. Charges the more then me?

Mar. Not that I know.

Duk. No? you fay your husband.

Mar. Why iull, my Lord, and that is Angelo,

Who thinks he knowes, that hee knew my body,

But knows, he thinke, that he knowes Isabella.

Ang. This is a strange abuse: Let's see thy face.

Mar. My husband bids me, now I will vnske.

This is ye face, thou crueell Angelo

Which once thou worst, was worth the looking on:

This is the hand, which with a vowd contract

Was fast belockt in thine: This is the body

That tooke away the match from Isabella,

And did supply thee at thy garden-houfe

In her imagin'd person.

Duk. Know you this woman?

Luc. Carnallie the faces.

Duk. Sitha, no more.

Luc. Enough my Lord.

Ang. My Lord, I must confess, I know this woman,

And five yeares since there was some speech of marriage

Between my selfe, and her; which was broke off,

Partly for that her promis'd proportions

Came front of Composition: But in chiefc

For that her reputation was dif-valued

In leuise: Since which time of five yeares

I never spake with her, saw her, nor heard from her

Vpon my faith, and honor.

Mar. Noble Prince,

As there comes light from heaven, and words frd breath,

As there is fince in truth, and truth in vnture,

I am affhanced this mans wife, as strongly

As words could make vp vowe: And my good Lord,

But Tuesday night past, in's garden house,

he knew me as a wife. As this is true,

Let me in safety raise me from my knees,

Or else for euer be confin'd here.

A Marble Monument.

Ang. I did but flmile till now,

Now good my Lord, give me the scope of justice,

My patience here is touch'd: I doe perceive

These poore informall women, are no more

But instruments of some more mighty member

That lets them on. Let me haue way, my Lord,

To finde this prattice out.

Luc. I, with my heart,

And punifh them to your height of pleafure.

Thou foolish Frier, and thou perciouss woman Compact with her that's gone: thankfull thou thy owne,

Though they would swear downe each particular Saint,

Were testimonies against his worth, and credit

That's faid in approbation? you, Lord Efcalu

Sit with my Cozen, lend him your kindes paine

To finde out this abuie, whence 'tis derivd.

There is another Frier that let them on,

Let him be fent for.

Peter. Would he were here, my Lord, for he indeed

Hath fet the women on to this Complainant;

Your Prouost knowes the place where he abides,

And he may fetch him.

Duk. Goe, doe it imfallion:

And you, my noble and well-warranted Cofen

Whom it concernes to heare this matter forth,

Doe with your minours as feemes you beft

In that chafflenent: I for a while

Will leave you; but for you not you ill have

Well determin'd upon these Slanderers.

Ect.

Efc. My Lord, we'll doe it throughly: Signior Lucin, did not you fay you knew that Frier Lambard to be a dishonest person?

Luc. Cunctillus non factus Monachum, honest in nothing but in his Clothes, and one that hath spake most villous speeches of the Duke.

Efc. We shall intreat you to abide here till he come,

And force them against him: we shall finde this Frier a notable fellow.

Luc. As any in Vienna, on my word.

Efc. Call that fame Isabella here once againe: I would speake with her: pray you, my Lord, giue me leave to question, you shall see how Ie handle her.

Luc. Not better then he, by her owne report,

Efe. Say you?

Luc. Marry, i thinke, if you handled her privately
Measure for Measure.

She would sooner confesse, perchance publicly she'll be ashamed.

Enter Duke, Provost, Isabella.

Euf. I will goe darkely to worke with her.

Luc. That's the way: for women are light at midnight.

Euf. Come on Milthia, here's a Gentlewoman, Denies all that you have saied.

Luc. My Lord, here comes the rascal I spoke of.

Here, with the Provost.

Euf. In very good time; speake not you to him, till we call upon you.

Luc. Mum.

Euf. Come Sir, did you let these women on to flander Lord Angelo? they have confed you did.

Duk. 'Tis false.

Euf. How? Know you where you are?

Duk. Respect to your great place; and let the diuell Be sometime honour'd, for his burning throne. Where is the Duke? tis he should have me speake.

Euf. The Duke's in vs: and we will have you speake, Looke you speake truly.

Duk. Boldly, at least. But oh, poor foules, Come you to speake the Lamb here of the Fox. Good night to your redresse: Is the Duke gone? Then is your cause gone too: The Duke's vniust, Thus to retoru your manfull Appeal, And put your triall in the villaines mouth, Which here you come to accoule.

Luc. This is the rascal: this is he I spoke of.

Euf. Why thou vnreconcil, and vnhallowed Fryer: If't is not enough thou hast suborn'd these women, To accuse this worthy man? but in foule mouth, And in the witnesse of his proper care, To call him villain: and then to glance from him, To that Duke himselfe, to taxe him with insolence? I take him hence to th' racke with him: we'll to vse you joynet by joynet, but we will know his purpose:

What? vnust?

Duk. Be not so hot: the Duke dare
No more stretche this finger of mine, then he Dares rake his owne: his Subiet is not, Nor here Prouinciall: My business in this State Made me a looker on here in Venice,

Where I haue fene corruption boyle and bubble, Till it ore-rune the Stewes: Lawes, for all faults, But faults so countenanc'd, that the strong Statutes Stand like the forrestes in a Butlers shop.

As much in mocke, as marke.

Euf. Slander to the State: Away with him to prison.

Ang. What can you vouch against him Signior Lucio? Is this the man that you did tell vs of?

Luc. 'Tis he, my Lord: come hither goodman bald-pate, doe you know me?

Duk. I remember you Sir, by the sound of your voice, I met you at the Prison, in the absence of the Duke.

Duk. Most notably Sir.

Luc. Do you vs Sir: And was the Duke a flesh-monger, a foole, and a coward, as you then reported him to be?

Duk. You must(Sir) change persons with me, ere you make that my report: you indeed spake so of him, and much more, much worse.

Luc. Oh thou damnable fellow: did nor I plucke thee by the nose, for thy speeches?

Duk. I protest, I loue the Duke, as I loue my selfe.

Ang. Harke how the villaines would close now, after his treasonable abuses.

Euf. Such a fellow is not to be talk'd withall: Away with him to prifon: Where is the Provost? away with him to prifon: lay bolts enough vpou him: let him speake no more: away with those Gigletts too, and with the other confedrate companion.

Duk. Stay Sir, stay a while.

Ang. What, refists he? help him Lucio.

Luc. Come sir, come sir, come Sir: foh sir, why you bald-pate lying rascal, you must be hooded muff you? show your knaves vidige with a poxe to you: show your fleape-bring face, and be hang'd an house: will's not off?

Duk. Thou art the first knave, that ere madit a Duke.

First Provost, let me bayle thefe gentle three:

Sneake not away Sir, for the Fryer, and you, Must haue a word anon: lay hold on him.

Luc. This may proue worse then hangning.

Duk. What you have spake, I pardon: fit you downe, We'll borrow place of him Sir, by your leaque: Ha' it thou or word, or wit, or impudence, That yet can doe thee office? If thou haft rely vpou it, till my tale be heard, And hold no longer our.

Ang. Oh, my dread Lord, I should be guiltier then my guiltiness, To thinke I can be vndifferentable,

When I perswade your grace, like powre duiue, Hath look'd vnpon my pifiets. Then good Prince, No longer Sefion hold upon my flame, But let my Triall, be mine owne Confession; Immediate sentence then, and frequent death, Is all the grace I beg.

Duk. Come hither Mariana,

Say: was thou ere contrafted to this woman?

Ang. I was my Lord.

Duk. Go take her hence, and marry her instantly.

Doe you the office (Fryer) which confummate, Return him here again: goe with him Provost. Exit. Euf. My Lord, I am more amaz'd at his disfonor, Then at the strangeness of it.

Duk. Come hither Isabella,

Your Fryer is now your Prince: As I was then Aduerteryng, and holy to your buniflene, (No changing heart with habit) I am still, Attacked at your feruice.

Isab. Oh give me pardon

That I, your vallaine, haue imploide, and pain'd
Your vnoowne Soueraignty.

Duk. You are pardon'd Isabella:

And now, deere Maide, be you as freetous,

Your Brothers death I know fits at your heart:

And you may manuall, why I oblicur'd my felfe,

Labouring to faue his life: and would not rather

Make ratt remontrance of my hidden powre,

Then let him bo loft: oh moft kinde Maid,

It was the swift celestie of his death,

Which I did thinke, with flower foot came on,

That brain'd my purpose: but peace be with him,

That life is better life past fearing death,

Then that which liues to feare: make it your comfort,
Measure for Measure.

So happy is your Brother.

Enter Angelo, Mariva, Peter, Provost.

Ifab. I do my Lord,

Duk. For this new-married man, approaching here, Whole falk imagination yet hath wrong'd
Your well defended honor: you must pardon
For Mariana's sake; but as he aluidg'd your Brother,
Being criminal in double violation
Of sacred chastitie, and of promise-break,
Thereon dependant for your Brothers life,
The very mercy of the Law cries out
Most audible, even from his proper tongue.
An Angelo for Claudio, death for death:
Haste still painst haft, and leave, answers leave;
Like doth quit like, and Measure still for Measure:
Then Angelo, thy fault's thus manifested;
Which though thou wouldst it deny, deserved be vantage.
We do condemme thee to the very blocke
Where Claudio stoo'd to death, and with like haste.
Away with him.

Mar. Oh my most gracious Lord,
I hope you will not mocke me with a husband?
Duk. It is your husband mock't you with a husband,
Confounding to the fate-gard of your honor,
I thought your marriage fit: elle Imputation,
For that he knew, you might reproach your life,
And choose your good to come: for his Poulcellions,
Although by confusion they are ours;
We doe ordnate, and widow you with all,
To buy you a better husband,

Mar. Oh my deere Lord,
I crave no other, nor no better man.

Duke. Neere craine him, we are definate.

Mar. Gentle my Liege.

Duke. You doe but looke your labour.
Away with him to death: Now Sir, to you,

Mar. Oh my good Lord, sweet Isabella, take my part,
Lead me your knees, and all my life to come,
I'll lend you all my life to doe you service.

Duke. Against all fense you doe importune her,
Should the kneele downe, in mercie of this fiend:
Her Brothers ghost, his paused bed would brake,
And take her hence in horror.

Mama. Isabella:
Sweet Isabella, doe yet but kneele by me,
Hold vp your hands, say nothing: I'll speake all.
They say hell men are moulded out of faults,
And for the mofl, become much more the better
For being a little bad: So may my husband.
Oh Isabella: will you not lend a knee?

Duke. He dies for Claudio's death.

Isab. Most bounteous Sir.

Look if it please you, on this man condemn'd,
As if my Brother liid I partly thinke,
A due sincerite governed his deedes,
Till he did looke me: Since it is so,
Let him not die: my Brother had but luftice,
In that he did the thing for which he diede.
For Angelo, his A & did not ore-take his bad intent,
And must be buried but as an intent
That perish'd by the way: thoughts are no subiects
Intents, but meerly thoughts.

Mar. Mely my Lord,

Duk. Your fortune's unprofitable: stand vp I say:
I have bethought me of another fault.

provost, how came it Claudio was beheaded

At an unuall howre?

Pro. It was commandd so.

Duk. Had you a speciall warrant for the deed?

Pro. No my good Lord: it was by private message.

Duk. For which I doe discharge you of your office,
Give vp your keyes.

Pro. Pardon noble Lord,
I thought it was a fault, but knew it not,
Yet did repent me after more aduance,
For rellimy whereof, one in the prifon
That should by private order els have dice,
I have refered it alues.

Duk. What's he?

Pro. His name is Barnardine.

Duk. I would thou hast done so by Claudio:
Goe fetch him hither, let me looke vpon him.

Efs. I am forre, one so learned, and to wife
As you, Lord Angelo, have fit appear'd,
Should flap to groffie, both in the heat of blood
And lacke of temper'd judgement afterward.

Ang. I am forrie, that such sorrow I procure,
And soe deepe stiks it in my penitent heart,
That I one day more willingly then mercy,
'Tis my deuering, and I doe entreat it.

Enter Barnardine and Provost, Claudio, Julietta.

Duk. Which is that Barnardine?

Pro. This my Lord.

Duk. There was a Friar told me of this man.
Siths, thou art said to have a flubborne soule
That apprehends no further then this world,
And squeer't thy life according: Thou're condemn'd,
But for those earthly faults, I quit them all,
And pray thee take this mercie to provide
For better times to come: Frier aduise him,
I leave him to your hand. What mufhed fellow's that?

Pro. This is another prisoner that I fou'd,
Who should have di'd when Claudio loft his head,
As like as moft to Claudio, as himselfe.

Duk. If he be like your brother, for his sake
Is he pardon'd, and for your louelie sake
Give me your hand, and say you will be mine,
He is my brother too: But tinner time for that:
By this Lord Angelo percevies he's fafe,
Methinks I see a quickening in his eye:
Well, Angelo, your euell quites you well.
Looke that you lose your wife, her worth, worth yours
I finde an apt remembrance in my selfe:
And yet here's one in place I cannot pardon,
You fir's, that knew me for a boole, a Coward,
One all of Luxurie, an artisan, a mad man:
Wherein have I so deler'd of you
That you exell me thus?

Lee. Faith my Lord, I spake it but according to the trick if you will hang me for it you may: but I had rather it would please you, I might be whipt.

Duk. Whipt first, sir, and hang'd after.

Proclaim it Provost round about the Citie,
If any woman born'd by this lawes fellow (As I have heard him swear he there's one who mone begot with child) let her appeare,
And he shall marry her: the nuptiall fin'd,
Let him be whipt and hang'd.

Lee. I defy that your Highnesse do not marry me to a Whore: your Highnesse said eu'n now I made you a
Duke good my Lord do not recompence me, in making me a Cuckold.

Duk. Vpen
Duke. Vpon mine honor thou shalt marie her.
Thy flanders | I forgive, and therewithal
Hem in thy other forfeits: take him to prison,
And see our pleasure herein executed.
Luc. Martyring a punke my Lord, is preffing to death,
Whipping and hanging.
Duke. Slandering a Prince deferves it.
She Claudio that you wrong'd, look you reftore.
Ioy to you Mariana, loute her Angela:
I have confess'd her, and I know her vertue.
Thanks good friend, Efiatus, for thy much goodniffe,
There's more behinde that is more gratulate.
Thanks Prout for thy care, and fervice,
We shall imployme thee in a worthier place.
Forgive him Angelo, that brought you home
The head of Ragazine for Claudio's,
Th'offence pardons it felfe, Deere Isabella,
I have a motion much imports your good,
Wherefore if you'll a willing eate incline;
What's mine is yours, and what is yours is mine.
So bring vs to our Pallace, where we'll flowe
What's yet behinde, that meete you all should know.

The Scene Vienna,
The names of all the Actors.

Angelo, the Deputy.
Efiatus, an ancient Lord.
Claudio, a young Gentleman.
Lucia, a fantaffique.
2. Other like Gentlemen.

FINIS.
The Comedie of Errors.

Alius primus, Scena prima.

Enter the Duke of Ephesus, with the Merchant of Syracuse, Taylor, and other attendant.

Merchant. This is the very man I sought for many days last past, who would fain have me avariciously press my wages, and who by the decree of death and the order of the Duke, Merchant of Sycraca, is to be dismissed. To Merchants our well-seeling Committee, who wanting气象ists to redeem their wares, have the days rigorous nature to redeem their wares, and to redeem our threatening husbands: For since the marriage and intercourse.

Twixt thy foolish Committee and ye, it hath in solemn Synodes been decreed, both by the Serafinians and their felons, to admit no trafficke to our adherence townes.

Nay more, if any born at Ephesus, believe at any Serafinian Martyrs and yeares. Again, if any Serafinian born, come to the Bay of Ephesus, he dies.

His goods confiscated to the Duke dispise. Valued a thousand marks be loosed.

To quit the penalty, and to reconcile him, thy substance, valued at the highest rate, cannot amount unto a hundred Marks, therefore by Law thou art condemned to die. Merch. Yet this my comfort, when your words are done, my woe end like wise with the evening sunne. Merch. Well Serafinian, say in breife the cause.

Why thou departest from thy native home? And for what cause thou camst to Ephesus. Merch. A heayrue taske could not have beene impos'd, Then I to speake my griefes unspokeable. Yet that the world may witnesse that my end was wrought by nature, not by vile offence, He utter what my sorrow gives me leave. In Sycraca I was borne, and wedde. Unto a woman happy but for me, And by me; had not our hap beene bad: With her I did joy, our wealth increas. By prosperous voyages I often made. To Ephesus, till my fathers death, And he great care of goods at sundrie left. Drew mee from kind embracements of my spouse; From whom my absence was not free moneths old, Before her selfe (almost as fainting under).
The Comedie of Errors.

For we may pitty, though not pardon thee,

Merch. Oh had the gods done so, I had not now

Worthily turned them cruellee to vs:

For ere the shipps could meet by twice fife leagues,

We were encountred by a mighty rocke,

Which being violently borne vp,

Our helpfull ship was splitt to the midde,

So that in this vnuit divorce of vs,

Fortune had left to both of vs alike,

What to delight in, what to forrow for,

Her paine, poure soule, seeming as burdenned

With fatter weight, but not with leffer woes,

Was carried with more speed before the winde,

And in our fight they three were taken vp

By Fishtermen of Cardisle, as we thought.

At length another ship had faiz'd on vs,

And knowing whom it was their hap to faie,

Gave healthfull welcome to their ship-wrackt guests,

And would have fet the Fishters of their prey,

Had not their barks beene very fowle of fife;

And therefore homeward did they bend their course.

That hauing you heard me feuer'd from my life,

That by misfortunes was my life prolong'd,

to tell fad stories of my owne misfapts,

Duke. And for the sake of: them thou fhortenwell for,

Doe me the favour to dilate at full,

What hauing befalne of them and they till now.

Merch. My yeonge boy, and yet my eldier care,

At eighteene yeares became inquitifne.

After his brother; and importun'd me

That his attendant, fo his cafe was like,

Reft of his brother, but retain'd his name,

Might bear him company in the queft of him:

Whom whilft I laboured of a loute to fer,

I hazarded the loffe of whom I lou'd.

Five Sommer's hauing I spent in fartheft Greece,

Roning cleane through the bounds of Afia,

And couning homeward, came to Ephesius

Hopefull to finde, ye nonetheless untouht

Or that, or any place that hauors men:

But here remitt end the story of my life,

And happy were I in my timelie death,

Could all my travells warrant me they lieue,

Duke. Hopefull Egon whom the fates hauue markt

To bear the extremitie of dire misfap:

Now truitt me, were it not againft our Lawes,

Agrued my Crown, my extream dignity,

Which Princes would they may not difaffault,

My foule fhoule fue as advocate for thee:

But though thou art aduflhed to the death,

And paffed fentence may not be recall'd

But to our honours great difparagement:

Yet will I favour thee in what I can:

Therefore Marchant, Ile limit thee this day

To fecke thy helpe by benefcial helpe,

Try all the friends thou haft in Ephesius,

Beg thou, or borrow, to make vp the fumme,

And liue if no,then thou art doom'd to die:

Taylor, take him to thy cuttolfe.

Taylor. I will my Lord.

Merch. Hopefull and hopefull doth Egon wend,

But to protracte his flueflife end.

Enter Antithela Eresse, a Marchant, and Dromio.

Mer. Therefore giue out you are of Epidamum,

Left that your goods too foon be confecrate:

This very day a Stracchian Marchant

Is apprehended in a riuall here,

And not being able to buy out his life,

According to the fature of the towne,

Dies ere the wearey funne fet in the Welt:

There is your monie that I had to kepe.

Ant. Goe beare it to the Centaure, where we hoft,

And flay there Dromio, till I come to thee;

Within this houre it will be dinner time,

Till that I leue the manner of the towne,

Peruse the traders, gaze upon the buildings,

And then returne and deepre within mine June.

For with long trauaille I am fliffe and wearey.

Get thee away.

Dro. Many a man would take you at your word,

And goe indeede, having fo good a mane.

Exit Dromio.

Ant. A truffifie villainere, that very oft

When I am dull with care and melancholy,

Lightens my humour with his merry fifts:

What will you walke with me aboue the towne,

And then goe to my Inne and dine with me?

E. Merch. I am instruct frr to certaine Marchants,

Of whom I hope to make much benefite:

I crave your pardon, freeze at fue a clocke,

Please you, if it may be, to fende me to the Matr,

And afterward confort you till bed time:

My prefent buffineffe calls me from you now.

Ant. I will well till then: I will goo loafe my felfe,

And wander vp and downe to view the City.

E. Merch. Sir, I commend you to your owne content.

Exeunt.

Ant. He that commendes me to mine owne content,

Commends me to the thing I cannot get:

I to the world am like a drop of water,

That in the Ocean seeke another drop,

Who falling there to finde his fellow forth,

(For therein inquitifne) contouds hime felfe.

So I, to finde a Mother and a Brother,

In queft of them (vnhappie) loofe my felfe.

Enter Dromio of Ephesius:

Here comes the almanacke of my true date:

What now? How chance thou art return'd fo foonce.

Dro. Return'd fo foonce, rather approach too late.

The Capon burnes, the Pig falls from the spit;

The clocke hath striken twelve upon the bell:

My Miffiris made it one upon my cheeke:

She is fo hot because the meate is cold:

The meate is cold, because you come not home:

You come not home, because you have no flomeake:

You have no flomeake, having broke your falt:

But we that know what 'tis to falt and pray,

Are penitent for your default to day.

Ant. Stop in your winde fift, tell me this I pray?

Where have you left the money that I gave you.

Dro. On fiche pence that I had a wendy day laft,

To pay the Saddler for my Miffiris crupper:

The Saddler had it Sir, I kept it not.

Ant. I am not in a sportive humor now:

Tell me, and daily not, where is the monie?

We being straunders here, how dar'st thou truft

So great a charge from thine owne cuttolfe.

Dro. I pray you leffe firs as you ftit at dinner:

I from my Miffiris come to you in poff:

If I returne I fhall be poft indeede.
The Comedie of Errors.

Luc. Why, headstrong liberty is lafit with woe: There's nothing fituate under heavens eye, But hath his bound in earth, in sea, in skie, The beasts, the fishes, and the winged fowles Are their males subiects, and as their controules: Man more divin, the Master of all thee, Lord of the wide world, and wide watry seas, Indeed with intelleclual fence and foules, Of more preheminence then fist and fowles, Are masters to their females, and their Lords: Then let your will attend on their accords.

Adr. This feruitude makes you to keep euen, We bid be quiet when we heare it eere, But were we bursed with like weight of paine, As much, or more, we should our feues complaine: So thou that haft no vinknde mate to greece thee, With wringinge hurt thy patience would releue me; But if thou like to feel like right benef. This foole beg'd patience in thee will be left.

Luc. Well, I will marry one day but to trie: Here comes your man, now is your husband nie.

Enter Dromio Eq.

Adr. Say, is your tardie master now at hand? E.Dro. Nay, he's at too hands with mee, and that my two eares can witnere.

Adr. Sxy, didst thou speake with him? knowst thou his minde?

E. Dro. I, I, he told his minde vpon mine eare, Befirew his hand, I scarce could vnderstand it.

Luc. Speake hee so doubtfully, thou couldst not feele his meaning.

E. Dro. Nay, hee strooke me plainly, I could too well feele his blowes; and withall so doubtfully, that I could scarce vnderstand them.

Adr. But say, preethe, is he coming home? It feemes he hath great care to please his wife.

E. Dro. Why Mistrefse, sure my Master is borne mad.

Adr. Horne mad, thou villaine!

E. Dro. I meane not Cuckold mad, But sure he is flanke mad:

When I defir'd him to come home to dinner, He ask'd me for a hundred markes in gold: 'Tis dinner time, quoth I: my gold, quoth he: Your meat doth burne, quoth I: my gold quoth he: Will you come, quoth I: my gold, quoth he: Where is the thousand markes I gaue thee villaine? The pigge quoth I, is burn'd: my gold, quoth he: My mistrefse, sir, quoth I: hang vp thy Mistrefse: I know not thy mistrefse, out on thy mistrefse.

Luc. Quoth who?

E. Dr. Quoth my Master, I know quoth he, no house, no wife, no mistrefse: so that my arrant due unto my tongue, I thanke him, I bare home vpon my shoulders: for in conclusion, he did beat me there.

Adr. Go backe againe, thou slau, & fetch him home, E.Dro. Goe backe again, and be new beaten home: For Gods sake fend some other messenger.
The Comedie of Errors.

Adr. Backe faire, or I will brake thy pate 2-croffie.

Dro. And he will blese 9 croffie with other beating.

Betweene us, I shall haue a holy head.

Adr. Hence pratting peant, fetch thy Mafer home.

Dro. Am I to round with you, as you with me,

That I like a foot-ball you do fparne me thus:

You fparne me hence, and he will fparne me hither,

If I alit in this feruice, you muft cafe me in lether.

Luci. Why is he patience lowreth in your face.

Adr. His compaine must do his minions grace,

Will it I at home forake for a merrie looke?

Hath homelick age it alluring beauty tocke,

From my poor cheeke? then he hath wafted it.

Are my dicourses dull? Barron my wit,

If voluble and fharpe diccous be mar'd,

Vnkindnes blunts it more then marble hard.

Does their gay vellments his affections baie?

That's not my fault, he's matter of my flate.

What ruines are in me that can be found,

By him not ruin'd? Then is he the ground

Of my deffurces. My decayed face,

A fumme looke of his, would foono repaire,

But, too varly Deere, he breeches the pale,

And feedes from home; poore I am but his fide.

Luci. Sefelf-harming jeallousy; he beat it hence.

Ad. Unfeeling can with fuch wrongs difpcnse:

I know his eye doth homage other-where,

Or else, what lets it but he would be here?

Sife, you know he promi'd me a claine,

Would that alone, a loye he would detain,

So hemd would keep faire quarter with his bed:

I fee the Jewell belt enameled

Will loofe his beautie: yet the gold bides full

That others touch, and oftent touching will.

Where gold and no man that hath a name,

By fallification and corruption doth it flaime:

Since that my beautie cannot pleaze his ele,

Iie weep (what's left away) and weeping die.

Luci. How mane fonic foiles terfe mad I cloufed?

Enter Antipholus Errors.

Ant. The gold I gave to Lonon is laid vp

Safe at the Centaur, and the headfull stone

Is wanded forth in care to feeke me out

By computation and mine hofs report.

I could not fpeak with Drornia, fince at first

I fent him from the centaur. fere he he coms,

Enter Drornia Sychou.

How now fir, is your merrie humor alien'd?

As you loue firoales, fof fleft with me againe

You know no Centaur? you recei'd no gold?

You Missfette feint to have me home to dinner?

My howse was at the Pho nuis. Waft thou mad,

That thus fo maude thou didft anfwere me?

S. Dro. What anfwere fir? when fpake I fuch a word?

E. Ant. Even now, euen here not half an howre fince.

S. Dro. I did not fee you fince you fent me hence.

Home to the Centaur with the gold you gaue me.

Ant. Villaine, thou didft denie the gold receit,

And toldft me of a Missfette, and a dinner,

For which I hope thou felft I was difpleas'd.

S. Dro. I am glad to fee you in this merrie vaine,

What meares this leaff, I pray you Mafer tell me?

Ant. Yes, doth thou care & flow me in the teeth?

Think'd I fee hold, take thee that, & that. Beeff Dro.

S. Dro. Hold fir, for Gods fake, now your left is earneft, Vpon what bargain do you giue it me?

Ant. Beaff. Because that I familier fometime

Doe vfe for you my foole, and chat with you,

Your favoniffle will leaff vpon my love,

And make a Common of my fericous howres.

When the funne fhines, let foolish gnats make fport

But creep in eranties, when he hides his beames:

If you will left with me, know my afpeft,

And fufion your demeanor to my lookees,

Or I will beat this method in your feonce.

S. Dro. Sence call you it? fo you would leave bett,

I had rather haue it a head, and you wifh these hows long,

I must get a fonce for my head, and Inlence it to,

or elfe I fhall fEEK my wit in my boulders, but I pray fir, why am I beaten?

Ant. Dof thou not know?

S. Dro. Nothing fir, but that I am beaten.

Ant. Shall I tell you why?

S. Dro. I fir, and wherefore; for they fay, every why hath a wherefore.

Ant. Wha fir for flowing me, and then wherefore, for vrging it the fecond time to me.

S. Dro. Was there ever man thus beaten out of feason, when in the why and the wherefore, is neither time nor reaftion. Well fir, I thank you,

Ant. Thank me fir, for what?

S. Dro. Marry fir, for this fomathing that you gue me for nothing;

Ant. He make you amends next, to give you nothing for fomathing. But fy, ifis dinner time?

S. Dro. No fir, I think the next wants that I haue,

Ant. In good time fir, what's that?

S. Dro. Bathing.

Ant. Well fir, then'll be dine.

S. Dro. If it be fir, I pray you eat none of it.

Ant. Your reafon?

S. Dro. Left it make you chollerick, and purifie me another drie bafing.

Ant. Well fir, leare to leif in good time, there's a time for all things.

S. Dro. I dunt haue denied that before you were fo chollerick.

Ant. By what rule fir?

S. Dro. Marry fir, by a rule as plaine as the plaine bald pate of Father time himfelfe.

Ant. Let's hear it.

S. Dro. There's no time for a man to recover his hair that growes bald by nature.

Ant. May he not doe it by fince and recouverie?

S. Dro. Yes, to pay a fine for a perweig, and recover the lofte hair of another man.

Ant. Why, is it fince a nuggar of haire, being (as it is) to plinfull an excriment?

S. Dro. Because it is a blefuming that hee beftows on beasts, and what he hath fteamd them in haire, bee hath given them by right.

Ant. Why, but there's manie a man hath more haire then with.

S. Dro. Not a man of shooe but he hath the wit to lose his haire.

Ant. Why he didt conclude hairy man plain dea lers without wit.

S. Dro. The plainier dealer, the sooner loft; yet he loo fels it in a kind of glasse.

Ant. For what reafon.

S. Dro. For two, and found ones to.

"Am. Nay."

II. i. 78—II. ii. 94

106
The Come die of Errors.

Ant. By Drama? Dram. by me.
Adr. By thee, and this thou didst returne from him. That he did buffet thee, and in his bloures, Denied my house for his, me for his wife.
Ant. Did you consuere fit with this gentlewoman? What is the course and drift of your compa? Ant. No, if I never saw her till this time.
Adr. Villaine thou left, for even her verie words, Didst thou deliever to me on the Mart.
S.D. I never spake with her in all my life.
Ant. How can she thus then call vs by our names? Vuliffe it be by inspiration.
Adr. How ill agrees it with your graste, To counterfeit thus grofely with your face, Abetting him to thwart me in my mode; Be it my wrong, you are from me exempt, But wrong nor that wrong with a more contempt. Come I will fall'en on this fauce of thine: Thou art an Eline my husband, I a Vinc: Whose weakeffe married to thy Stranger flate, Makes me with thy strength to comminicate: If ought poffehe thee from me, it is droffe, Vpurpt Inue, Brier, or olle Mofe, Who all for want of prunity, with intrusion, Infeche thy fap, and fine on thy committ.
Adr. To come thee speaks, thee moves mee for her theame: What, was I married to her in my dreame? Or sleepe I now, and thinke I heare all this? What error drives our cies and cares amisse? Until I know this sure uncertaintie, I'll entertaine the frrd fallaice.
Luc. Dromio. goe bid the feruants sped for dinner. S. Dro. Oh for my beafts, I crosse me for a finner. This is the Fairie land, oh fright of spightes, We talke with Gobins, Owls and Sprights; If we obey them not, this will infuze: They'll luke our breath, or pinch vs blacke and blew.
Luc. Why pratt thou to thy felle, and answr't not? Dromio, thou Dromio, thou fhall, thou flug, thou for.
S. Dro. I am transformed Mafter, am I not?
Adr. I thinke thou art in mine, and so am I.
S. Dro. Nay Mafter, both in minute, and in my shape, thou hast tyme owne forme.
S. Dro. No, I am an Abcbecke.
Luc. If thou art chandg'd to ought, 'tis to an Alls, S. Dro. 'Tis true the fride me, and I long for graffe.
Tis too, I am an Affer, elle it could never be, But I should know her as well as she knowes me.
Adr. Come, come, no longer will I be a fool, To put the finger in the eie and weepers; Whilffe man and Mafter laughs my wses to fcorne; Come fit to dinner, Dromio keep the gate; Husband Ile dine about with you to day, And thirue you of a thousand idle pranks: Sirs, any ask thee for your Mafter, Say he dines forth, and let no creature enter: Come fitter, Dromio play the Porter well.
Ant. Am I in earth, in heauen, or in hell? Sleeping or waking, mad or well aduife: Knowne unto thefe, and to my felle ditguife: Ile fay as they fay, and perfuue fo: And in this mift or all aduences go.
S. Dro. Mafter, shall I be Porter at the gate?
Adr. I, and let none enter, lufal I breake your pate.
Luc. Come, come, Antiphons, we done to late.
Thou wouldst haue chang'd thy face for a name, or thy name for an affe.

Enter Luce.

Luce. What a coile is there Dromio? who are those at the gate?

E. Dro. Let my Master in Luce.

E. Dro. Faith no, hee comes too late, and so tell your Master.

E. Dro. O Lord I must laugh, haue at you with a Pro.

Dromio, Shall I haue affe.

Luce. Haue at you with another, that's when can you tell?

S. Dro. If thy name be called Luce, Luce thou haft an swer'd him well,

Luce. Do ye hear your minion, you'll let vs in I hope?

S. Dro. And you said no.

Luce. I thought to haue askt you.

S. Dro. Do so come helpe, well brooke, there was blow for blow.

Ant. Thou bagage let me in.

Luce. Can you tell for whose fake?

E. Dro. Master, knocke the door hard.

Luce. Let him knocke till it sake.

Ant. You'll crie for this minion, if I beat the doo downe.

Luce. What needs all that, and a paire of stocks in the towne?

Luce. Enter Adriana.

Adr. Who is that at the doore? keeps all this noise?

S. Dro. By my troth your townse is troubled with un ruly boies.

Ant. Are you there Wife? you might have come before.

Adr. Your wife sir knawe? goe get you from the dore, E. Dro. If you went in paite Master, this knawe would go fore.

Ant. Here is neither cheere sir, nor welcome, we would tame haue either.

Adr. In debating which was best, wee shall part with either.

E. Dro. They stand at the doore, Master, bid them welcome hithe.

Ant. There is something in the winde, that we can not hear.

E. Dro. You would say Master, if your garments were thin.

Your cake here is warme within: you stand here in the cold.

It would make a man mad as a Bucke to be so bought and fold.

Ant. Go fetch me something, Ile break ope the gate.

S. Dro. Breake any breaking here, and Ile break your knawes paire.

E. Dro. A man may break a word with your sir, and words are but winde:

I and breake it in your face, so he brake it not behinde.

S. Dro. It temes thou wart breaking, out upon thee hinde.

E. Dro. Here's too much out upon thee, I pray thee let me in.

S. Dro. I when fowles have no feathers, and fishe have no fin.

E. Dro. Well, Ile breake in go borrow me a crow.

E. Dro. A crow without feather, Master meanes you for;
For a fish without a line,\(\text{that's a fowl without a stepe,}\)
If a crow help vs in fira,\(\text{we'll plucke a crow together.}\)
\(\text{Ant. Go, get thee gone, fetch mee an iron Crow.}\)
\(\text{Bash. Hauke patience fir, oh let it be fo,}\)
Herein you warre against your reputation,
And dowe within the compass of supped,
To voultated honor of your wife.
Once this your long experience of your wifedom,
Her fober vertue, yeares, and modififie,
Plead on your part some caufe to you vnkowne;
And doubt not fir, but the well excelle
Why at this time the dores are made against you.
Be rul'd by day, depart in patience,
And let vs to the Tyger all to dinner,
And about evening come your felle alone,
To know the reason of this strange reftraint:
If by strong hand you offer to breaake in
Now in the iluring paffage of the day,
A vulgar comment will be made of it;
And that supposd by the common rowe
Against your yet vngalled estimation,
That may vnto foule intrusion enter in,
And dwell vpoure your grate when you are dead;
For flanders lurers now inueade me withal:
For ever how's, where it is, get poftellion.
\(\text{Ant. You have prouall'd, I will depart in quiet,}\)
And in despiught of mind meane to be merrie;
I know a wench of excellent discoure,
Prettie and wittie; wilde, and yet too gentle;
There will we done: this woman that I mean,
My wife (but I proue it without defer)
Hath ofetimes vpraised me withall:
To her we will to dinner, get you home,
And fetch the chaine, by this I know 'tis made,
Bring it I pray you to the Perpendicular,
For there's the house: That chaine will I bellow
(Be it for nothing but to b'ftir my wife)
\(\text{Vpon mine hoffelle there, good fir make haste:}\)
Since mine owne doores refhule to entertaine me,
Ile knocke else-where, to see if they'll disfaine me.
\(\text{Ang. Ile meet you at that place some houre hence.}\)
\(\text{Ant. Do, to this yeell shall I fee some expecce.}\)

\(\text{Exit.}\)

\(\text{Enter Juliana, with Antipholus of Sirenia.}\)
\(\text{Julia. And may it be that you have quicke forgot,}\)
A husbands office? Shal Antipholus
Euen in the spring of Loue, thy Louete-springs rot? Shall loue in buildings grow so rarente?
If you did wed my fitter for her wealth,
Then for her wealths-fake Ibe with her more kindnesse:
Or if you like els-where doe it by fleshe,
Muffle your falle loue with fame thew of blindnesse,
Let not my firfer read it in your eye:
Be not thy tongue thy owne Shames Orator:
Looke sweet, speake faire, become disloyalite:
Apparel vice like venures harbenger:
Seare a faire prudence, though your heart be tainted,
Teach firme the carriage of a holy Saint,
Be secret falle: when need the be acquainted?
What simple thefte braggs of his owne attaine?
'Tis double wrong to trauant with your bed,
And let her read it in thy loakes at boord:
Shame hath a battard fame, well manag'd,
Ill deeds is doubled with an euill word:
AAls poore women, make vs not beleue
(Being compact of credite) that you loue vs,
Though others have the arme, shew vs the treue:
We in your motion turne, and you may moue vs,
Then gentle brother get you in againe;
Comfort my fitter, cheere her, call her wife;
Tis holy sport to be a little vaine,
When the sweet breath of fatterie conqueres firi.
\(\text{S. Ants. Sweete Milliris, what your name is else I know not;}\)
Nor by what wonder you do hit of mine:
Leffe in your knowledg, and your grace you show not,
Then our earths wonder, more then earth duine,
Teache me dere creature how to thinke and speake:
Lay open to my earthe grosse conceite,
Smoothe'd in errors, feeble, shallow, weake,
The foulted meaning of your words deceat:
Against my foules pure truth, why labour you,
To make it wander in vnknowne field?
Are you a god? would you create me new?
Transfome me then, and to your powre Ie yeeld.
But if that I am, I then well I know,
Your weeping fitter is no wife of mine,
Nor to her bed no homage doe I owe:
Fare more,fare more, to you doe I decline:
Oataine me not fweet: Mermaid with thy note,
To drowne me in thy fitter flood of teares,
Sing Siren for thy felle, and I will doe:
Spread ore the fitter wavies thy golden haires;
And as a bud Ie take thee, and there lie:
And in that glorious supposition thinke,
He gaine by death, that hath such means to die:
Let Loue being light, be drown'd if the finke.
\(\text{Luc. What are you mad, that doe reafon fo?}\)
\(\text{Ant. Not mad, but maded, how I doe not know,}\)
\(\text{Luc. It is a fault that springeth from your eye,}\)
\(\text{Ant. For gazing on your beames faire ius being by,}\) \(\text{Luc. Gaze when you shoulde, and that will cheere your fight.}\)
\(\text{Ant. As good to finke fweet loue, as looke on night,}\)
\(\text{Luc. Why call you me loue? Call my fitter for,}\)
\(\text{Ant. Thy fitter fitter,}\)
\(\text{Luc. That's my fitter,}\)
\(\text{Ant. No: it is thy felle, mine owne feller better part:}\)
Mine eies cleere eie, my deer heartes deerer heart;
My foode, my fortune, and my sweet hopes sime;
My fule earths heauen, and my heauens claimes.
\(\text{Luc. All this my fitter is, or elle shoulde be.}\)
\(\text{Ant. Call thy feller fitter sweet, for I am thee;}\)
\(\text{Thee will I loue, and with thee lead my life;}\)
\(\text{Thou haft no husband yet, nor I no wife.}\)
\(\text{Give me thy hand,}\)
\(\text{Luc. Oh lef for, hold you still;}\) \(\text{Ile fetch my fitter to get her good will.}\)

\(\text{Exit.}\)

\(\text{Enter Dromio, Sirena.}\)
\(\text{Ant. Why how now Dromio, where run't thou so fast?}\)
\(\text{S.Dre. Doe you know me fett? Am I Dromio? Am I your man? Am I my felle?}\)
\(\text{Ant. Thou art Dromio, they art my man, thou art thy felle.}\)
\(\text{Dre. I am an affe, I am a woman's man, and besides my felle.}\)
\(\text{Ant. What woman's man? and how besides thy felle?}\)
\(\text{Dre. Marrie fir,besides my felle, I am due to a woman: One that claims me, one that haunts me, one that will haue me.}\)
\(\text{Ant. What}\)
The Comedie of Errors.

Ant. What claimeth tells to thee?
Dro. Marry, sir, such claim as you would lay to your horse, and she would have me as a beast, not that I being a beast she would have me, but that she being a very beauteous creature lays claim to me.
Ant. What is she?
Dro. A very reverent body: I such a one, as a man may speak of, without he say for reverence. I have but leave lacks in the match, and yet is she a wondrous fat marriage.
Ant. How doth thou mean a fat marriage?
Dro. Marry, sir, she's the ditch wench, & great grace, and I know not what vice to put her too, but to make a Lamp of her, and run from her by her owne light. I warrant, her sagges and the Tallow in them, will burn a Winter. If the bluees still doomesday, she burn a week longer then the whole World.
Ant. What complexion is she of?
Dro. Swart like my foole, but her face nothing like so clean kept: for why? she sweats a man may goe other-flores in the grime of it.
Ant. That's a fault that water will mend.
Dro. No fir, 'tis in grame, N Nam'el could not do it.
Ant. What's her name?
Dro. Not Sir: but her name is three quarters, that's an Ell and three quarters, will not measure her from hip to hip.
Ant. Then she bears some breadth?
Dro. No longer from head to foot, then from hippe to hippce: she is sphericall, like a globe: I could find out Countries in her.
Ant. In what part of her body stands Ireland?
Dro. Marry sir in her buttockes, I found it out by the bagges.
Ant. Where Scotland?
Dro. I found it by the barret of her hard in the palm of the hand.
Ant. Where France?
Dro. In her forehead, arm'd and reured, making warre against her heare.
Ant. Where England?
Dro. I looked for the chattle Citizens, but I could find no whitenesse in them. But I guesse, it flambe in her chin by the fat thumbe that ranne betweene France, and it.
Ant. Where Spaine?
Dro. Faith I saw it not: but I felt it hot in her breath.
Ant. Where America, the Indies?
Dro. Oh Sir, upon her nose, all ore emblazond with Rubies, Carboncles, Saphires, declaring their rich Apparel to the hot breath of Spainne, who sent whole Armadoes of Carretts to be ballasted as her nose.
Ant. Where Flanders, the Netherlands?
Dro. Oh Sir, I did not looke follow. To conclude, this drudge or Duiner layd claim to me, call'd mee Drogo, I was affur'd to her, told me what privie marks I had about me, as the marke of my shoulder, the mole in my cheeck, the great Wart on my left arm, the great wart on her as a witch. And I think, if my breath had not beene made of fat, and my heart of flece, she had transform'd me to a Curtull dog, & made me turne i'th wheel.
Ant. Go hie thee presently, post to the roe,
And if the winde blow any way from shore,
I will not harbour in this Towne to night,
If any Barke put forth, come to the Mart,

Where I will walke till thou returne to me:
If ere one knowes vs, and we knowe none,
Tis time I thinkke to strudge, packe, and be gone.
Dro. As from a Bear a man would run for life,
So flye I from her that would be my wife.
Exit Ant. There's no note but Witches do inhabithe here,
And therefore 'tis his time that I were hence:
She that doth call me husband, even my soule
Doth for a wife abhorre.
But her faire fitter
Doffeth with such a gentle fouveraigne grace,
Of such enchanting presence and discourse,
Hath almost made me Traitor to my selfe;
But lest my selfe be guilty to selfe wrong,
Ie flie mine eares againste the Mermaids song.

Enter Angelo with the Chaine.

Ang. Mr Antipholus.
Ant. I that's my name.
Ang. I know it well Sir, loe here's the chaine,
I thought to have tane you at the Porpentine,
The chaine vnitised me made it stay thus long.
Ant. What is your will that I shal do with this?
Ang. What please your selfe Sir: I have made it for you.
Ant. Made it for me Sir, I bespoke it not.
Ang. Neuer, neuer twice, but twentie times you haue:
Go home with it, and please your Wife withall,
And loone at supper time Ile vist you,
And then receive my money for the chaine.
Ant. I prye you Sir receive the money now,
For feare you use it cheane, nor mony more.
Ang. You are a merry man Sir, fare you well.
Exit, Ant. What I shalck think of this, I cannot tell:
But this I shalck, there is no man is to vaine,
That would refuse so faire an offer'd Chaine.
I see a man heere needs not live by flutis,
When in the feasts he meeters such Golden gifts:
Ie to the Mart, and there for Dranis flye,
If any flup put out, then straight away.

Altus Quartus, Scena Prima.

Enter a Merchante, Goldsmiths, and an Officer.

Mer. You know since Peeter off the sum is due,
And since I have not much important you,
Nor now I had not, but that I am bound
To Peeter, and want Gilders for my voyaze,
Therefore make prompt satisfaction,
Or Ile attach you by this Officer.
Gold. Even iu the sum that I do owe to you,
Is growing to me by Antipholus,
And in the inflant that I met with you,
He had of me a Chaine, at flue a clocke.
I shal receive the money for the saime:
Pleaste you walke with me downe to his hose,
I will discharge my bond, and thank you too.

Enter Antipholus Echef: Drogo from the Countires.
Off. That labour may you have: See where he comes.
Ant. While I go to the Goldsmiths house, go thou

And
The Comedie of Errors.

And buy a ropes end, that will I betow
Among my wife, and their confederate,
For locking me out of my doores by day:
But loft I fee the Goldsmith; get thee gone,
Buy thou a rope, and bring it home to me.

Dre. I buy a thousand pound a year, I buy a rope.

Exit Dremino

Ep. A. A man is well holp by that truths to you,
I promised your present, and the Chaine;
But neither, Chaine nor Goldsmith came to me:
Belleke you thought our love would sit too long
If it were chand'ed together: and therefore came not.

Gold. Sating your merrie humor: here's the note
How much your Chaine weight to the most charett,
The finenece of the Gold, and chargefull fashion,
Which doth amount to three vvide Duchkets more
Then I stand debted to this Gentleman,
I pray you see him presently discharge'd,
For he's bound to Sea, and stayes but for it.

Am. I am not furnish'd with the present monie:
Befides I have some businesse in the towne,
Good Signior take the stranger to my house,
And with you I will to the Chaine, I trust my wife
Disbourse the summere, on the recet thereof,
Perchance I will be there as soon as you.

Gold. Then you will bring the Chaine to her your selfe.

Am. No bearer it with you, lest I come not time enough.

Gold. Well sir, I will haue you the Chaine about you.

Am. And if I haue not sir, I hope you haue:
Or else you may returne without your money.

Gold. Nay come I pray you sir, give me the Chaine:
Both winde and side stayes for this Gentleman,
And I too blame have held him heere too long.

Am. Good Lord, you vse this disdainnes to excute
Your breach of promisse to the Perpentine,
I should have chid you for not bringing it,
But like a thre you first begin to brawle.

Nar. The hour steales on, I pray you sir dispatch.
Gold. You haue how he improues me, the Chaine.
Am. Why givest thou to my wife, and fetch my mony.

Gold. Come, come, you know I gait you it euene now.
Either send the Chaine, or fend me by some token.

Am. Fie, now you run this humor out of breath,
Come where the Chaine, I pray you let me see it.

Mar. My buifiche cannot brooke this disdainne,
Good fit say, who's he you'll answer me, or no:

Her. He calleth to the Officer.

Am. I answer you? What should I answer you.

Gold. The monie that you owe me for the Chaine.

Am. I owe you none, till I receive the Chaine.

Gold. You know I gait you it halfe an hour since.

Am. You gaine none, you wrong me much to say so.

Gold. You wrong me more fit in denying it.

Am. Consider how it stands upon my credit.

Mar. Well Officer, arrest him at my farte.

Off. I do, and charge you in the Duske name to obey me.

Gold. This touchesh me in reputation.

Am. Either content to pay this sum for me,
Or I attach you by this Officer,

Am. Content to pay thee that I owe had I
Arrest me foolish fellow if thou darst.

Gold. Here is thy fee, arrest him Officer.

Am. I would not spare my brother in this cafe,
If he should come to me apparsantly.

Off. I do arrest you, you haue the suite.

Am. I do obey thee, till I gie thee baile.
But firsh, you shall buy this sport as deere,
As all the mettall in your hope will answer.

Gold. Sir, sir, I shall haue Law in Epheus,
To your notorious shame, I doubt it not.

Enter Dremino Sirs, from the Bay.

Dre. Master, there's a Barke of Epidamnum,
That stales but till her Owner comes aboard,
And then sir the bears away. Our draughtage fis,
I have come'd aboard, and I have bought:
The Oyle, the Balsamum, and Aquo-vitae.
The fin is in her trim, the merrie winde
Blows faire from land: they flay for nought at all,
But for their Owner, Master, and your self.

Am. How now a Madman? Why thou peccoulish sheep.
What shipp of Epidamus stales for me.

S.Dre. A shipp you funt me to, too, to bier wafage.

Am. Thou dost worth shipe, for a rope to save:
And told thee to what purpouse, and what end.

S.Dre. You funt me for a ropes end as foonie,
You sent me to the Bay fis, for a Barke.

Am. I will debate this matter at more leisure
And teach your cares to lift me with more head.
To Adriana Villaine his shee straight:
Gue her this key, and tell her in the Deske
That's couer'd o' re with Turkifh Tapifrie,
There is a purfe of Duchkets, let her lend it:
Tell her, I am arrestted in the streete.
And that shall baile me: hie thee flaue, be gone,
On Officer to prifon, till it come.

Exeunt

S. Dremio. To Adriana, that is where we din'd,
Where Dowlabill did claim me for her husband,
She is too bigge I hope for me to compaile,
Thither I must, although against my will:
For certes must their Matters minded fullfil.

Exit

Enter Adriana and Luciana.

Adr. Ah Luciana, did he tempt thee so?
Might'ft thou perceive auterely in his eye,
That he did plead in earnest, yea or no:
Look'd he or red or pale, or fad or merry?
What obfervation maft thou in this cafe?

Luc. Oh, his hearts Meters tilting in his face.
He spake not, but hearkned me in right.

Adr. He meant he did me none; the more the spight
Luc. Then swore he that he was a stranger beere.

Adr. And true he swore, though yet forsworn he were.

Luc. Then pleaded I for you.

Adr. And what said he?

Luc. That love I begg'd for you, he begg'd of me.

Adr. With what permission did he tempt thy love?

Luc. With words, that in an honest fuit might move.
First, he did praise my beautie, then my speech.

Adr. Did't speake him faire?

Luc. Have patience I beffeech.

Adr. I cannot, nor I will not hold me still.

Luc. My tongue, though not my heart, shall haue his will.
He is deformed, crooked, old, and fere.
Ill-fac'd, worse booll'd, to take every where:
Vicious, vngente, foolifh, blunt, ynknde,
The Comedie of Errors.

Stigmatical in making worse in minde.

Luc. Who would be jealous then of such a one? No ouli loft is wall’d when it is gone.

Adr. Ah but I think he better then I say: And yet would herein others eies were worse:

Farre from her he left the Lapwing cries sweeny;

My heart prays for him, though my tongue doe curse.

Enter S. Dromio.

Dro. Here goe the deske, the purfe, sweet now make haste.

Luc. How hath thou loft thy breath?

S. Dro. By running fast.

Adr. Where is thy Master Dromio? Is he well?

S. Dro. No, he’s in Tartar limbo, worse then hell:

A diuell in an everlasting garment hath him;

On whose hard heart is button’d up with flece:

A Feind, a Fairie, pittilefe and ruffe:

A Wolfe, nay worse, a fellow all in buffe:

A back friend, a ouder-clapper, one that countermalls

The pallages of allies, creeces, and narrow lands;

A hound that runs Counter, and yet draws drifout well,

One that before the Judgmet carries poore foules to hel.

Adr. Why man, what is the matter?

S. Dro. I do not know the matter, he is rested on the cafe.

Adr. What is he rested? tell me at whose suite?

S. Dro. I know not at whose suite he is rested well;

but is in a suite of buffe which rested him, that can I tell,

will you send him Mistris redemption, the monie in his deske.

Adr. Go fetch it Sifler: thus I wonder at.

Thus he unknowe to me should be in debt:

Tell me, was he rested on a band?

S. Dro. Not on a band, but on a stronger thing:

A chaine, a chaine, doe you not here it ring.

Adr. What, the chaine?

S. Dro. No, no, the bell, ‘tis time that I were gone:

It was two ere I left him, and now the clocke strikes one.

Adr. The houses come backe, that did I never here.

S. Dro. Oh yes, if any house meece a Seruante, a turns backe for vertue fraine.

Adr. As if time were in debt: how fondly do’t thou reason?

S. Dro. Time is a verie bankeroute, and owes more then he’s worth to feacon.

Nay, he’s a theefe too: haue you not heard men say,

That time comes healing en by night and day?

If I be in debt and theft, and a Seruante in the way,

Hath he not reason to turne backe an house in a day?

Exit Luciana.

Enter S. Dromio.

Dro. Go Dromio, there’s the monie, bare it straight,

And bring thy Master home immediately.

Come sifter, I am preit down with conceit:

Conceive my comfort and my miserie.

Enter Antipholus Sirachia.

There’s not a man I meete but dothe frustrate me
As if I were their well acquainted friend,

And euerie one doth call me by my name:

Some tender monie to me, some invite me;

Some other give me thanks for kindnesse;

Some offer me Commodities to buy,

Even now a tailor cal’d me in his shop,

And shew’d me Silkes that he had bought for me,

And therewithall tooke mesure of my body.

Sure these are but imaginarie wiles,

And lapland Sorcerers inhabite here.

Enter Dromio Sir.

S. Dro. Master, here’s the gold you lent me for: what have you got the picture of old Adam new apparel’d?

Ant. What gold is this? What Adam don’t thou mean?

S. Dro. Not that Adam that kept the Paradise: but that Adam that keeps the prifons; hee that goes in the calues-skin, that was kill’d for the Prodiggall; hee that came behinde you first like an euisl angel, and bid you forake your libertie.

Ant. I understand thee not.

S. Dro. No? why ’tis a plaine cafe: he that went like a Bafe-Viole in a cafe of leather; the man, that when gentlemen are tiree gives them a Sob, and rest them: he first, that takes pittance on decayed men, and gives them suites of durancce: he that sets vp his reft to doe more exploits with his Mace, then a Moris Folk.

Ant. What thou mean’st an officer?

S. Dro. Sir, the Servant of the Band: he that brings any man to answer is that breaks his Band: one that thinkes a man always going to bed, and faies, God give you good rest.

Ant. Well sir, there rest in your foothec.

Is there any ships put forth to night? may we be gone?

S. Dro. Why sir, I brought you word an hour since, that the Barkke Expedition put forth to night, and then were you hindered by the Seruantes to tarry for the Hey Delay: Here are the angels that you run for to deliver you.

Ant. The fellow is different, and so am I,
And here we wander in illusions:

Some blest power deliver vs from hence.

Enter a Curiczan.

Cur. Well met, well met, Master Antipbolus:

I see sir you have found the Gold-smith now:

Is that the chaine you promised me to day.

Ant. Master, I charge thee tempor: me not,

S. Dro. Master, is this Mistris Sabbath.

Ant. It is the diuell.

S. Dro. Nay, she is worse, she is the diuells dam:

And here she comes in the habitt of a light wench, and thereof comes, that the wenches say God dam me, That’s as much to say, God make me a light wench: It is written, they appeare to men like angels of light, light is an effect of fire, and fire will burne: ergo, light wenches will burne, come not near her.

Cur. Your man and you are maruilsous merrie sir.

Will you goe with me, we’ll mend our dinner here?

S. Dro. Master, if you expect a good meete, or blesse a long spone,

Ant. Why Dromio?

S. Dro. Marrie he must have a long spone that must eate with the diuell.

Ant. Avoid then fiend, what shall I thou me of sup-

Thou art, as you are all a forceresse: (ping)

I conjure thee to leave me, and be gone,

Cur. Give me the ring of mine you had at dinner,

Or for my Diamond the Chaine you promised,

And let me goe first, and not trouble you.

S. Dro. Some diuils ask for but the parings of ones naiile,
The Comedie of Errors.

Enter Adriana, Luciana, Curdian, and a Schoolmistress, called a Pinch.

Ant. Come goe along, my wife is comming yonder.

Dro. Mistis repicie feem, respect your end, or rather the prophetehe like the Parrat, beware the ropes end.

Ant. Wilt thou flill talk?

Beats Dro.

Curt. How say you now? Is not your husband mad?

Adri. His inciulity continues no leffe:

Good Doctor Pinch, you are a Conjuror,

Let him in his true face againe,

And I will please you what you will demand.

Luc. Alas how fiery, and how sharpe he lookes.

Cur. Marke, how he trembles in his exatke.

Pinch. Give me your hand, and let mee feel your pulse.

Ant. There is my hand, and let it feel your caste.

Pinch. I charge thee Sasbath, hows within this man,

To yeeld pollicion to his hoile prayers,

And to thy face of darknie hee thee fraught,

I conjure thee by all the Saints in heauen.

Ant. Peace doting wizard, peace, I am not mad.

Ad. Oh that thou wer't not, poor distresed foule.

Ant. You Misson you, are those your Customers?

Did this Companion with the saffron face

Reuell and fealt it at my house to day,

Whil'st upon me the giullie doores were shut,

And I Denied to enter in my house.

Ad. O husband, God dore' know you din'd at home

Where would you had remain'd untill this time,

Free from these flanders, and this open flame.

Ant. Din'd at home? Thou Villaine, what sayest thou?

Dro. Sir sooth to say, you did not dine at home.

Ant. Were not my doores lockt vp, and I shut out?

Dro. Perdie, your doores were lockt, and you shut out.

Ant. And did not this felfe reiul me there?

Dro. Saw Fable, thee her felfe reuill'd you there,

Ant. Did not her Kitchen inside ralle, taunt, and forceme?

Dro. Certi the did, the kitchin vefall fcon'd you.

Ant. And did not I in rage depart from thence?

Dro. In verity you did, my bones beats witnesse,

That since haue felt the vigour of his rage.

Ad. 1st to good to looth him in these contrarietys

Pinch. It is no shame, the fellow find his vaine,

And yeelding to him, humors well his frende.

Ant. Thou haft subborn'd the Goldsmith to arrest mee.

Ad. Alas, I sent you Monie to redeeme you,

By Din'me here, who came in haft for it.

Dro. Monie by haft? Have not I haue good will you might,

But surely Mafter not a rage of Monie.

Ant. Wentft not thou toher for a purs of Ducks?

Adri. He came to me, and I delius'd it.

Luc. And I am witnesse with her that she did.

Dro. God and the Rope-maker beare me witnesse,

That I was sent for nothing but a rope.

Pinch. Mistis, both Man and Mafter is poiffit,

I know it by their pale and deadly lookes,

They
They must be boun'd and laide in some darke roomes.

Ant. Say, wherefore didst thou locke me forth to day, And why dost thou deny the bagge of gold?

Adr. I did not gentle husband locke thee forth. Do's. And gentle Mr. I receiv'd no gold.

But I confess'd, that we were lock'd out.

Adr. Diffembling Villain, thou speakest false in both.

Ant. Diffembling harlot, thou art false in all,
And art confederate with a damned packe,
To make a leerish abject scorn of me:
But with these nails, lye pluck out these false eyes,
That would behold in me this fametfull sport.

Enter these or faire, and after to bind him.

Her feastes.

Adr. Oh bind him, bind him, let him not come neere me.

Punch. More company, the friend is strong within him
Luc. Ay, me poore man, how pale and wan he looks.

Ant. What will you murther me, thou rafter thou?

I am thy prisoner, wilt thou suffer them to make a rescue?

Offi. Masters, let him go: he is my prisoner, and you shall not have him.

Punch. Go bind this man, for he is franticke too.

Adr. What wilt thou do, thupeasfe Officer?

Hast thou delight to see a wretched man
Do outrage and displeasure to-himself?

Offi. He is my prisoner, if I let him go,
The debt he owes will be requir'd of me.

Adr. I will discharge thee ere I go from thee,
Bear me forth with me the Creditor,
And knowing how the debt grows I will pay it.

Good Master Doctor see him safe conuey'd
Home to his house, oh most unhappy day.

Ant. Oh most unhappie franticke.

Dr. Masters, I amhere entred in bond for you,
Ant. Out on thee Villain, wherefore dost thou mad men?

Dr. Will you be bound for nothing, be mad good
Masters, cry the duel.

Luc. God help poore foules, how idly do they talk?

Adr. Go bear him hence, fitter go you with me:
Say now, whole fuite is he arraigned at?

Off. One Angel a Goldsmith, do you know him?

Adr. I know the man: what is the fumme he owes?

Off. Two hundred Ducats.

Adr. Say, how grows it due?

Off. Due for a Chaine your husband had of him.

Adr. He did bespeak a Chaine for me, but had it not.

Cur. When at your husband all in rage to day,
Came to my house, and took away my Ring,
The Ring I saw upon his finger now,
Straight after did I meete him with a Chaine."

Adr. It may be, but I did never see it.

Come later, bringing me where the Goldsmith is,
I long to know the truth thereof at large.

Enter Antipholus Syracuse with his Raper dranue, and Drano Syracuse.

Luc. God for thy mercy, they are loose againe.

Adr. And come with naked swords,
Let's call more help to have them bound again.

Exeunt all.
Enter Lady Abbess.

_Ab._ Be quiet people, wherefore throng you hither?

_Ad._ To fetch my poor distraught husband hence, who is at my Abbey.

_Let us come in, that we may bide him safe._

And beare him home for his recreation,

_Gold._ I knew he was not in his perfect wits.

_Mar._ If so, I am sorry now that I did draw on him.

_Ab._ How long hath this posession held the man?

_Ad._ This week he hath beene besieged of woman, and much different from the man he was:

But till this afternoone his passion

_Ne’re_ brake into extremity of rage.

_Ab._ Hath he not lost much wealth by wretch of fe, & buried some dear friend, hath not else his eye

Stray’d his affection in unlawful love,

A fome prevailing much in youngfull men,

Who glue their eyes the liberty of gazng,

Which of these sorrowes is the subject too?

_Ad._ To none of these, except it be the last,

_Namely, some love that drew him of home._

_Ab._ You should for that have reprehended him.

_Ad._ Why? so I did.

_Ab._ But not rough enough.

_Ad._ As roughly as my modestie would let me.

_Ab._ Haply in pruaze.

_Ad._ And in assemblies too.

_Ab._ But, not enough.

_Ad._ It was the copie of our Conference.

In bad he kept not for my vrging it,

At board he fed not for my vrging it:

_Alonc, it was the subiect of my Thane:_

_In company I often glanced it:_

_Still did I tell him, it was vile and bad._

_Ab._ And there of came it, that the man was mad.

The venom claneus of a jealous woman,

Poiens more deadly then a mad dogs tooth.

It feemes his steepers were hindered by thy railling,

And thereof cometh that his head is light.

Thou fault his meate was laved with thy upbraiding,

Vnquiet meate makes ill digestions,

Thereof the raging fire of fever bred,

_What’s a Fever, but a fit of madness?_ Thou sayst his sports were hindered by thy bralles.

_Sweet recreation bar’d, what doth enue _

But moodie and dull melancholy,

Kinfman to grim and comfortlefe dispaire,

And at her beaues a huge infectious troope

Of pale distemperes, and foes to life?

In food, in sport, and life-prefering rest

To be disturb’d, would mad or man, or beast?

_The consequence is then, thy jealous fits. _

Hath scar’d thy husband from the vfe of wits.

_Luce._ She never reprehended him but mildly,

When he demean’d himselfe, tough, rude, and wildly,

_What beare you these rebukes, and answer not? _

_Ad._ She did betray me to my owne reprooue,

Good people enter, and lay hold on him.

_Ab._ No, not a creature enters in my house.

_Ad._ Then let your servants bring my husband forth

_Ab._ Neither; he took this place for sanctuary,

And it shall prize him from your hands,

Till I have brought him to his wits againe,

Or boast my labour in affaying it.

_Ad._ I will attend my husband, be his nurse,
Therefore most gracious Duke with thy command,
Let him be brought forth, and borne hence for helpe.

Duke. [To the messenger.] For he was with me; and I do see this word,
When thou didst make him Master of thy bed,
To do him all the grace and good I could.

Go some of you, knocke at the Abbey gate,
And bid the Lady Abbesse come to me:
I will determine this before I retire.

Enter a Messenger.

Oh Miftris Miftris, fhift and buie your feife,
My Master and his man are both broche loose,
Befeech the Maids to bow, and bound the Doctor,
Whose heard they have fent for with brands of fire,
And er it blaz'd, they threw them on.
Great pails of puddled myre to quench the faire;
My M' preaches patience to him, and the while
His man with Cizers nickes him like a foole:
And fure (vneffly you fende fome prefent helpe),
Betweene them they will kill the Conuener.

Adr. Peace foole, thy Master and his man are here,
And that is falf thou doft report to us.

Miftris, upon my life, I tey you true.
I haue not break'd a fmall fince I did fee it.
He cries for you, and vows he can take you,
To fearch your face, and to diffigure you:

Cry within.

Harke, harke, I hereheem Miftris: flie, be gone.

Duke. Come fland by me, feare nothing: guard with Halberd.

Adr. Ay me, it is my husband: witness thee you,
That he is borne about inuifible,
Even now he hau'd him in the Abbey here.
And now he's here, past thought of humane reaion.

Enter Antipholus, and E. Dromio of Ephesius.

dr.

Juffice moft gracious Duke, oh grant me ju-
Even for the fervice that long since I did thee,
When I befal thee in the waies, and tooke
Deepe fearers to fure fthy life: even for the blood
That then I loft for thee, now gran' me fuffice.

Mlo. Fed. Vafele the fear of death doth make me doire, I fee my fome Antique and Dromio.

E. Ant. Juffice (sweet Prince) againft the Woman there:
She whom thou gau't me to be my wife;
That hath abus'd and defhonor'd me,
Even in the strength and height of mine:
Beyond imagination is the wrong
That thefe this day hath framelesse thrown on me.

Duke. Discover how, and thou shalt finde me juift.

E. Ant. This day (great Duke) the flunt the dooors Apon me.

While with the harlot was feafted in my house.

Duke. A great reaunt: fay woman, didft thou so?

Adr. No my good Lord. My felfe, he, and my fifter,
To day did dine together: to belial my foule,
As thiff life he burdens me withall.

Luce. Ne're may I locke on day, nor fleepe on night,
But the tale to your Highneff fimple truth.

Gold. O prou'd woman! They are both forfowrne,
In this thy Madman iuffly chargeth them.

E. Ant. My Liege, I am advis'd what I fay,
Neither disturbl'd with the effect of Wine,
Nor head-rafh prou'd wiff with raging me,
Albeit my wrongs might make one wifder mad,

This woman lock'd me out this day from dinner;
This Goldsmith there, were he not pack'd with her,
Could I not urge him for he was with her then,
Who parted with me to go fetch a Chaine,
Promising to bring it to the Porpentine,
Where Balbafar and I did dine together.

Our dinner done, and he not comming thither,
I went to feek him. In the freet I met him,
And in his company that Gentleman.

There did this pertur'd Goldsmith fware me downe,
That this day of him receiv'd the Chaine,
Which God he knowes, I faw not. For which the,
He did arrefte me with an Officer.

I did obey, and fent my Peante home.

For certaine Duckefs he with none return'd.

Then fairely I bafpoke the Officer
To go in perfon with me to my houfe.

By thy way, we met my wife, her fifter, and a rabble more
Of vilde Confederates: Along with them
They brought one Pinch, a hungry leane-fac'd Villaine;
A mcer Anatomy, a Mountebank,
A thred-bare luger, and a Fortune-teller,
A neely-hollow-ey'd dare looking-wretch;
A lying dead man. This pernicious fluce,
Forfooth took on him as a Conuener:
And gazing in mine eyes, feeling my pufle,
And with no-face (as were) out-facing me,
Cries out, I was poiffell. Then altogether
They fell upon me, bound me, bore me thence,
And in a dark and dampnefs vault at home
There left me and my man, both bound together,
Till bowing with my teeth my bonds in funder,
I gau'd my freedom; and immediately
Run hether to your Grace, whom I beliefe
To give me ample fatisfacTion
For thefe deep fhaimes, and great indignities.

Gold. My Lord, in truth, thus far I winnes with him:
That he didn't not at home, but was lock'd out.

Duke. But had he fuch a Chaine of thee, or no?

Gold. He had my Lord, and when he ran in heere,
These people faw the Chaine about his necke.

Mar. Besides, I will be fowre these cares of mine,
Heard you confeffe you had the Chaine of him,
After you firt forweare it on the Mars,
And thereupon I drew my fword on you:
And then you fled into this Abbey heere,
From whence I thinkke you are come by Miracle.

E. Ant. I neuer came within their Abbey waies,
Nor ever did I draw thy fword on me:
I neuer faw the Chaine, to helpen heauen;
And this is falf ye burren me withall.

Duke. Why what an intricate impeach is this?
I thinkke you all haue drunke of Circes cup:
If heere you haues him, heere he would haue bi:
If he were mad, he would not pleade so coldly:
You fay he didn't at home, the Goldsmith heere Demes that faying. Sirs, what fay you for?

E. Div. Sir he dinde with her there, at the Porpentine.

Cur. He di'd, and from my fingr fhcat that Ring.

E. Ant. Tis true (my Liege) this Ring I had of her.

Duke. Saw'st thou him enter at the Abbey heere?

Cur. At fure (my Liege) as I do feee your Grace.

Duke. Why this is flauenge: Go call the Abbaffe here.
I thinke you are all mated, or farke mad.
Enter the Abbess with a Steward Sir, and Dromio Sir.

Abbess. Most mighty Duke, behold a man much wrong'd.

Add. lest two husbands, or mine eyes deceive me.

Duke. One of these men is genio to the other.
And so of theirs, which is the natural man,
And which the spirit? Who deciphers them?

S. Dromio. I Sir am Dromio, command him away.
E. D. I Sir am Dromio, pray let me stay.
S. Ant. Egeon art thou not? else be his ghost.

Ahb. Who can bound him, I will lose his bonds,
And gain a husband by his libertie?
S. Dromio. If thou beest the man
That hadst a wife once call'd Egeon,
That bound thee at a burthen two faire terms?
Oh if thou beest the same Egeon, speake
And speake unto the same Egeon,
Duke. Why here begets his Morning Floric right:
These two Antipholus, these two fo like,
And these two Dromio's, one in semblance:
Besides her angry of her wacke at fees,
There are the parents to these children,
Which accidentally are met together.

Fa. If I can shew thee, thou art Egeon.
Fain wouldst thou shew me, where is that fonne
That ftoke with thee on the fatal rafe.

Duke. By men of Epydamms, he, and I,
And the twin Dromio, all were taken vp;
But by and by, rude Fishmen of Corinthe
By force tooke Dromio, and my fonne from them,
And me they left with those of Epydamms.

What then became of them, I cannot tell:
I, to this fortune that you fee mee in.

Duke. Antipholus thou canst't from Corinthe first.
S. Ant. No hit, not I, I came from Strophia.

Duke. Stay, stand apart, I know not which is which.
E. Ant. I came from Corinthe my most gracious Lord
E. Drou. And I with him.

Duke. Brought to this Town by that most famous Warriour,
Duke Menepheus your most renowned Vnkle.

Add. Which of you two did come with me to day?
S. Ant. I, gentle Miltris.

Add. And are not you my husband?
E. Ant. No, I say nay to that.
S. Ant. And so do I, yet did the call me so.
And this faire Gentlewoman her fitter here
Did call me brother. What I told you then,
I hope I shall have leisure to make good,
If this be not a dreame I fee and hear.

Goldsmith. That is the Chaine fit, which you had of me.

S. Ant. I think it be fit, I deny it not.
E. Ant. And you for this Chaine arrested me,
Gold. I think I did fit, I deny it not.

Add. I sent you monie fitt to be your baile
By Dromio, but I thinke he brought it not.
E. Drou. No, none by me.
S. Ant. This purde of Duckets I receiv'd from you,
And Dromio my man did bring them me:
I see we still did meete each others man,
And I was tane for him, and he for me,
And thereupon these errors are arrose.

E. Ant. These Duckets ponne I for my father heere.
Duke. It shall not neede, thy father hath his life.
Cur. Sir I must haue that Diamond from you.
S. Ant. There take it, and much thanks for my good cheere
Add. Renowned Duke, youe shal take the paines
To goe with vs into the Abbey heere.
And hear at large disscourfed all our fortunes,
And all that are assembled in this place:
That by this sympathized one daies error
Hauing much wrong. Goe, keepe vs compaunie.
And we shall make full satisfaction.
Thirteen three years have I but gone in travaile
Of you my fonnes, and till this preuent hope
My hearie burden were delivered:
The Duke my husband, and my children both,
And you the Kalender of their Nativity,
Go to a Gossip's feast, and go with mee,
After so long travaile such Nativity.

Duke. With all my heart, Ile Gossip at this feast.

S.Dro. Master, shall I fetch your stuffe from shipboard?
E.Ant. What stuffe of mine hast thou embarkt?
S.Dro. Your goods that lay at the port in the Centaur.
E.Ant. He spakes to me, I am your master Dromio.

FINIS.
Much adoe about Nothing.

A Flus primus, Scena prima.

Enter Leonato Governor of Messina, Imagen his wife, Here his daughter, and Beatrice his Niece, with a messenger.

Leon. See in this Letter, that Don Pedro of Arragon, comes this night to Messina.

Meff. He is very near by this; he was not three Leagues off when I left him.

Leon. How many Gentlemen have you lost in this action?

Meff. But few of any sort, and none of name.

Leon. A victorie is twice as sweet, when the atchieuer brings home full numbers: I finde here, that Don Pedro hath bet a wed much honor on a young Florentine, called Claudia.

Meff. Much depend'd on his part, and equally remembred by Don Pedro, he hath borne himselfe beyond the promisse of his age, doing in the figure of a Lion, the feats of a Lion, he hath indeede better bretted expectation, then you must expect of me to tell you how.

Leo. He hath an Vackle here in Messina, will be very much glad of it.

Meff. I have already delivered him letters, and there appears much joy in him, even so much, that joy, could not shew it vse modified without, a bag of bitterness.

Leo. Did he break out into tears?

Meff. In great measure.

Leo. A kinde over flow of kindnesse, there are no face truer, than those that are so vall'd, how much better is it to weep at joy, then to joy at weeping?

Beat. I pray you, is Signior Montague return'd from the wars, or no?

Meff. I know none of that name, Lady, there was none such in the ammie of any fort.

Leon. What is he that you ask for Neece?

Hero. My cousin means Signior Benedick of Padua.

Meff. O he's return'd, and as pleasaunt as euer he was.

Beat. He set vp his bills here in Messina, & challeng'd Cupid at the Plight; and my Vackles foole reading the Challenge, subscrib'd for Cupid; and challeng'd him at the Barbolt. I pray you, how many hath he kill'd and eaten in these varties? But how many hath he kill'd? For indeed, I promis'd to care all of his killing.

Leon. Faith Neece, you take Signior Benedicke too much, he shall be with you, I doubt it not.

Meff. He hath done good service Lady in these wars.

Beat. You had much victed, and he hath helpte to ease it; he's a very valiant Trencher-man, he hath an excellent Romneye.

Meff. And a good fouldier too Lady.

Beat. And a good fouldier to a Lady. But what is he to a Lord?

Meff. A Lord to a Lord, a man to a man, flutt with all honourable vertues.

Beat. It is to indeed, he is no lesse then a fouldier man: but for the fluttig well, we are all mortall.

Leon. You must not (Sir) mistake my Neece, there is a kind of merry war betwixt Signior Benedick, & her; they never meet, but there's a skirmish of wit between them.

Beat. Alas, he gets nothing by that. In our last conflict, foure of his false wit went halting off, and now is the whole man gourn'd with one; so that if hee haue wit enoue to kepe himselfe warme, let him beeare it for a difference betwenee himselfe and his horse: For it is all the wealth that he hath left, to be knowne a reasome creature. Who is his companion now? He hath euerie month a new worth brother.

Meff. Tit possible?

Beat. Very eaily possible: he weares his faith but as the fashion of his hat, it ever changes with the next block.

Meff. Ife (Lady) the Gentleman is not in your bookes.

Beat. No, and he were, I would burne my fyldy. But I pray you, who is his companion? Is there no young squarer now?, that will make a voyage with him to the duell?

Meff. He is most in the company of the right noble Claudius.

Beat. O Lord, he will hang upon him like a disease: he is sooner caught then the prifilience, and the raker runs prefently mad. God helpe the noble Claudius, if hee haue caught the Benedick, it will cost him a thousand pound ere he be cur'd.

Meff. I will hold friends with you Lady.

Beat. Do good friend.

Leon. You'll ne'er run mad Neece.

Beat. No, not till a hot January.

Meff. Don Pedro is approach'd.

Enter don Pedro, Claudius, Benedick, Baldesfar, and John the Bosward.

Pedro. Good Signior Leonato, you are come to meet your trouble: the fashion of the world is to avoid coit, and you encounter it.

Leon. Neuer came trouble to my house in the likenes of your Grace: for trouble being gone, comfort should remaine: but when you depart from me, sorrow abides, and happiness takes his leave.

I. 3
Pedro. You embrace your charge too willingly: I think this is your daughter.

Leonato. Her mother hath many times told me so.

Bened. Were you in doubt that you ask her?

Leonato. Signior Benedick, no, for then were you a child.

Pedro. You have it full Benedick, we may gheffe by this, what you are, being a man, truly the Lady fathers her: be happy Lady, for you are like an honorable father.

Bened. If Signior Leonato be her father, she would not have his head on her shoulders for all Melinda, as like him as the is.

Bened. I wonder that you will still be talking, Signior Benedick, no body markes you.

Bened. What my deere Lady Difdaine! are you yet living?

Ped. Is it possible Difdaine should die, while she hath such meere food to feed it, as Signior Benedick? Curtefe it felt must convert to Difdaine, if you come in her presence.

Bened. Then is curtefe a turne-coste, but it is certaine I amou of all Ladies, onely you excepted: and I would I could finde in my heart that I had not a hard heart, for truly I love none.

Ped. A deere happiness to women, they would else have beene troubled with a pertinent Sitter, I thank God and my cold blood, I am of your humour for that, I had rather heare my Dog barke at a Crow, then a man sweare he loves me.

Bened. God keep your Ladiship still in that minde, so some Gentleman or other shall scape a predefinate scratch face.

Ped. Scratching could not make it worse, and were such a face as yours were.

Bened. Well, you are a rare Parat teacher.

Ped. A bird of my tongue, is better than a beast of your.

Bened. I would my horse had the speed of your tongue, and so good a continuance, but keep your way a Gods name, I have done.

Ped. You alwayes end with a ladestricke, I know you of old.

Pedro. This is the sumne of all; Leonato, signior Claudio, and signior Benedick; my deere friend Leonato, hath imputed you all, I tell him we shall play here, at the least a moneth, and he heartily prays some occasion may de- taine vs longer: I dare sweare he is no hypocrite, but prais from his heart.

Leon. If you sweare, my Lord, you shall not be forsworne, lest mee bid you welcome, my Lord, being reconciled to the Prince your brother: I owe you all duty.

John. I thank you, I am not of many words, but I thank you.

Leon. Please it your grace leade on.

Pedro. Your hand Leonato, we will goe together.

Exeunt. Monet Benedick and Claudio.

Claudio. Benedick, didst thou note the daughter of signior Leonato?

Bened. I noted her not, but I lookt on her.

Claudio. Is she not a modest yong Ladie?

Bened. Do you question me as an honest man should, doe, for my simple true judgement or would you have me speake after my outnome, as being a professed tyrant to their love?

Claudio. No, I pray thee speake in sober judgement.

Bened. Why yfaith me thinks thee's too low for a bie praise, too browne for a faire prais, and too little for a great prase, onely this commendation I can afford her, that were she other then she is, she were vnhanddone, and being no other, but as she is, I do not like her.

Claudio. Thou thinkst I am in sport, I pray thee tell me truly how thou lik'st her.

Bened. Would you buie her, that you enquier after her?

Claudio. Can the world buie such a jewel?

Bened. Yea, and a cafe to put it into, but speake you this with a sad brow? Or doe you play the flowings sackle, to tell vs Cupid is a good Hare-finder, and Vulcan a rare Carpenter: Come, in what key shall aman take you to goe in the song?

Claudio. In mine eie, she is the sweetest Ladie that euer I looke on.

Bened. I can see yet without specfacles, and I see no such matter: there's her cofin, and she were not poftled with a furie, exceeded she as much in beautie, as the fist of Maie doth the last of December: but I hope you have no intent to turne husband, have you?

Claudio. I would shee truft my selfe, though I had unworne the contrarie, if Hero would be my wife.

Bened. Il come to this: in faith hath not the world one man but he will weare his cap with suffitio? shall I not see a batcheller of three score again? goe to yfaith, and thou wilt needes thruit thy necke into a yoke, weare the print of it, and figh away sundazes: looke, don Pedro is returned to seeke you.

Enter don Pedro, Iohn the bostard.

Pedro. What secret hath held you here, that you followed not to Leonato?

Bened. I would your Grace would constraine me to tell.

Pedro. I charge thee on thy allegiance.

Bened. You here, Count Claudio, I can be secret as a dumbe man, I would you have thought so (but on my allegiance, mark ye this, on my allegiance) hee is in love, With who? now that is your Graces part: make how short his answere is, with Hero, Leonato short daughter, Claudio. If this were so, so were it vittred.

Bened. Like the old tale, my Lord, it is not so, nor twas not so: but indeede, God forbid it should be so.

Claudio. If my passion change not shortly, God forbid it should be other wise.

Bened. Amen, if you loue her, for the Ladie is very well worthie.

Claudio. You speake this to fetch me in, my Lord.

Pedro. By my troth I speake my thought.

Claudio. And in faith, my Lord, I spoke mine.

Bened. And by my two faiths and troths, my Lord, I speake mine.

Claudio. That I love her, I feel.

Pedro. That she is worthie, I know.

Bened. That I neither feele how shee should be loued, nor know how shee should be worthie, is the opinion that fire cannot melt out of me, I will die in it at the flake.

Pedro. Thou wast euer an obstinate heretique in the despight of Beautie.

Claudio. And neuer could maintain his part, but in the force of his will.

Bened. That

Ben. That a woman conceived me, I thank her: that she brought me vp, I likewise glutted most humble thanks: but that I will have a rechace winded in my forehead, or hang my bugle in an inviolable baldricke, all women shall pardon me: because I will not do them the wrong to mistruit any, I will do my selfe the right to truette none: and the fine is, (for which I may goe the finer) I will have a Batchelor.

Pedro. I shall fee thee ere I die, looke pale with love.

Bene. With anger, with sickneffe, or with hunger, my Lord, not with love: proue that euerr I loose more blood with love, than I will get againe with drinking, pick out my mine eyes with a Ballet-makers puin, and hang me vp at the doore of a brochel-house for the signe of blinde Cupid.

Pedro. Well, if euer thou dost fall from this faith, thou wilt proue a notable argument.

Bene. If I do, hang me in a boute like a Cat, & shoot at me, and he that's me, let him be clapt on the shoul-der, and call Adam.

Pedro. Well, as time shall trie: In time the fauge

Bull doth beare the yoake.

Bene. The faugue bull may, but if euer the feasible Benedict beasse, pluck off the bull's bulles, and set them in my forehead, and let me be wildly painted, and in such great Letters as they write, here is good horror to hire: lest them signifie under my figure, here you may see Benedict the maried man.

Clau. If this shoule euer happen, thou wouldst bee borne mad.

Pedro. Nay, if Cupid have not spent all his Quiner in Venice, thou wilt quacke for this shortly.

Bene. I looke for an earthquake too then.

Pedro. Well, you will temperize with the heares, in the meantime, good Signior Benedick, repair to Leonato, commend me to him, and tell him I will not fail him at supper, for indeed he hath made great preparation.

Bene. I haue almost matter enough in me for such an Embassage, and so I commit you.

Clau. To the tuition of God. From my loue, if I had it.

Pedro. The flant of July. Your loving friend, Benedick.

Bene. Nay mocke nor, mocke nor; the body of your discourse is sometime guarded with fragmentes, and the guards are but lightly bastued on either, ere you flout old ends any further, examine your confence, and so I leave you.

Exit.

Clau. My Liege, your Highneffe now may doe mee good.

Pedro. My loue is shene to teach, teach it but how, and thou shalt see how apt it is to learn. Any hard Letton that may doe thee good.

Clau. Hath Leonato any fomne my Lord?

Pedro. No childbe but Here, she's his only heire,

Dost thou siffed her (laude)?

Clau. O my Lord,

When you went onward on this ended action, I look'd upon her with a fouldiers eie,

That lik'd, but had a routher taste in hand,

Than to drie like to the name of loue:

But nowe I am return'd, and that ware-thoughts

Have left their places vacant: in their roomes,

One the thronging folc and delicate defires,

All promising mee how faire young Hero is,

Saying I lik'd her ere I went to warres.

Pedro. Thou wilt be like a lover preferently,

And tire the hearer with a booke of words:

If thou dost love faire Hero, cherish it,

And I will breake with her: wait not to this end,

That thou begi hast to twiff to fine a flyr?

Clau. How sweetly doe you minifie to loue,

That know loues grieffe by his complexion?

But left my looking might too faire scene,

I would have sal'd it with a longer trettice.

Ped. What need it bridge much broader then the flood?

The fairest grante is the necessitie:

Looke what will sure, is first: 'tis once, thou louest,

And I will fit thee with the remeide,

I know we shall have reuelling to night,

I will affume thy part in some diffique,

And tell faire Hero I am Claudio,

And in her boforme I will misapphe my heart,

And take her hearing prisoner with the force

And strong incounter of my amorous tale:

Then after, to her father will I break,

And the conclusion is, free shall be thine,

In pracie let vs put it preferently.

Enter Leonato and an old man, brother to Leonato.

Lea. How now brother, where is my coven your son:

hast he prouided this mucelle ?

Old. He is very bufe about it, but brother, I can tell you newes that you yet dreame not of.

Lea. Are they good?

Old. As the events flanps them, but they have a good couer: they flew well outward, the Prince and Count Claudio walking in a thick pleased alley in my orchard, were thus ouer-heard by a man of mine: the Prince disconcered to Claudio that hee loued his niece your daughter, and meant to acknowledge it this night in a dance, and if he found her accordant, hee meant to take the premire time by the top , and instantly break with you of it.

Lea. Hast the fellow any wit that told you this?

Old. A good flanps fellow, I will tend for him, and question him your ifrite.

Lea. No, no; wee will hold it as a dreame till it appears it selfe: but I will acquaint my daughter withall, that she may be the better prepared for an answer, if peradventure this bee true: goe you and tell her of it: cor-redit, you know what you have to doe, O I cry you mercie friend, goe you with mee and I will rite your e fil, good cosin have a care this bulfe time.

Exeunt.

Enter Sir John the Baffard, and Conrade his companion.

Con. What the good yeere my Lord, why are you thus out of mesure laid?

Iob. There is no mesure in the occasion that breeds, therefore the fideffie is without limit.

Con. You should hear reason.

Iob. And when I have heard it, what blessing bring-geth it?

Con. If not a preffent remedy yet a patient suffrance,

Iob. I wonder that thou (being as thou faist thou art, borne under Saturne ) goest about to apply a morall medicine, to a mortifying mishiffe: I cannot hide what I am : I must bee sad when I haue caufe, and smile at no mans lefts, eat when I haue flamacke, and wait for no manes leisur, sleepe when I am droowe, and tend on no mans busineffe, laugh when I am merry, and claw no man in his humor.

Con. Yes, but you must not make the ful shew of this, till you may doe it without controllment, you have of Beatrice. He were an excellent man that were made luft in the mid-way between him and Benedick, the one is too like an image and lies nothing, and the other too like my Ladies eldest sone, evermore tasting.

Leon. Well, I halfe signifie Benedick tongue in Court.

Beat. With a good legge, and a good foot winkle, and money enough in his purse, such a man would winne any woman in the world, if he could get her good will.

Leon. By my troth Nece, thou wilt never get thee a husband, if thou be so farre from thy tongue.

Brother. Infaith shee's too curf.

Beat. Too curf is more then curf, I shall leffen Gods fending that way: for it is said, God sends a curf Cow short hornes, but to a Cow too curf he sends none.

Beat. So, by being too curf, God will send you no hones.

Beat. Luft, if he fend me no husband, for which the blessing, I am at him vpon my knees every morning and evening : Lord, I could not endure a husband with a beard on his face, I had rather lie in the woollen.

Leon. You may light vpon a husband that hath no beard.

Beatrice. What should I doe with him? drieffe him in my apperel, and make him my waiting gentlewoman the that hath a beard, is more then a youth: and he that hath no beard, is leffe then a man: and hee that is more then a youth, is not for me: and he that is leffe then a man, I am not for him: therefore I will even take experience in earne of the Berord, and lead his Apes into hell.

Leon. Well then, goue you into hell.

Beat. No, but to the gate, and there will the Deuill meet mee mee like an old Cuckold with horns on his head, and say, get you to heauen Beatrice, get you to heauen, here's no place for you maidis, so deliever I vp my Apes, and away to S.Peter : for the heuens, hee sith mee where the Batchellers fit, and therefore wee me as merry as the day is long.

Brother. Well neece, I trust you will be rul'd by your father.

Beatrice. Yes faith, it is my cofens duty to make curf, and say, as it pleasa you: but yet for all that, cofens, let him be a handfome fellow, or else make an other curf, and say, father, as it please me.

Leonato. Well neece, I hope to see you one day fitted with a husband.

Beatrice. Not till God make men of some other met-tall then earth, would it not grievce a woman to be overmalterd with a piece of valiant duff to make account of her life to a clog of wattward mare? no winkle, ile none:
Adams doune are my brethren, and truly I hold it a shame to match in my kindred.

Leon. Daughter, remember what I told you, if the Prince doe ficticel you in that kind, you know your an-swere.

Beatrice. The fault will be in the mussiche coifie, if you be not wode in good time: if the Prince bee too important, tell him there is measure in every thing, & so dance out the answere, for heare me Here, wooing, wending, & repeating, It is a Scotch jiggie, a mesarme, and a cinque-pace: the first jiggie is hot and bally like a Scotch jiggie (full as fantasticall) the wedding manerely modest, (as a mesarme) full of flate & sumcheery, and then comes repenance, and with his bad legs falls into the cinque-pace faster and faster, till he sinkes into his grave.

Leonato.
Enter Prince, Pedro, Claudio, and Benedick, and Baldekar, or dumke John, Markers, with a drum.

Pedro. Lady, will you walk about with your friend?

Hero. So you walk softly, and looke sweetly, and say nothing, I am yours for the walk, and especially when I walk away.

Pedro. Will me in your company?

Hero. I may say so when I please.

Pedro. And when please you to say so?

Hero. When I like your favour, for God defend the Lute should be like the caze.

Pedro. My vifor is Putimous rooste, within the house is Ioue.

Hero. Why then your vifor should be thatch?

Pedro. Speake low if you speake loue.

Ben. Well, I would you did like me.

Hero. So would not I for your owne face; for I have mane ill qualities.

Ben. Which is one?

Hero. I say my prayers slow.

Ben. I loue you the better, the hearers may cry Amen.

Hero. God match me with a good dammer.

Balt. Amen.

Hero. And God keep him out of my sight when the dance is done: answer Clakc.

Btal. No more word, the Clarke is answered, Virsula. I know you well enough, you are Signior Anthonio.

Ant. At a word, I am not.

Virsula. I know you by the wagling of your head.

Ant. To tell you true, I counterfeit him.

Virsula. You could never doe him so ill well, unless you were the very man: here's his dry hand vp & down, you are he, you are he.

Ant. At a word I am not.

Virsula. Come, come, do you think I doe not know you by your excellent wit? can you reade his falf? do you go to, numme, you are he, grace will appeare, and there's an end.

Best. Will you not tell me who told you so?

Ben. No, you shall pardon me.

Best. Nor will you not tell me you are?

Ben. Not now, not now.

Best. The I was disdainefull, and that I had my good wit out of the hundrety merry tattles; well, this was Signior Benedick that said so.

Best. What's he?

Best. I am sure you know him well enough.

Ben. Not 1, beleue me.

Best. Did he never make you laugh?

Ben. I pray you what is he?

Best. Why be he in the Prince's estate, a very dull fool, only his gifts is, in deuising impossibl flanders, none but libertines delight in him, and the commendation is not in his wite, but in his villainy, for hee both pleaseth men and amers them, and then they laugh at him, and beat him: I am sure he is in the Fleet, I would he had boarded me.

Ben. When I know the Gentleman, Ile tell him what you say.

Best. Do, do, hee I but breake a comparison or two on me, which peraduenture (not marks, or not laugh'd at) strikes him into melancholy, and then there's a Partridge wing fixt, for the foolc will care no upper that night. We must follow the Leaders.

Ben. In every good thing.

Best. Nay, if they leade to any ill, I will leave them at the next turning. Exiut.

Musick for the dance.

John. Sure my brother is amorous on Hero, and hath wondred rame her father to breake with him about it: the Ladies follow her, and but one visit remains.

Bened. And that is Cludio, I know him by his bea-

Hero. Are not you signior Benedick?

Clas. You know me well, I am here.

Hero. Signior, you are very neere my Brother in his love, he is enamou'd on Hero, I pray you disswade him from her, he is no equal for his birth: you may do the part of an honest man in it.

Claudio. How know you he loves her?

John. I heard him for eare his affection, Ie. So did I too, and he trowe he would marry her to night.

Hero. Come, let vs to the banquet. Exiunt

Clas. Thus suuerre I in name of Benedick,

But here these ill newes with the cares of Claudio:

'Tis certaine fo, the Prince wores for himselfe:

Friendship is confinant in all other things,

Sate in the Office and affaires of house

Therefore all hearts in love vie their owne tongues.

Let eniere eye negotiate for it selfe,

And truth no Agent : for beauty is a witch,

Against whose charmes, faith melteth into blood;

This is an accident of hourly proofe,

Which I mistrusted not. Farewell therefore Hero.

Enter Benedick.

Ben. Count Claudio.

Clas. Yes, the fame.

Ben. Come, will you go with me?

Clas. Wi'ther?

Ben. Even to the next Willow, about your owne busi-

Clas. Does he know, Count.

Ben. What fashion will you weare the Glasses land off? About your necke, like an Vfurers chaine? Or vnder your arm, like a Lieutenants scarf? You must weare it one way, for the Prince hath got your Hero.

Clas. I wish him joy of her.

Ben. Why she's spoken like an honeft Drouller, so they fel Bullockes: but did you think the Prince would have ferued you thus?

Clas. I pray you leave me.

Ben. Ho now you strike like the blindman, twas the boy that rude your meate, and you'lt beat the post.

Clas. If it will not be, Ile leave you. Exit.

Ben. Als poore hurt fowle, now will he crepe into fedges: But that my Lady Beatrice should know me, & not know me: the Princes fool? Hah! It may be I goe under that title, because I am merrie: yea but so I am apt to do my felfe wrong: I am not so reputed, it is the bafe (though biter) disposition of Beatrice, that put's the world into her perfon, and so gues me out: well, Ie be revenged as I may.

Enter the Prince.

Pedro. Now Signior, where's the Count, did you see him?
Much ado about Nothing.

Benedick. Troth my Lord, I have played the part of Lady Fame, I found him here as melancholy as a Lodge in a Warren, I told him, and I think, told him true; that your grace had got the will of this young Lady, and I offered him my company to a willow tree, either to make him a garland, as being forsworn, or to bind him a rod, as being worthy to be whipt.

Pedro. To be whipt, what's his fault?

Benedick. The flat transgression of a Schoole-boy, who being out-of-way with finding a birds nest, shews it his companion, and he forles it.

Pedro. Wilt thou make a truth, a transgression? the transgression is in the fealer.

Benedick. Yet it had not bene amiss the rod had beene made, and the garland too; for the garland he might have worn himselfe, and the rod hee might have beftowed on you, who(as I take it) shawe done his birds nest.

Pedro. I wou'd but teach them to ting, and restore them to the owner.

Benedick. If their singing answer your faying, by my faith you fay honestly.

Pedro. The Lady Beatrice hath a quarrell to you, the Gentleman that daunft with her, told her there is much wrong'd by you.

Benedick. O the misfide me past the indulgence of a block: an oake but with one greene leafe on it, would have anfwered her: my very vior began to affume life, and fcoff with her: I flated her, not thinking I had beene my felfe, that I was the Princes leafe, and that I was duller then a great thaw, budding leafe upon leafe, with such im- possible conuenience upon me, that I floud like a man at a marke, with a whole army floutting at me: fhe speaks poyniards, and every word flubbles: if her breath were as terrible as terminations, there were no living neere her, she would infect to the north starre: I would not marry her, though the fere were indow'd with all that Adam had left him before hee transgref; fhe would have made Herecules hate turn'd fpeec, yes, and have cleft his club to make the fte too: come, take not of her, you fhall finde her the infernafl Abe in good apparel. I would to God some flouller would conuict her, for certainly while she is here, a man may live as quiet in hell, as in a fanchury, and people flanue upon poefure, becaufe they would goe thither, to indeed all disquiet, horror, and perturbation follows her.

Enter Claudio and Beatrice. Leonato. Hero.

Pedro. I looke heere the comander grace command mee any service to the worlds end? I will goe on the lightlefF arraw now to the Antypodes that you can deuile to fende me on: I will fetch you a tooth-picker now from the furtheft inch of Afa: bring you the length of Prefer John's foot fetch you a hayre off the great Clamms heared: doe you any embaffage to the Piginates, then rherou shall three words conference, with this Harpy: you have no employment for me?

Pedro. None, but to deire your good company.

Benedick. O God fir, here's a difh I loue not, I cannot in- dure this Lady tongue.

Pedro. Come Lady, come, you have loft the heart of Signor Benedick.

Beatrice. Indeed my Lord, hee leant is me while, and I gave him vle for it, a double heart for a fingle one, marry once before he wou'd it of mee, with faile dice, therefore your grace may well fay I haue loft it.

Pedro. You haue put him downe Lady, you haue put him downe.

Beatrice. So I would not hee should do me, my Lord; left I shoud prooue the mother of foolees: I haue brought Count Claudio, whom you fent me to feeke.

Pedro. Why now Count, wherefore are you fad? Claudio. Not fad my Lord.

Pedro. How then fickey?

Claudio. Neither, my Lord.

Beatrice. The Count is neither sad, nor fickey, nor merry, nor well: but ciuill Count, ciuill as an Orange, and something of a lisious complation.

Pedro. Faith Lady, I think your blazon to be true, though Ibe fwoone, if hee be fo, his concert is falle: here Claudio, I haue woode in thy name, and fare Here is won, I haue broke with her father, and his good will obtained, name the day of marriage, and God give thee joy.

Leonato. Count, take of me my daughter, and with her my fortunes: his grace hath made the match, & all grace fay, Amen to it.

Beatrice. Speake Count, tie your Qu.

Claudio. Silence is the perfefFe Herault of joy, I were but little happy if I could fay, how much Lady, as you are mine, I am yours, I guie away my felfe for you, and doft upon the vchange.

Beatrice. Speake count, or if you cannot lift your mouth with a kiff, and let not him fpeak neither.

Pedro. Infaith Lady you haue a merry heart.

Beatrice. Yes my Lord I thinke it, poor foolo fhee keepe's on the windif fide of Care, my cooffin tells him in his heart that he is in my heart.

Claudio. And to the doth cooffin.

Beatrice. Good Lord for alliance: thus goes every one to the world but, and I am fun born'd, I may fit in a corner and cry, heigh ho for a husband.

Pedro. Lady Beatrice, I will get you one.

Beatrice. I would rather have one cerry your father's getting: hath your Grace neere a brother like you? your father got excellent husbands, it's mind could come by them.

Leonato. Will you have me? Lady.

Beatrice. No, my Lord vifleff I might have another for working-dies, your Grace is too coffly to weare ericie day: but I defeech your Grace pardon mee, I were borne to speake all mirth, and no matter,

Leonato. Your flence moft offends mee, and to be merrey, beft becomes you, for out of queftion, you were born in merrie Howe.

Beatrice. No fure my Lord, my Mother cried, but then there was a flarre daunft, and under that was I burnet cooffins God give you joy.

Leonato. Neece, will you looke to those things I told you of?

Pedro. I trye you merrey Vnde, by your Grace pardons.

Exit Beatrice.

Prince. By my troth a pleafant splited Lady.

Leonato. There's little of the melancholy element in her my Lord, the is never sad; but when she fleepes, and not ever sad thenfor I haue heard my daughter fay, the hath often dreamt of unhappinesse, and wake her felfe with laughing.

Pedro. Shee cannot inure to heare tell of a husband.

Leonato. O by no means, she mocks all her woowers out of fuite.

Prince. She were an excellent wife for Benedick.

Leonato. O Lord, my Lord, if they were not a week married.
married, they would take themselves madde.

Prince. Counte Claudio, when meane you to goe to Church?

Claud. To morrow my Lord, Time goes on crutches, till Louis have all his rites.

Leont. Nut still mondy, my deare sonne, which is here a sufste stnigh, and a time too briefe too, to have all things safer made.

Prince. Come, you shake the head at fo long a breathing, but I warrant thee Claudio, the time shall not goe dully by, v'l I will in the interims, vndertake one of Herculeas labors, which is, to bring Signor Benedick, and the Lady Beatrice into a mountain of affection, thone with th'othes, I would fase have it a match, and I doubt not but to fashion it, if you three will but minister such affiance as I shall give you direction.

Leont. My Lord, I am tory you, though it cost mee ten nights watchings.

Clau. And my Lord.

Por. And you to gentle Hero?

Her. I will doe any meddell office, my Lord, to helpe my rofin to a good husband.

Por. And Benedick is not the vhoheufuelt husband that I know: thus farre can I praise him, hee is of a noble staine, of approv'd valour, and confirm'd honesty, I will teach you how to humour your couine, that thee shall fall in love with Benedick, and I, with your two helpers, will so praeficie on Benedick, that in despight of his quicke witt, and his esteeme of himselfe, hee shall fall in love with Beatrice: if wee can doe this, Coupis is no lodger an Arche, his glory shall be ours, for wee are the onely loved, goe in with me, and I will tell you my drift. Exit. Enter John, and Bardachin.

John. It is soe, the Count Clandio shall marry the daughter of Leontae.

Bec. Yes my Lord, but I can crosse it.

John. Any barre, any crosse, any impediment, will be medicable to me, I am fickle in ditpilse to him, and whatsoever comes shrart his affection, ranges equally with mine, how canst thou crosse this marriage?

Bec. Not honestly my Lord, but so courteously, that no dishonestly shall appear in me.

John. Shew me breefely how.

Bec. I thinke I told your Lordship a yeere since, how much I am in the fauour of Margeret, the waiting gentle-woman to Hero.

John. I remem.ber.

Bec. I can at any vsetable infall of the night, appoint her to look out at her Ladies chamber window.

John. What life is in that, to be the death of this marriage?

Por. The poxion of that lies in you to temper; goe to the Prince your brother, spare not to tell him, that hee hath wronged his Honor in marryinge the renowned Clandio, whose effimation do you mighty hold vp, to a contaminate state, such a one as Hero.

John. What proofs shall I make of that?

Por. Proofs enought, to misufe the Prince, to vexe

Claudio, to vnwoe her, and kill Leontae, looke you for a ny other issue.

John. Oly to despight them, I will endeavour any thing.

Por. Goe then, finde me a mete howre, to draw on Phero and the Count (Claudio alone, tell them that you know that Hero loves me, intend a kinde of zeale both to the Prince and Clandio (as in a loue of your brothers honor who hath made this match) and his friends reputation, who is thus like to be collen'd with the semblance of a mad, that you have onsetter'd thus you'll face by believe this with soe trull, offer them infancies, which shall hare no left lifebellend, then to bee mee at her chamber window, bee me call (Margaret, Hero; here

Margaret terme me Clandio, and bring them to see this the very night before the intended wedding, for in the mean time, I will to inflame the matter, that Hero shall be absent; and there shall appear such seeming truths of Hero transfigur'd, that mine faire shall be calld affiance, and all the preparation overthrown.

Por. Grow this to what saucy issue it can, I will put it instantly: be cunning in the working this, and thy fees is thine and duties.

Bec. Bath in confrance in the accumualtion, and my cunning shall not blame me.

Phero. I will pretend the goe learnes her day of marri age. Exit.

Enter Beatrice alone.

Beatrice.

Bec. My Lord.

Bec. In my chamber window lies a booke, bring it to her in the next bedchamber.

Bec. I am here already, sir.

Bec. I know that, but I would have thee hence, and see thee again. I doe much wonder, that one man seeing how much another man is in loves, when hee dedicates his behaevours to loue, shall after bee haue laught at such shallow follies in others, become the argument of his owne formce, by falling in loue, & such a man is Clandio. I have known when there was no musique with him but the drum and the fife, and now I haue seene other hear the tabere and the pipe: I haue knowne when he would haue walkt ten mile about, to see a good armee, and now will he ten nightes awake earing the fifion of a newe cymball; he was wont to speake plainly, & to the purpose (I haue an honest man & a fooler) and now is heu'd orthographie, his words are a very fantastical banquet, unto many strange diuines: may I be so contented, & see with theie eyes? I cannot tell, I thinke not: I will not be fororne, but love may transforme me to an offer, but he may take my oath on it, he'll haue made an offer of me, he shall neuer make me such a foole: one woman is faire, yet I am well: another is vstious, or I am well: but till all graces be in one woman, one woman shall not come in my grace: rich thee shall be, that's certaine: wife, or Ile none of vertuous, or Ile never cheape her: faire, or Ile never looke on her: milde, or come not for me: Noble, or not for an Angell: of good discourse: an excellent Musician; and haue faire shall be of what colour is pleasaunt to God, ha! the Prince and Monsieur Love, I will hide me in the Arbor.

Enter Prince, Leonato, Clandio, and Balthasar.

Phero. Come, shall we hear this musique?

Phero. Yea my good Lord: how fill the evening is, as muficke on purpose to grace harmony.

Phero. See you where Benedick hath hid himselfe?

Clandio. O very well my Lord; the musique ended, We'll fit the kid foxe with a penny worth.

Por. Come Balthasar, we'll heare that song again.

Balth. O good my Lord,taxe not so bad a voyce,

To hinder musique any more then once.

Por. It is the winnesse full of excellency,

To flander Musicke any more then once.

Prince. It is the witnesse full of excellency,
To put a strange face on his owne perfection,
I pray thee fing, and let me woe no more.

Balth. Because you take of wooing, I will fing,
Since many a wooster doth commence his fuit,
To her he thinks not worthy, yet he woos,
Yet will he sweate he loves.

Prince. Nay pray thee come,
Or if thou wilt hold longer argument,
Doe it in notes.

Balth. Note this before my notes,
There's not a note of mine that's worth the noting.

Prince. Why these are very crotchets that he speakes,
Note this for toforo, and nothing.

Bene. Now divine are, now is his foule raiufl, is it not strange that theepeus guus should hale foules out of mens bodies? well, a home for my money when all's done.

The Song.

Sing no more Ladys, sing no more,
Men were destriers ever,
One foots in Sea, and one on houre,
To one thing constant never.

Then sing no more, but let them go,
And bethou thee and fomeone,
Converting all your sounds of war,
Into thy many nions.

Sing no more dutties, sing no more,
Of dups to dah and behay,
The fraud of men were ever so,
Since summer first was lew.

Then sing no more,

Prince. By my troth a good song.

Balth. And all ill finge my Lord.

Prince. Ha, no, no faith, thou fingeft well enough for a fhift.

Ben. And he had been a dog that should have howld thus, they would have hang'd him, and I pray God his bad voyce bode too mischife, I had as hie have heard the night-racen, come what plague could have come after it.

Prince. Ye amarry, doft thou have Balthafar? I pray thee get vs some excellent muffick: for to morrow night we will have it at the Lady Heroes chamber window.

Balth. The bell I can, my Lord. Exit Balthafar.

Prince. Do so, farewell. Come bither Leonato, what was it you told me of to day, that your Niece Beatrice was in love with fignior Benedick?

Clu. O! falle on, falfe on, the foulle fitts. I did neuer thinke that Lady would have loved any man.

Leon. No nor I neither, but most wonderfull, that she should fo dotate on Signior Benedick, whomfe hath in all outward behaviours seemed more to abhorre.

Bene. Is't poiffible? is't the winde in that corner?

Leon. By my troth my Lord, I cannot tell what to thinke of it, but that she loses him with an infame affec- tion, it is pat the infinite of thought.

Prince. May be the doth but counterfeit,

Clu. Faith like enough,

Leon. O God! he counterfeit? there was never counterfeit of passion, came to feere the life of passion as the dis- courtes it.

Prince. Why what effects of passion fliwes she?

Clu. Bate the booke well, this fith will buce.

Leon. What effects my Lord? fhe will fit you, you heard my daughter tell you how.

Clu. She did indeed.

Prun. How, how I pray you? you amaze me, I would have her fpirit had bene inuincible against all affults of affection.

Leon. I would have sworn it had, my Lord, specially against Benedick.

Bene. I think this this a gull, but that the white- bearded fellow speakes it: knuery cannot fure hide himfelfe in fuch reuerence.

Clu. He hath take this infection, hold it vp.

Prun. Hath fhee made her affection known to Benedick?

Leonato. No, and swears the never will, that her torment.

Clu. 'Tis true indeed, so your daughter fakes: hall I, fakes fhee, that have so oft encountered him with fcone, write to him that I love him?

Leon. This fakes fhee now when fhee is beginning to write to him, for fhee'll be vp twenty times a night, and there will the fit in her fnoke, till the fhee write a fhiet of paper: my daughter tells vs all.

Clu. Now you take of a fhiet of paper, I remember a pretty left your daughter told vp of.

Leon. O when fhee had writ it, & was reading it ouer, the found Benedick and Beatrice between the fhheet.

Clu. That.

Leon. O the foor the letter into a thoufand halfepece, railed at her felf that fhe were fo immodeft to write to, to one that fhee knew would fland fher: I meafure him, fakes fhee, by my owne fpirit,for I fhould flout fheer if thee write to me, yea though I love him, I fhould.

Clu. Then downe upon her knees fhe falls, weepes, fobs, beautes her heart, teares her hayre, praies, curtes, O sweet Benedick, God give me patience.

Leon. She doth indeed, my daughter fakes fo, and the extaie hath fo much ouercome her, that my daughter is fonetime afeard fhe will doe a depearte out rage to her felle, it is very true.

Prun. It were good that Benedick knew of it: by one other, if fhe will not difcover it.

Clu. To what end? he fhould but make a fport of it, and torment the poore Lady woes.

Prun. And he fhould, it were an ames to hang him, fhee's an excellent fweet Lady, and (out of all fupplication) fhe is vertuous.

Clu. And fhe is exceeding wife.

Prun. In every thing, but in loving Benedick.

Leon. O my Lord, willedo and blood combating in fo tender a body, we have ten proofs to one, that bleed hath the victory, I am forry for her, as I hate left caufc, being her Venel, and her Guardian.

Prun. I would fhee had beftowed this dotage on me, I would have daft all other refpecfs, and made her halfe my felfes: I pray you tell Benedick of it, and heare what he will fay.

Leon. Were it good thinke you?

Clu. Hero thinkes furely fhee will die, for fhee fakes fhee will die, if fhee loue her not, and fhee will die ere fhee make her loue knowne, and fhee will die if fhee were her, rather than fhee will bare one breath of her accustomed croffenefs.

Prun. She doth well, if fhe fhould make tender of her loue,
Beat. I tooke no more paines for those thankes, then you take paines to thank me, if it was been painfull, I would not have come.

Bene. You take pleasure then in the message.

Beat. Yea so much as you may take upon a knife point, and chose a daw withall: you have no stomake for, fare you well.

Exit.

Bene. Ha, against my will I am sent to bid you come into dinner: there is a double meaning in that: I tooke no more paines for those thankes then you tooke paines to thank me, that's as much as to say, any paines that I take for you is easie so thanes: if I do not take pity of her I am a villain, if I do not love her I am a Jew, I will go get her picture.

Exit.

Athus Tertius.

Enter Hero and two Gentlemen, Margaret, and Virsula.

Hero. Good Margaret, tunne thee to the parlour, There that thou finde my Colin Beatrice, Proposing with the Prince and Claudia, Whisper her care, and tell her I and Virsula, Walk in the Orchard, and our whole discourse Is all of her, say that thou ouer-hearest: And bid her flece into the pleased bowre, Where hony-flickes ripened by the sunny, Forbid the sunny to enter: like faucuries, Made proud by Princes, that advance their pride, Against that power that bред it, there will she hide her, To lighten our purpose, this is thy office, Beare thee well in thine, and leave us alone.

Marg. Ke make her come I warrant you preftly.

Hero. Now Virsula, when Beatrice doth come, As we do trace this alley up and downe, Our talk must only be of Benedick, When I doe name him, let it be thy part, To praise him more then ever man did merit, My talk to thee must be how Benedick Is fickle in love with Beatrice; of this matter, Is little Cupids crafty arrow made, That only wounds by heart-say now begin, Enter Beatrice.

Beatrice. For looke where Beatrice like a Lapwing runt Clofe by the ground, to heare our conference.

Virs. The pleasantl'll angling is to see the fith
Cut with her golden ores the siluer streame, And greelly deuoure the treacherous bate: So angle we for Beatrice, who even now, Is couched in the wood-bine coverture, Feare you not my part of the Dialogue.

Her. Then go we near that her ear loose nothing, Of the falle sweete bate that we lay for it: No truly Virsula, she is too disdainfull, I know her spirits are as coy and wilde, As Haggards of the rocke.

Virsula. But are you fore.

That Benedick loves Beatrice so intirly.

Her. So fates the Prince, and my now trothed Lord.

Virs. And did they bid you tell her of it, Madam?

Her. They did intreate me to acquaint her of it, But I perfwaded them, if they lou'd Benedick.
To with him Vice with affection,
And never to let Beatrice know of it.

Vice. Why did you do, doth not the Gentleman
Deferee a full as fortunate a bed,
As ever Beatrice durst to open?

Her. O God of love! I know he doth deferee,
As much as may be yielded to a man:
But Nature ne'er tram'd a woman's heart,
Of powder stuff then that of Beatrice:
Dlidaine and Sorcor ride sparkling in her eyes,
Mit-prizing what they look on, and her wit
Values it fello highly, that to her
All matter else fieces weake; she cannot love,
Nor take no shape nor proceuil of affection,
She is to felle indic'd.

Vice. Sure I think so,
And therefore certainly it was not good
She knew his loute, left she make sport at it.

Her. Why you speke truth, I never yet saw man,
How wise, how noble, yong, how rarely teur'd.
But she would tell him backward: if faire face d,
She would swear the gentleman should be her filder:
If faire face d, why Nature is drawing of an anticke,
Made a mote blote; till a launce ill headed:
If low, an agot very wildly cut:
If speaking, why a vase blowe with all windes:
If silent, why a blocke moused with none.
So turns the mery man the wrong side out,
And never gues to Truth and Verite, that
Which fimplemelle and ment parchefch.

Vice. Sure, sure, such caping is not commendable.
Her. No, not to be foude; and from all fashions,
As Beatrice is, cannot be commendable,
But who dare tell her so? if I shold speake.
She would mocke me into ayre, O she would laugh me
Out of my ilece, precip' me to death with wit,
Therefore let Benedict be covered fire,
Confume in away fighes, waste inwardly:
It were a better death, to die with mockes,
Which is as bad as the with tucking.

Vice. Yet tell her of it, beware what face will say.
Her. No, rather I will goe to Benedict,
And comundale to fight against his passion,
And truly I deuise some honnest flanders,
To flaine my colin with, one doth not know,
How much an ill word may imposon liking.

Vice. O do not doe your colin such a wrong,
She cannot be so much without true judgement,
Hauing so twift and excellent a wit,
Are it pridle to haue, as to refuse
So rare a Gentleman as signior Benedict.

Her. He is the only man of Italy,
Alwais excepted, my dear Claudia.

Vice. I pray you be not angry with me, Madame,
Speaking my fancy: Signior Benedict,
For fhape, for bearing argument and valour,
Goes for most or report through Italy.
Here, indeed he has an excellent good name.

Vice. His excellence did earn it ere he had it:
When are you married Madame?

Her. Why euer day to morrow, come goe in,
I faw thee some attires, and haue thy counsell,
Which is the belt to furnishe me to morrow.

Vice. Shee's tane I warrant you,
We haue caught her Madame?

Her. If proue it, then loyuing goes by haps,
Much ado about Nothing.

Prin. Indeed that tells a heavy tale for him: conclude, he is in love.

Clas. Nay, but I know who loves him.

Prin. That would I know too, I warrant one that knows him not.

Clas. Yes, and all his ill conditions, and despite of all, dies for him.

Prin. She shall be buried with her face upwards.

Des. Yet is this no charm for the tooth-sake, old signior, walk aside with mee, I haue studied eight or nine wise words to speake to you, which these hobby-horses must not hear.

Prin. For my life to breake with him about Beatrice.

Clas. To true, for Isto and Margaret have by this played their parts with Beatrice, and then the two Beares will not bite one another when they meete.

Enter John the Tailor.

Boaf. My Lord and brother, God face you.

Prin. Good den brother.

Boaf. If it be your leisure seru'd, I would speake with you.

Prin. In private?

Boaf. If it please you, yet Count Claudio may heare, for what I would speake of concerns him.

Prin. What the matter?

Boaf. Means your Lordship to be married to morrow?

Prin. You know he does.

Boaf. I know not that when he knows what I know.

Prin. If there be any impediment, I pray you discover it.

Boaf. You may thank I love you not, let that appeare hereafter, and syne better at me by that I now will manifest, for my brother (I think he holds you well, and in dearestness of heart) hath holpe to effect your enquiring marriage: surely future spill spence, and labour ill bestowed.

Prin. Why, what is the matter?

Boaf. I came hither to tell you, and circumstances shortened, (for she hath beene too long a talking of) the Lady is diplayl.

Clas. Who Heres?

Boaf. Even she, Leonatoes Hero, your Hero, euyet mans Hero.

Clas. Diplayl?

Boaf. The word is too good to paint out her wickedness, I could say she were worse, think you of a worse title, and I will fit her to it: wonder not till further warrant goe but with mee to night, you shall see her chamber window entered, even the night before her wedding day, if you lose her, then to morrow wed her: But it would better fit your honour to change your minde.

Claud. May this be so?

Prin. I will not think it.

Boaf. If you dare not trust that you see, confesse not that you know: if you will follow mee, I will shew you enough, and when you have seene more, & heard more, proceed accordingly.

Clas. If I see any thing to night, why I should not marry her to morrow in the congregation, where I should wedde, there will I shame her.

Prin. And as I wooted for thee to obtaine her, I will joynes with thee to disgrace her.

Boaf. I will disparaage her no farther, till you are my witness, beare it coldly but till night, and let the issue shew it selfe.

Prin. O day untowardly turn'd!
Much afoe about Nothing.

Verges. If you hear a child cry in the night you must call to the nurse, and bid her flill it.

Watch. How if the nurse be asleep and will not hear vs?

Dog. Why then depart in peace, and let the child wake her with crying, for the eue that will not hear her Lamb when it bakes, will never answer a calle when he blears.

Verges. This were true.

Dog. This is the end of the charge: you confable are to prevent the Princes owne person, if you meete the Prince in the night, you may flake him.

Verges. Nay brildie that I thinkke a cannot.

Dog. True shullings to one eun with anie that knows the Statutes, he may flake him, marrie not without the prince be willing, for indeed the with ought to offend no man, and it is an offence to flay a man against his will.

Verges. Bristlie I thinkke it be so.

Dog. Ha, ha, he well masters good night, and there be anie matter of weight chancers, call vp nie, keep your fellows counsaille, and your owne, and good night, come neibhous.

Watch. Well masters, we hear one charge, let vs go fite here upon the Church bench till two, and then all to bed.

Dog. One word more, honest neibhous. I pray you watch about signior Lorenzo doore, for the wedding being there to morrow, there is a great coytle to night, adiewe be vigilant I befeech you.

Excuse, Enter Ivacchro and Courade.

Bar. What, Courade?

Watch. Peace, for not.

Bar. Courade I say.

Con. Here man, I am at thy elbow.

Bar. Mas and my elbow itch, I thought there would a frable follow.

Con. I will owere thee an answer for that, and now forward with thy tale.

Bar. Stand thee close then under this penthouse, for it drieffs raine, and I will, like a true drakard, vitter all to thee.

Watch. Some teason masters, yet stand close.

Bar. Therefore know, I have cramned of Don John a thousand Ducaters.

Con. Is it possible that anie villanie should be so done?

Bar. Thou shouldst taker it; if it were anie villainie should be so done, for when rich williams have neede of poore ones, poore ones may make what price they will.

Con. I wonder at it.

Bar. That the west thou art unconfirmd't, thou knowest that the fashion of a doublet, or a hat, or a claque, is nothing to a man.

Con. Yes, it is apparel.

Bar. I mean the fashion.

Con. Yes the fashion is the fashion.

Bar. Tuff, I may as well say the foules the soules, but feeke thou not what a deformed these this fashion is?

Watch. I know that deformed, a has bin a vile thee, this will yeares, a goes vp and doone like a gentle man: I remember his name.

Bar. Did it thou not heare some bodie?

Con. No, I was the same on the house.

Bar. Seel this thou not (I fay) what a deformed theifte this fashion is, how giddily a turns about all the Hor-} bloods, between fouerenee & fince & thirtie, sometimes fashioning them like Phoebes fouldiers in the reeue painting, sometime like god-Bels priefts in the old Church window,sometimes like the thauen Hercules in the smirth woarm es ten tafetrie, where his cod-piece leemes as maffie as his club.

Con. All this I see, and fee that the fashion weares out more apperell then the manbut art not thou thy felle giddle with the fashion too that thou haft fluxt in of the talk into telling me of the fashions?

Bar. Not so neither, but know that I have to night wooed Margaret the LadyHettes gentle-woman, by the name of Hero, she leaves me out at her misters chamber-window, bids me a thousand times good night; I tell this tale vildly. I should first tell thee the how the Prince Claude and my Mafter planted, and placed, and poiffed by my Malert Don John, law a far off in the Orchard this amiable encounter.

Con. And thought thy Margaret was Hero?

Bar. Two of them did, the Prince and Claude, but the duell my Malert knew she was Margaret and partly by his oathes, which first poiffeth them, partly by the darke night which did decease them, but chietely by my villsenie, which did confirmse any flander that Don John had made, away went Claude enraged, twre would meeathe she was a sooned next morning at the Temple, and there before the whole congregation shame her with what he law o'the night, and send her home againe without a husband.

Watch. 1. We charge you in the Princes name land.

Watch. 2. Call vp the right master Confable, we have here recored the most dangerous piece of lechery, that ever was knowne in the Common-wealth.

Watch. 1. And one Deformd is one of them, I know him, secures a locke.

Con. Masters, maffers.

Watch. 2. Youle be made bring deformed forth I warrant you.

Bar. Masters, newer speake, we charge you, let vs obey you to goe with vs.

Bar. We are like to procure a goodly commoditie, being taken vp of these meys bits.

Con. A commoditie in question I warrant you come vvele obey you.

Excuse, Enter Hero and Margaret and Ursula.

Hero. Good Vrsa, wake my coin Beatrices, and dey her to ride.

Ursula. I will Lady.

Hero. And bid her come hither.

Vsf. Well.

Mar. Troth I thinkse your other rebato were better.

Hero. No pray thee good Mad Blee weane this.

Marg. By my troths not te good, and I warrant your coin vvil say to.

Hero. My coin's a fool, and thou art another, ile vveane none but this.

Mar. I like the newte vwill within excellently, if the harle were a thought brower and you gows a most rare fashion ylyth, I saw the Dutchells of Mahumens gowsne that they praisse to.

Hero. O that exceeds they say.

Mar. By my troths a but a night-gowine in respecte of yours, cloth a gold and curt, and lace with flue, lace with theis, downe fluees, fine fluees, and skirts, round veins between with a blase, but for a fine quest, graceful and excellent fashion, yours is worth ten cent.

Hero. God.

Entr. Beatrice.

Her. God morrow Coraz.
Beat. God morrow sweet Her.
Her. Why now do you speak in the sick tune?
Beat. I am out of all other tune, me thinkes.
Mar. Claps into Light a loute, (that goes without a burden,) you do fing it and lie dance it.
Beat. Ye light alone with your heele, then if your husband have fables enough, you'll looke he shall lacke no bannes.

Mar. O illegitimate construction! I come that with my heele.
Beat. 'Tis almost fits a clocke cofin, 'tis time you were ready, by my troth I am exceeding ill, hey ho.
Mar. For a hauke, a horse, or a husband?
Beat. For the letter that begins them all, H.
Mar. Well, and yoube not turn'd Turk, there's no morelaying by the farre.
Beat. What means the foole trove?
Mar. Nothing, but God send every one their harts diuin.

Her. These gloues the Count sent mee, they are an excellent perfume.
Beat. I am just cofin, I cannot smell.
Mar. A maid and flufi! there's goodly catching of cold.

Beat. O God helpe me, God help me, how long have you profett apprehension?
Mar. Ever since you left him, doth not my wit become me rarity.
Beat. It is not terme enough, you should weare it in your cap, by my troth I am sicke.
Mar. Get you some of this diffi'd carduus benedictus and lay it to your heart, it is the onely thing for a quallm.
Her. There thou prick't her with a thiffel.
Beat. Benedictheus, why benedictus? you have some morall in this benedictus.

Mar. Mortal? no by my troth, I have no morall meaning, I mean plaine holy thiffel, you may think perchance that I think you are in love, by my troth I am not such a foolie to thinke what I lift, nor I lift not to thinke what I can, nor indeed I cannot thinke, if I would thinke my hart out of thinkeing, that you are in love, or that you will be in love, or that you can be in love: yet Benedictheus was such another, and now is he become a man, he frowre he would never marry, and yet now in deliplight of his heart he eates his meat without grudding, and how you may be convicted I know not, but me thinke you looke with your eies as other women doe.
Beat. What pache is this that thy tongue keepes.

Mar. Not a faire gallop.

Enter fri.sula.

Fris. Madam, withdraw the Prince, the Count, signior Benedick, Don John, and all the gallants of the town. come to fetch you to Church.
Her. Help to dresse mee good coze, good Music, good Fri.sula.

Enter Leonato, and the Conflable, and the Headborough.

Leon. What would you with mee, honest neighbour?

Conf. Dog. Mary sir I would have some confidence with you, that determines you nearely.

Leon. Briefly I pray you, for you see it is a busie time with me.

Conf. Dog. Mary this it is fit.

Head. Yes in truth it is fit.

Leon. What is it my good friends?

Conf. Dog. Goodman Verges sir speaks a little of the matter, an old man sir, and his wits are not so blunt, as God helpe I would desire they were, but infaith honest as the skin between his brouses.

Head. Yes I thank God, I am as honest as any man living, that is an old man, and no honefter then I.

Conf. Dog. Comparisons are odorous, palabras, neighbour Verges.

Leon. Neighbours, you are tedious.

Conf. Dog. It pleases your worship to say so, but we are the poore Duke officers, but truely for mine owne part, if I were as tedious as a King I could finde in my heart to beftow it all of your worship.

Head. All thy tediousness on me, ah?

Conf. Dog. Yea, and twere a thousand times more than this, for I heare as good exclamation on your Worship as of any man in the Citie, and though I bee but a poore man, I am glad to hear it.

Head. And so am I.

Leon. I would faine know what you have to say.

Marry for our watch to night, except your worships presence, have take a couple of as errant knaves as any in Messina.

Conf. Dog. A good old man sir, hee will be talking as they say, when the age is in the wit is out, God helpe vs, it is a world to fee: well said ye strait neighbour Verges, well, God's a good man, and two men ride of a hore, one mult ride behind, an honeste noble ye strait sir, by my troth he is, as euer broke breed, but God is to bee wenship, all men are not alike, alas good neighbour.

Leon. Indeed neighbour he comes too short of you.

Leon. I must leave you.

Conf. Dog. One word sir, our watch sir have indee comprehended two apifitious persons, & we would have them this morning examined before your worship.

Leon. Take their examination your selfe, and bring it me, I am now in great halle, as may appeare vnto you.

Conf. It shalbe suufficienc. (Exit.

Leon. Drinke some wine ere you goe: fare you well.

Meffinger. My Lord, they say for you to giue your daughter to her husband.

Leon. Ile wait vpon them, I am ready.

Dogh. Goe good partner, goe get you to Francis Sea.

Leonato. And we shall doe it wisely.

Dogh. Wee will spare for no witte I warrant you. K

Much ado About Nothing.

Enter Prince, Balfford, Leonato, Friar, Claudius, Benedick, Hero, and Beatrice.

Leonato. Come Friar Francis, be briefe, only to the plaine forme of marriage, and you shall recount their particular duties afterwards.

Fran. You come hither, my Lord, to marry this Lady.

Clau. No.

Leo. To be married to her: Friar, you come to marry her.

Friar. Lady, you come hither to be married to this Count.

Hero. I do.

Friar. If either of you know any inward impediment why you should not be conjoint, I charge you on your faith to utter it.

Clau. Know you amie, hero?

Hero. None my Lord.

Fran. Know you amie, Count?

Leon. I dare make his answer, None.

Clau. O, when men dare do! what men may may do! what men may do!

Bene. How now! interjections? why then, some be of laughing, as ha, ha, ha.

Lau. Stand thee by Friar, father, by your lease, Will you with free and unconstrained soule Give me this maid your daughters?

Leon. As freely done as God did give her me.

Clau. And what haste I to give you back, whole worth May counterfeit so rich and precious gift?

Fran. Nothing, valle, you render her again.

Clau. Sweet Prince, you learn menable thankfullines: These Leonato, take her back againe.

Give not this routen Orleans to your friend, She's but the figure and semblance of her honour: Behold how like a maid she blushes here! O what authority and shew of truth Can cunning finne covert it fell withall! Comes not that bloud, as modest evidence, To wittelle simple Virtue? would you not sweare All you that see her, that she were a maid, By these exterior shewes? But she is none: She knowes the heat of a luxurious bed Her bluss is guiltless, not modest, Leonato. What do you mean, my Lord?

Clau. Not to be married.

Not to knit my foule to an approued wanton.

Leon. Deere my Lord, if you in your owne prove, Have vanish'd the restitute of her youth, And made defile of her virginity.

Clau. I know what you would say: if haue knowe You will fay, shee did embrase me as a husband, And so exstenuate the forehand shewe: No Leonato, I neuer temer her with word too large, But as a brother to his sister, showed Bathfull sincerity and comely loue.

Hero. And icem'd I ever otherwise to you?
Much ado about Nothing.

I. 115

Beat. How now cousin Hero?

Fri. Have you comfort Lady, and you too, Friar?

Les. Doth you look vp? And I, I, I have but one? Chid I, for that at your father's name? One too much by thee: why had I one? Why ever was thou Louisie in my eyes? Why had I not with charitable hand Took vp a beggar's issue at my gates, Who fnerced thus, and mir'd with infamie, I might have said, no part of it: this fhame derives it felle from unknowne loines, But mine, and mine I loud, and mine I praised, And mine that I was proud on mine so much, That I my felle, was to my felle not mine. Valuing of her, why ftre, O fhe is faine Into a pit of fne, that the wide fee Hath drops too few to wash her cleane again, And falt too little, which may leafe guie To her foule tainted fhlee.

Sen. Sir, fir, be patient: for my part, I am for retir'd in wonder, I know no what to say.

Ben. O on my fowl, my coyn is belied.

Sen. Lady, were you her bedfellow last night?

Ben. No truly: not although until last night, I have this twelvemonth bin her bedfellow.

Les. Confirnd, confirnd, O that is stronger made Which was before bare'd vp with ribs of iron. Would the Princes lie, and Claudio lie, Whom loud her fo, that speaking of her foulneffe, Waft'd it with tears? Hence from her, let her die.

Fri. Hear me a little, for I have onely bene tolerable long, and given waynto this course of fortune, by noting of the Lady, I have markt.

A thousand blusing apparitions,
To flart into her face, a unknowne flame, In Angel whiteneffe bare away those blushes, And in her eie there hath appeard a fire To burne the errors that thefe Princes hold Against her maiden truth. Call me a fool, Truth not my reading, nor my obfervations, Which with experimental dole doth warrant The tenure of my bookes: truft not my age, My reverence, calling, nor duunitie, If this sweet Lady lye not guiltieffe heere, Under some biting error.

Lep. Friar, it cannot be:
Thou feelst that all the Grace that hath left, Is, that the will not add to her damnation, A fame of perjury, the not denes is: Why feel'st thou then to couer with excuse, That which appeares in proper nakedneffe?

Fri. Lady, what man is he you are accus'd of?

Her. They know that do accuse me, I know none:
If I know more of any man alive
Then that which maiden modeftie doth warrant, Let all my names lacke mercy. O my Father, Pray you that any man with me conuerse,

At hours vnmeete, or that I yealtermight Maintain the change of words with any creature, Refume me, hate me, torture me to death.

Fri. There is some strange misprision in the Princes. Ben. Two of them have the verie bent of honor, And if their wifedoms be mifled in this: The pratifie of it lies in theo the baffard, Whole spirits toile in frame of villanies.

Les. I know not: if they speake but truth of her, These hands shall care her: if they wrong her honour, The proudt of them shall we heare of it.

Time hath not yet fo dried this blood of mine, Nor age fo eate vp my invention, Nor Fortune made such haunch of my means, Nor my bad life refi me so much of friends, But they shall finde, awak'd in fuch a kind, Both strength of limbe, and policie of minde, Ability in meanes, and choife of friends, To quire me of them throughly.

Fri. Panic awhile:
And let my counsell fway you in this cafe, Your daughter here be the Prince's heir (left for dead) Let her awhile be secretly kept in, And publish it, that she is dead indeed: Maintaine a mourning oftentation, And on your Families old monument, Hang mournfull Epitaphes, and do all rites, That appertaine unto a burial.

Les. What shall become of this? What will this do?

Fri. Marry this well carri'd, flall on her behalfe, Change flander to tomoroe, that is some good, But not for that dreame I on this strange caufe, But on this trauaile look for greater birch; She dying, as it must be fo maintaine'd, Upon the infant that she was accus'd. Shall be lamed, pixted, and excuss'd Of every hearer: for it fols out, That what we have, we prEase not to the worth, Whiles we enjoy it; but being lack'd and loft, Why then we racle the value, then we fince The vertue that collection would not fiew as Whiles it was ours, fo will it fare with Claudio: When he fhall heare she dy'd upon his words, Th'Sidea of her life fhe weateely crepe Into his study of imagination.

And every lonely Organ of her life, Shall come apparel'd in more precious habite: More moowing, delicate, and ful of life, Into the eye and proofe of his foulneffe, Then when the lid's indeed: then fhall he moune, If euers Loue had intert in his life, And wift he had not fo accused her: No, though he thought his accusation true: Let this be fo, and doubt not but the baffe Will fashion the event in better fires, Then I can lay it done in likelihood. But if all syne but this be lesnefli false, The impofition of the Ladies death, Will quench the wonder of her infamie. And if it fort not well, you may conceale her, As beft befit her wounded reputation, In some reclaufe and religious life, Out of all eyes, tongues, minde and injuries.

Ben. Signior Leonato, let the Friar accuse you, And though you know my inwardneffe and loue Is very much unto the Prince and Claudio.
Yet, by mine honor, I will deal in this,
As secretly and subtilly, as your soule
Should want with your bodie.

Leon. Being that I flow in greefs,
The smallest twine may lead me.

Friar. Tis well confent, prefently away,
For to strange forces, strangely they straine the cure.
Come Lady, the to hew this wedding day

Perhaps is but prolong'd, hate patience & endure. Exit.

Bens. Lady Beatrice, haue you wept all this while?
Beat. Yes, and I will weep a while longer.
Bens. I will not define that.
Beat. You haue no reason, I doe it freely.
Bens. Sure I do believe your fair coffin is wrong'd.
Beat. Ah, how much might the man defcrue of mee
That would right mee!

Bens. Is there any way to shew such friendship?
Beat. A verie even way, but no such friend.
Bens. May a man doe it?
Beat. It is a mans office, but not yours.
Bens. I doe loue nothing in the world so well as you,
Is not that strange?
Beat. As strange as the thing I know not, it were as possible for me to lay, I loued nothing so well as you, but beleue me not, and yet I doe not, I confesse nothing, nor I deny nothing, I am forry for my confin.

Bens. By my sword Beatrice thou loust me.
Beat. Doe not loust by it and eat it.
Bens. I will loust by it that you loue mee, and I will make him eat it that fayes I loue not you.
Beat. Will you not eat your word?
Bens. With no tongue that can be deuided to it, I protest I loue thee.

Beat. Why then God forgive me.
Beatrice. What offence fauet Beatrice?
Beat. You haue playd mee in a happy howre, I was a bout to protest I loued you.
Bens. And doe it with all thy heart.

Beat. I loue you with fo much of my heart, that none is left to protest.

Benedict. Come, bid me doe any thing for thee.

Beat. Kill Claudio.
Bens. Ha, not for the wide world.
Beat. You kill me to denye, farewel.

Bens. Take sweet Beatrice.
Beat. I am gone, though I am here, there is no loue in you, nay I pray you let me goe.

Bens. Beatrice.

Beat. Infaith I will goe.
Bens. We'll be friends first.

Beat. You dare either be friends with mee, than fight with mine enemy.
Bens. Is Claudio shine enemy?

Beat. Is not approvd in the height a villaine, that hath flandered, forned, dishonour'd my kinswoman? O that I were a man! what, beleue her hand untill they come to take hands, and then with publike accusation vncoudered flanderd, vnprovokt rage? O God that I were a man! I would eat his heart in the market-place.

Bens. Hear mee Beatrice.

Beat. Talk with a man out at a window, a proper saying.

Bens. Nay but Beatrice.

Beat. Sweet Hero, she is wrong'd, she is flanderd, fate is vnende.

Beat. Beat?
Would give preceptual medicine to age.
Strife strong madness in a will that is.
Charms with age, and agony with words.
No, no, his men were, to speak patience
To those that writ under the lead of sorrow.
But not mans vertue nor sufficient
To be so moral, the shall endure.
The like himselfe: therefore give me no counsaille,
My griefs cry louder then advertisement.

Broth. Therein do men from children nothing differ.
Leon. I pray thee peace, I will be flesch and blood.
For there was never yet Philosophyer,
That could endure the tooth-sake patiently,
How ever they have writ the life of gods,
And made a path at chance and suffrance.

Brother. Yet bend not all the harme upon your selfe,
Make those that doe offend you, suffer too.

Leon. There thou speakestreason, now I will do so,
My foule dost tell me, there is beleit,
And that shall Claudia know, to shall the Prince,
And all of them that thus dishonour her.

Enter Prince and Claudia.

Broth. Here comes the Prince and Claudia hastily.

Prem. Good day to both you.

Leon. Hears thou my Lords?

Prem. We have some haste Leonato.

Leon. Some haste my Lord! well, are you my Lord,
Are you so hastily now? well, all is one.

Prem. Nay, do not quarrel with vs, good old man.

Leon. If he coulditch himselfe with quarrelling,
Some of vs would lie low.

Claud. Who wrongs him?

Leon. Marry! dost wrong me, thou dissembler, thou:
Nay, never lay thy hand upon thy sword,
I feare thee not.

Claud. Marry before my hand,
If thou should give thy age such cause of fear,
Intaint my hand meant nothing to my sword.

Leonato. Truth, truth, man, never fierce and jealst at me,
I speake not like a darrad, nor a toole,
As under priviledge of age to bragge,
What I have done being young, or what would doe,
Were I not old, knew Claudia to thy head,
Thou hast so wrung'd my innocent child, and me,
That I am forced to lay my seuerence by,
And with grey hairs and bruise of many daces,
Doe challenge thee to tr aisle of a man,
I say thou hast Helena innocens child.
Thy slander hath gone through and through her heart,
And she lies buried with her ancestors:
O in a tomb where her faithful self,
Sawe this of hers, fram'd by thy villain.

Claud. My villany?

Leonato. Thine Claudia, thin I say.

Prem. You say not right old man.

Leon. My Lord, my Lord,
He prole on his body if he dare,
Deplight his nice fence, and his achie praelife,
His Mace of youth, and bloome of lifehood.

Claud. Away, I will not have to do with you.

Leon. Canst thou so daffe me thou hast kill my child,
If thou kill me, boy, thou shalt kill a man.

Broth. He shall kill two of us, and men indeed,
But that's no matter, let him kill one first.

Much ado about Nothing.
Win me and weare me, let him anwerc me,
Come follow me boy, come sir boy, come follow me
Sir boy, let whip you from your faying fence,
Nay, as I am a gentleman, I will,

Leon. Brother.

Bro. Content your self; God knows I loud my neece,
And she is dead, fnder'd to death by villains,
That dare as well anwcr a man indeed,
As I do take a ferpent by the tongue,
Boyes vaper, braggets, backets, milke-topes.

Leon. Brother Anthony.

Bro. Hold you content, what man I know them, yea
And what they weigh, euc to the worldfe feral,
Scambling, out-facing, faching-monking boyes,
That lye, and cog, and flour, deprafe, and fnder,
Goe antiquely, and how outward hidiousfelfe,
And speake of haffe a dozen dangrous words,
How they might hurt their enemies, if they duff.
And this is all.

Leon. But brother Anthony,

Ant. Come, its no matter,

Doer you meddle, let me deale in this,

Pri. Gentlemen both, we will not waste your patienceMy heart is ferry for your fathers death:

But on my honour fie was charg'd with nothing
But what was true, and very full of profe.

Leon. Mr, Lord, my Lord.

Prin. I will not hear you.

Enter Benedick.

Leo. No come brother, away, I will be made,

Exeunt ambos.

Bro. And shall, at fome of us will finnit for it.

Prin. See, fee, here comes the man we went to feeke.

Clau. Now signior, what news?

Ben. Good day my Lord.

Prin. Welcome signior, you are almoft come to part almoft an fay.

Clau. Wee had likt to have had our twos nofes fnaft off with two old men without teeth.

Prin. Leonato and his brother, what think't thou had wee fought, I doubt we should have beene too yong for them.

Ben. In a fafe quarrell there is no true valour, I came to feeke you both.

Clau. We have bee ne vp and downe to feeke thee, for we are high profe melancholy, and would faine haue it beaten away, wit thou fye thy witt?

Ben. It is in my matther, thinke I draw it?

Prim. Doeth thou weare thy witt by thy fide?

Clau. Never any did fo, though very many have beene beside their witt, I will bid thee drewe, as we do the min-frels, draw to pleaffe vs.

Prim. As I am an honfett man he looks pale, art thou fick, or angrie?

Clau. What, courage man: what though care kil'd a cat, thou haft mettle enough in thee to kill care.

Ben. Sir, I fhall meete your wit in the careere, and you charge it againft me, I pray you chufe another sub-ifie.

Clau. Nay then give him another flaflle, this laft was broke crofe.

Prim. By this light, he changes more and more, and I think he be angrie indeeide.

Clau. The be, he knowes how to turne his girdle.

Ben. Shall I speake a word in your care?

Clau. God biffle me from a challenge.

Ben. You are a villain, I left not, I will make it good how you dare, with what you dare, and when you dare:

do me right, or I will protest your cowardife; you have killed a man, and your Ladie, and her death shall fall heauie on you, let me hear from you.

Clau. Well, I will meete you, so I may haue good chears,

Prim. What a feas, a feas?

Clau. I faith I thank him, he hath bid me to a calues head and a Capon, the which if I do not carue moft curriously, pay my knife's naught, shall I not finde a wood-cooke too?

Ben. Sir, your wit ambles weft, it goes easily.

Prim. I tell thee how Beatrice prais'd thy witt the other day: I faid thou haft a fite wittrue fites fie, a fine little one: no faid I, a great witt; right fites fie, a great groffe one: nay faid I, a good witt; juft faid fie the iurt had no body: nay faid I, the gentleman is wife: certain faid the, a wife gentleman: nay faid I, he hath the tongues:

that I beleue faid fie, for he fproe a thing to me on munday night, which he forfere on trowde morning:
there's a double tongue, there's two tongues: thus did shee an howe together tranf-shape thy particular ver-tues, yet at last fie fucceeded with a figh, thou waft the propriet man in Italie.

Clau. For the which fie wept heartily, and faid fie cat'd not.

Prim. Yea that fie did, but yet for all that, and if fiee did not hate him deadly, fhee would love him dearly, the old man daughter told vs all.

Clau. All, all, and moreover, God faw him when he was hid in the garden.

Prim. But when shall we fett the fauge Bulls hornes on the fentence Benedick head?

Clau. Yea and text vnderneath, here dwell Benedick the married man.

Ben. Fare you well, Boy, you know my mind, I will leave you now to your goffe-like humor, you brake tiffs as braggers do their blades, which God be thanked for: now my Lord, for your manie courtefies I thank you, I muft difcontinue your company, your brother the Baffard i. Bed from Chriftina: you haifte among you, kill'd a sweet and innocent Ladie: for my Lord: Lick-beard there, he and fhe meete, and till then peace be with him.

Prim. He is in earneift.

Clau. In moff profound earneift, and I ere warrant you, for the love of Beatrice.

Prim. And hath challeg'd thee.

Clau. Moff sincerely.

Prim. What a pretty thing man is, when he goes in his doubles and hoie, and leaves off his wit.

Enter Confiable, Caroade, and Borachio.

Clau. He is then a Giant to an Ape, but then is an Ape

a Doctor to fuch a man.

Prim. But foft you, let me be, plucke vp my heart, and be fad, did he not lay my brother was fted?

Conf. Come you fit, it iufetee cannot tame you, fhee shall here weign more reafons in her bal lance, say, and you be a cifing horific one, you muft be look to.

Prim. How now, two of my brethren men bound? Bo-rachio one.

Clau. Harken after their offence my Lord,

Prim. Officers, what offence have these men don'e?

Con. Mariel
Conf. Maste fir, they have committed false report, moreover they have spoken untruths, secondarily they are flanders, first and lastly, they have belied a Lady, thirdly, they have verified vain things, and to conclude they are lying knaves.

Pron. First I ask thee what they have done, thirdly I ask thee what's their offence, first and lastly why they are committed, and to conclude, what you lay to their charge.

Clau. Rightly reasoned, and in his owne division, and by my troth there's some meaning well suffer.

Pron. Who have you offended masters, that you are thus bound to your answer? this learned Couflag is too fine to be understanding, what's your offence?

But. Sweet Prince, let me no farther to mine answer: do you heare me, and let this Count to know me: I have deceyt euon your very eies: what your wife domes did not discover, these shallow fooleres have brought to light, who in the night overheard me confessing to this man, how Don Iago your brother incensed me to flander the Ladies Hero, how you were brought into the orchard, and law me court Margaret in Heroes garments, how you disgrac'd her when you should marry her: my villainy they have upon record, which I had rather seal with my death, then repeat over to my shame: the Ladies are dead upon mine, and my matters false accusation; and briefelee, I define nothing but the reward of a villain.

Pron. Runs not this speech like yron through your bloud?

Clau. I have drunke poison whiles he shet it.

But. Did my Brother let thee on to this?

But. Yes, and paid me richly for the practice of it.

Pron. He is compos'd and fram'd of treachery, and fled he is upon this villain.

Clau. Sweet Hero, now thy image doth appear
In the rare semblance that I coude it first.

Conf. Come, bring away the plaintiffes, by this time our Sexton hath reform'd Siguer Leonato of the matters: and masteres, do not forget to specify when & place shall have, that I am an Affe.

Con. 3. Here, here comes matter Siguer Leonato, and the Sexton too.

Enter Leonato.

Leon. Which is the villain? let me se his eies,
That when I note another man like him,
I may advise him: which of these is he?

But. If you would know your wronge, looke on me.

Leon. Art thou thou the face that with thy breath
Hath kild mine innocent childere?

But. Yes, euon I alone.

Leo. Not so villaine, thou beliest thy selfe,
Here stand a pair of honourable men,
A third is fled that had a hand in it.

I thank you Princes for my daughters death,
Record it with your high and worthie dedes,
Twas brasseuely done, if you bethinke you eft.

But. I know not how to pray your patience,
Yet I must speake: choose your revenge your selfe,
Impose me to what penance your invention
Can lay upon my finne, yet finn'd I not,
But in mistaking.

Pron. By my loufe not, I,
And yet to satisfy this good old man,

[The following scene continues with various characters discussing the events and their consequences, ending with prayers and farewells.]
Mar. Will you then write me a Sonnet in praise of my beautie?

Bent. In so high a stile Margaret, that no man living shall come over it, for in most comely truth thou deferueth it.

Mar. To have no man come over me, why, shall I always kepe below Pallas?

Bent. Thy wit is as quick as the grey-hounds mouth, it catches.

Mar, And yours, as blunt as the Fencers foiles, which his, but hurt not.

Bent. A most many wit Margaret, it will not hurt a woman: and so I pray thee call Beatrix, I give thee the bucklers.

Mar. Give vs the swords, we have bucklers of our owne.

Bent. If ye so them Margaret, you must put in the pikes with a vice, and they are dangerous weapons for Maides.

Mar. Well, I will call Beatrix to you, who I think hath legges.

Exit Margaret.

Bent. And therefore will come. The God of loue that fits aboute, and knows me, and knowes me, how pictifull I define. I meanes singing, but in louing, Iean the good swimmer. Trebus the first Impoler of Pandars, and a whole booke full of these quondom expert-mongers, whose name yet runne smoothlie in the euen rode of a blanke verse, why they were never so truly turned over and over as my poore selfe in loue: marry I cannot shew it rime, I have tried, I can finde out no rime to Lady but babie, an innocent rime: for soorne, borne, a hard time: for schoole soole, a babling time: verie ominous endinges, no, I was not borne vnder a rining Planet, for I cannot vvee in feuillfull teares: Enter Beatrice. Sweete Beatrice wouldnt thou come when I calld thee?

Beat. Yes Signior, and depart when you bid me.

Bent. O stay but till then.

Beat. Then, is spoken: fare you well now, and yet ere I goe, let me goe with that I came, which is, with knoweing what hath passd betwene you and Claudio.

Bent. Thy selfe foule words, and thereupon I will kisse thee.

Beat. Foule words is but foule wind, and foule wind is but foule breath, and foule breath is noforme, therefore I will depart vnkind.

Bent. Thou haft triedian the word out of his right fence,so forcible is thy wit, but I must tell thee plainly, Claudio vnder goes my challenge, and either I must shortely heare from him, or I will subcribe him a coward, and I pray thee now tell me, for which of my bad parts dide thou first fall in love with me?

Beat. For them all together, which maintaineth so politiques a state of euall, that they will not admit any good part to intemingle with them: but for which of my good parts did you first suffer leue for me?

Bent. Suffer love: a good epithete, I do suffer love indeede, for I love thee againe my will.

Beat. In frite of your heart I think, alas poore heart, if you plight it for my sake, I will plight it for yours, for I will neuer loue that which my friend hates.

Bent. Thou and I are too wise to vvee peacable.

Beat. It appereas not in this confession, there's not one wise man among twentie that will prisse himselfe.

Bent. An old, an old instanche Beatrix, that lied in the time of good neighbours, if a man do not crede in this age his owne tombe ere he dies, she shall line no longer in monuments, then the Bells ringe, the Widdow weepes.

Beat. And how long is that thanke you?

Bent. Question, why an hower in cl. mor and a quarter in the same, therefore is it most expediens for the wife, if Don worme (his consience) finde no unpediment to the contrarie, to be the trumpet of his owne voices, as I am to my selfe so much for praifing my selfe, who my selfe will beare witnesse is prisse worthie, and now tell me, how doth your cofin?

Beat. Verie ill.

Bent. And how doe you?

Beat. Verie ill too.

Enter Ursula.

Bent. Stay, God, loue me, and send, there will I leue you too, for here comes one in haste.

Vrs. Madam, you must come to your Uncle, yonders old coile at home, it is proueod my Lady He-rio hath bin fullie accusde, the Prince and Claudio mightabe absnde, and Don John is the author of all, who is fled and gone: will you come presently?

Beat. Will you go heare this newes Signior?

Bent. I will lye in thy heart, die in thy lap, and be buried in thy eyes: and moreouer, I will goe with thee to thy Vnctes.

Exeunt.

Enter Claudio, Prince, and three or four with Tapes.

Cla. Is this the monument of Leonato?

Lord. It is my Lord.

Episteph. Done to death by slanderous tongues, Was the Hero but here lies: Death in guard of her wrongs, Grew her fame which never dies: So the life that dyed with shame, Lines in death with glorious fame. Hang thus there upon the tomb, Praising her when I am done.

Cla. Now matchet sounde & sing thy solemn hymne.

Song.

Pardon goddess of the night, Thrice that flew thy vigil lights, For the which with songs of woe, Round about her tombes they goe: Midnight he stopt our mome, brake us to sigh and groan, Heavenly, heavenly, Graces yamente yeilde thy dead, Till death be enter'd, Heavenly, heavenly.

(As right.

Le. Now wnte thy bones good night, yereely will I do Prin. Good morrow masteres, put your torches out, The worths have pried, and looke, the gentle day Before the wheels of Phoebus, round about Dapples the drowtie East with spots of grey: Thanks to you all, and leave vs, faire you well.

Cla. Good morrow masteres, each his feuerall way. Prin. Come let vs hence, and put on other weedes, And then to Leonato we will goe.

Cla. And Hymnes now with luckier issue speedt.

Then
Much ado about Nothing.

Then this for whom werend'd vp this woe.  Exeunt, Enter Leonato, Leon. Mars. Fri. Otho, Fri. Ser.  Did notc tell you thet he was innocent?  Leon. To see the Prince and Claudio promis'd her, From the envy that you heard debated:  But Margaret was in some fault for this, Although against her it will assert, In the true course of all the question.  Old. We'll, I am glad that all things fort so well.  Bene. And lo am I, being elfe by faith enforce'd To call young Claudio to a reckoning for it.  Leo. Well daughter, and you gentlewomen all, Withdraw into a chamber by your selves, And when I fend for you, come hither mask'd: The Prince and Claudio promis'd by this howre To visit me, you know your owne Brother, You must be fathers to your brothers daughter, And give her to young Claudio,  Exeunt Ladies.  Old. Which I will doe with confirmed countenaunce.  Bene. Fri. I must interest your paines, I think, Fri. To doe what Signor?  Bene. To bind her, or clove me, one of them: Signor Leonato, trust it is good Signor, Your necece regards me with an eye of favour.  Leo. That eye my daughter lent her, 'tis most true.  Bene. And I doe with an eye of love require her.  Leo. The fight whereof I thank you had from me, From Claudio, and the Prince, but what's your will?  Bene. Your answer is in Emaugmaticall, But for my will, my will it, your good will May hand with ours this day to be contyned, In the state of honourable marriage, In which (good Friar) shall define your helpe,  Leo. My heart is with your liking. Fri. And my helpe.  Enter Prince and Claudio, with attendants.  Pri. Good morrow to this faire assembly.  Leo. Good morrow Prince, good morrow Claudio: Where we attend you, are you yet determin'd, To day to marry with my brothers daughter?  Claudio. Ile hold my minde were she an Ethiope.  Leo. Call she forth brother, here is the Friar ready.  Pri. Good morrow Beatrice, why what's the matter?  That you have such a Februous face, So full of fract, of forme, and coldewinde.  Claud. I thinke he thinkes vpon the favage bull: Tuffe, fear not man, we'll tip thy hornes with gold, And bid the dulls, the meanes, the dukes, As one Eupros did at lyuty Lawe, When he would play the noble beate in love.  Bene. Bull Lawe fir, had an amiable low, And some fuch strange bull leapt your fathers Cow, A got a Calfe in that fame noble feat, Much like to you, for you have juft his blest.  Enter brother, Fri, Beatrice, Margaret, Friilda.  Cla. For this I love you: here comes other reckonings Which is the Lady I must trie vpon?  Leo. This fame is she, and I doe give you her.  Cla. Why then she's mine, sweet let me fee your face.  Leo. No that you shall not, till you take her hand, Before this Friar, and swear to marry her.  Cla. Give me your hand before this holy Friar, I am your husband if you like of me.  Here. And when I lid I was your other wife, And when you loud, you were my other husband.  Cla. Another Friar?  Hero. Nothing certain,  One Hero died, but I doe live, And surely as I live, I am a maid, Then. The former Hero, that is dead, Hero. She died my Lord, but whiles he ledared and Friar. All this amazement can I quells, When after that the holy rites are ended, He tell you largely of faire Hero death: Meane time let wonder seeme familiar, And to the chappell let us preferably;  Bar. Soft and faire Friar, which is Beatrice?  Bene. I answer to that name, what is your will?  Bad. Do not you take me?  Beatrice. Why no, no more then reason.  Bad. Why then your Uncle, and the Prince, & Claud- de, have beene decyred, they foroe you did.  Beat. Do not you loue mee?  Bene. Troth no, no more then reft.  Beat. Why then my Cousin Margaret and Dufiue Are much decyred, for they did iowe you did.  Bene. They swore you were not alive dead for me.  Bad. They swore you were not aliv'e dead for me.  Bene. Tis no matter, so you do not loue mee?  Beat. No truly, but in friendly reconno.  Leon. Come C own, I am to you the gentlest.  Cla. And Ile be sooner spoile, that he loues her, For here's a paper written in his hand, A halting fonnnet of his owne pure braine, Fumished to Beatrice,  Hera. And here's another, Writ in my cofin hand, flone from her pocket, Containing her affection vnto Benedick.  Beat. A muckle, here's our owne hands against our hearts: come I will have shee, but by this light I take thee for putte.  Bene. I would not deny you, but by this good day, I yeold you great perwa, & pure to free your life, For I was told, you were at a conventione.  Leon. Peace a will los your mouth,  Thow. How dost thou Benedick? the married man?  Bene. Ile tell thee what Prince: a Collage of whack- ekers cannot flout mee out of my humor, doth thou think I care for a Sythceu & Epigram? no, if a man will be beaten with braine, a fide weare nothing hande me about him: in briefe, since I do purpose to marry, I will thinke nothing to any purpote that the world can say a gainst it, and therefor never fout at me, for I haveaid against it: for many cuddy thing, and this is my con- clusion: for thy part Claudine, I dul think to have beaten thee, but in that thou art like to be my kindman, hue vou- bru'd, and loue my cousin.  Cla. I had well hop'd y'would have denied Beatrice; I might have cudgel'd thee out of thy sngle life, to make thee a double dealer, which out of queflion thou wilt be, if my Cousin do not looke exceeding narrowly to thee.  Bene. Come, come, we are married, let's haue a dance ere we are married, that we may lighten our own hearts, and our wives heels.  Leon. We'll haue dancing afterward.  Bene. First, of my word, therefore play muzick, Prince, thou art sad, get thee a wife, get thee a wife, there is noe more reuerend then one tip with horn. Enter, Meet, Meffen. My Lord, your brother Ives is tane in flight, And brought with armed men bracke to Ufegina, Bene. Thinkse not on him till to morrow, ile devise thee brace punishments for him: strike vp Pipers Danger.  L.
Enter Ferdinand, King of Navarre, Berowne, Longavill, and Dumaine.

Ferdinand.

Ferd. That all hunt after in their lines,
Line registred upon our brazen Tombs,
And then grace us in the disgrace of death,
Who spight of corrompt deposing Time,
Th'endeavour of this present time may buy:
That honour which shall base his father's kerne edge,
And make vs byres of all extremes.
Therefore brace Conquerour, for so you are,
That warre against your owne affections,
And the huge Arme of the world's delights.
Our late edict shall strongely stand in force,
Navar shall be the wonder of the world.
Our Court shall be a little Academe,
Still and contemplative in learning.
You three, Berowne, Dumaine, and Longavill,
Have sworn for three yeares terme, to live with me:
My fellow Schollers, and to keepe those statutes
That are recorded in this scedule here.
Your oaths are past, and now subscribe your names:
That his owne hand may strike his honour downe,
That violates the smallest branch herein:
If you are arm'd to doe, as fortunate to do,
Subscribe to your deepse oaths, and keepe it too.
Longavill, I am resolv'd, 'tis but a three yeares fast.
Theminde shall banquet, though the body pine,
Fat paunches have leane pates: and dainty bits,
Make rich the ribs, but barker out the wits.

Berowne. My loving Lord, Dumaine is mortified,
The greater manner of these worldes delights,
He throwes uppon the groose worldes faire flowers:
To showe a wealth, to pompé, I pine and die,
With all these living in Philosophie.

Berowne. I can but say their proposition over,
So much, dese Liege, I have already sworn,
That is to live and study here three yeares.
But there are other strick obseruations:
At not to see a woman in that terme,
Which I hope well is not enrolled there.
And one day in a weeke to touch no foode:
And but one meal an every day beside:
The which I hope is not enrolled there.
And then to sleepe but three hours in the night,
And not to be seene to wake of all the day.
When I was wont to thinke no harme all night,
And make a darke night too of hauing the day:

Which I hope well is not enrolled there.
O these are barren tasks, too hard to keepe,
Not to see Ladies, study, fast, not sleepe.

Ferd. Your oath is past, to passe away from these.

Berow. Let me say no my Lord, and if you please.
I only swore to study with your grace,
And lay here in your Court for three yeares space.

Ferd. You swore to that Berow, and to the self.

Berow. By yea, and may it be, than I swore in lef.

Berow. Why that to know which else wee should not know.

Ber. Things hid & hard (you mean) it is common sense.

Ferd. I, that is studious god-like recollection.

Berow. Come on then, I will sweare to study so,
To know the thing I am forbid to know:
As thus, to study where I will may done,
When I to fat expressly am forbid.
On study where to meet some Mistrelle fine,
When Mistrelles from common sense are hid.
Or having sworn too hard a keeping oath,
Studie to break it, and not break my troth.
If studie game be thus, and this be so,
Studie knowes that which yet it doth not know.

Ferd. Sweare me to this, and I will here lay no.

Ferd. These be the steps that hinder study quite,
And traine our intellects, to vaine delight.

Berow. Why all delights are vaine, and that most vaine,
Which with paine purchased, dost inherit paine,
As painefully to passe upon a looke,
To lecke the light of truth, while truth the while Doth falsely blinde the eye; light on his looke,
Light seeking light, doth light of light beguile:
So ere you finde where light in darkness lies,
Your light growes darkie by losing of your eyes.

Studie me how to please the eye indeed,
By fixing it upon a fatter eye,
Who darst to, that eye shall be his need,
And give him light that it was blinded by,
Studie is like the heauen gloriouis sunne,
That will not be deepse touch d with favoy lookes:
Small hauing continual plodder ever vaine,
Saue base authorities from others Bookes.
These earthly Godfathers of heavens lightes,
That give a name to every fixed Starre,
Have no more profit of then shining nights,
Then those that wake and wondr not what they are.
Too much to know, is to know nothing but name.
And many Godfather can give a name.

Ferd. How well I see read, so reason against reading.
Loves Labour's lost.

Dum. Proceeded well, to stop all good proceeding.

Lor. Hee weedes the corne, and shall let grow the weeding.

Ber. The Spring is neere when Greene greaste are a breeding.

Dum. How soon will it be?

Ber. Fie in his place and time.

Dum. In reason nothing.

Ber. Something then in time.

Ferd. Berowne is like an enious sneaping Frozt,

That bites the first born of the Spring.

Ber. Well, say I am, why should proud Summer boast,

Before the Birds have any caue to sing?

Why should I joy in any abortive birth?

At Christmas I no more define a Rose,

Then with a Snow in Mayes new fangled flowers:

But like of every thing that in feason growes.

So you to finde now it is too late,

That were to clyme ore the hose to unlace the gate.

Fer. Well, fit you out go home Berowne: a due.

Ber. No my good Lord, I have sworn to stay with you.

And though I have for barbarine spake more,

Then for that Angell knowledge you can say,

Yet confident I keepe what I have oworne,

And hide the penance of each three yeares day.

Give me the paper, let me read the same,

And to the great decree Ile write my name.

Fer. How well this yielding recues thee from shame.

Ber. Item. That no woman shall come within a mile

Of my Court.

Hath this bin proclaimed?

Lor. Fouré dayes agoe.

Ber. Let's see the penaltie.

On paine of loosing her tongue.

Who denis'd this penaltie?

Lor. Marry that did I.

Ber. Sweete Lord, and why?

Lor. To fright them hence with that dread penaltie,

A dangerous law against gentilitie.

Item, If any man be seen to talke with a woman within

In the time of three yeares, hee shall indure such publicke shame as the reft of the Court shall possibly denote.

Ber. This Article my Lidge your felle must break,

For well you know here comes in Embassie

The French Kings daughter, with your felle to speake:

A Maid of grace and compleat maifiet,

About surrender vp of Aquisaine:

To her depretie, fickle, and bed-rid Father.

Therefore this Article is made in vaine,

Or vaineely comes th' admired Princesse hither.

Fer. What fay you Lords?

Why, this was quite forgot.

Ber. So Studie euermore is ouerfhot,

While it doth fudy to haue what it would,

It doth forget to doe the thing it shoulde.

And when it hath the thing it hunteth moft,

'Tis won as owmes with fire, so won, so loft.

Fer. We must of force dispence with this Decree,

She must lye here on mrece necelfitie.

Necefitie will make vs all owrne.

Three thousand times within this three yeeres space:

For every man with his affeit is borne,

But by might maffed, but by special grace.

If I breake this, this word shall breake for me,

I am owrne on mrece necelfitie.
Ferdinand.

Great Depotions, the Workes, Pleasements, and doe dominations of Nauy, my faules earths God, and bodies fosiring patience:

Coft. Not a sword of Coldart yet.

Ferd. So it is.

Coft. It may be so: but if he say it is so, he is in telling true: but it.

Ferd. Peace,

Clow. Be to me, and ever that darts not fight.

Ferd. No words.

Clow. Of for the reasons secrets I becheech you.

Ferd. So it is befieged with fable coloured melancholy, I did command the blocks oppriving humours to the most wholesome Physick of the health-giving ayre: And as I am a Gentleman, betooke my selfe to walke: the time: When about the first hour, When beftis falt grafe, birds beft pecke, and men fit downe to that nourishment which is called supper: So much for the time. Now for the ground Which I which mean I walked upon, it was help'd, Thy Parks. Then for the place Where; where I mean I did encounter that obfene and most propirious cunt that drown'd me in my fnow-white pen with a fnow coloured Lake, which bower them viewes, beheld, formuif, or felf. But to the place Where? It handes North North-east and by Eaf from the Welf corner of the curious knotted garden; There did I fee that low spirited Swaine, that fale Minion of thy myrth, (Clown. Meet) that underfert small knowing fowl,(Clow Me) that shallow water(Slow. Still me?) which as I remember, light Cowfarth, (Clow. O me) forced and comforted contrary to thy establebly proffesed Ethi and Courteus, Cannon: Which with, with, with, with the I paffion to say afterward.

 entered the Wench.

Ferd. With a child in her Grandamter Eric, a female; or thy more fweet understanding a woman: him, (as my ever overfeen duty directs mee) house fent to thee, to receive the need of punishment by this faire Graces Officer Anthony Dull, a man of good repue, carriage, bearing, & estimation.

Anb. Me, an! hail pleache you? I am Anthony Dull.

Ferd. For Iaponetta (to I a weakd vefell called) which I apprehended with the aforefaid Swain, I keepe her as a vefell of thy Lovers fure, and flall at the leeft of thy faft news, bring her ther to trie. Time in all complemen of denoted and heart-burning beat of duty,

Don Adriana de Armado.

Brer. This is not fo well as I lookt for, but the best that euer I hear.

Fer. I the best, for the worft. But frra, What fay you to this?

Clo. Sir I confefle the Wench.

Fer. Did you h ear the Proclamation?

Clo. I confefle much of the hearing it, but little of the marking of it.

Fer. It was proclaimed a yeeres imprisonment to bee taken with a Wench.

Clo. I was taken with none fir, I was taken with a Damoelfell.

Fer. Well, it was proclaimed Damoelfell.

Clo. This was no Damoelfell neither fir, shee was a Virgin.

Fer. It is fo varried, for it was proclaimed Virgin.

Clo. If it were, I denie her Virginite: I was taken with a Maide.

Fer. This Maid will not ferue your turne fir.

Clo. This Maide will ferue my turne fir.

Kw. Sir I will pronounce your fentence : You shall af a Weeke with Branne and water.

Clo. I had rather pray a Month with Munton and Porridge.

Kw. And Don Armado shall be your keeper.

My Lord Brawne, fee him deliuer'd ore,
And goe we Lords to put in practice that,
Which each to other hath so strongly sworn.

Bere. He lay my head to any good mans hat,
These oaths and laws will prove an idle fcone.

Sirra, come on.

Clo. I suffer for the truth fir for true it is, I was taken with Iaponetta, and Iaponetta's a true girl, and therefore we come to the wordes of proffirte, affilli-theone may one day smile againe, and untill then fir downe swor.

Exit.

Enter Armado and Mathias Page.

Arma. Boy, What figne is it when a man of great spirit growes melancholy?

Boy. A great figne fir, that he will looke fad.

Brag. Why? fadneffe is one and the felle-fame thing dearc impe.

Bref. No no, O Lord fir no.

Boy. How canf't thou part fadneffe and melancholy your tender Innendall?

Brag. By a familiar demonstrafion of the working, my tough figner.

Brag. Why tough figner? Why tough figner?

Brag. Why tender Innendall? Why tender Innendall?

Brag. I fpoke it tender: Innendall, as a congregant spa-thetan, appurtening to thy young dautes, which we may nominate tender.

Boy. And I tough figner, as an appertinent title to your oldes time, which we may name tough.

Brag. Pretty and apt.

Boy. How meanes you fir, I pretty, and my faying apt?
or I apt, and my faying prettie?

Brag. Thou pretty because little.

Boy. Little pretty, because little; wherefore apt?

Brag. And therefore apt, because quick.

Boy. Speake you this in my prifile Mutter?

Brag. In thy condigne prifile.

Boy. I will prifce an Ecelle in the fame prifile.

Brag. What? that an Ecelle is ingenuous.

Boy. That an Ecelle is quick.

Boy. I doe fay thou art quicke in anwers, Thou heartt my bloud.

Boy. I am anwer'd fir.

Brag. I love not to be croft.

Boy. He fpeakes the meere contrary, croftes love not

Br. I have promis'd to fludy in youth with the Duke.

Boy. You may do it in an hour fir.

Brag. Impoffible.

Boy. How many is one thirde told.

Br. I amill at reckning, it fits the fpirit of a Tapfter.

Boy. You are a gentleman and a gamefter fir.

Brag. I confefle both, they are both the varnish of a compleat man.

Boy. Then I am sure you know how much the groffe fummme of deuf-ace amounts to.

Brag. It doth amount to one more then two.

Boy. Which the base vulgar call three.

Br. True. Boy. Why is this fuch a piece of fludy?

Now here's three Studied, ere you'll thrice wink, & how eafe it is to put yeres to the word threes, and fludy three yeres in two words, the dancing horse will tell you.

Boy. And that's great manuell, louv'ing a light wench.
Brag. I say sing.
Boy. Forbear till this company be past.

Enter Clowne, Cofmable, and Wrench.

Clowne. Sir, the Duke's pleasure, that you keepe Co-

Brassard safe, and you must let him take no delight, nor no pennance, but he must first three days a week: for this

Damefull, I must keep her at the Parke, she is allowed for the Day-woman. Faire you well.

Exit.

Brag. I do betray my selfe with blushing; Maitre,

Maitre, Maitre.

Boy. I will visite thee at the Lodge.

Maitre. That's here by.

Boy. I know where it is situate.

Maitre. Lord how wise you are!

Boy. I will tell thee wonders.

Maitre. With what face?

Boy. I loue thee.

Maitre. So I heard you say.

Boy. And to faire.

Maitre. Faire weather after you.

Boy. Come Luquetteno, away.

Boy. Villaine, thou shalt fast for thy effences or thou be pardoned.

Boy. Well sir, I hope when I doer in, I shall doe it on a full homscke.

Boy. Thou shalt be hardly punished.

Boy. I am more bound to you then your fellowes, for they are but lightly rewarded.

Boy. Take away this villian, that he be vp.

Boy. Come you transigrefing floue, away.

Boy. Let me not bee pent vp sir, I will fast being loose.

Boy. No sir, that were fast and loose: thou shalt to prison.

Boy. Well, if ever I doe see the merest days of delolation that I have seene, face shall fee.

Boy. What shall this fee?

Boy. Nay nothing, Maitre Maitre, but what they look upon. It is not for prisoners to be silent in their words, and therefore I will say nothing: I thank God,

I have a little patience as another man, and therefore I can be quiet.

Boy. Doe affcit the very ground (which is baie)

where her bowe (which is baie) guided by her youte

(which is bate) doth tread; I shall be forsworn (which is a great argument of fallhood,) of love. And how can that be true love, which is falsly attempted? Loure is a familiar, Loure is a Dunciell. There is no equal Angel but Loure; yet Sampson was so tempted, and he had an excellent strength: Yet was Solomon so seduced, and he had a very good witte. Cupidis Fusthat is too hard for Hercules Clubbe, and therefore too much odds for a Spaniards Rapier: The first and second caufe will not serue my turne: the Paflado herrepeeks not, the Duncell he regards not: his disgrace is to be called Boy, but his glorie is to subdue men. Auo Valour, ruff Rapier, bee hill Drum, for your manager is in loue; yes hee loueth.

Affit me some extemporal god of Rime, for I am sure I shall turne Sonnet. Deuif Wits, write For, for I am for whole volumes in folio.

Enter the Princess of France, with three attending Ladies, and three Lords.

Boyet. Now Madam fummon vp your dearest spirits, Consider who the King your father lends:
To whom he lends, and what's his Embassie,
Your felfe, held precious in the worlds esteeme,
To parle with the sole inheritor
Of all perfections that a man may owe,
Match thefee Nature, the pleà of no lovely weight
Then Aquitaine, a Dowrie for a Queen,
Be now as prodigall of all deare grace,
As Nature was in making Graces desire,
When fie did flute the generall world beside,
And prodigally gave them all to you,
Queen. Good Boyet, my beauty though but mean,
Needs not the painted flouris of your praise:
Beauty is bought by judgement of the eye,
Not vttrted by base fale of chanpons tongues:
I am lefle proud to hear you tell my worth,
Then you much willing to be counted wife,
In spending your wit in the praise of mine,
But now to task the tasker, good Boyet,
Prin. You are not ignorne all telling fame
Dorh noyfe abroad Nature hath made a vow,
Till famefull fhame call out were three yeares,
No woman may approach his filent Court:
Therefore to's feemeth it needfull course,
Before we enter his forbidden gates,
To know his pleafure, and in that beholfe
Bold of your wortneffe, we fingle you,
As our bell mouing faire folice:
Tell him the daughter of the King of France,
On fervious funefhie crauing quicke dispatch,
Importunes personall conference with his grace.
Hale, fignifie fo much while we attend,
Like humble vifage futes his high will.
Prin. All pride is willing pride, and yours is fo:
Who are the Venarios my louing Lords, that are vowfellowes with this vertuous Duke?

Lor. Longaulith is one.
Prin. Know you the man?
1. Lady. I know him Madame at a marriage feast,
Betwene L Periors and the beauteous heire
Of Loues Fanciwordh alemonized.
In Normande law I this Longaulith,
A man of soueraigne parts he is effeem'd:
Well fitted in Arts, glorious in Arms:
Nothing becomes him ill that he would well.
The only foyle of his faire vertues glowie,
If vertues glowie will flame with any foile.
Is a sharp wit match'd with too blunt a Will:
Whole edge hath power to cut whole will fill wills,
It shoulde none fpare that come withinhis power.
Prin. Some merry mocking Lord be he, if fo?
Lad. 2. They say to most, that moft his humors know.
Prin. Such fHORT it's wits do wither as they grow.
Who are the ref?
2. Lady. The yong Damaine, a well accomplished youth,
Ber. I know you did.

Kes. How needlesly was it then to ask the question?

Ber. You must not be so quick.

Kes. 'Tis long of you! spur me with such questions.

Ber. Your wit's too hot, it speeds too fast, 'twill tire.

Kes. Not till it leave the Rider in the mire.

Ber. What time a day?

Kes. The hourse that foole should ask.

Ber. Now faire belay your marks.

Kes. Fare! fall the face it covers.

Ber. And feed you many livers.

Kes. Amen, so you be none.

Ber. Nay then will I be gone.

Kim. Madame, your father here doth intimate,
The payment of a hundred thousand Crownes,
Being but one halfe, of an entire fumme,
Disburfed by my father in his warres.

Ber. But saye that he, or we, are neither haue
Recus'd that fumme; yet there remaines unpaid
A hundred thousand more, in suretie of the which,
One part of Aquitaine is bound to vs,
Although not valued to the monies worth.

Kes. If then the King your father will rejoyce
But that one halfe which is unsatisfied,
We will give vp our right in Aquitaine,
And hold fast friendship with his Maiestie:
But that it seemes he little purpofeth,
For here he doth demand to have repairie,
An hundred thousand Crownes, and no demands
One payment of a hundred thousand Crownes,
To have his title lose in Aquitaine.

Kim. Which we much rather had depart withall,
And haue the money by our father lent,
Then Aquitaine, so guelded as it is.

Ber. Desire Princefse, were not his requites so farre
From reasons yielding, your faire fife should make
A yielding gainst fome reafon in my bref,
And goo well satisfy'd to France againe.

Prim. You doe the King my Father too much wrong,
And wrong the reputation of your name,
In so unbecoming to confede rejoyce
Of that which hath so faithfullly beene paid.

Kim. I doe protest I never heard of it,
And if you proue it, I lie repay it backe.

O yeeld vp Aquitaine.

Prim. We are at your word:

Boy. You can produce acquaintances
For such a fumme, from speciall Officers,
Of Charles his Father.

Kim. Satisfie me fo.

Boy. So please your Grace, the packet is not come
Where that and other particularies are bound.

Kes. To morrow you shall have a fight of them
Kim. In shall affauce me at which interview,
All liberal reafon would I yeeld vnse:

Meane time, receiv'e such welcome at my hand,
As Honour, without breach of Honour may
Make tender of, to thy true worthynesse.
You may not come faire Princefse in my gates,
But here without you shall be receit'd,
As you shall deeme your felle lodg'd in my heart,
Though to do not further harbour in my houfe:
Your owne good thoughts excufe me, and farewel,
To morrow we shall visit you againe.

Kim. They own with th[e] shee in every place. Exit.

Boy. Lady, I will commend you to my owne heart.

La. Rec. Pray you doe my commendations,
I would be glad to see it.

Boy. I would you heard it gone.

La. Rec. Is the soule sick?

Boy. Sicke at the heart.

La. Rec. Alache, it is bloud.

Boy. Would that doe it good?

Boy. Will you prick't with your eye?

La. Rec. No poyn't, with my knife.

Boy. Now God faue thy life.

La. Rec. And yours from long liuing,

Ber. I cannot stay thankfulling. Exit.

Enter Dommic.

Dumm. Sir, I pray you a word: What Lady is that fame?

Boy. The heere of Montfau, Ralphin her name.

Dumm. A gallant Lady, Monsier: fare you well.

Boy. I beleech you a word what is fhe in the white?

La. A woman for times, if you saw her in the light.

Long. Perchance light in the light: I defire her name.

Boy. Shee hath but one for her felfe,

To deffe that were a fham:

Long. Pray you fir, whole daughter?

Boy. Her Mothers, I haue heard.

Long. Gods bleffings on your beard.

Boy. Good fire be not offended,

Shee is an heroe of Faulconbridge.

Long. N'y, my choller is ended:

Shee is a most sweet Lady. Exit Long.

Boy. Not unlike firs, that may be.

Enter Berowe.

Boy. What's her name in the cap.

Ber. Katharine by good hap.

Boy. Is the reader, an no.

Boy. To her will fir, or fo,

Ber. You are welcome fir, adiew.

Boy. Fare well to me fir, and welcome to you. Exit.

La. Ma. That isf is Berowe, the merie mad-cap Lord.

Not a word with him, but a fret.

Boy. And every felf but a word.

Prim. It was well done of you to take him at his word.

Boy. I was as willing to grapple, as he was to board.

La. Ma. Two hot Siceps mane:

And wherefor not Ships? (lip)

Boy. No Sheep: (I veit And two vnles we feed on your Boy. So you grant paffure for me.

La. Not fo gentle beft.

My lips are no Common, though feuerall they be.

Be. Belonging to whom?

La. To my fortune and one.

Prim. Good wiff will be tangling, but gentiles agree.
This ciuill warre of wiff were much better vifed
On Naue and his booke, for heere tis abus'd.

Be. If my oheration (which very feldome lies
By the hearts flill rhetorick, diflolfed with eyees)

To the court of his eye, peeping thorough defire
His hart like an Ague with your print impreffed,
Proud with his forme, in his eie pride expressed.
His tongue all impatient to speake and not see,
Did humble with haste in his eie-sight to be,
All fences to that fence did make their repairie,
To feel onely looking on fairest of faire :
Me thought all his fences were lockt in his eye,
As Jewels in Chriftall for some Prince to buy. (glaft,
Who tendering their own worth from whence they were
Did point out to buy them along as you paft.
His faces owne margent did coate fuch amusse,
That all eyes few his eies intanchet with gazes.
He gue you Agravine, and all that is his,
And you gius hun for my fake, but one louting Kiffe.
Prim. Come to our Pavillion, Toger is dispold.
Brat. But to speake this in words, which his eie hath dif.
I onely have made a mouth of his eie, (clso’d.
By adding a tongue, which I know will not lie.
Lad. Ra. Thou art an old Loue-monger, and speakeft skillfully.
Lad. Ma. He is Capide Grandfather, and learners news
of him.
Lad. 2. Then was Fenius like her mother, for her father is but grim.
Boy. Do you hear my mad wenchies?
Lad. 1. No.
Boy. What then, do you fee ?
Lad. 2. I, our way to be gone.
Boy. You are too hard for me.

ing.
Boy. Conconcel.
Brag. Sweete Ayer, go tenderneffe of yeares ; take this Key, gue enlargement to the Swaine, bring him fe-fantly hither ; I muft imploy him in a letter to my Lowe.
Boy. Will you win your loue with a French braule?
Brag. How meaneft thou, brauling in French ?
Boy. No my compleat malter, but to ligge off a tune at the tongues end, canarie to it with the fecret, humour it with turning vp your eie: figh a note and fing a note, sometime through the throate ; if you swallowed loue with finging, loue sometime through : note as if you snuff vp loue by fenlicing loue with your hat pincellelke ore the fhop of your eies, with your armes croft on your thinbellie doublier, like a Rupper on a spit, or your hands in your pocket, like a man after the old painting, and keep not too long in one tune, but a flip and away:
thee arc complements, thee are humours, thee betraie nice wenchies that would be betrayed withoout thefe, and make them men of note : do you note men that moft are affected to thefe?
Brag. How haft thou purchas’d this experience?
Boy. By my penne of observation.
Brag. But O, but O.
Boy. The Hobbie-horfe is forgot.
Brag. Call thou my loue Hobbie-horfe.
Boy. No Malter, the Hobbie-horfe is but a Colt, and and your Lowe perhaps, a Hacknie :
But haue you forgot your Loue?
Brag. Almoft I had.
Boy. Neglligent student, learnie her by heart.
Brag. By heart, and in heart Boy.
Boy. And out of heart Malter : all those three I will proue.
Brag. What wilt thou pneue ?
Boy. A man, if I live,and this by, in, and without, vp on the inflame ; by heart you loue her, because your heart cannot come by her : in heart you loue her, because your heart is in loue with her : and out of heart you loue her, being out of heart that you cannot enjoy her.
Brag. I am all thefe three.
Boy. And three times as much more,and yet nothing at all.
Brag. Fetch hither the Swaine, he must carrie mee
a letter.
Boy. A meffage well, I am this’d, a Horfe to be embelladour for an Affe.
Brag. Ha, ha, What faieft thou ?
Boy. Marrie fit, you must fend the Affe vpon the Horfe for he is verie fweet bred : but I goe.
Brag. The way is but fhort, away,
Boy. As waft as Lead fir.
Brag. Thy meaning prettie ingenious, is not Lead a metall hueane, dull, and flow?
Boy. Metall honeft Malter, or rather Malter no.
Brag. I say Lead is flow.
Boy. You are too waft for fa, to fa fe.
Is that Lead flow which a fir’d from a Gunne ?
Brag. Sweete flome of Rhoterike,
He refpe:ces me a Cannon, and the Bullar that’s he:
I fhoote thee at the Swaine.
Boy. Thump then, and I fece.
Boy. A moll acute fue-cell, wihable and fée of grace,
By thy favoure sweet Weikin, I muft figh in thy face.
Moft rude melancholie, Valour giueth thee place.
My Herald is return’d.

Ar. No Page, it is an epilogue or difcourse to make some obfcurce precedent that hath to fore bin faine.
Now will I begin your murrall, and do you follow with my lennys.
The Foke, the Ape, and the Humbles-Bee,

flat
Sir, your penny-worth is good, and your Goose be fat.
To tell a bargaining well it is as cunning as fast and loose:
Let me see a fat Leney, that's a fat Goose.
Ar. Come hither, come hither:
How did this argument begin?
Ber. By laying that a Coifard was broken in a thin.
Then call'd you for the Leney.
Clow. True, and I for a Platan:
Thus came you ur argument in:
The Boyer fat Leney, the Goose that you bought,
And he ended the matter.
Ar. But tell me: How was there a Coifard broken in a thin?
Pag. I will tell you severely.
Clow. Thou hast no feeling of it, Madam,
I will speak that Leney,
A Coifard running out, that was solely within,
Fell over the threshold, and broke my thin.
Arm. We will take no more of this matter.
Clow. Till there be more matter in the thin.
Arm. Sirra Coifard, I will infranchifie thee.
Clow. O, marry me to one Francis, I well some Leney, some Goose in this.
Arm. By my sweete soule, I mean, setting thee at liberty.
Entree doming thy person: thou were enured, restrained, captivated, bound.
Clow. True, true, and now you will be my purgation,
and let me loose.
Arm. I give thee thy liberty, fet thee from duration, and in lieu thereof, impose on thee nothing but this:
Bear this significant to the country Maid's lniquenec:
there is remuneration, for the best ward of mine honours is rewarding my dependants. *Math, follow.
Pag. Like the fequez I.
Signeau Coifard adieu. Exit.
Clow. My sweete ounce of mans fleas, my in-cone Iew:
Now will I looke to his remuneration.
Remuneration, O, that's the Latin word for three-farthings:
Three-farthings remuneration, What's the price of this ounce?
I, no, lie gie you a remuneration: Why?
It carries it remuneration: Why? It is a fairer name then a French-Crowne. I will never buy and fell out of this word.

Enter Browne.

Ber. O my good knaueCoifard, exceedingly well met.
Clow. Pray you, sir, How much Carnation Ribbon may a man buy for a remuneration?
Ber. What is a remuneration?
Coif. Marrie sir, half pennie farthing.
Ber. O, Why then three farthings worth of Silk.
Coif. I thank your worship, God be with you.
Ber. O (ay flay, I wull employ thee;
As thou wilt win my favour, good my knaue,
Do one thing for me that I shall intreate.
Clow. When would you have it done sir?
Ber. O this after-noone.
Clow. Well, I will doe it sir: Fare you well.
Ber. O thou knowest not what it is.
Clow. I shall know it when I have done it.
Ber. Why villainous thou must know first.
Clow. I will come to your worship to morrow morning.
Ber. It must be done this after-noone.
Harke, saue it is but this:
The Prince[sse] comes to hunt here in the Park.

And in her traine there is a gentle Lady:
When tongues speake sweeetely, then they name her name,
And Reyaine they call her, ask for her:
And to her white hand fe she too do commend
This feel'd vp countenaunt. Their's thy guidoun: goe.
Coif. Garson, O sweete garson, better then remuneration,
a leutenence-farthing better: most sweete garson.
I will doe it sir in print: garson, remuneration.

Exit.

Ber. O, and I forsooth in love,
I that have beene loves whip !
A verie Beadle to a humorous figh: A Critickke,
Nay, a night-watch Contable,
A dominering pedent ore the Boye,
Then whom no mortall so magnificant,
This wimpled, whyning, prouinblode wasdward Boye,
This signor Lenia gyant drawe, don Copys,
Regent of Lenoe-comes, Lord of folded armes,
Th'annointed louteraigne of sightes and groanes:
Ligedge of all lytteres and malcontentes:
Dread Prince of Placats, King of Codpees.
Sole Emperor and great general
Of tooting Parrotors (O my little heart.)
And I to be a Corporall of his field,
And weare his colours like a Tumblers hoope.
What? I love, I foe, I seeke a wife,
A woman that is like a German Cloake,
Still a repairing: euer out off frame,
And never going a right, being a Watch:
But being watcht, that it may still goe right.
Nay, to be perjure, which is worst of all:
And among three, to love the worst of all,
A whistly wanten, with a velvet brow.
With two pitch bals sticke in her face for eyes,
I stand by heaven, one that will doe the deedie,
Though Argue were her Eunuch and her garde.
And I to fighe for her, to watch for her,
To pray for her, go to: it is a plague
That Copys will impose for my neglect,
Of his almighty dreadfull little light.
Well, I will lose, write, fish, pray, true, groane,
Some true men must love my Lady, and some alone.

Against the steepes vertiginous of the hill?

Well Lords, to day we shall have our dispatch,
On Saturday we will return to France.
Then Forrest[r] my friend, Where is the Buffi?
That we must stand and play the murtherer in?
Far. Hereby upon the edge of yonder Coppice,
A stand where you may make the fairest shooote.
Qu. I thank my beautifull fair thee drashe, choose,
And thereupon thou speake't the fairest shooote.

For. Yet Madam faire.

Qu. Nay, never paint me now, Where faire is not, praiue cannot mend the brow. Here (good my glasse) take this for telling true : Faire paintes [for foule words] is more then due. For. Nothing but that is which you inherit. Qu. See, see, my beauty will be faw'd by merit. O herefore in faire, fit for these dayes, A giving hand, though foule, shall haue faire praiue, But come, the Bow: Now Mercie goes to kill, And shooing wolling, is then accounted ill: Thus will I faue my credit in the floote, Not wounding, pitie would not let me do't: If wounding, then it was to shew my skill, That more for praiue, then purpoce meant to kill. And out of question, so it is sometimes: Glory groves guiltie of detestable crimes, When for Fantes fake, for praiue an outward part, We bend to that, the working of the hart.

As I for praiue alone now seekes to spill The poore Deeres blood, that my heart meenes no ill. Boy. Do not curt wive's hold that selfe-soueraigne Only for praiue fake, when they strive to be Lords o're their Lords?

Qu. Oney for praiue, and praiue we may afford, To any Lady that subdues a Lord.

Bry heaven, that thou art faire, is most infallible: true that thou art beautuous, truth it selfe that thou art louely: more faire then faire, beautifull then beautious, true then truth it selfe: haue commination on thy heroicall Vailfall. The magnanimeous and most illustriue King Cypardas set eie upon the permicious and indiscrete Begger Zenelephon: and he it was that might rightly say, Vexet, vts, vts: Which to anothrize in the vulgar, O base and obscene vulgar vts; undeselfs, He came, See, and ouercame: hee came one; see, two; ouercame three: Who came? the King. Why did he come? to see. Why did he see? to over come. To whom came he? to the Begger. What law he? the Begger. Who ouer came he? the Begger. The conclusion is victorie: On whole side? the King: the captiue is insaic: On whole side? the Beggers. The catrophie is a Nupital: on whole side? the Kings: no, one in one, or one in both. I am the King (for so flands the comparision) thou the Begger, so to wittneffe thy lowlineffe. Shall I command thy loue? I may, Shall I enforce thy loue? I could, Shall I entreate thy loue? I will. What, that thou exchage for ragges, rooses: for tittles titles, for thy selfe mee. Thus expeclting thy reply, I prophanee my lips on thy foot, my eyes on thy picture, and my heart on thy euerie part.

Thou in the dearest designe of industrie; Don Adriana de Armatho.

Thus doth thou haere the Nemean Lion roare, Gainf the thou Lambe, that flandells as his pray: Submisive fall his princely fecte before, And he from forrage will incline to play. But if thou falsifie (poore foule) what art thou then? Foode for his rage, repartell for his den.

Qu. What plume of feathers is hee that indistd this Letter? What veine? What Wethercocke? Did you ever hear better?

Boy. I am much deceiued, but I remember the file.

Qu. Elle your memerie is bad, going ore escewhile. Boy. This Armado is a Spaniard that keeps here in court A Phantome, a Monarcho, and one that makes sport To the Prince and his Bookes-mates.

Qu. Thou fellow, a word. Who gane thee this Letter?

Clo. I told you, my Lord.

Qu. To whom shouldt thou gieue it?

Clo. From my Lord to my Lady.

Qu. From which Lord, to which Lady?

Clo. From my Lord Keramu, a good master of mine, To a Lady of France, that he call'd Rafaline.

Qu. Thou hould inflaken his letter. Come Lords away, Here I sweere, put vp this, twill be thine another day.

Exeunt.

Boy. Who is the shooer? Who is the shooer?

Rafa. Shall I teach you to know.

Boy. My continent of beautie.

Rafa. Why the that bears the Bow. Finely put off. Boy. My Lady goes to kill homes, but if thou marrie, Hang me by the necke, if homes that yere miscarrie, Finely pur on.

Rafa. Well then, I am the shooer.

Boy. And who is your Dear? Rafa. If we chooae by the homes, your felle come not nere. Finely put on indeede.

Marina. You still wrangle with her Boyet, and face strikes at the bow.

Boyet. But she felle is hit lower:

Have I hit her now.

Rafa. Shall I come upon thee with an old sayling, that was a man when King Papin of France was a little boy, as touching the hit it.

Boyet. So I may answere thee with one as old that was a woman when Quene Conquer of Britannie was a little wenche, as touching the hit it.

Rafa. Thou
His intellect is not replenished; he is only an animal, only sensible in the duller parts: and such barren plants are not before vs, that we thankfull should be: which we twit and feeling, are for those parts that doe fruite in vs more then the.

For as it would ill become me to be raing, indiscreer, or a fool: so were there a patch fet on Learning, to see him in a Schoole.

But some bene say I, being of an old Fathers minde, Many can brooke the weather, that loue not the winde. Dul. You two are book-men: Can you tell by your vit, What was a month old at Cains birth, that's not five weeks old as yet?

Dul. What is dilectis?

Nath. A title to Fede, to Lune, to the Moon.

Hol. The Moone was a month old when Adam was no more, (sore. And wrought not to five-weekes when he came to five: Th'assillion holds in the Exchange.

Dul. *Tis true indeede, the Cullusion holds in the Exchange.

Hol. God comfort thy capacity, I say the assillion holds in the Exchange.

Dul. And I say the polution holds in the Exchange: for the Moone is newer but a month old: and I say beside that, 'twas a Pricket that the Princefell kill'd.

Hol. Sir Nathaniel, will you heare an extemporall Epytaph on the death of the Deare, and to hounour the ignominary call'd the Deare, the Princefell kill'd a Pricket.

Nath. Perge, good M. Holofernes, perge, so it shall please you to abbreviate sumptuosity.

Hol. I will something affect the letter, for it argues facilitie.

Enter Dul, Holofernes, the Pedant and Nathaniel.

Nath. Very reuerent sport truely, and done in the simony of a good confidence.

Ped. The Deare was (as you know) inquis in bloud, rape as a Povmwater, who now hangeth as a Jewell in the care of Cele the skie; the welkens the heavens, and a non falllich as a Crab on the face of Terra, the soyle, the land, the earth.

Cum. Nath. Truely M. Holofernes, the epytithes are sweettly varied as a schoeller at the leaft: but if I suffice ye, it was a Bucke of the first head.

Hol. Sir Nathaniel, hand credo.

Dul. Twas not a hand credo, 'twas a Pricket.

Hol. Most barbarous intimation: yet a kinde of inflamation, as it were in us, in way of explication sicere: as it were replication, or rather offearth, to show as it were his inflamation after his vnderfed, vnpolisht, vnveduted, vnpruned, vntrained, or rather vnlaterned, or rather unconfirmed fashion, to interfere against my hand creo for a Deare.

Dul. I said the Deare was not a hand creo, 'twas a Pricket.

Hol. Twice sod simplicitie, bis callus, O thou monfier ignorance, how deformed dost thou looke.

Nath. Sir hee hath never fed of the dainties that are bred in a booke.

He hath not eate paper as it were:
He hath not drunkne inake.
Loves Labour's lost.

Enter Jaques and the Clowns.

Jaques. God give you good morrow, Mr. Percioun.

Nath. Master Percioun, good morrow? And if one should be perfect, Which is the one?

Cl. Master M. Schoolmaster, hee that is likest to a hoghead.

Nath. Of perusing a Hoghead, a good luten of conceit in a surfeit of Fire, faire enough for a Flint,Pearle enough for a Swine's tis proue, it is well.

Jaques. Good Master Parson be so good as reade mee this Letter, it was given mee by Cefar[?], and sent mee from Don Armapo : I befeech you reade it.

Nath. Facile pesor gellida, quando pecas amnis sub umbra minat, & so forth. Ah good old Manum, I may speake of thee as the traveler doth of Venice, ven cich,vencica, que non va vide,que non te peruche. Old Manum,old Manum. Who vnnderstande this not, or re fal la mufa: Vnder pardon sir, What are the contents? or rather as Hurraceeyes in his, What my foule veres.

Jaques. Ho! I say, and very learned.

Nath. Let me heare a flaffe, a flanne, a verse, Lige da dmine.

If Loue make me forsworne, how shall I sweare to loue? Ah never faith could hold, if not to beautifull vowed.

Though to my wele forsworne, to thee He faithfull proue.

Tholights thought to mee were Oyes, to see like Oyers bowed.

Studie his byas leues, and makes his booke thine eyes.

Where all thoses pleasures live, that Art would compre dend.

If knowledge be the marke, to know thee shall suffice. Well learned is that tongue, that well can thee comend.

All ignorant that foule, that sees thee without wonder.

Which is to me some praise, that I thy parts admire; Thy eye Loues lightning beares, thy voyce his dreadful thunder.

Which not to anger bent, is musique, and sweet fire.

Celestiall as thou art, Oh pardon loue this wrong, That singes heaven's praise, with such an earthly tongue.

Ped. You finde not the apostrophas, and fo make the accent. Let me superius the censure.

Nath. Here are onely numbers ratified, but for the elegance, facility, & golden cadence of poesie cures: Odissus Naus was the man, And why in deed Naus, for smelling out the odoriferous flowers of fancy? the leeres of invention imitate is nothing: So doth the Hound his master, the Ape his keeper, the tyred Horfe his ruler: But Dominae virum, Was this directed to you?

Jaques. I fir from one monster Berowne, one of the strange Queenes Lords.

Nath. I will overclare the superscript.

To the faire white hand of the most beautious Lady Rosaline: I will looke againe on the incleff of the Letter, for the nomination of the partie written to the person written unto.

Your Ladies in all defired employment, Berowne.

Per. Sir Horfeferes, this Berowne is one of the Votaries with the King, and here he hath framed a Letter to a fe quent of the strange Queens: which accidentally, or by the way of progression, hath miscarried. Trip and goe my sweete, deliver this Paper into the hand of the King, it may concern them much: stay not thy complent, I forgive thy duectie, aude.

Maid. Good Cefard go with me:

Sir God faue your life.

Coff. Have with thee my girlie.

Exeunt. Sir you have done this in the feare of God very religiously: and as a certaine Father faith

Ped. Sir tell not me of the Father, I do feare colourable colours. But to returne to the Veres,Did they please you for Nathaniel?:

Nath. Maruellous well for the pen.

Ped. I do dine to day at the fathers of a certaine Pu pill of mine, where if (being repast) it shall please you to graffe the table with a Grace, I will on my priviledge I hate with the parents of the foresaid Childre or Pupill, undersitake your bien senso, where I will prove those Veres to be very unlearned, neither favouring of Poetrie, Wt, nor Invention. I befeech your So Nath. And thanke you to: for societie (faith the text) is the happinesse of life.

Ped. And certes the text most infallibly concludes it,

But to invite you too, you shall not say me say: foule

Away, the gentle are at their game, and we will to our reception.

Exeunt.

Berowne with a Paper in his hand, aloues.

Berowne. The King he is hunting the Deere, I am courting my tylfe.

They have patcht a Toyle, I am toyning in a pych, pitch that defiles; defile, a foule word. Well, let thee downe sorrow; but for thy soul, I, and I the foole: Well proved wit. By the Lord this Loues as mad as Ainus, it kis sphere, it kids mee, I a sphere: Well proved against a my life. I will not lose, if I do hang me: yfaith I will not. O but her eye: by this light, but for her eye, I would not lose her;yes,for her two eyes. Well, I doe nothing in the world but lye, and lye in my throat. By heauen I doe loure, and it hath taught me to Rome, and to be mallicholie: and here is part of my Rime, and here is my mallicholie. Well, the hath one a my Sonnets already, the Clowne bore it, the Foolo lente it, and the Lady hath it: sweet Clowne, swee ter Foolo, sweetest Lady. By the world, I would not care a pin, if the other three were in. Here comes one with a paper, God give him grace to grome.

He stands aside. The King entreats,

Kim. Ay mee!

Ber. Shot by heaven procede sweet Cepid, thou haft thumped him with thy Birevold through the left pap in faith secreto thea.

King. So sweete a hiffe the golden Sunne giues not, To those fresh morning drops upon the Rose, As thy eye beames, when their fresh rayle hate fomote. The night of dew that on my checkes downe flowers. Nor shinces the siluer Moone one halle so bright, Through the transparent boleme of the deep, As doth thy face through teares of mine gue light: Thou finit in every teare that I doe wepe,

No drop, but as a Coach doth carry thee: So rided thou triumphing in my woe.

Do but behold the teares that well in me,

And they thy glory through my grief will flow:

But...
Loves Labour's lost.

Dum. would let her out in Sawyers, sweet misprision.

Dum. Once more Ile read the Ode that I have writ.

Ber. Once more Ile make how Loue can vary Wit.

Dumante reads his Sonnet.

On a day, alack the day:
Lone, whose time most is every day,
Sped a blisful peeping faire,
Playing in the wand wyns.
Through the yelmes, leaves the world,
All unseene, saw passing finds.
That the sooner ship to death,
With himselfe the heavens breach.
Ayre (quoth he) thy cheeks may blowe,
Ayre, would it might triumph fo.
But lackes my hand is forrowe,
Nere to plakke thee fro thy throne:
Vow alack for youth unstate,
Touch me as to plakke a sweet.
Doest not call it smote on me,
That I am forwarne for thee.
Then for whom Loue would farsure,
Tuno but an Adship were,
And dense himselfe for Loue.
Turning mortall for thy Loue.

This will fend, and something else more plaine.
That shall express this true Loues resting place,
O would the King Berowne and Longaulse,
Were Louers too, till to example ill.
Would from my forehead wipe a perjur'd note:
For none offend, where all alike doe dote.

Len. Dumante, thy Loue is farre from charitie,
That in Loues griefe deuill fercitete:
You may looke pale, but I should blisse I know,
To be ore-heard, and taken snappine go.

Kim. Come for, you blisse: as hit, your cafe is such,
You chide at him, offending twice as much.
You do not lone Maria Longaulse,
Did never Sonnet for her fake compile.

Nor never lay his wretched armes atwarte
His loving boone, to keipe downe his heart.
I have bene closely throwed in this bath,
And mark you both, and for you both did blisse.
I heard your guilty Rimes, over'd your fashion
Saw sighes recee from you, noted well your passion.
Aye me, sayes one I O Loue, the other cries!

On her haires were Gold, Chiffall the others eyes.
You would for Paradise brake Faith and troth,
And Ione for your Loue would infringe an oath.
What will Berowe saye when that he shall hear
Faith infringed, which such zeale did iware.
How will he come now how will he spend his wit?
How will he triumph, leap, and laugh at it?
For all the wealth that ever I did see,
I would not have him know too much by me.

Bera. Now rep hold to whipp hypocrisy.
Ah good my Lidge, I pray thee pardon me.
Good heart, What grace haft thou thus to reproce
These wromes for loving, that are not in love?
Your eyes doe make no couches in your teares.
There is no certaine Princeffe that appears.
You'll not be perjurd, 'tis a hateful thing.
Tuff, none but Minfrels like of Sonnetting.
But are you not asham'd? may, are your ne.

But do not loue thy selfe, then thou wilt kepe
My tears for glasses, and still make me wepe.
O Queene of Queenes, how faire dost thou excell,
No thought can think, nor tongue of mortal tell.
How shall she know my griefes? Ie drop the paper.
Sweet leaves divide folly, Who is he comes here?

Enter Longaulse.

What Longaulse, and reading liften ear.

Long. Ay me, I am for warne.

Ber. Why he comes in like a pericure, wearing papers.

Long. In loue I hope, sweet fellowship in shame.

Ber. One drunkard loues nother of the name.

Lon. Am I the first you have perused to? (know)

Ber. I could put the in comfort, not by two that I

Thou makst the triumphy, the corner cap of societe,
The shape of Loues Tiburone, that hangs vp simplicitie.

Lon. I fear thou falsborn lines lack power to mote.

O sweet Maria, Unpreffe of my Loue,

These numbers will I teare, and write in profe.

Ber. O Rimes are gards on wanton Cupids hofe,

Disfigure not his Shop.

Lon. This same hall poe. He reads the Sonnet.

Did not the heavenly Rockett rick of shine eye,

"Gaunt whom the world cannot hold argument,"

Processed my heart to this fulls posture?

Verse for verse thou dost deform cure punishment.

A Woman I loue, but I will prove,

"Though being a Godfaff, I forwarne not thee.

My Vow was earths, thou heauenly Loue,

Thy grace being gan, cures all distance in me.

Verse are but breath, and breath a vapour is,

Then thou faire Sun, which on my earth destit shone,

Exhalest this vapour vow, in thee it is:

If broken thee, it is no faults of mine:

If by me braked, If what fault is not unwarie,

To long on earth, to own a Paradise?

Ber. This is the irker veine, which makes flesh a deity.

A greene Goode, a Godfaff, pure pure I dolasry,

God amend vs, God amend, we are much out oth way.

Enter Dumante.

Lon. By whom shall I find this company? Stay.

Ber. All bad, all hid, an old infants play,

Like a true God, here fit to the skie,

And weatched fooles secretes heedfull ore-eyed.

More Sacks to the myll. O heauen I haue my wish.

Dumante transformd, loure Woodcock in a dith.

Dum. O most divine Kate.

Dum. O most prophecte Coxcomb.

Dum. By heauen a wonder of the mortall eye.

Dum. By earth shee is not corporall, there you lye.

Dum. Her Amber haires for toule hath amber coted.

Dum. An Amber colourd Rauen was well noted,

Dum. As spright as the Cedar.

Dum. Stroppe I say her shoulder is with child.

Dum. As faire as day.

Ber. I as some dates, but then no sunne must shine.

Dum. O that I had my wish?

Lon. I and I had mine.

Kim. And mine too good Lord.

Ber. Amen, so I had mine: Is not that a good word?

Dum. I would forget her, but a Feuer fie.

Rages in my bloud, and will remembered be.

Ber. A Feuer in your bloud, why then me

IV. iii. 39—159

All three of you, to be thus much ore\thot? You But I a Beame doe finde in each of three, O a What a Scene of foot\hy aue I seece, Of fighes, of grones, of sorrow, and of teene: O me, with what fri\t patience have I faw, To see a King transformed to a Gras, To see great Hercules whipping a Giggie, And profound Salomon tuning a lyggee, And Nefer play at paff-pin with the boyes, And Criticock Ty\m laugh at idle toyes. Where lies thy grie\f? O tell me good Domains; And gentle Lou\man, where lies thy paine? And where my Liedges? all about the breaf: A Candle hoa! Kin. Too bitter is thy left. Are wee betrayed thus to thy outer-view? Ber. Not you by me, but I betrayed to you. I that am honest, I that hold it faire To breake the vow I am engaged in. I am betrayed by keeping company With men,like men of incollustence. When shall you fee me write a thing in time? Or gone forleave? or spend a minutes minute, In pinning mee, when shall you heare that I will prai\e a hand, a foot, a face, an eye : a gate, a fa\e, a brow, a breaf, a waife, a legge, a limme. Kin. Soft, Whither a\y way to falt? A true man, or a theefe, that gallipso to. Ber. I poft from Loue, good Louer let me go.

Enter Lagonetta and Cloune.

La\u. God bleffe the King. Kin. What Present half thou there? Clo. Some certaine treafon. Kin. What makes treafon here? Clo. Nay it makes nothing fir King. If it marrte nothing neither, The treafon and you goe in peace away together. La\u. I bele\ch your Grace let this Letter be read, Our perfon mifi doubts it: it was treafon he said. Kin. Ber\ome, read it ouer. He reads the Letter. Kin. Where hadst thou it? La\u. Of Co\fard. King. Where hadst thou it? Co\f. Of Dun A\maran\a, Dun A\maradie. Kin. How now, what is in your why do\t thou tear it? Ber. A toy my Liedge, a toy ; you grace needes not feare it. La\u. It did move him to paffion, and therefore let's heare it. Dum. It is Ber\ome writing, and heere is his name. Ber. Ah you whosefom logge\erhead, you were borne to doe me flame. Guely my Lord, guily: I confesse, I confesse. Kin. What? Ber. That you three foules, lackt mee foule, to make up the meffe. Hehe, and you: and you my Liedge, and I, Are picke-purses in Loue, and we defferve to die. O diffim\se this audience, and I shall tell you more. Dum. Now the number is euen. Ber\om. True true, we are fowie: will these Turtles be gonne? Kin. Hence fir\s, away. Clo. Walk aside the true folke, & let the traytors flay.

Ber. Sweet Lords,Sweet Louers, O let vs imbrace, As true we are as feth and bloud can be, The Sea will ebbbe and flow, heauen will shew his face: Young bloud doth not obey an old decree. We cannot croffe the caufe why we are borne : Therefore of all hands must we be forworne. King. What, did thefe rent lines tewe some loue of thine? (Reflaine.) Ber. Did they, quoth you? Who fees the heavenly That (like a rude and fawage man of Inde.) At the frit opening of the gorgeous East, Bowses not his raffall head, and fbrooken blinde, Kifes the bafe ground with obedient bref? What peremptory Eagle-fighted eye Dares looke upon the heauen of her brow, That is not blinded by her maeftie? Kin. What zeal, what fuite, hath infipir'd the now? My Loue(her Milfres) is a gracious Moone, Shee (an attending Starre) scarce fene a light. Ber. My eyes are then no eyes,not I Ber\owe. O,but for my Loue, day would turne to night, Of all complications the cul'd fourraretuy, Doe meete as at a faire in her faire checkets. Where feuerall Worthies make one digni\ty, Where nothing wants,that want it felle doth fecke. Lend me the flourifh of all gentle tongues, Fie painted Rethorick, O she needs it not, To things of fale, a fellers prai\e belongs: She pafles prai\e, then prai\e too short doth blet. A wicked Hermit, a fielcer winters worn, Might shake offf fifte, looking in her eye: Beauty doth varnish Age, as it new borne, And giues the Crutch the Cridles infancie. O tis the Summe that maketh all things finte. King. By heauen,y Loue is blacke as Ebonie. Berow. Is Ebonie like her? O word diuine? A wife of such wood were felicitie. O who can give an ooth? Where is a booke? That I may fwear Beauty doth beauty lacke, If that the leane not of her eye to looke: No face is faire that is not full fo blacke. Kin. O paradoxo, Black is the badge of hell, The hufe of dungeons, and the Schoole of night: And beauties creft becomes the heauens well. Ber. Diues fooneft empt refembling spirits of light. O if in blacke my Ladies bowres be deck, It mountes, that painting vurping hairr Should falfi dorees with a faire adoration: And therefore is the borne to make blacke, faire. Her faviour turns the faffion of the dayes, For native bloud is countened painted now: And therefore red that would auoy difpraise, Paints it felle blacke,to imitate her brow. Dum. To look like her are Chimmy-sweepers blacke. Lou. And since her time, are Colliers counted bright. King. And A\bips of their fweet compli\ion crake. Dum. Dark needs no Candles now, for dar is light. Ber. You miftris date never come in raine, For feare their colours should be wafted away. Kin. 'Twere good yours did: for firt to tell you plaine, Ile finde a fairer face not waft to day. Ber. Ile proue her faire, or talke till dooms-day here. Kin. No Diuell will fliet thee then to mo much as fiere. Dum. I never knew man hold vile fluffe to deere. Lou. Looke,heer's thi loue, my foot and her face fee. Ber. Oile the streets were paued with thine eyes, Her
Her feet were much too dainty for such tread.

Dame. O vile, then as the goes what upward eyes? The street should fear a fine walk'd out a head.

Booker. What of this, is not all in love?

Ann. Nothing so fute, and thereby all forsworn. Then leave this chat, & good Serina now proue Our loving lawfull, and our faith not torne.

Dame. I marie there, some flattery for this cell.

Long. Some forsome author how to proceed 4 Some tricks, some quillery, how to cheat the diuell.

Dame. Some false for perijue.

Berr. O 'tis more then neede.

Hone of you then afections men at armes, Consider what you first did ware voor: To fail, to study, and to see no woman: Flat treat against the Kingsely state of youth.

Say, Can you fail? your romacks are too young: And abstinence enginser iades. And where that you have vow'd to frutic (Lords) In that each of you have forsworn his Book.

Can you still dreame and pore, and thericon looke. For when would you my Lord, or you, have found the ground of studies excellence, Without the beauty of a womans face;

From womans eyes this doctrine I derive, They are the Ground, the Books, the Academies, From whence doth spiring the true Prometheus fire.

Why, winterfall plodding payfons vp The nimble spirts in the arctices, As motion and long during sature eyes, The finnyou vigour of the trauailer.

Now for not looking on a women face, You haue in that forsworne the vis of eyes: And studie too, the caufet of your vow. For where is any Author in the world, Teaches such beauty as a womans eye: Learning is but a child's to our felle, And where we are, our Learning likewise is:

Then when our felues we fee in Ladies eyes, With our felues, Do we not likewise fee our learning there? Or we have made A vow to study, Lords, And in that vow we have forsworn our Books: For when would you (my Leon) or you, or you? In leaden contemplation have found out Such fury Numbers as the prompting eyes, Of beauties tutors have intich'd you with: Other flow. As Arts entirely keep the braine: And therefore finding banraine prattizers, Scare shew a harmes of their heady toyle.

But Loue first learned in a Ladies eye, Lites not alone emerid in the braine: But with the motion of all elements, Countes as swift as thought in every power, And gives to every power a double power, About their functions and their offices. It adds a precious seeing to the eye:

A Louers eyes will gace an Eagle blind.

A Louers care will hear the lowest sound. When the spurious head of theft is thopt. Louer seeing is more soft and lenitle. There are the tender bines of Cockled Noodles. Louers tongue prous dainty, Bacchus groffe in taste, For Valour, is not Loue a Hercules?

Still climbing trees in the Heppides.

Subtilis as Sphina, as sweet and mucifal;

As bright Apollo's Luce, shung with his hair. And when Loue seakes, the voyce of all the Gods. Make heaven drowsie with the harmonie. Never durft Poets sooth a pen to write, Vntill his lake were temped with Loues lightest.

O then his lines would raufh iusage eases, And plant in Tyrants mide humility. From womens eyes this doctrine I derive. They sparcle still the right promethean fire, They are the Bookes, the Arts, the Aclaedemes. That fhev, quante, and nourish all the world. Elle none at all in ought proues excellent. Then fooles you were these women to forsware:

Or keeping what is sworne, you will proue foolest. For Wildeomen fake, a word that all men loue: Or for Loues fake, a word that loues all men. Or for Mens fake, the author of these Women: Or Womens fake, by whom we men are Men.

Let's once loose our oaths to finde our felues, Or else we loose our felues, to keepe our oaths:

It is religion to be thus forsworne. For Charity is fellest in the Law; And who can feuer loue from Charity.

Kim. Saint Cupid then, and Soundsiers to the field.

Berr. Advance your standards, & vpon them Lords, Pell,mell,downe with them: but be first advit'd, In conflict that you get the Sunne of them.

Long. Now to plaine dealing. Lay these glozes by, Shall we not loose to wee these giutes of France?

Kim. And winne them too, therefore let vs deuife, Some entertainment for them in their Tents.

Berr. First from the Park let vs condue them thither, Then homeward every man attach the hand Of his faire Mistrefle, in the afternoone We will with some fitranges pastime solace them: Such as the shorttattes of the time can shape, For Reuel,Dances,Masles, and merry hours, Fore-ranfe hire Loue, fluwing her way with blouwes.

Kim. Away,away, no time shall be omitted, That will be time, and may by vs beffire?

Berr. Alone,alone fowled Cockell, resp'd no Corne, And Justice alwaies whirles in equall measure: Light Wouches my proue plaguies to men forsworne, Hic,our copper buyes no better creature.

Enter Bragart, Boy.

Curat. Vide me qui vitit?

Ped. Vide, & gaudio.

Brag. Chiara.

Ped. Quostra, Chira, nor Sira?

Brag. Men of peace well ineunced.

Ped. Moft millenaria fit salutation.

Boy. They haue bene at a great feast of Languages, and fhone the craps.

Cleon. O they haue list'd long on the almes-basket of words. I maruell they M. hath not eaten thee for a word, for thou art not fo long by the head as honorificabilitudinantis bus: Thou art easier swallowed then a fladragon.

Page. Peace, the peace begins.

Brag. Mouniter, if you are not lettered?

Page. Yes, yes, he reaches boyes the Horne-booke:

What is Ap feld backward with the horn on his head?

Ped. By genricia with a horse added.

Page. Baff most feily Shepe, with a horn: you hearde his learning.

Ped. Quis quia, thou Confonant?

Page. The last at the five Vowels if you Repeat them, or the fit if I.

Ped. I will repeat them: a e i.

Page. The Sheepe, the other two concludes it ou.

Brag. Now by the salt waue of the mediteranium, a sweet tutch, a quike ven we of wit, finp snap, quick and homstte rejoyceth my intellect, true wit.

Page. Offered by a child to an olde man: which is wise-old.

Ped. What is the figure? What is the figure?

Page. Horones.

Ped. Thou dippes like an Infant: goe whipp thy Gigge.

Page. Lend me your Horne to make one, and I will whipp about your Infinmous ommiscia a gigge of a Cuckolds horne.

Cleon. And I had but one penny in the world, thou shouldst haue it to buy Ginger bread: hold, there is the very Remuneration I had of thy Maffier, thou halfe penny pursue of wit, thou Pidgeon-egg of difterence. O & the heavens were fo pleased, that thou wert our Baffard; What a loyfull father wouldft thou make mee? Goe to, thou haft it ad dangat, at the fingers ends, as they say.

Ped. O hang falle Latin, dangble for ungram.

Brag. Artificemen preenmahat, we will bee fingled from the barbarous. Do you not educat youth at the Charg-bouse on the top of the Mountain?

Ped. Or Mow the hill.

Brag. At your sweet pleasure, for the Mountain.

Ped. I doe fay quaffion.

Brag. Sir, it is the Kings most sweet pleasure and affection, to congratulate the Princeffe at her Paulition, in the poffierion of this day, which the rude multitude call the after-noone.

Ped. The poffierion of the day, most generous sir, is liable, congruent, and measurable for the after-noone: the word is well cold, choie, sweet, and apt I doe affirm you, I doe assure.

Brag. Sir, the King is a noble Gentleman, and my familors, I doe affure ye very good friend: for what is inward betweene vs, let it paife. I doe beseech thee remember thy curtete. I befeech thee apparel thy head; and among other importunate & moft serious desigues, and of great import indeed too; but let that paife, for I must tell thee it will please his Grace (by the world) sometime to leave upon my poore shoulder, and with his roayl finger thus dallye with my excrement, with my mutchchie; but sweet heart let that paife. By the world I recount no fable, some certaine speciall honours it pleases his greatnesse to impart to Armado a Souldier, a man of trauell, that hath feene the world: but let that paife; the very all of all is: but sweet heart, I do implore leerece, that the King would hae mee prefent the Princeffe (sweet chucke) with some delightfull offentation, or show, or pageant, or antiche, or fire-woke: Now, vnderstanding that the Curate and your sweet selfe are good at such eceptions, and sodaine breeching out of myth (as it were) I have acquainted you withall, to the end to crave your affiftance.

Ped. Sir, you shall prefent before her the Nine Wor-thyes. Sir Holofræns, as concerning some entertainment of time, some show in the poffierion of this day, to be rendered by our affiftants the Kings commandes; and this moft gallant, illustre, and learned Gentleman, betwixt the Princeffe: I say none to ft as represent the Nine Wor-thies.

Curat. Where will you finde men worthy enough to prefent them?

Ped. Iofa, your fel'r:my selfe; and this gallant gentle- man Iulius Machabob; & Swayne (because of his great hone or royalt) shall paife Pompey the great, the Page Hercules.

Brag. Pardon sir, error: He is not quantifie enough for that. Worthes thumbe, hee is not fo big at the end of his Club.

Ped. Shall I haue audience? he shall prefent Hercules in minoritie: his enter and eft all be strangling a Snake; and I will haue an Apologie for that purpose.

Page. An excellent deuise: so if any of the audience hille, you may cry, Well done Hercules, now thou cru- sheet the Snake; that is the way to make an offence gracions, though fewe haue the grace to doe it.

Brag. For the rest of the Wor-thes?

Ped. I will play three my selfe.

Page. Think worthy Gentleman.

Brag. Shall I tell you a thing?

Ped. We attend.

Brag. We will haue, if this fadge not, an Antique. I befeech you follow.

Ped. Via good-man Dull, thou haft spoken no word all this while.

Dull. Nor understood none neither sir.

Ped. Alone, we will employ thee.

Dull. He make one in a dance, or fo: or I will play on

"Enter Ladies.

Qu. Sweet hearts we shall be rich ere we depart,

Light's come thus plentifully.

A Lady w'd about with Diamonds: Look you, what I have from the losing King.

Ref. Madam, came nothing else along with that?

Qu. Nothing but this: yes as much love in Banne,

As would be crum'd up in a sheet of paper.

Writ on both sides, the leafs margin all,

That he was faine to feele on Captiv'd name.

Ref. That was the way to make his god-head wax:

For he hath beene fuch thund and yeeres a Boy.

Kath. I, and a threded unhappy gallowes too.

Ref. You'll neer be friends with him, a kid your fitter.

Kath. He made her melancholy, sad, and heavy, and

So fhe died; had the beene Light like you, of fuch a merrie nimble ftring spirit, she might a Bin a Grandam ere she died, and so may you: For a light heart lies longer.

Ref. What sowe dark meaning moufe, of this light word?

Kath. A light condition in a beauty darke,

Ref. We need more light to finde your meaning out.

Kath. You'll marre the light by taking it in huffe:

Therefore Ile darkely end the argument.

Ref. I look what you do, you doe it ill fuch darke.

Kath. So done you, for you are a light Wench.

Ref. Indeed I laugh not you, and therefore light.

Kath. You laugh me not, O that's you can notforme.

Ref. Great reafon: for paft care, is full past care.

Qu. Well bandied both, a set of Wit well played.

But Relafine, you have a Favour too?

Who sent it? and what is it?

Ref. I would you knew

And if my face were but as faire as yours,

My Favour were as great, be wittene this.

Nay, I have Verffes too, I thanke "Berewne,

The numbers true, and were the numbering true.

I were the faireft goddeffe on the ground.

I am compar'd to two thousand fairies,

O he hath drowne my picture in his letter.

Qu. Any thing like?

Ref. Much in the letters, nothing in the praise.

Qu. Brauenteus as Incke: a good conclusion.

Kath. Faire as a text B in a Coppie booke.

Ref. What penfals. How? Let me not die your debtor,

My red Dominickall, my golden letter.

O that your face were full of Oes.

Qu. A Pox of that left, and I belittew all Showere.

But Katherine, what was fent to you

From faire Damasne?

Kath. Madame, this Glowe.

Qu. Did he not fend you twaine?

Kath. Yes Madame: and moreover,

Some thousand Verffes of a faithful Louer.

A huge translation of hypercicie,

Vilely compiled, profound simplicite.

Mar. This, and these Pearis, to me fent Lancumile.

The latter done long, by halfe a mile.

Qu. I think no leffe: Doft thou wish in heart

The Chaine were longer, and the Letter Short.

Mar. I for I would these hands might never part.

Qu. We are wife girls to mocke out Louers fo.

Ref. They are worse fools, to purchafe mocking so.

That fame Berewne ile torture ere I goe.

O that I knew he were but in by th'weeke,

How I would make him to tawne, and begge, and fecke,

And wait the feeon, and obferve the twigs,

And spend his prodigall wits in booteles times,

And shape his seruice wholly to my deuice,

And make him proud to make me proud that lefts.

So pertant like would I o'refly his state,

That he should be my foole, and I his face.

Qu. None are so fiercely caught, when they are catcht,

As Witt turn'd foole, folly in Wife docome hatch'd:

Hath widomens warrant, and the helpe of Schoole,

And Wits owne grace to grace a learned Foole?

Ref. The bloud of your burnes not with such excele,

As gruitties resolt to warriongs be.

Mar. Follie in Fools beares not to strong a place,

As foolfrey in the Wife, when Witt doth dote.

Since all the power thereof doth apply,

To prove by Witt, worth in simplicite.

Enter Boyes.

Qu. Heere comes Boyer, and mirth in his face.

Boy. O I am hab'd with laughter, Where 's her Grace?

Qu. Thy newes Boyer?

Boy. Prepare Madame,prepare.

Arme Wenches arme, in encounters mounted are,

Against your Peace, Lone doth approach, difguiz'd:

Armed in arguments, you'll be surpriz'd.

Mother your Witt, ifand in your owne defence,

Or hude your heads like Cowards, and flie hence.

Qu. Saint Dennis to S. Cupid: What are they that Charge their breath against vs ? Say founf Fay.

Boy. Vinder the voole shade of a Sarcomore,

I thought to clofe mine eyes some halfe an houre:

When lo to interruip my purpos'd refit,

Toward that fclide I might behold addref,

The King and his companions: waily

I ftole into a neighbourhood thickety,

And over-heard, what you fhall over-diere:

That by and by difguiz'd they will be heere.

Their Heralds a pretty knownsh Page:

That well by heart hath cont'd his embraffice,

A fiton and accent did they teach him thare,

Thus mutt thou speake, and thus thy body beare.

And cure and anon they made a doubt.

Preffe meattfull would put him out:

For quoth the King, an Angell fhall thou fee:

Yet fare not thou, but speake and audios.

The Boy reply'd, An Angell is not cruel,

I should have fear'd her, had the beene a demoll,

With that all laugh'd, and clap'd him on the shoulder,

Making the bold wagg by their praisis bolder.

One rub'd his elboe, and flet't, and I wotne,

A better speach was never fproke before.

Another with his finge and his thumb,

Cry'd via, we will doto, come what will come.

The third he euer'd and cried, All goes well.

The fourth turn'd on the toe, and dawne he fell.

With that they all did tumbte on the ground,

With fuch a zelous laughter fo profound,

That in this plicemte ridiculouz appearets,

To checke their folly passions tomeone terrors.

Qu. But what, but what, come they to visit us?

Boy. They do, they do; and are apparel'd thus,

Like Moftermate, or Mufitians, as I geffe.

Their purpose is to paraile, to court, and dance,
And every one his Louts-face will advance,
Vnto his severall Misrepresent, which they'll know
By favours severall, which they did before.
Queen. And will they for the Gallants shall be taks'd:
For Ladies; we will every one be mask'd,
And not a man of them shall have the grace
Delight of fute, to see a Ladies face.
Hold Rofaline, this Favour thou shalt wear,
And then the King will count thee for his Desere:
Hold, take thou that my sweet, and give me thine,
So shall Become take me for Rofaline.
And change your Favour too, to shoul your Loutes
Woo contrary, decy'd by them removers.
Rofa. Come on then, wear the favours most in fight.
Kath. But in this changing, What is your Intent?
Queen. The effect of my intent is to cross thee this:
They doe it but in mocking merriment,
And mocke for mocke is oynle my intent.
Their feteral counells they vnsubome fhall,
To Loutes mitlooke, and to be mockt within.
Upon the next occasion that we merce,
With Vifages displayed to talke and greeete.
Rofa. But shall we dance, if they defire so too?
Queene. No, to the death we will not move a foot,
Nor to their pen'd speech render we no grace.
But while'tis spoke, each turne away his face.
Why that contempt will keep the keener heart,
And quite divorce his memory from his part.
Queene. Therefore I doe it, and I make no doubt,
The reft will ere come in, if he be out.
Theres no fuch sport, as sport by sport otrethzone:
To make theirs ours, and ours none but our owne.
So fhall we itay mocking pretended game,
And they well mocke, depart away with blame. Sound.
Boy. The Trouter founds, be mastike, the maskers come.

Enter Black mooves with mascike, the Boy with a speech, and the reft of the Lords disfigured.

Page. All hale the reft of Beauties on the earth.
Berr. Beauties no richer then rich Taffata.
Page. A holy partell of the fairest dance that euer tourn'd their backes to mortal mear.
The Ladies turne their backes to him.
Berr. Their eyes will shine, their eyes,
Page. That ever tourn'd their eyes to mortal mear.
Out.
Berr. True, out indeed
Page. Out of your favours heemneely sprits wouchsafe
Not to be hold.
Berr. Once to behold, rogue.
Page. Once to behold with your Sworne beamed eyes,
With your Sworne beamed eyes.
Boy. They will not answer to that Epythire,
You were blest call it Daughter beamed eyes.
Page. They do not mark me, and that brings me our Peri. Is this your periecheffe the gone you rogue.
Rofa. What would these strangers?
Know their minds Peri.
If they doe frakke our language, 'tis our will
That fonde plaine man recount their purposes,
Know what they would?
Page. What would you with the Princes?
Berr. Nothing but peace, and gentle vifitation Rofa. Why that they haue, and bid them to be gon,
Boy. She fairs you haue it, and you may be gon.
Kwn. Say to her we have meafur'd many miles,
To read a Measure with you on the greafe.
Boy. They say that they haue meafur'd many a mile,
To read a Measure with you on this greafe.
Rofa. It is not so. Ask them how many inches
In one mile? If they haue meafur'd mante,
The meafure then of one is eafe told.
Boy. If to come hither, you haue meafur'd miles,
And many miles the Princeffe bids you tell,
How many inches doth fill vp one mile?
Berr. Tell her we meafure them by weary steps,
Boy. She heares her felle.
Rofa. How many meane steps,
Of many meane miles you haue once-gone,
Are numbred in the trauell of one mile?
Berr. We number nothing that we spend for you,
Our dutie is for rich, so infinite,
That we may doe it fyll without accompt.
Vouchsafe to fhew the funshine of your face,
That we (like fauages) may worship it.
Rofa. My face is but a Moone and clouded too,
Kim. Bleffed are clouds, to doe as such clouds doe,
Vouchsafe bright Moone, and thefe thy flefts to fhine,
(Those clouds removed, upon our waterie eye).
Rofa. O true petitioner, beg a greatter matter;
Thou now request us but Moonefhine in the water.
Kim. Then in our meafure, vouchsafe but one change.
Berr. bid me benge, this begging is not strange.
Rofa. Play masked then: may you must doe it lone.
Nor yet no dance: thus change like the Moone.
Kim. Will you not dance? How come you this enfranched?
Rofa. You r e o o k e the Moone at full, but now fcole's changed?
Kim. Yet full fte is the Moone, and the Man.
Rofa. The maskick playes, vouchsafe some motion to it.
Our eares vouchsafe it.
Kim. But your legsges should doe it.
Rofa. Since you are strangers, & come here by chance,
Whe then be nice, take hands, we will not dance.
Kim. Why take you hands then?
Rofa. Ouele to part friends.
Curttie sweethearts, and to the Measure ends.
Kim. More meafure of this meafure be not nice.
Rofa. We can afford no more at such a price.
Kim. Prife your pleaue: What bYLES your company?
Rofa. Your abience oucele.
Kim. That can never be.
Rofa. Then cannot we be bought and fo aduce,
Twice to your Vicor, and halle once to you,
If you doeende to dance, let's hold more chat.
Ref. In private then.
Kim. I am bell pleas'd with that.
Br. Who handed Miiftirs, the sweet word with thee.
Dn. Honse, and Milke, and Sugers there is three.
Berr. Nay then two engagements, if you grow fo nice Metheninge, Wort, and Malmife; well unne dice.
There's halle a dozen sweetes.
Dn. Seventh sweet adue, since you can cogg.
I'll play no more with you.
Berr. One word in secret.
Dn. Let it not be sweet.
Berr. Thou grea't it my gall.

Queen.
Loves Labour's Lost.

139

Qu. Gall, bitter.

Ber. Therefore meete.

Duo. Will you vouche safe with me to change a word?

Mar. Name it.

Duo. Fair Ladie.

Duo. Please it you,

As much in private, and I he bid adieu.

Mar. What, was your vizard made without a tong?

Long. I know the reason Lady why you ask.

Mar. O for your reason, quickly fit, I long.

Long. You have a double tongue within your mask.

And would afford my speechelle a wizard halle.

Mar. Vale quoth the Dutch-man: is not Vale a Calfe?

Long. A Calfe faire Ladie?

Mar. No, a faire Lord Calfe.

Long. Let's part the word.

Mar. No, ile not be your halfe.

Take all and weane it, it may preye an Oxe.

Long. Looke how you but your selfe in these sharpe mockes.

Wilt you give hornes chaft Ladie? Do not so.

Mar. Then die a Calfe before your horns do grow.

Lou. One word in private with you ere I die.

Mar. Blest foftly then, the Butcher heares you cry.

Boyet. The tongues of mocking wenchens are as keen

As is the Razors edge, insuffle:

Cutting a smaller hairt then may be seen,

About the fenfe of fence so sensible:

Sweepeth their conference, their conveys house wings,

Flies then arrows, bullers wind, thought, flys things

Rofa. Not one word more my maidens, breake off, breake off.

Ber. By heauen, all drie beaten with pure mife.

King. Farewell madame Wenchens, you have simpyle wits.

Euen.

Qu. Twente adius my frozen Muscouits.

Are the the breed of wits so wondrou?

Boyet. Tapers they are, with your sweete breathes puff out.

Rofa. Wel-ling kis wits they haste, greffe, greffe, fat, fat.

Qu. O poueris in wits, Kingly poor flour.

Will they not (thynke you) hang themselfes to right?

Or bored but in vizards their faces frow.

This pert Beroune was out of conreance quite,

Rofa. They were all in lamentable cafes.

The King was vewing time for a good word,

Qu. Beroune did scarce himselfe out of all foute.

Mar. Dammame was at my service, and his howd:

No poins (quoth I) my servant straites was mute.

K. Lord Longwill said I came ore his harte:

And howe you what he call dme?

Qu. Quslime perhaps.

K. Yes in good faith.

Qu. Go sickes as thou art.

Rofa. Well better wits haue worn plain stature caps,

But will you heare; the King is my ioue sworne.

Qu. And quicke Beroune hath plighted faith to me.

Kai. And Longwill was for my servante borne.

Mar. Dammame is mine as sure as barks on tree.

Boyet. Madam, and prettie misreftes giue care,

Immediately they will againe be here.

In their owne shapes: for it can neuer be,

They will digge this haftfl indignite.

Qu. Will they returne?

Boyet. They will they will, God knowes,

And leap for ioy, though they are lame with blowes:

Therefore change Pauours, and when they repair,

Blow like sweet Rofes, in this summer aire.

Qu. How blow? how blow? Speaket bee under stood.

Boyet. Faire Ladies maskes,are Rofes in their bud:

Dismaskt, their damase sweet conmixture blowne,

Are Angels vailing clouds, or Rofes blowne.

Qu. Auant perplexite: What thali we do,

If they returne in their owne shapes to war.

Rofa. Good Madam, if by me you be advisd,

Let's mount the hill as well knowne as dilig'd:

Let vs complaine to them what foolees were here,

Dilig'd like Muscouits in shapelefe grace:

And wonder what they were, and to what end

Their shallow blowes, and prologue wildely pen'd:

And their rough carriage so ridiculous,

Should be presented at our Tent to vs.

Boyet. Ladys, withdrawe the gallantes are at hand.

Quar. Whip to our Tents, as Rooses rumes ore Land.

Enter the King and the rest.

King. Faire sir, God faue you. Where's the Princesse?

Boyet. Gone to her Tent.

Please it your Maiestie command me any lertuke to her?

King. That the vouche safe me audience for one word.

Boyet. I will, and I will the, I know my Lord. Exit.

Ber. This fellow pickes vp wit as Pigeons peale,

And vrites it againe, when Ione doth pleaze.

He is Wits Pedder, and retails his Wares,

At Wakes, and Waffals, Meetings, Markets, Faires.

And we that fell by greffe, tie Lord dooth know,

Hawe not the grace to grace it with such low.

This Gallaxx puts the Wenches on his fleece.

Had he bin Adam, he had tempted Eve.

He can carte too, and hispe: Whay this is he,

That kifft away his hand in courtesie.

This is the Apo of Pome, Monteur the riche,

That when he plaiers at Tables, chides the Dice

Inhonoraball teares; Nay he can sing

A meane mold mealy, and in Vhirtuig

In honer of whom he can: the Ladys call him sweete.

The fairest as he treads on them kille his feet.

This is the flower that smiles on euerie one,

To thaw his teeth as white as Whales bone.

And confidencies that wil not die in debs,

Pay him the dutie of honte-tongued Boyet.

King. A blifter on his sweet tongue with my hart,

That put Armadoes Page out of his part.

Enter the Ladies.

Ber. See where it comes. Behauint what we'th thou,

Till this madman thew'd thee? And what art thou then?

King. All haile sweet Madame, and faire time of day,

Qu. Fare in all Haile is foule, as I conceiue.

King. Confrue my speaches better, if you may.

Qu. Then with me better, I will give you leave.

King. We came to visit you, and purpose gow

To leade you to our Court, vouche safe it then.

Qu. This field that holde me, and so hold your vow:

Nor God, nor I, delights in pericul'd men.

King. Rebuke me not for that which you proueke:

The
The verity of your eye must break my oath.

_2. You nickavome veruci; vice you should have spoke:

For veruci office never breaks men truth.

Now by my maiden honor, yet as pure

As the unchild Lady, I protest,

A world of ormons though I should endure,

I would not yield to be your house guete:

So much I hate a breaking cause to be

Of heavenly oaths, yow dwch with integre.

_Lady. You have liud in declamation heere,

Vndeene, unmit, much to our shame.

_Quin. Not to my Lord, it is not so I sweare,

We haue had pashmes heere, and plesant game,

A meffe of Russians left vs but of late,

_Clerk. How Madam? Russians?

_Quin. I in truth, my Lord.

_Tim. Gallants, full of Courtship and of base.

_Lady. Madam speake true. It is not to my Lord:

My Ladie (to the manner of the dates)

In curreste gues unde tarrning praste.

_We foure indeed confronted were with foure

In Russias habit: Heere they stayed an hour,

And call'd space: and in that house (my Lord)

They did not bleeve vs with one happy word.

_I dare not call them foules; but this I thinkke,

When they are thrulle, foules would fam/neu hauke drinke.

_This letts is drue to me, Gentle Sir,

Your wits makes wife things foolish when we greete

With eies best seeming, heauens fierie ets:

By light we loose lighe; your capacite

Is of that nature, that to your huge floore,

Wife things seeme foolish, and rich things but poore.

_What this proues you wife and rich: rot in my eie

_Ber. I am a foule, and full of poueresse.

_What but that you take what dont to you beleeing,

It were a fault to match words from my tongue.

_O, I am yours and all that I posse,

_What all the foule nine.

_Ber. I cannot give you leesse.

_What which of the Wizards what it that you wore?

_Ber. Where? when? What Wizard?

Why demand you this?

_What there, then, that wizard, that superfuisous cafe,

That hid the worle, and flewe the like creature.

_Were we drie fer, They are a wall to knowe on sight.

_Du. Let vs confesse and turne it to a ieth.

_What a God did your Late?

_Hauke your Highnes faide?

_What Helpe hold his bowes, fee I found it: why looke you pale?

_Sea-tike I thimpe comming from Mufcouie.

_Ber. Thus poure the flats down plaipes for peritry.

Can any face of brass hold longer out?

_Here stand 1 Ladie that thy skil is none,

_Briue me with scorne, confound me with a flour.

_Thrust thy sharpe wound through my ignorance.

Cut me to pices with thy keen conceite:

And I will with thee never more to dance,

Nor never more in Russias habit waste,

Nor ever will I truff to speeche pen'd,

Nor to the motion of a Schoole boxe tongue.

Nor never come in wizard to my friend,

Nor never come to thy lips like a bloud-harpes tongue,

Taste thy phaer, stolen teares precie,

Three-in-4 Hyperboles, spruce affection;

Figures pedanticall, these sumner flies,

_Have blowne me full of maggot ostentation.

_I do forswear them, and I hiee protte,

By this white Gloue (how white the hand God knows)

_Henceforth my weing minde shall be expresse

In ruflet yee, and honest kerrie woe.

And to begin Wrench, to God hepe me iau,

_My lone to thys foue blocke the cracks of flaw.

_Rafha. San, sant, I pray you.

_Ber. Yet I have a tricke

Of the old rage: beare with me, I am scharke.

_He leaueth by degrees: soft, let vs see,

Write Lord was meric on my, on thosethree,

_They are infected, in their hearts it lies:

_They hauze the pawge, and caught is of your eyes:

_These Lords are witcht, you are not fre.

For the Lords tokens on you do I fee.

_Quin. No, they are free that gave their tokens to vs.

_What our fates are forfret, feene not to vnde.

_What is it not for: for how can this be true,

_That you stand forfret, being those that sue.

_Ber. Peace, for I will not hauze to do with you.

_Esop. Nor shal not, if I do as I intend.

_Ber. Spake for your felues, my wit is at an end.

_King. Teach vs, sweeete Madame, for oure rude tras.

_grefion, some faire excuse.

_Quin. This faire is confusion.

_Were you not here but even now, disguid?

_Lord, Madam, I was.

_Quin. And were you well advis'd.

_King. I was faire Madam.

_Quin. When you then were here,

_What did you whisper in your Ladies ear?

_King. That more then all the world I did respech't her.

_Quin. When fhee shall challenge this, you will reiect her.

_King. Verus honoro Honor nob.

_Peace, peace, trothes,

_your oath once broke, you serce not to forswear.

_King. Defipe me when I brake this oath of mine.

_Quin. I will, and therefore keepe it. Reyulme,

_What did the Russian whisper in your ear?

_Rafha. Madam, he swore that he did hold me deare

_King. What meanes you Madame?

_By my life, my troth,

_I never frowe this Ladi euē such an oth.

_What by heauen you did; and to confirme it plain,

You gave me this: but take it for again.

_King. My faith and this, the Princeff I did give,

_I knew her by this Jewell on her fleace.

_Pardon me fr, this Jewell did the weare,

_Last but love (I thaine him) is my deare.

_What? will you have me, or your Pearle again?

_Neither of either, I remit both waine,

_I fea the tricke on't: here was a confent,

Now to our purpose, to add more terror,
We are again forewarned in will and error.
Much upon this tis and might not you
Foretell our sperte, to make us thus venture?
Do not you know my Ladies foot by th'feuer?
And laugh upon the apple of her eye?
And stand between her backe fir, and the fire,
Holding a trencher, jelling merrile.
You put our Page out: go, you are sowed.
Die when you will, a simocke shall be your thowrd.
You leere upon me, do you? There's an eie
Wounds like a Læden sword.

By. Full merrily hath this brasse manager, this careere bene run.
Ber. Loes, he is tilting straight. Peace, I have don.

Enter Clowne.

Welcome pure wit, thou partl a false tray.
Clo. O Lord, fir, they would know,
Whether the three worthless shall come in or no.
Ber. What, there are but three? Clo.No fir, but it is vast fine.
For certe one parties thrice.

Ber. And three times thrice is nine.
Clo. Not so fir, under correction fir, I hope it is not so.
You cannot beg y'as fir, I can affure you fir, we know what we know: I hope fir three times thrice fir.
Ber. It is ninth.

Clo. Under correction fir, wee know where, vertill it doth amount.

Bar. By Iuse, I always tooke three threes for nine.
Clo. O Lord, fir, it were pitty you should get your living by reckining fir.
Ber. How much is it?

Clo. O Lord fir, the parties themselves, the actors fir will know where, vertill it doth amount; for mine owne part, I am (as they say, but to perfect one man in one poor man) Pompey the great fir.

Ber. Art thou one of the Wortheies?

Clo. I pleaded them to think me worthie of Pompey the great, for mine owne part, I know not the degree of the Worthie, but I am fland for him.

Ber. Go, bid them prepare.

Clo. We will turn it finely off, we will take some care.
King. Berowne, they will shame vs:
Let them not approach.

Ber. We are flame-proofoe my Lord: and 'tis some policie, to have one shew worse then the Kings and his companie.

Kim. I say they shall not come.

Bar. Nay my good Lord, let me ore-rule you now; That sperte bell pleates, that doth deft know how. Where Zetle strives to content, and the contents Dits in the Zetle of that which it pretents: Their forme confounded, makes most forme in mirth, When great thins labouring perish in their birth.

Ber. A right description of our sperte my Lord,

Enter Braggars.

Brax. Annoyed, I implore to much exence of thy royall sweet breath, as will utter a brace of words.

Bar. Dost this man ferue God?

Ber. Why ask you?

Bar. He speakes not like a man of God's making.

Brax. That's all one my faire sweet home. Monsieur,
For I protest, the Schoolmaster is exceeding fantastical:
Too too vaine, too too vaine. But we will put it (as they say) to Fortune delaguer, I wish you the peace of mine moft royall suppleme.

Kim. Here is like to be a good presence of Worthies;
He presents Herve of Troy, The Swaine Pompey's great, the Parifie Curate Alexander, Armado Page Hercules, the Pedant Indas Macholoon: And if these foure Wor-thies in their first shew thrive, these foure will change habites, and pretend the other fue.

Ber. There is fle in the first shew.

Kim. You are decieved, its not so.

Ber. The Pedant, the Braggart, the Hodge-Priest, the Poole, and the Boy,
Abate throw at Nowam, and the whole world againe, Cannot pricke out fure fuch, take each one in's vaine,
Kim. The ship is under faile, and here the cons remain.

Enter Pompey.

Clo. I Pompey am.

Ber. You he, you are not he.

Clo. I Pompey am.

Ber. With Libbards head on knee.

Ber. Well paid old mucker,
I must needs be friends with the

Clo. I Pompey am, Pompey.jung; and the big.

Du. The great.

Clo. It is great fir, Pompey.fir; and the great:
That oft in field, with Targe and Shield,
did make my face to shew;
And in traving along this coast, I here am come by chance,
And lay my Arms before the legs of this sweet Lisse of France.

If your Ladyship would say thankes Pompey, I had done.

La. Great thankes great Pompey.

Clo. Tis not so much worth: but I hope I was perfect. I made a little fault in great,

Ber. My hat to a halfe-pence, Pompey provoues the bell Worthie.

* Enter Curate for Alexander.

Covat. When in the world I live'd, I was the world's Commander:

By Enf. West, North & South, I freed my conquering might.
My Sonchonplain declares that I am Alisander.

Ber. Your nose fays no, you are not:
For it stands too right.

Ber. Your nose smels no, in this most tender smeling

Knight.

Clo. The Conqueror is dismaid:

Procede good Alexander.

Covat. When in the world I lived, I was the world's Commander.

Ber. Most true, 'tis right: you were so Alisander.

Bar. Pompey the great.

Clo. your entertant and Coffard.

Ber. Take away the Conqueror, take away Alisander.

Clo. O sir, you have overthrown Alisander the conqueror: you will be scar'd out of the painted cloth for, this: your Lion that holds his Pollax sitting on a close thistle, will be given to Ajax. He will be the ninth worthie. A Conqueror, and afraid to speak? Run me away for shame Alcander. There is no shall please you: a foo-lash milde man, an honest man, take you, & soon shall.
He is a most agreeable good neighbour insooth, and a ver-ry good Bowler, but for Alcander, alas you see, how 'tis a little ore-parted. But there are Worthy s cemning, will speak their mind in some other fort. Exit Cus.

Que. Stand aside good Pompey.

Enter Pedant for Judas, and the Boy for Hercules.

Ped. Great Hercules is presented by this Impe,
Whole Club kid'd Cerberus that three-headed C autonomous,
And when he was a baby, a child, a trifermpe,
Thus did he slange Serpentis in his Auctor:
Quamem, he seemed in minoriterie,
Ergo, I come with this Apologue.
Keep some flat in thy ear, and vanish. Exit Boy
Ped. Judas Iam.

Dum. A Judas?

Ped. Not Hearest sir.

Iudas I am occupiđ Machtobus,

Dum. Iudas Machtobus clip, is plain Iudas.

Ber. A kising traitor. How art thou proud Iudas?

Ped. Iudas Iam.

Dum. The more shame for you Iudas.

Ped. What meanes you sir?

Ber. To make Iudas hang himself.

Ped. Begin sir, you are my elder.

Ber. Well follow'd, Iudas was hang'd on an Elder.

Ped. I will not be put out of countenance.

Ber. Because thou hast no taste.

Ped. What is this?

Boi. A Citterine head.

Dum. The head of a bodkin.

Ber. A deaths face in a ring.

Lon. The face of an old Roman coin, scarce scene.

Boi. The pummell of Lysander Faulcon.

Dum. The cara a bone face on a Flaske.

Ber. 5. George's halfe cheeke in a brooch.

Dum. 1. And in a brooch of Lend.

Ped. 1, and women in the cap of a Tooth-drawer.

And now forward, for we have put thee in countenance.

Ped. You have put me out of countenance.

Ber. Falfe, we have given thee faces.

Ped. But you have out-fac'd them all.

Ber. And thou wert a Lion, we would do so.

Be. Therefore as he is, an Aste, let him go;
And so adieu sweet Jude. Nay, why doth thou stay?

Dum. For the latter end of his name.

Ber. For the Aste to the Jude: gie it him, Jude as-away.

Ped. This is not generous, not gentle, not humble.

Boy. A light for monfieur Iudas, it growes darke, he may humble.

Que. Alas poore Machtobus, how hath thee beene bailed.

Enter Braggart.

Ber. Hide thy head A Achille, here comes Hector in Armes.

Dum. Though my mockes come in by me, I will now be merry.

King. Hector was but a Trojan in respect of this.

Bai. But is this Hector?

Kim. I thinke Hector was not so deane timber'd.

Lon. His legge is too big for Hector.

Dum. More Calfe certain.

Ber. No, he is best indued in the small.

Ber. This cannot be Hector.

Dum. He's a God or a Painter, for he makes faces.

Bragg. The Atrimpant Mars of Lances the almighty, gave Hector a gift.

Dum. A gift Nutmegge.

Ber. A Lemmon.

Lon. Stucke with Cloures.

Dum. No cloues.

Bragg. The Atrimpant Mars of Lances the almighty,
Gave Hector a gift, the brie of Alcion.
A man so breathed, that certain he would fight: ye
Fray from norms till night, out of his Pavilion.
I am that Flower.

Dum. That Mint.

Lon. That Cullambine.

Bragg. Sweet Lord Long and stein thy tongue.

Lon. I must rather give it the reigne: for it runnes a great Hicter.

Dum. 1, and Hector's a Grey-hound.

Bragg. The Sweeter War-Man is dead and rotten,
Sweet chuckees, beat not the bones of the buried:
But I will forward with my decease;
Sweet Royaltie befow on me the fence of hearing.

Become gentlemen forth.

Cle. Speak we brave Hector, we are much delighted.

Bragg. I do adore thy sweet Graces slippers.

Boy. Loves her by the foot.

Dum. He may not by the yard.

Bragg. This Hector fare forsworn Hannibal,
The parte is gone.

Cle. Fellow Hector, she is gone; she is two months on her way.

Bragg. What meanest thou?

Cle. Faith unlesse you play the honest Troyan, the poore Wench is call away: she's quick, the child brags in her belly already: tis yours.

Bragg. Do not thou inforrmize me among Potemates?
Thou shalt die.

Cle. Then shall Hector be whipt for Lacontessa that is quicke by him, and hang'd for Pompey, that is dead by him.

Dum. Most rare Pompey.

Ber. Renowned Pompey.

Ber. Greater then great, great, great, great Pompey:
Pompey the huge.

Dum. Hector trembles.

Ber. Pompey is moused, more Ates more Ates flire them, or fiire them on.

Dum. Hector will challenge him.

Ber. If a' have no more mans blood in his belly, then will I stop a Flea.

Bragg. By the North-pole I do challenge thee.

Cle. I will not fight with a pole like a Northern man;
Ile slath, he doth by the sword: I pray you let mee borrow my ARMes again.

Dum. Roomes for the incensed Worthies.

Cle. Ie do it in my fiirt.

Dum. Most resolute Pompey.

Page. Master, let me take you a button hole lowerer:
Do you not see Pompey is vexing for the combat: what

Loves Labour's lost.

Plough for her sweet love three years. But most esteemed, great and free, will you hear the Dialogue that the two Learned men have compiled. In praise of the Owle and the Cuckow! It should have followed in the end of our play.

Ken. Call them forth quickly, we will do so.

Brag. Holla, Approach.

Enter all.

This side is Summer, Winter.

This Ver, the Spring: the one maintained by the Owle, the other by the Cuckow.

Ver. begin.

The Song.

When Daffies pied, and Violets blew
And Cuckow-buds of yellow hue:
And Ladies-smockes all silver white,
Do paint the Medowes with delight.

The Cuckow then on euerie tree,
Mockes married men, for thus fings he,
Cuckow.

Cuckow, Cuckow! O word of care,
Unpleasing to a married care.

When Shepheardes pipe on Oaten strawes,
And merrie Lasses are Ploughmastes clockes:
When Turtles tread, and Rookes and Dawes,
And Maidens bleach their summer smockes:

The Cuckow then on euerie tree
Mockes married men; for thus fings he,
Cuckow.

Cuckow, Cuckow! O word of care,
Unpleasing to a married care.

Winter.

When lundles hang by the wall,
And Dicke the Shepheard blowes his snale;
And Tom bestres Logges into the hall,
And Milke comes froome home in pale:

When blood is nipt, and wates be lowle,
Then noughty fings the flaring Owle
Tu-whit to-who.

A merrie note,
While greasse alone doth keele the pot.

When all aloud the winde doth blow,
And coffing drownes the Parson saw;
And birds fit brooding in the lowle,
And Marriess neere lookes red and raw;

When seafted Crabs huffe in the lowle,
Then nightly fings the flaring Owle,
Tu-whit to who:

A merrie note,
While greasse alone doth keele the pot.

Brag. The Words of Mercurie,
Are hard after the songs of Apollo:

You that way; we this way.

Enter Theseus, Hippolita, with others.

Theseus.

O my fair Hippolita, our nuptiall houre
Drawes on apace: fourre happy daies bring in Another Moon: but oh, me thinkes, how slow
This old Moon wanes: she lingers my desires
Like to a Step-dame, or a Dowager,
Long withering out a yong mans reuenue.
Hippolita, Fourre daies will quickly steep the elues in nights
Fourre nights will quickly dance away the tyme:
And then the Moon, like to a fuller bow,
Now bent in heaven, shall behold the night
Of our solemnities.

The. Go Philostrate,
Stirre vp the Athenian youth to merriments,
Awake the pert and nimble Spirit of mirth,
Turne melancholy Staph to Funerals:
The pale companion is not for our pomp,
Hippolita, I wo'd thee with my sword,
And wonne thy love, doing thee injuries:
But I will wed thee in another key,
With pompes, with triumph, and with reciting.

Enter Egeus and his daughter Hermia, Lysander, and Demetrius.

Ege. Happy be Theseus, our renowned Duke.

The. Thanks good Egeus: what's the news with thee ?

Ege. Full of vexation, come I, with complaint Against my child, my daughter Hermia.

Stand forth Lysander.

My Noble Lord,
This man hath my consent to marrie her.

Stand forth Lysander.

And my gracious Duke,
This man hath bewitch'd the bosome of my child:
Thou, thou Lysander, thou hast given her rings,
And interchang'd love tokenes with my child:
Thou haft by Moone-light at her window sung,
With faining voice, verses of loving loue,
And rofte the impression of her favrifies.

With bracelets of thy hair; rings, gawdes, concretis,
Knacks, trilles, Nose-glasses, sweet meats(mellengers
Of strong preuailment in unhardened youth).

With cunning haft thou fitch'd my daughters heart,
Turn'd her obedience (which is due to me)
To fubbortne harthife. And my gracious Duke,
Best in the will not here before your Grace,
Committ to marrige with Demetrius,
I beg the ancient priviledge of Athens;
As she is mine, I may dispose of her;
Which shall be either to this Gentleman,
Or to her death, according to our Law,
Immediately pronounced in that case.

The. What say you Hermia? be aduant faire Maide
To you your Father should be as a God;
One that composes your beauties: ye and ye
To whom you are but as a forme in waxe
By him imprimit: and within his power,
To leave the figure, or disfigure it:
Demetrius is a worthy Gentleman,

Herm. So is Lysander.

The. In him felfe he is,
But in this kind, wanting your father's voyce.
The other must be held the worther.

Herm. I would my father lock'd but with my eyes.

The. Rather your eyes must with his judgment look.

Herm. I do entreat your Grace to pardon me,
I know not by what power I am made bold,
Not how it may concern my noble father
In such a prouince beare to pleade my thoughts:
But I believe your Grace, that I may know
The worst that may befall me in this case,
If I refuse to wed Demetrius.

The. Either to dye the death, or to obliue
For enter the society of men.
Therefore faire Hermia question your desires,
Know of your youth, examine well your blood,
Whether (if you yeeld not to your fathers choice)
You can endure the losse of a Noble,
For you are to be in flinde Cloister men'd,
To live a barren liffe all your life,
Chantinge faint hymmes to the cold foule Moone,
Thrice blested they that matter to their blood,
To undergo such maiden pilgrimage,
But earthlike happy is the Roife diuid'd,
Then that which withereth on the virgin thome,
Growes,blues, and dies, in fingle blestnesse.

Herm.
Swift as a shadow, short as any dream,
Briefe as the lightning in the collied night.
That (in a sp bree) vnoolds both heaven and earth;
And ere a man hath power to say, behold,
The iaws of darknefe do deuoure it vp:
So quicke bright things come to confusion.

Her. If then true Lovers have beene euer croft,
It standes as an edict in definite:
Then let us teach our triall patience,
Because it is a custome to croft.

As due to lout, as thoughts, and dreames, and sigles,
Wishes and tares; poor Fancies followers.

Lyf. A good perfection; therefore hear me Herma,
I have a Widdow Aunts, a dowager,
Of great reuerence, and the hath no childe,
From Athens is her house remou'd seven leagues,
And the reflects me, as her only toome:
There gentle Herma, may I marie thee,
And to that place, the sharpe Athenian Law
Cannot pursu'e vs. If thou loue me, then
Steele forth thy fathers houfe to morrow night:
And in the wood, a league without the towne,
(Where I did mee thee once with Helena,
To do obeisance for a morn of May)
There will I stay for thee.

Her. My good Lyfander,
I wessre to thee, by Cupids strongest bow,
By his left arrou with the golden head.
By the simipetie of Venus Doues,
By that which knotted foules, and proper loue,
And by that fire which burn'd the Carthose Quene.
When the faile Tynard vnnder faile was feece,
By all the vowes that euer men haue broke,
(In number more then euer womans spake
In that fame place thou haft appointed me,
To morrow truly will I mee with thee.

Lyf. Keepe promisie lousc, looke here comes Helena.

Enter Helena.

Her. God speede faire Helena, whither away?
Hel. Call you me faire? that faire againe may Demetrius loues you faire: O happer faire!
Your eyes are loadfastes; and your tongue sweet ayre
More unese then Larke to the shephards ear.
When wheats is green, when hauhorne buds appeare.
Sicknesse is catching: O were fauer so,
Your words I catche, faire Herma I go.
My eare should catch your voice, my eye, your eye.
My tongue should catch your tongues sweet melodie.
Were the world mine Demetrius being bare.
The refle Queue to be you tranfu'd.
O teach me how you looke, and with what art
you swaye the motion of Demetrius hart.
Her. I frowne vpon him, yet he loues me still.
Hel. O that your frownes would teach my friendes such skill.
Her. I glie him curses, yet he gives me lour.
Hel. O that my prayers could such affection moue.
Her. The more I hate, the more he follows mee.
Hel. The more I love, the more he hatred mee.
Hel. His folly Helena is none of mine.
Hel. None but your beauty, would that fault were mine
Hel. Take comfort: he no more shall see my face,
Lyfander and my selfe will thet this place.
Before the time I did Lyfander fee,
Seem'd Athens like a Paradis to mee.

I. i. 79—205
O then, what graces in my Loue do dwell,
That he hath turn'd a heaven into hell.

Lyf. Helen, so you our minds we will unfold,
To morrow night, when Phace doth behold
Her flower white in the watry glass,
Dancing with liquid pearly, the blaz'd graze
(A time that Loues flight doth fill conceale)
Through Athens gates, haue we deuis'd to fleate.

Her. And in the wood, where often you and I,
Upon faint Primrose beds, were wont to lye,
Emptyeing our botumse, of their counsell I weld:
There my Lyfander, and my selfe shall meeete,
And thence from Athens turne away our eyes
To seek new friends and strange companions,
Farwell sweet play-fellow, pray thou for vs,
And good lucke grant che thy Demetrius.

Kepe word Lyfander we must floure our fight,
From louers foode, till morrow deep midnight.

Exit Herma.

Lyf. I will my Hermia, Helena adieu,
As you on him Demetrius doth on you. Exit Lyfander.

Her. How happy some, oer other some can be!
Through Athens am I thought so faire as she.
But what of that? Demetrius thinke not so:
He will not know, what all, but he doth know,
And as he erres, dotting on Hermias eyes;
So I, admiring of his qualities:
Things bate and wilde, holding no quantite.
Loue can transforme to forms and dignite.
Loue lookes not with the eyes, but with the minde,
And therefore is wing'd Cop'id painted blinde.

Now hath loues mind of any judgement safe:
Wings and no eyes, figure, whiche dyde sake.
And therefore is Loue said to be a childle,
Because in choife he is often beguil'd,
As waggish boyes in game theneselfes forwarc.
So the boy Loue is pier'd euery where.
For ere Demetrius lookt on Hermia's eye,
He held the dowe oathes that he was only mine.
And when this Halle some heare from Hermias foot,
So he diffus'd, and floweres of oaths did melt,
I will goe tell him of faire Hermia's flight:
Then to the wood he will, to morrow night.
Pursue her; and for his intelligence,
If I haue thankes, it is a deere expence:
But herein mean't I to enrich my paine.
To haue his fight thinder, and backe againe.
Exit.

Enter Quince the Carpenter, Snug the Joiner, Bottom the Weaver, Elise the bellowes-mender, Snout the Tinker, and Starveling the Taylor.

Quin. Is all our company here?
Bar. You were best to call them generally, man by man, according to the scipt.

Quin. Here is the fronte of every mans name, which is thought fit through all Athens, to play in our Enterlude before the Duke and the Dutchess, on his wedding day at night.

Bar. First, good Peter Quince, say what the play treats on: then read the names of the Actors: and so grow on to a point.

Quin. Marry our play is the most lamentable Comedy, and most cruel death of Pyramus and Thisbe.

Bar. A very good piece of worke I assure you, and a
A Midsummer night's Dream

Enter a Fairie at one door, and Robin good fellow at another.

Rob. How now spirit, whether wander you? Fair. Ouer hill, ouer dale, through bush, through briar, Ouer parke, ouer pale, through flood, through fire, I do wander euere where, twisser then 5 Moons sphere; And I herne the Fairy Queen to draw her orbs upon the The Cow lips tall, her pensioners bee, In their gold coats, spots you see, Thole be Rubies, Fairie tuors, In those freckles, like their favors, I must go seake some dew drops here, And hang a pearle in euery cowlips ear. Farewell thou Lob of spirits, lit be gon, Our Queene and all her Elues come here anon. Rob. The King doth kepe his Reuelers here to night, Take heed the Queene come not within his sight, For Oberon is paiting fell and wrath,- Because that he, as her attendant, hath A lonely boy stolne from an Indian King, She neuer had so sweet a changeling, And jealous Oberon would have the childe Knight of his traine, to trace the Forrefts wilde. But the (performe) with holds the loued boy, Crowne him with flowers, and makes him all her toy, And no w they neuer meete in groue, or greene, By fountaine cleere, or spangled star-light sheene, But they do squere, that all their Elues for fear Creep into Asome cups and hide themselves. Fair. Either I mistake your shape and making quite, Or else you are that firew'd and knauffe spirit Calf Robin Good-fellow. Are you not hee, That lightes the maides of the Valagare, Skim milke, and sometimes labour in the querne, And bootstrap make the breathlesse hufwite cheme, And sometime make the drinke to beare no barne, Misleade night-wanderers, laughing at their harme, Those that Hobgoblin call you, and sweet Pucke, You do then worke, and they shall hau good lucke. Are not you hee? Rob. Thou speak'st right; I am that merrie wanderer of the night: I left to Oberon, and make him smile, When I a fast and beane-fed horse beguile, Neiging in likenesse of a flyly soile, And sometime lurke I in a Golgips bole, In very likenesse of a rosted crab: And when the drinke, against her lips I bob, And on her withered dewlop poure the Ale. The wifeft Aunt telling the faddest tale, Sometime for three-footed stooles, miftake me, Then flip I from her bum, downe topples fite, And taillour cries, and falls into a coffe. And then the whole quire hold their hips, and loffe, And waxen in their mirth, and neeze, and swears, A merrier house was never waitfed there. But roomie Fairy, hearre comes Oberon. Fair. And heere my Mistys! Would that he were gone.

Enter the King of Fairies at one doore with his strane, and the Queene at another with hers.

Ob. Ill met by Moone-light, Proud Tystania.

Que. What, jealous Oberon? Fairy skip hense. I have forsworne his bed and companie. Ob. Terriesth Wanpton; am I not thy Lord? Que. Then I must be thy Lady: but I know When thou wast stolne away from Fairy Land, And in the shape of Corn, late all day, Playing on pipes of Corne, and verting louse To amorous Phylida. Why art thou here Comme from the farthest stepe of India? But that forsooth the bouncing Amanzon Your buskin'd Mistreffe, and your Warrior louse To Thesue must be Wedded; and you come, To give their bed iooy and prosperite. Ob. How canst thou thus for Thomas Tystania, Glance at my credite, with Hippolata? Knowing I know why thou loose to Tystania Dusht thou not leade him through the glimmering night From Perseoginia, whom he raffided? And make him vish faire Eagles breake his faith With Arodus, and Atiosia.

Que. These are the forgeries of jealousy, And never since the middle Summers spring Met vve on hill, in dale, forrest, or mead, By paunt fountaine, or by ruffe brooke, Or in the beached margent of the sea, To dance our ringless to the whiffling Winde, But vish thy brays shoult disturb d'our sport. Therefore the Winde, piping to vs in vaine, As in vengeu, haues fluck'd d'v from the sea Contagious logges: Which falling in the Land, Hath erie pettie Ryder made so proud, That they have ouer-borne their Continents. The Ox hath therefore frett'd his yoke in vaine, The Ploughman loft his sweet, and the greene Corne Hath rotted; ere his youth attacd d's beard; The fold stands empty in the drowes edfield, And Crowes are fasted vith the murrion flocke.

A Midsummer night's Dreame.

The nine mens Morris is fild vp with nard,
And the quint Mazes in the wanton green,
For lacke of treatal are vadiungufable.
The humane mortals want their winter heare,
No night is now with lyme or carol bleit;
Therefore the Moone (the gournelle of floods)
Pale in her anger, wafhes all the aire;
That Rheumatick diseases doe abound.
And through this distemper, we see
The season alter; hoared heade froids
Fall in the fresh lap of the slimton Risc,
And on old Hyeme chime and Icic crowne,
An odorous Chaplet of sweet Sommer buds.
Is as in mockery set;
The Spring, the Summer, the chulding Autumn, angry Winter change
They wonted Luieres, and the mazed world,
By their increas, now knowes not which is which;
And this same progeny of eullis,
Comes from our debate, from out diffention,
We are their parents and original.
What! Do you entend it then, it lies in you,
Why should Titania croafe her Oberon?
I do but beg a little changeling boy,
To be my Hunchman.

Set your heart at reit,
The Fairy land buyes not the child of me,
His mother was a Votresse of my Order,
And in the spiced Indian aire, by night
Full often bath the giftiff by my side,
And sit with me on Neptune dark yellow sands,
Marking the embard traders on the flood,
When we have taught to see the failes conclude,
And grow big belled with the wanton winde:
Which she with pretty and with swimming gate,
Following (her wonne then rich with my yong squire)
Would imitate, and faile upon the Land,
To fetch her trifles, and return againe,
As from a voyage, rich with merchandize.
But she being mortall, of that boy did die,
And for her sake I doe reere vp her boy,
And for her sake I will not part with him.

How long were this wood intend you stay?
Perchance all to morrow? before wedding day.
If you will presently dance at our Round,
And see our Moone-light revels, goe with vs;
If I doe take you and I will have your hunts.

Give me that boy, and I will goe with thee.

Not for thy Fairy Kingdome. Fairies away:
We shall chide downe right, if I longer stay. Exit.

Well, goe thy way: thou shalt not from this grove,
Till I remember thee for this injury.
My gentle Pucke come hither; thou rememberst
Since once I left upon a promontory,
And heard a Meate-maiden on a Dolphins backe,
Vndering such dulce and harmonious breath,
That the rude tea grew eschull at her song,
And certaine flares shot madly from their Splices.
To heare the Sea-maidens mufcife.

I remember.

That very time I say (but thou couldst not)
Flying betweene the cold Moone and the earth,
Cupid arm'd; a certaine time he stode
At a faire Veil, shrouded by the West,
And lovd his love-children smarmly from his bowe
As it should pierce a hundred thousand hearts,
But I might see young Cupid lying shote.

Quencht in the chaste beames of the wary Moon;
And the imperiall Votresse paffed on,
In maiden meditation, fancy free.
Yet markt I where the bolts of Cupid fell.
It fell vpont a little westerner flower;
Before, milke-white; now purple with louses wound;
And maunders call it, Louse in idleness.
Fetch me that flower, the heare I shewld thee once.
The ioye of it, on sleeping eye-Iuds staid,
Will make or woman madly dore
Upon the next line creature that it sees.
Fetch me this heare, and be thou here again,
Ere the Loue-bomb can tisssue a league.

Pucke. He put a girdle about the earth, in forty ar-\n utes.

Ober. Hauing once this ioyce,
I heare Titania, when the ioyce is altope,
And drop the liquor of the in her eyes,
The next thing when the waking lookes vp,
(He it on Lyon, Beere, or Wolfe, or Bull,
On medling Monkey, or on houte Ape)
Shee shall pursue, with the soule of loue.
And ere I take this charme off from her sight,
(As I can take it with another care be)
I make her render vp her Page to me.
But who comes heere? I am invisible,
And I will out-heare their conference.

Enter Demetrius, Helena following him.

Dem. I love thee not, therefore pursue me not,
Where is Lysander, and faire Hermia?
The one Ile lay, the other playthe me.
Thou toldst me they were flowne into this wood;
And here am I, and wood within this wood,
Because I am not meet my Hermia.
Hence, get thee gone, and follow me no more.
Hel. You draw me, you hard-hearted Adaman,
But yet you draw not Iron, for my heart
Is true as fire, Leaue you your power to draw,
And I shall have no power to follow you.

Dem. Do I entice you? do I speak thee faire?
Or rather doe I in plainest truth,
Tell you I do not, or I cannot love you?
Hel. And even for that doe I love thee the more;
I am your spaniel, and Demetrius,
The more you beat me, I will fawne on you.
Vse me not as your spaniel; spurne me, strike me,
Negleft me, lose me; onely give me leaue
(Vnuworthy as I am) to follow you.
What worser place can I beg in your love,
(And yet a place of high respected with me)
Then to be vieft as you doe your dogge.

Dem. Tempt not too much the hatred of my spirit,
For I am fickle when I doe looke on thee.
Hel. And I am fickle when I looke not on you.

Dem. You doe impeach your modesty too much,
To leave the City, and commit your selfe
Into the hands of one that loues you not,
To trust the opportunity of night,
And the ill counsell of a desert place,
With the rich worth of your virginity.
Hel. Your verme is my priviledge; for that
It is not night when I doe fee your face.
Therefore I think I am not in the night,
Nor doth this wood lacke worlds of company,

N 3
A Midsummer night's Dreame.

For you in my respect are all the world. Then how can it be said I am alone, When all the world is here to looke on me? Dem. He rune from these, and hide me in the brakes, And leave thee to the mercy of wild beasts. Hel. The wildest hart hath not such a heart as you. Runne when you will, the glory shall be chang'd: Apollo flies, and Despoin holds the chafe; The Doun pursues the Giffin, the milde Hinde Makes speed to catch the Tyger. Boottelle speede, When cowardly pursutes, and valour flies. Demet. I will not trust thy questions, let me go; Or if thou follow me, do not beleeve, But I shall doe thee mischief in the wood. Hel. In the Temple, in the Towne, and Field You doe me mishchire. Eye Demetrous, Your wronges doe set a scandal on my face: We cannot fight for love, as men may doe: We should be wood, and were not made to woe. I follow thee, and make a heauen of hell, To die vpon the hand I love so well. Exit. Ob. Fare thee well Nymph, ere he do leave this grove, Thou shalt see him, and he shall see thee true, Halt thou the flower there? Welcome wanderer.

Enter Pucke.

Puck. I, there it is. Ob. I pray thee give it me. I know a banke where the wilde time blower, Where Oat lips and the nodding Violet growes, Quite ouer-campowped with insurrection woodbine, With sweete musick roke, and with Eglandine; There sleepe Tytauns, some time of the night, Lo'd in these flowers, with dances and delights: And there the faire thowes her enamelled d'skaine, Weed wide enough to rap a Fairy in, And with the wyche of this lle treake her eyes, And make her full of hustefull Fantasties. Take thou some of it, and seek through this grove; A sweet Athenian Lady is in love With a disdainfull youth: aman his eyes, But doe it when the next thing he espies. May be the Lady. Thou shalt know the man, By the Athenian garments he hath on, Eeect it with some care, that he may prove More fond on her, then the he upon her love; And looke thou meet me ere the first Cocke crow. Puck. Fear not my Lord, your tenant shall do so. Exit.

Enter Quene of Fairies, with her traine.

Quone. Come, now a Roundell, and a Fairy Song; Then for the third part of a minute hence. Some to kill Canckers in the muske rofe buds, Some warre with Remifer, for their leathan wings, To make my small Elues coasts, and some keepe backe, The clamorous Owe that nightly howes and wonders To our quiet spirts: Sing me now a sleep, Then to your offices, and let me call.

Fairies Song.

You spotted Snakes with double tongue, Thorny hedges beg not scene, Near a blinde wormes do no wrong, Come not near our Fairy Queen. Philomel with melodie, Sing in your sweet Lullaby, Lullaby, lullaby, lullaby, Never harme no frend, no charme, Come our lovely Lady wye, So good night with Lullaby. 2. Fairy. Woefting Spiders cannot horse, Hence you long leg'd Spenders, hence! Beetles blacke approach no more; Worne nor Snagie doe no offence. Philomel with melody, etc. 1. Fairy. Hence away, now all is well; One asleep, flound Centinell. Sleep sleeps.

Enter Oberon.

Ober. What thou feell when thou dost wake, Doe it for thy true Loun take: Loun and languish for his take. Beit Oume, or Catte, or Boare, Pard, or Boare with brittled hair, In thy eye that thall appear, When thou wak't, it is thy dexe, Wake when some wile thing is neere.

Enter Lysander and Hermia.

Lys. Fare thee love, you faint with wandering in my woode, And to speake thou hast I have forgot our way: Wec'll rest vs Hermo, if you think it is good, And tarry for the comfort of the day. Her. Best is to Lysander; finde you out a bed, For I wold this banke will rett my head. Lys. One sure shall retire as follow for vs both, One heart, one bed, two bobulmes, and one truth. Her. Nay good Lysander, for my sake my dece Lie further off yet, do not he to neere. Lys. O tak the first sweet of my innocence, Love taketh the meaning, in louers conference, I meant that my heart into yours is spit, But that one heart can you make of it. Two bobulmes interchanged with an oath, So then two bobulmes, and a single tooth, Then by your false, no bed-commene me deny, For lying so, Hermo, I do not lye. Her. Lysander riddles very pretiely; Now much befhrew my manners and my pride, If Hermo meant to say, Lysander bed But gentle friend, for loue and courtezie Lie further off, in humane modesty, Such separation, as may well be said, Becomes a verituous bashchet, and a maid, So farre be disfiant, and good night sweet friend; Thy loue were alter, still thy sweet life end. Lys. Amen, amen, to that faire prayer, say I, And then end life, when I end loyalty: Here is my bed, sleep githe thee all his self. Her. With halfe that with, the wither eyes be pret. Enter Puck. They sleepes.

Puck. Through the Forest haue I gone, But Athenian finde I none. One whole eye I might approve This flowers force in flirring love, Night and silence who is here? Weedhes of Athen he doth wear: This is he (my master) said Deliputed the Athenian made: And here the maiden sleeping found,
On the dank and duky ground,
Pretty soul, five durt not yee
Near this lacke-loue, this kill-true-fete.
Charle, vpho thy eyes I throw
All the power this charme doth owe:
When thou wak'st, let love forbid
Sleepes his feate on thy eye-lid.
So awake when I am gone:
For I must now to Otho.

Enter Demetrius and Helena running.

Hel. Stay, though thou kill me, sweet Demetrius.
De. I charge thee hence, and do not haunt me thus.
Hel. O witt thou darling leave me? do not so.
De. Stay on thy perill, I alone will goe.

Exit Demetrius.

Hel. O I am out of breath, in this fond chace,
The more my prayer, the lesser is my grace,
Happy is Hermia, wherefore she lies;
For she hath blessed and attribute eyes.
Now came her eyes so bright?
Not with fast tears.
If so, my eyes are oftner wash't then hers.
No, no, I am as vigy as a Bear.
For beasts that meete me, runne away for fear.
Therefore no martiale, though Demetrius
Doe as a monstir, file my presence thus.
What wicked and distembling glaife of mine,
Made me compare with Hermia's phery cyme?
But who is here? Lyfander on the ground;
Dreade or sleepe? I fee no bloud, no wound,
Lyfander, if you live, good sir awake.

Lyf. And run through fire I will for thy sweet fake.

Transparent Helena, nature her swyes art,
That through thy body makes me fee thy heart.
Where is Demetrius? oh how fit a word
Is that vile name, to perfit on my fword?

Hel. Do not say to Lyfander, say not so:
What though he love you Hermia? Lord, what thought
Yet Hermia till loves you, then be content.

Lyf. Content with Hermia? No, I do repent
The tedious minutes I with her haue spent.
Not Hermia, but Helena now I love:
Who will not change a Rauen for a Dowe?
The will of man is by his reason sway'd:
And reason faies you are the worthieth Maide.
Things growing are not ripe until their reason;
So I being yong, till now I doe not to reason,
And touching now the point of humane skill,
Reason becomes the Marshall to my will,
And leads me to your eyes, where I ordloke
Louers stories, written in Loues richett booke.

Hel. Wherefore was I so to this keen mockery born?
When at your hands did I deferue this scorn?
If not enough, Ight not enough, yong man,
That I did never, nor never can,
Defere a sweete looke from Demetrius eye,
But you must flaye in my insufficieny.
Good troth you doe me wrong (good-f也为 ther do you)
In such diSful men, man, to weeoe.
But dare you well, I will perforce I must confesse;
Oh you thought you Lord of more true gentilte.

Lyf. She fies not Hermia; Hermia sleepe thou there,
And never must thou come Lyfander near.

For as a surfeit of the sweetest things
The deeppeth loathing to the stomacck brings
Or as the heretick that men do detaine,
Are batted most of those that did descigce.
So thou, my surfeit, and my heretic,
Of all be hald; but the most of one;
And all my powers adrecrfe your lovee and might,
To honour Helene, and to be her Knight.

Her. Help me Lyfander, helpe mee; do thy beft
To plucke this crawling serpent from my braet.
Aye me, for pitty; what a dremme was here?
Lyfander looke, how I doe quake with feare:
Me thought a serpent came my heart away,
And yet for smiling at his cruel prey.
Lyfander, what rennowd? Lyfander, Lord,
What, our of hearing, gone? No sound, no word?
Makc where are you? speake and if you heare,
Sape of all loues; I found almoft with freare.
No, then I well perceiue you are not mye,
Either death or you Ile finde immediately.

Exit.

Actus Tertius.

Enter the Clamors.

But. Are we all met?
Quin. Pat, pat, and here's a marauilous convenient place for our rehearsal. This greene plot shall be our stage, this hauethome brake our tyring houe, and we will do it in action, as we will do it before the Duke.

But. Peter ouch...
Peter. What faith thou, bully Bottom?
But. There are things in this Comedy of Piramus and Thysbe, that will never plesse. First, Piramus must draw a sword to kill himselfe; which the Ladies cannot abide.
How anware you that?

Snoate. Berlainke, a parlious feare.
Star. I believe we must leave the killing out, when all is done.

But. Not a whir, I have a deteste to make all well.
Write me a Prologue, and let the Prologuist seeme to say, we will do no harme with our swords, and that Piramus is not kill'd indeepe; and for the more better assurance, tell them, that Piramus am not Piramus, but Bottom the Weaver, this will put them out of feare.

Quin. Well, we will have such a Prologue, and it shall be written in eithe and fixe.

But. No, make it two more, let it be written in eight and eight.

Snoate. Will not the Ladies be affayd of the Lyon?
Star. I fear it, I promise you.

But. Makers, you ought to confedr with your felues, to bring in (God forthe) the Lyon among Ladies, is a more dreadfull thing. For there is not a more fearefull wide foule then your Lyon liuing: and wee ought to looke unto it.

Snoate. Therefore another Prologue must teell he is not a Lyon.

But. Nay, you must name his name, and halfe his face must be seene through the Lyons necke, and he himselfe must speake through, saying thus, or to the same defect; Ladies, or faire Ladies, I would with you, or I would request

II. ii. 75—III. i. 42

requell you, or I would entreat you, not to be are, not to tremble: my life for yours. If you think I come hither as a Lyon, it were pity of my life. No, I am no such thing, I am as other men are; and there indeed let him in his name, and he calleth plainly be of the loyners.

Quin. Well, it shall be so: but there is two hard things, that is, to bring the Moone-light into a cham-bler: for you know, Piramoun and Thoby meete by Moone-light.

Sn. Doth the Moone shine that night wee play our play?

Ber. A Calendar, a Calendar, looke in the Almanack, finde out Moone-shine, finde out Moone-shine.

Enter Pack.

Quin. Yes, it doth shine that night.

Ber. Why then may you issue a casement of the great chamber window (where we play) open, and the Moone may shine in at the casement.

Quin. Let clere one must come in with a bush of thorns and a lanthorne, and say he comes to disfigure, or to prepent the perfon of Moone-shine. Then there is a other thing, we must hauue a wall in the great Chamber; for Piramon and Thoby (that aree the Rhory) did talk through the chuckle of a wall.

Sn. You can never bring in a wall. What say you Bellum?

Ber. Some man or other must pretend wall, and let him hauve some Pilaster, or some Lome, or some tough stuff about him, to dignifie wall; or let him hold his fingers thus; and through that cranny, shall Piramoun and Thoby whisper.

Quin. If that may be, then all is well. Come, sit downe every mothers sonne, and rehearse your parts.

Piramoun, you begin when you have spoken your speech, enter into that Brave, and so every one according to his cue.

Enter Pack.

* Rob. What hemen home-sighs haue we waggling-ring here,
So near the Cradle of the Fairerie Queen?
What a Play toward? Ile be an auditor,
An Actor too perhaps, if I see cause.

Quin. Speake Piramou: Thoby stand forth,
Fyr. Thoby, the flowers of odious fauors in eete.

Quin. Odours, odours.

Fyr. Odours fauors sweete,
So hath thy breath, my clearest Thoby dese.
But harke, a voyce: play thou but here a while,
And by and by I will to thee appeare.

Exeunt. Ber.

Pack. A Franter Piramoun, then ye shall please here.

Thob. Musl I speake now?

Ber. I marry must you. For you must underteil he goes but to see a voyce that he heard, and is to come a again.

Thoby. Most radiant Piramoun, most Lily white of hue,
Of colours like the red rofe on triumphant bryer,
Most briskly junemall, and eke most loudly Lew,
As true as trueth horse, that yet wende no tyrte,
Ille meete thee Piramoun, at Nineus toombre.

Pir. Nineus toombe maie why, youm will not speake that yet: that you answer to Piramoun: you speake all his parts at once, cutte and all. Piramoun enter, your eue is pall; it is never tyrte.

Thoby. O as true as trueth horse, that yet wende no tyrte:

Pir. If I were fawe, this thy I were onely thine.

Pir. Monstrous. Of strange. We are hanted; pray matters, flye matters, helpe.

The Calumet all Exit.

Fyr. Ile follow you. He lead you about a Round,
Through bogge, through bush, through brake, through Sometime a horse ile be, sometime a hound: (bryer,
A hogge, a headlefe behate, sometime a fire,
And neigh, and bate, and grunt, and roar, and bune,
Like horse, hound, hog, bate, fire, at every turne. Exit.

Enter Piramoun with the Affe head.

Ber. Why do they run away? This is a knavery of them to make us afeard. Enter Snowe.

Sn. O Bottom, thou art changd: What doe I see on thee?

Ber. What do you see? You see an Affe-head of your owne, do you?

Enter Peter Quince.

Pir. Blesse thee Bottom, blesse thee; thou art translated.

Ber. I fee their knavery: this is to make an affe of me, to fright me if they could; but I will not sitt from this place, do what they can. I will walke vp and downe here, and I will fign that they shall heare I am not a fraid.

The Woosell cocke, so blacke of hew,
With Orange-tawny bill.

The Throffe, with his note so true,
The Wren and little quill.

Tyr. What Angel wakes me from my flowery bed?

Ber. The Finch, the Sparrow, and the Lurke,
The plainling Cuckow gray;
Whose note full many a man doth mark,
And darst not answere, nay.

For indeed, who would let his wit to so foolish a bird?
Who would gave a bird the ey, though he cry Cuckow, never to?

Tyr. I pray thee gentle mortall, fing againe,
Mine care is much esmaroied of thy note;
On the firt view to say, to swere I love thee,
So is mine eye enthralled to thy shape,
And thy faire vertues force (perforce) doth move me,

Ber. Me-thinks mingyffe, you should have little reason for that: and yet to say the truth, reason and loure keepe little company together, nowadayes.

The more the pittie, that foure honest neighbours will not make them friends. Nay, I can glecke upon occasion.

Tyr. Thou art as wife, as thou art beautifull.

Ber. Not so neither: but if I had wit enough to get out of this wood, I haue enough to ferue mine owne tyme.

Tyr. Out of this wood, do not desire to goe,
Thou shalt remaine here, whether thou wilt or no.
I am a spirit of no common rate:

The Summer thil dore tend upon my face,
And I doe loue thee, therefore goe with me,
Ile give thee Faireties to attend on thee;
And they shall fetch thee jewels from the deepes,
And fing, while thou on priled flowers dost sleepe.

And I will purge thy mortall grossesse of,
That thou shalt like an aine spirit goe.

Enter Pirou. Lysanfel, Calwch, Mith, Mussardsector, and some Fairies.

Fyr. Ready, and I loud, I, and I, Where shall we go?

Tyr. Be.
A Midsummer Night's Dream.

Tita. Be kind and courteous to this Gentleman,
Hop in his walkes, and gambole in his eyes,
Feed him with Apricocks, and Dewberries,
With purple Grapes, greenes Figs, and Mulberries,
The home-bags delle from the humble Bees,
And for night-tapes crop their waxen thighs,
And light them at the fire-side, into warming eyes,
To have my loue to bed, and to rise:
And plucke the wings from painted Butterflies,
To fan the Moone-beames from his sleeping eyes.
Nod to him Elues, and drope him curtseys.

Cab. Coubob.
Bot. I shall desire you more acquaintance, good Maitre Coubob:
If I can my finger, I shall make bold with you.
Your name honest Gentleman?
Prof. Peche boifane.
Bot. I pray you commend mee to mislrest.Spache, your mother, and to maister Pasfod your father.
Good maitre Peche-boifane, I final desire of you more acquaintance to.
Your name I befeech you for it.
Prof. Pasfod-boifane.
Bot. Good maitre Pasfod boifane, I know your patience well:
That fame cowardly gyante-like Oxe beef hath devour'd many a gentleman of your house. I promise you, your kindred hath made my eyes water ere now. I desire you more acquaintance, good Maitre Pasfod boifane.

Tit. Come waite upon him, lead him to my bower.
The Moone me-thinks, lookes with a watter eie,
And when the weeper, weepes eueris little flower,
Lamenting some enforced chastity.
Tye vp my lovers tongue, bring him silently.

Exit King of Phæace.

Ob. I wonder if Titania be awak't:
Then what it was that next came in her eye,
Which she must done on, in extremity.

Enter Puck.
Here comes my messenger: how now mad spirit,
What night-rule now about this haunted grove?
Wack. My Miftress with a monster is in love,
Neere to her clofe and confederate bow'r,
While she was in her dull and sleeping bow'r,
A crew of patches, rude Mechanick,
That worke for bread upon Athenian high,
Were met togerher to rehearse a Play,
Intended for great Tiffsom nuptiall day:
The shalowet thick-skyn of that barren fort,
Who Pariamus prefented in their fort,
Forsooke his Scene, and entred in a brake,
When I did him at this advantage take,
An Affet note I fixed on his head.
Anon his Thrabbe must be answer'd,
And forth my Mimmick comes: when theye him spie,
As Wilde-geese that the creeping Fowlers eye,
Or ruffled-pated thoughts, tyme in tyme in fort (Rifing and cawing at the gunes report)
Sear theirselues, and mastic swepe the skye:

So as his fight, away his fellows flie,
And at our flambe, here ere and one one fell;
He murther cryes, and helpe from Atheni call.
Their fene thys weak, loft with their tears thus strong,
Made feneilele things begyn to do them wrong.
For briers and thomess at their apparel snatch,
Some fiercees, some bares, from yeelders all things catch,
I led them on in this distracted fear.
And left sweete Pariamus trasulated there:
When in that momet (for it came to passe)
Tytania waked, and straitly way lovd an Alfe.
Ob. This falls out better then I could dicrete:
But haft thou yet lach the Athenian eyes,
With the loue yyte, as I did bid thee doe?
Puck. I tooke him sleeping (that is timfght to)
And the Athenian woman by his side,
That when he wake, to force the must be cyde.

Enter Demetrius and Hermia.

Ob. Stand close, this is the name Athenian.
Rob. This is the woman, but not this the man.
Demetrius. O why rebuke you him that loves you so?
Lysean. To lach at me?
With what breath so bitter on your bitter foe?
Her. Now I but chide, but I should vie thee worse.
For though (I fear), I hate me caus'd to curse,
If thou hast flame Lysander in his sleepe,
Being ore fluxes in blood, plunge in the deeps, and kill me too:
The Sunne was not to true unco the day,
As he to me. WOULD he have stolen away,
From Sleepin' Hermia? He became as loone.
This whole earth may be forrd, and that the Moone
May through the Center crepe, and so displease
Her brothers noontide, with the Antipodes.
It cannot be but thou haft murthered him,
So shoul'd a murderer so looke, so dead, logrime.
Demetrius. So should the murderere looke, and so shoul'd I,
Dript through the heart with your freame cruelty:
Yet you the murderer looks as bright as cleare,
As yonder Venus in her glimmering sphere.
Her. What's this to my Lysander? where is he?
Ah good Demetrius, wilt thou give him me?
Dem. I'd rather give his cark sife to my hounds.
Hermia. Our dog, our cur, thou druf't me paft the bounds
Of maidsens patience. Haft thou slaine him then?
Henceforth be neuer numbered among men.
Oh, once tell true, even for my sake,
Durst thou a lookt upon him, bring him awake?
And haft thou kill'd him sleepeing? O bestre tutch:
Could not a woman, an Adder do so much?
An Adder did it: for with doubluer tongue
Then thine (thou serpente) never Adder stung.
Demetrius. You spend your passions on a mifprisid mood,
I am not guiltie of Lysander blood:
Nor is he dead for ought that I can tell,
Her. I pray thee, tell me then that he is well.
Dem. And if I could, what should I get therefore?
Her. A pruillidge, never to fee me more;
And from thy hated presence I see me no more
Whether he be dead or no.

Demetrius. There is no following her in this fierce vaine,
Here therefore for a while I will remaine.

Forsoower heuninelle dove heather growe:
For debt that bankrupt the doth forrow owre,
Which now in some flight measure it pyle.

If
A Midsummer night's Dreame.

If for her tender here I make some stay.

Lye down.

O, what haste done! Thou hast mistakenly
And laid the loue truec on false true loues fight:
Of thy misprision, most profet in fine
Some true loue turn'd, and not a false turn'd true.

Rer. Then fate ore-tuler, that one man holding truth,
A million faile, confounding oath on oath.

O. About the wood, goe sweeter then the winde,
And Helena of Athens looke thou finde.

All fancy ficker she is, and pale of cheere,
With sighes of loue, that costis the fith-bloud desire.
By fame illation tree thou bring her heere,
Ile chance his eyes against the doth appeare.

Rer. I go, I go, looke how I goe,
Sweeter then arrow from the Tartars bowe.
Exit.

O. Flower of this purple die,
Hit with Cupids archery,
Sink in apple of his eye,
When his loue he doth eie,
Let her flinge as glorious
As the Venus of the sky,
When thou wak't if the be by,
Beg of her for remedy.

Enter Puck.

Puck. Captain of our Fairy band,
Helena is here at hand,
And the youth, mistooke by me,
Pleading for a Louer fee.
Shall we their food Pagane see?
O Lord, what fools their mortals be!

O. Stand aside: the noyce they make,
Will cause Demetrius to awake.

Puck. Then will two at once woe one,
That must needs be sport alone;
And those things due best please me,
That belal preposterously.

Enter Demetrius and Helena.

Ly. Why should you think I should woor in scorn?
Someone or derision never comes in tears:
Looke when I wase I wepe; and vowes so borne,
In their inatity all truth appears.
How can these things in me,eme to come to you?
Bearing the badge of faith to prove them true.

Hel. You doe advance your cunning more & more,
When truth kils truth. O djiel holes holi fra!
These vowes are Hermia. Will you give her orz?
Weare oath with oath, and you will nothing weare.
Your vowes to her, and me (put in two scales)
Will even weigh, and both as light as tales.

Ly. I had no judgement, when to her I swore.
Hel. Nor none in my mind, now you give her ore.

Ly. Demetrius loves her, and he loves not you. Owe.

Dem. O tiden, adde thee, minth, perfec't, diune.
To what thy loue, shall I compare thine cyne?
Christall is mudy, O low rpe in thow,
Thy lips, those killing cherries, tempting grow!
That pure conceale, that white, high Zermur know,
Faw'd with the laftere wine, turnes to a crow,
When thou holdit vp thy hand. O let me kiffe
This Princesse of pure white, this sea of blisse.

Hell. O spight! O hell! I fe ye are all bent
To fres againe me, for your merriment:
If you were ciull, and knew curese,
You would not doe me thus much injury.
A Midsummer Night's Dream.

Two lovely berries molded on one stem,
So wish two frenzied bodies, but one heart,
Two of the first life costs in Heraldy,
Due but to one and crowned with one crest.
And will you rent our ancient louse alender,
To joine with men in learning your poor friend?
It is not friendly,’tis not maidenly,
Our fece as well as I, may chide you for it,
Though I alone doe feel the inuiron.

Her. I am amazed at your passionate words,
I scarce you not, It seemes that you scarce me.
Hel. Hau e you not for Lyfander, as in forome?
To follow me, and praise my eyes and face?
And made your other louse, Demetrius.

(Who cuen but now did spurne me with his footes)
To call me goddesse, nymph, duine, and rare.
Precious, celestial! Wherefore speaks he this?
To her he hates? And wherefore doth Lyfander?
Deny your love, for rich within his loue.
And tender me (forsooth) affection,
But by your setting on, by your content?
What though I be not so in grace as you,
So hung vpon with love, so fortunate?
(But miserable moff, to lose valour’d)
This you shoulde pittie, rather then defpise.

Her. I understand not what you mean by this.
Hel. I doe, deepfeuer, counterfeite fad looks,
Make mouths vpon me when I turne my backe,
Winke each at other, hold the sweete ict vp:
This sport well carried, shall be chronied,
If you have any pittie, grace, or manners,
You would not make me such an argument:
But fare ye well, this partly mine fault.
Which death or absence soone shall remedie.

Lyf. Stay gentle Helena, heare my excuse,
My loue, my life, my soule, faire Helena.

Hel. O excellent! Sweete, do not forborne.

Dem. If the cannot entreate, I can compel.

Lyf. Thou cannot compel, no more then the entreate.
Thy threats have no more strength then her weak prake.

Hel. I love thee, by my life I doe,
In estate by which I will live for thee,
To prove him false, that faies I love thee not.

Dem. I lay, I love thee more then he can do.

Lyf. If thou say so, with-draw and prove it too.

Lyf. Away, you Eniope.

Dem. No, no, Sir, seeme to breake loose.

Take on as you would follow,
But yet come not: you are a came man, go.

Lyf. Hang off thou cat, thou burly, vile thing let loose,
Or I will make thee from me like a serpent.

Her. Why are you groune fo rude?
What change is this sweete Louse?

Lyf. Thy love? out away Tartar, out;
Out loathed medicine; O hated poison hence.

Her. Do you not left?

Hel. Yes, footed, and so do you.

Demetrius will keep my word with thee.

Dem. I would I had your bond, for I perceive
A weake bond holds you; I nee truft your word.

Lyf. What, should I hurt her, strike her, kill her dead?
Although I hate her, hee not harme her so.

Her. What can you do me greater harme then hate?

Hate me, wherefore? O me, what newses my Loue?
Am not I Hermia? Am not you Lyfander?
I am a faire now, as I was earlie.
Since night you loue’d me;yet since night you left me.
Why then you left me (O the gods forbid)
In earneit, shall I say?

Lyf. I, by my life;
And never did desire to see thee more.
Therefore be out of hope, of queستion, of doubt;
Be certaine,nothing truer: this is left,
That I doe hate thee, and love Helena.

Her. O me, you Juger, you canker blossome,
You thee of love; What, haue you come by night,
And done my loues heart from him?

Hel. Fine ysfah:
Have you no modesty, no maiden frame,
No touch of bashfullnesse? What, will you tease
Inpatient answers from my gentle tongue?
Fie, fie, you counterfeit, you puppet, you.

Her. Puppet? why fo? That way goes the game.
Now I perceive that the hate made compare
Between our flutteres, the hath vrg’d her height,
And with her perfounge, her tall parchment,
Her height (forsooth) the hath pretendi’d with him.
And are you grovne so high in his efeene,
Because I am so dwarfe, and so low?
How low am I, thou pointed May-pole? Speake,
How low am I? I am not yet so low,
But that my naiies can reach vnto chine eyes.

Hel. I pray you though you mocke me, gentlemen,
Let her not hurt me; I was never cuiff’d:
I haue no gift at all in firewiffnesse;
I am a right maide for my cowardize;
Let her not strike me; you perhaps may thinke,
Because she is something lower then my selfes,
That I can match her.

Her. Lower! harke again.

Hel. Good Hermia, do not be fo bitter with me,
I evermore did loue you Hermia,
Did ever keepe your counsels, never wronged you,
Save that in loue into Demetrius,
I told him of your thriftlesse into this wood.
He followed you, I feare to fellow him,
But he hath chide me hence, and threatened me
To strike me, spurne me, may to kill me too;
And now, so you will let me quiet go,
To Athens will I bear my folly backe,
And follow you no further. Let me go.

You see how simple, and how fond I am.

Her. Why get you gone? who lift that hindres you?

Hel. A foolish heart, that I leave here behind,

Her. What, with Lyfander?

Her. With Demetrius.

Lyf. Be not afraid she shall not harme thee Helena.

Dem. No sir, she shall not, though you take her part.

Hel. O when she’s angry, she is keene and throughed,
She was a vixen when she went to schoolle,
And though she be but little, she is fierce.

Her. Little a graine? Nothing but low, and little?
Why will you suffer her to flout me thus?
Let me come to her.

Lyf. Get you gone you dwarf, you minimus, of hindering knot-grasse made,
You bead, you acorne.

Dem. You are too officious,
In her behalfe that scorces your device.

Let
A Midsummer Night's Dream

Let her alone, speak not of Helena,
Take not her part. For if thou dost intend Never so little flower of love to her,
Thou shalt abate it.

Her. Nay, now she holds me not,
Now follow if thou dar'st, to try whose right,
Of thine or mine is most in Helena.

Dem. Follow' Nay, I'll goe with thee cheake by iowl. Exeunt Lysander and Demetrius.

Her. You Mistifis, all this coyle is long of you.
My son, goe not backe.

Hel. I will not trust you I,
Nor longer stay in your curtie companie.
Your hands then mine, are quicker for a fray,
My legs are longer though twenty wear away.

Enter Oberon and Puck.

Oh. This is thy negligence, still thou mistak'ft,
Or else commit'st thy knavery willingly.

Puck. Belieue me, King of shadowes, I mistake,
Did not you tell me, I should know the man,
By the Athenian garments he hath on?
And so faire blancketly proues the emperize,
That I have winne an Athenian eie,
And do have am I glad, if so did Fort,
As this their railing I elecume a sport.

Oh. Thou feest these Louers seake a place to fight,
He therefore Rohus, oncercat the night,
The barrie Welkin couer the thou anon,
With drooping foggie as blacke as Acheron,
And leave these thee: Reuelas to a thrall,
As one com and not within another may.
Like to Lysander, sometime frame thy tongue,
Therefore Demetrius vp with bitter wrong,
And sometime rale thou like Demetrius:
And from each other looke thou leaue them thus.
Till ore their bowres, death coounterfeiting sleepe,
With leadeen legs, and Battie-wings doth sleepe;
Then craft this hearte into Lysander eie,
Whole liquor'st thou this vertuous propertie,
To take from thence all error, with his might,
And make his eie-balls rule with wonderd fight
When they next wake al this denfion
Shall seeme a dreame, and truftie vision,
And backe to Athenes shall the Louers wend
With leaque, whole date till death shall never end.
Whiles I in this affaire doe they lye,
Ile to my Queene, and beg her Indian Boy;
And then I will be comfortable to lisse.

Puck. My faire Lord, this must be done with haste,
For night with Dragons cut the Clouds full fast,
And wonder shine Austral haubinge.
At whole approche Ghosts wandering here and there,
Tropes house to Church-yards; dannon spirits all,
That in croffe-wates and flouds bace bussall,
Already to these, worme beds are gone;
For scarce euer day should looke their shamers vnpon,
They willfully themselves dye all from light,
And oure for eye comfort with blacks browd night.

Oh. But we are spirits of another bowt:
I, with the moons light truce oft made sport,
And like a Forrester, the greater may tread,
Even all the Eastern race all feste red,
Opening on Neptune, with faire bledded beams,
Tunes into yellow gold, his fast green dreames.

But nor with standing haste, make no delay:
We may effect this businesse, yet ere day.

Puck. Vp and downe, vp and downe, I will leade them vp and downe: I am fear'd in field and company.

Gobias, lead them vp and downe: here comes one.

Enter Lysander.

Lys. Where is that thou, proud Demetrius?
Speak thou now.

Rob. Here villain, drawne & readie. Where art thou?

Lys. I will be with thee straight.

Rob. Follow me then to planier ground.

Enter Demetrius.

Dem. Lysander, speakes againe;
Thou runnaway, thou coward, art thou fled?
Speak in some bushe: Where dost thou hide thy head?

Rob. Thou coward, art thou bragging to the stars,
Telling the bushest thou look'd for in was,
And wilt not come? Come recreant, come thou child.
Ile whip thee with a rod. He is defil'd
That draws a sword on thee.

Dem. Yea, art thou there?

Re. Follow my voice, we'll try no manhood here. Exit.

Lys. He goes before me, and still dares me on,
When I have where he calls, then he's gone.
The villain is much lighter heed'd then I:
I followed fast, but faster he did flye;
Rising place.

That felln am I in darke vnuen way,
And here will rest me. Come thou gentle day: lyd down.

For if but once thou shew me thy gray light,
I finde Demetrius, and seueinge this sight.

Enter Robin and Demetrius.

Rob. Ho, ho, ho, coward, why com'th thou not now?

Dem. Abide me, if thou dar'st. For well I wot,
Thou runn before me, shifting every place,
And dar'ft not hand, nor looke me in the face.

Where art thou?

Rob. Come hither, I am here.

Dem. Nay then thou mock'st me; thou finisst but thine dece.
If euer I thy face by day-light see,
Now goe thy way: famall'le conatineth me,
To measure out my length on this cold bed,
By dates approacht it to be visitd.

Enter Helena.

Hel. O very night, O long and tedious night,
Abate thine hours, thine commors from the East,
That I may backe to Athenes by day-light,
From these that my poore companie deefit;
And flepe that sometime shua vp forroves eie,
Steale me a while from mine owne companie. Sleep.

Rob. Yet but three? Come one more,
Two of both kindes makes vp loue.
Here fire comes, curtif and sad,
Cupid is a knauff lad.

Enter Herus.

Thus to make poore females mad.

Her. Neuer to weare, never to be weare;
Bedabbled with the dew, and come with briers,
I can not further creade, no further create.
My legs can keep no pace with my defines.
Here will I rest me till the brake of day,
Heauens shield Lysander, if they meane a fray.

Rob. On the ground flepe found,
It applye your eie gentle lover, remembe.
When thou wake't, thou tak't
True delight in the fight of thy frether Ladies eye,
And the Country Proverb is knowne,
That every man should take his owne.
In your wakening shall be knowne:
Lucky shall have ill, none shall goo ill,
The man shall have his Mare againe; and all shall bee well.

Enter Queene of Fairies, and Clowne, and Fairies, and the King behind them.

Tita. Come, fit thee downe upon this flowery bed,
While I thy amiable chekkes doe toy,
And tickle museke roses in thy faceke inotho the head,
And kiffe thy faire large eares, my gentle toy.
Clowne. Where's Peasfecha?
Cob. Ready.

Clowne. Mounteuer Cobweb, good Mounteuer get thy weapons in your hand, & kill me a red hipt humble-bee, on the top of a thistle; and good Mounteuer bring mee the hony bag. Do not frey thy selfe too much in the action, Mounteuer; and good Mounteuer haue a care the hony bag breake not, I shalbe loath to haue thee over-flowne with a hony-bag signeout. Where's Mounteuer Mustafter?

Muf. Ready.

Cob. Give me your morning, Mounteuer Mustafterseed.
Pray you leave your courtesie good Mounteuer.
Muf. What's your will?

Cob. Nothing good Mounteuer, but to help Caulery Cobweb to scratch. I must to the Barber Mounteuer, for me-thinks I am marishous hairie about the face. And I in forth a tender affe, if my hair be do but tickle me, I must scratch.

Tita. What wilt thou haue same musicke, my sweete love.
Clowne. I have a reasonable good care in musicke. Let vs haue the tongs and the bones.

Musicke Tong, all Musicke.

Tita. Or say sweete Loue, what thou defirest to eat.

Cobweb. Truly a pecke of Proseender; I could munch your good dry Ques. Me-thinks I have a great desire to a bottle of hony: good hony, sweete hony hath no fellow.

Tita. I haue a venemous Fairy, That shall seke the Squirrels hoard, And fetch thee now Nut.
Clowne. I had rather have a handful or two of dried peas. But I pray you let none of your people thirne me, I have an expostution of hapy come upon me.

Tita. Sleepep thou, and I will wende thee in my arms, Faries bee gone, and be swifte away.
So doth the woodbine, the sweete Honisuckle, Gently entwistle the temple toy to Entangle the baky fingers of the Elme.

O how I loose thee! how I loose thee on thee!

Enter Robin goodfellaw and Oberson.

Ob. Welcome good Robin:
Seesthou this sweete sight? Her dosage now I doe begin to pity.
For meeting her at late behinde the wood, Seeking sweete favours for this hatefull foole, I did yebravid her, and fell out with her.
For his the haly temples then had roubted, With coronet of fresh and fragrant flowers, And that same dew which fomontime on the buds, Was wont to swell like round and orient peales; Stayd now within the pretty flourriess eyes, Like teares that did their owne disgrace bewaile.

When I had at my pleasure caunterd her, And in the milde termes beg'd my patience, I then did ask'd her, her changeling childe, Which straight the gave me, and her Fairy frento To beare him to my Bower in Fairy Land.

And now I have the Boy, I will vndoe This hatefull imp𝗹ecʃioν of her eyes. And gentle Pocke take this transformed scalp, From off the head of this Athenesian swaine; That haue awaking when the other doe, May all to Athenes becke againe repaire, And thinke no more of these nightes accidents, But as the fierce vexation of a dreame, But first I will release the Fairy Queene.

Be thou as thou wost wint want to be;
See as thou wost wint to see.

Dires lea, or Capiot flower,
Hat haue such force and blissful power.

Now my Titia wakke you my sweet Queene,
Tita. My Oberson, what visions have I seen! Me-thought I was enamoured of an Affe.
Ob. There lies your love.

Tita. How came these things to passe?
Oh, how mine eyes doth losse this visage now!

Ob. Silence a while, Robin take off his head:
Titania musick call, and flinke more dead
Then common sleep; of all this, I doe the rest.

Tita. Musick, he musick, such as charmeth sleepe.

Musick flinke.

Ob. When thou wake, with thine owne foolest eyes sleepe.

Ob. Sound musick; come my Queene, take hands with And rokke the ground whereon thefe sleepeare be.

Now thou and I am new in amity, And will to morrow with delight, tommelys Dance in Duke Theseus house triumphantly, And bleede it to all faire potterey, There shall the pairs of faithfull Louers be Wedded, with Theseus, all in sollicy.

Ob. Fare King attend, and marke, I doe heare the morning Lark.

Ob. Then my Queene in fience sad,
Trip we after the nights shade;
We the Globe can compare loone,
Swifter then the winding Moone.

Tita. Come my Lord, and in our sights Tell me how it came this night, That I sleepeing here was found, Sleepers Eys is sle.

With
Well, it seems I have been reading through a page of a play in English. The text is quite dense and contains references to classical literature and mythology. Here's a transcription as natural text:

---

Enter Theseus, Egeus, Hippolyta, and all his train.

Theseus. Go one of you; find out the Forester, for now our obsequious is performed; and since we have the vaward of the day, my Lord shall hear the musick of my hounds.

Vasco in the wilder valley, let them go; dispatch I say, and find out the Forester.

We will fare Queene, up to the Mountains tock. And make the musick a confusion.

Of hounds and echo in conjunction.

Hippolyta. I was with Hercules and Cadmus once, when in a wood of Crete they bayed the Bear With hounds of Sparta; never did I hear Such gallant chiding. For besides the groose, The skis, the four stones, every region near, Seeme all one musick cry. I never heard So musick a discord, such sweet thunder.

Theseus. My hounds are bred out of the Spartan kind, so few'd, so fanned, and their heads are hung With ears that sweepe away the morning dew, Crooke knob, and dew-lap, like Thefaul's Buls, Slow in purif, but match'd in mouch like bals, Each vnder each. A cry more tunable, Was never hallowed to, nor chear'd with horne, but in Crete, in Sparta, as in Thefaul's, judge when you heare. But sweet, what nimphs are these? Egeus. My Lord, this is my daughter here asleep, and this Lydus, this Demetrius is. This Helena, old Neders Helena, I wonder of this being here together.

Theseus. No doubt they rove vp early, to obserue The night of May; and hearing our intent, Came heere in grace of our solemnity But speak Egeus, is not this the day, that Hermia should give answer of her choice? Egeus. It is my Lord, Theseus. Go bid the hunt-men wake them with their hones.

Horses and they wake.

About within, they all start vp.

Theseus. Good morrow friends. Saint Valentine is past, Begin these wood birds but to couple now. Lys. Pardon my Lord, Theseus. I pray you all stand vp.

I know you two are Rival enemies. How comes this gentle concord in the world? That hatred is so farre from malice, To sleepe by harts, and feare no eminy.

Lys. My Lord, I shall reply amazely, Half sleepe, half waking. But as yet, I sweare, I cannot truly say how I came here. But as I think (for truly would I speake) And now I doe bethink me, for it is; I came with Hermia hither. Our intent Was to be gone from Athens, where we might be Without the peril of the Athenian Law.

Egeus. Enough, enough, my Lord; you have enough; I beg the Law, the Law, upon his head: They would have stolen away, they would Demetrius, Therefore to have defeated you and me; You of your wife, and me of my content; Of your content, that she should be your wife.

Demetrius. My Lord, fair Hermia tolde me of their health, Of this their purpose hither, to this wood, And I in furie hither followed them; Hermia, in fancy followed me.

But my good Lord, I wot not what power (But by some power it is) my love To Hermia (melted as the snow) Seems to me now as the remembrance of an idle guafe, Which in my childhood I did doot upon: And all the faith, the veruue of my heart, the object and the pleasure of mine eye. Is only Hermia. To her, my Lord, was I breath'd, ere I see Hermia, But like a sickeneff did I leath this food, But as in health, come to my natural taste, Now doe I with it, love it, long for it, And will for evermore be true to it.

Theseus. Faire Lovers, you are fortunately met, Of this discourse we shall hear more anon.

Egeus. I will utter-beare your will; for in the Temple, by and by with vs, these couples shall eternall be knit. And for the morning now is something wore, Our purpos'd hunting shall be set aside. Away, with vs to Athens; three and three, We'll hold a feast in great solemnite.

Come supphats.

Exit Duke and Lords.

Demetrius. These things seems small & vridishings, like farre off mountains turn'd into clouds. Her. Me-thinks I see these things with parted eye, When every things seemes double.

Hel. So me-thinks: And I have found Demetrius, like a jeweill, Mine owne, and not mine owne.

Dem. It seemes to mee, That yet we sleepe, we dreame. Do not you think, The Duke was here, and bid vs follow him? Her. Yes, and my Father, Hel. And Hippolyta. Lys. And bid vs follow to the Temple. Dem. Why then we are awake; let's follow him, and by the way let vs recount our dreams.

Bottom's waking.

Exit Louts.

Ces. When my cue comes, call me, and I will answer.

My next is, most faire Perseus. Hey ho. Peter Quince? Take this bellows-mender? Show the tinkers? Startling? Gods my life! Stoic hence, and left me slipel I have had a most rare vision. I had a dreamt, paie the wit of man, to say, what dreamt it was. Man is but an Afe, if he goe about to expound this dreamm. Me-thought I was, there is no man can tell what. Me-thought I was, and me-thought I had. But man is but a patch'd fool, if he will offer to say, what me-thought I had. The eye of man hath not heard, the ear of man hath not seen, mans hand is not able to taste, his tongue to conceive, nor his heart to report, what my dream was. I will get Peter Quince to write a ballet of this dream, it shall be called Bottoms Dreame, because it hath no bottome; and I will sing it in the latter end of play, before the Duke. Pere aduenture, to make it the more gracious, I shall sing it at her death.

Exit.

Enter Quince, Flute, Thisbe, Snout, and Starveling.

Quine. Have you sent to Bottoms house? Is he come hame yet?

Snout. He cannot be heard of. Our doubt he is transferred.
Enter Louers, Lysander, Demetrius, Hermia, and Helena.

The. Here come the louers, full of joy and mirth:
Joy, gentle friends, joy and fresh days
Of love accompany your hearts.

Lys. More then to vs, wait in your royall walks, your board, your bed.
The. Come now, what maskes, what dances shall we have,
To weare away this long age of three hours,
Between our after supper, and bed-time?
Where is our vsual manager of mirth?
What Reuels are in hand? Is there no play,
To ease the anguish of a torturing hour?
Call Egeus.

Ege. Heere mighty Theseus.
The. Say, what abridgment have you for this evenning?
What maskes? What musick? How shall we beguile
The lazie time, if not with some delight?
Ege. There is a breefe how many sports are rife
Make choice of which your Highnesse will see first.
Lys. The boxell with the Centaurs to be sung
By an Athenian Eunuch, to the Harpe.
The. We'll none of that. That have I told my Loue
In glory of my kinman Hercules.
Lys. The riot of the tippe Bachanals,
Tearing the Thracian finger, in their rage?
The. That is an old deute, and it was plaid
When Irom Thetis came left a Conqueror.
Lys. The threc three Muses, mourning for the death
Of learning, late deceas’d in beggerie.
The. That is some Satyre keen and critickall,
Not forting with a nuptiall cermonie.
Lys. A tedious brevett Scene of yong, Piramus,
And his loue Thysbe; very tragicall mirth.
The. The Merry and tragiwell! Teditious, and briefe? That is, hot ice, and wondrouse strange snow. How shall we finde the concord of this discord?
Ege. A play there is, my Lord, some ten words long,
Which is as breefe, as I scarce knowne a play;
But by ten words, my Lord, it is too long;
Which makes it tedious. For in all the play,
There is not one word sat, one Player fitted,
And tragical my noble Lord it is: for Piramus
Therein doth kill himselfe. Which when I saw Reheart, I must confesse, made mine eyes water:
But more mettie teares, the passion of loud laughter
Never fied.

Theb. What are they that do play it?
Ege. Hard handed men, that worke in Athens heere,
Which newer laboured in their minds till now;
And now have toyled their vehemt memories
With this same play, against your nuptiall.
The. And we will heare it.

Actus Quintus.

Enter Theseus, Hippolita, Egeus and his Lords.

Hipp. 'Tis strange my Theseus, these louers speake of.
The. More strange then true. he may beleeue
These antickke fables, not these Fairy toyes.
Louers and mad men have such fettishing braine,
Such shaping phantasies, that apprehend more
Then coole reason ever comprehends.
The Luncticke, the Louer, and the Poet,
Are of imagination all compast.
One feen more diuels than vaile hell can hold;
That is the madman. The Louer, all as franticke,
Sees Helen beauty in a brow of Egypt.
The Poets eye in a fine frenzy rolling, doth glance
From heauen to earth, from earth to heauen.
And as imagination bodies forth the fruits of things
Unknowne; the Poets pen turnes them to shapes,
And giues to write nothing, a local habitation,
And a name. Such tricks hath strong imagination,
That if it would but apprehend some joy,
It comprehend some bringer of that joy.
Or in the night, imagining some feare,
How easie is a buff tops'd a Bear?

Hipp. But all the storie of the night told ouer,
And all their minds transfigur'd do together,
More wittifull than fancies images,
And groves to sommething of great conftancies
But howefuer, strange, and admirable.

Exeunt.
This greedy best (which by a knight is named)
The trucly Thoby, coming first by night,
Did forestry away, or rather did affright:
And as she fled, her mantle she did fall;
Which Lyon vyle with bloody mouth did line.
Anon comes Piramus, sweet youth and tall,
And findes his Thoby Mantle line;
Whereat, with blade, with bloody blamefull blade,
He brauely broachte his boiling bloody breath,
And Thoby, trayrving in Mulberry bade,
His dagger drew, and died. For all the reli,
Let Lyon, Moose, line, and Louers swaine,
At large discouer, while here they do rest remaine.
Exit all but Wall.
Thoby: I wondred if the Lion be to speake.
Deme. No wonder, my Lord: one Lion may, when many Aftes doe.

Exit Lyon, Thoby, and Moosebine.

Wall. In this same Interlude, it doth befall,
That lyme Simon (by name) pretend a wall.
And such a wall, as I would have you thinke,
That had in it a crannied hole or chink:
Through which the Louers, Piramus and Thoby
Did whisper often, very secretly.
This loame, this rough-call, and this stone doth swewe,
That I am that same Wall; the truth is so.
And this the crunny is, right and smailer,
Through which the tearfull Louers are to whisper.
Thoby. Would you desire Lime and Hair to speake better?
Deme. It is the wisestf partition, that ever I heard discouer, my Lord.

Enter Prologue.

Pro. If we offend, it is with our good will.
That you should thinke, we come not to offend,
But with good will. To thee our simple skill,
That is the true beginning of our end.
Consider then, we come but in delight.
We do not come, as minding to content you,
Our true intent is. All for your delight,
We are not thee. That you should here repent you,
The A.Cors are at hand: and by their show,
You shall know all, that you are like to know.
Thoby. This fellow doth not stand upon points.
Lyon. He hath rid his Prologue, like a rough Cole: he knowes not the blow. A good morrow my Lord. It is not enough to speake, but to speake true.
Thoby. Indeed he hath plaid on his Prologue, like a childe on a Recorder, a round, but not in government.
Thoby. His speech was like a tangled chaste: nothing impaireed, but all disordered. Who is next?

Enter Pyramus and Thoby, Wall, Moose, line, and Lyon.

Pro. Gentles, perhance you wonder at this show,
But wonder on, till truth make all things plaine.
This man is Pyramus, if you would know;
This beauteous Lady, Thoby is certaine.
This man, with lyme and rough-call, doth pretend
Wall, that vile wall, which did the poor Louers funder:
And through walls chink (poor loues) they are content
To whisper. At which, let no man wonder.
This man, with Lanthorne, dog, and bull of thorne,
Presenteth moose-line. For if you will know,
By moose, line did their Louers thinke no for once
To meet at Nano, battes, there, there to woe:

V. i. 76—203
Enter Lyon and Moone shine.

Lyon. You Ladies, you (whole gentle hearts do fear The smallest mist or mourle that creeps on floure.) May now perciefe, both quike and tremble here, When Lion rough in wildfet rage doth roare.

Then know that I, one Snow the loyner am A Lion fell, not eels nor Lions dam: For if I shoul'd as Lion come in strife Into this place, twere pittie of my life.

Du. A verie gentle beaft, and of a good confequence.

Dem. The verie beaft at a beaft, my Lord, ye eare I law.

Lif. This Lion is a verie Fox for his valor.

Du. True, and a Goofe for his difcretion.

Dem. Not fo my Lord: for his valor cannot carrie his difcretion, and the Fox carries the Goofe.

Du. His difcretion I am sure cannot carrie his valor: for the Goofe carries not the Fox. It is well; leave it to his difcretion, and let vs hearken to the Moone.

Moone. This Lanthorne doth the honred Moone pre- fent.

Du. He shoul'd have wore the horns on his head.

Du. Here is no creft, and his horns are inufible, within the circumference.

Moone. This lant horn doth the honred Moone pre- fent: My felfe, the man I'm Moone doth feeme to be.

Du. This is the greateft error of all the reef: the man should be put into the Lanthorne. How is it els the man I'm Moone?

Dem. He does not come there for the candle.

For you fee, it is already in fluffe.

Du. I am wearable of this Moone; would he would change.

Du. It appears by his fmal light of difcretion, that he is in the wane: but yet in courefle, in all reafon, we muft fay the time.

Lif. Proceed Moone.

Moone. All that I have to fay, is to tell you, that the Lanthorne is the Moone; I, the man in the Moone; this thorne buffe, my thorne buffe; and this dog, my dog.

Dem. Why all thefle should be in the Lanthorne for they are in the Moone. But silence, heere comes Thubby.

Enter Thubby.

Thubby. This is old Ninnies tomb: where is my love?

Lyon. Oh.

The Lien roars, Thubby runs off.

Dem. Well roard Lion.

Du. Well run Thubby.

Dem. And then came Piramus.

Lif. And to the Lyon vanilht.
And farewell friends, thus Thubia ends;
Adieu, adieu, adieu.

Duke, Moonshine & Lion are left to bury the dead.

Duke, Moonshine & Lion are left to bury the dead.

But, No, I assure you, the wall is downe, that parted their Fathers. Will it please you to see the Epilogue, or to hear a Bergomask dance between two of our company?

Duke, No Epilogue, I pray you; for your play needs no excuse. Neuer excuse; for when the players are all dead, there need none to be blamed. Marry, if hee that writ it had past Faramus, and hung himselfe in Thibius garter, it would have beene a fine Tragedy: and if it is truely, and very notably charg'd. But come, your Burgomase; let your Epilogue alone.

The iron tongue of midnight hath rold twelve,
Louters to bed, 'tis almost Fairy time,
I feare we shall out-sleepe the coming morne.
As much as we this night have over-watcht,
This palpable greffe play hath well beguil'd
The heavy gate of night, Sweet friends to bed.
A forint night hold we this solemnity.
In nightly Revels; and new iollitie.

Enter Page.

Page. Now the hungry Lyons roars,
And the Wolfe beholdeth the Moone:
Whilest the heavy ploughman inore,
All with weary pace fore-done.
Now the walled brands doe glow,
Whil'st the scratch owle, stretching loud,
Puts the wretch that lies in woe,
In remembrance of a thround.
Now it is the time of night,
That the grases, all gaping wide,
Every one lets forth his spight,
In the Church-way paths to glide.
And we Fairies, that do runne,
By the triple Heavens teame,
From the presence of the Sunne,
Following darknesse like a dreame,
Now are frolickke; not a Mouse
Shall disturbe this hallowed house.
I am sent with broome before,
To sweep the dust behind the doore.

Enter King and Queen of Fairies, with their traine.

Ob. Through the house give glistening light,

By the dead and drowsie hert,
Euerie Elfe and Faerie spright,
Hop as light as bird from brier,
And this Ditty after me, sing and dance it trippinglie.

To each words a warbling note,
Hand in hand, with Faerie grace,
Will we sing and bleffe this place.

The Song.

Now until the breaks of day,
Through this house each Fairy strays,
To the left Brides bed will we,
Which by us shall blessed be:
And the issue there create,
Euer shall be fortunate:
So shall all the couples three,
Euer true in loving be:
And the bliss of Nature's hand,
Shall not in their vine stand.
Neuer more hereby nor scarce,
Nor make prodigious such as are Despised in Naturall,
Shall upon their children be.
With high field dew conferate,
Euer Fairy take his gate,
And each generally chamber blest,
Through this Palace with sweet peace,
Euer shall in safety rest,
As the corner of a blest,
The day, make no stay;
Meet me by day's break.

Robin. If we Oxidowses have offended,
Thynke but this (and all is mended)
That you have but flumbed herte,
While these visions did appeare.
And this weak and idle theame,
No more yeelding but a dreame,
Centles, doe not reprehend.
If you pardon, we will mend.
And so I am an honest Page,
If we have vntearne lucke,
Now to scape the Serpents tongue,
We will make amends etc long:
Else the Page's alyar call.
So good night vndr you all.
Give me your hands, if we be friends,
And Robin shall restore amends.

FINIS.
The Merchant of Venice.

Actus primus.

Enter Antonio, Salterio, and Salario.

Ant. No faith I know not why I am so sad, it wearies me: you say it wearies you; but how I caught it, lost it, or came by it, What's made of, whereof it is born, I am to learn: and such a want-wit fadness makes of me, That I have much ado to know my selfe.

Sal. Your minde is toising on the Ocean, there where your Argosies with portly sail, Like Signioro and rich Burgers on the flood, Or as it were the Pagantes of the sea, Do out-pierce the periss Trachhters That curse to them, do them reuerence As they flye by them with their woven wings.

Saler. Believe me sir, had I such ventur forth, the better part of my affections would be with my hopes abroad. I should be still Plucking the graffe to know where fits the wind, Peering in Maps for ports, and peers, and rodes: And euer obseru'd that might make me feare Misfortune to my venturers, out of doubt Would make me sad.

Sal. My winde cooling my broth; Would blow me to an Ague, when I thought what harne my winde too great might doe at sea, I should not see the fahrour graffe runne, But I should think of shallows, and of flats, And eemy wealthy Andrew docks in land, Vailing her high top lowest then her ribs To kishe her burial; I should goe to Church And see the holy edifice of stone, And not bethinke me straight of dangerous rocks, Which touching but my gentle Veiffels side Would fester all her spicces on the fireames, Enrobe the roting waters with my flizes, And in a word, but euen now worth this, And now worth nothing. Shall I have the thought To think on this, and shall I lacke the thought That such a thing becausa'd would make me sad? But tell not me, I know Antonio.

I'm sad to thinke upon his merchandize.

Ant. Believe me no, I thank my fortune for it, My venturers are not one bottome trusted; Nor to one place; nor is my whole estate Vpon the fortune of this present yeere: Therefore my merchandize makes me not sad.

Sal. Why then you are in loue.

Ant. Ee, ee.

Sal. Not in loue neither, then let us say you are sad.

Ant. Not in loue neither, then let us say you are sad.

Sal. Because you are not merry, and 'were as eale.

Ant. For you to laugh and leap, and say you are merry.

Sal. Because you are not sad. Now by two-headed Ante.

Ant. Nature hath fram'd strange fellowes in her time.

Sal. Some that will euermore peep through their eyes, And laugh like Parrots at a bag-piper, And other of such vijner apecf, That they'll not show their teeth in way of smile, Though Nefer swear the jeit be laughable.

Enter Baffano, Lorenzo, and Gratiano.

Sala. Here he comes Baffano, Your most noble Kinsman, Gratiano, and Lorenzo. Faryewell, We leaue you now with better company.

Ant. Your worthe friends had not prevented me.

Sal. Your worthe is very decree in my regard.

Ant. I take it your owne busines calls on you, And you embrace this occasion to depart.

Sal. Good morrow my good Lords. (when?)

Bass. Good Signiories both, when shall we laugh here?

Ant. You grow exceeding strange: must it be so?

Sal. We'll make our levities to attend on yours, Exeunt Salario, and Salario.

Lor. My Lord Baffano, since you have found Antonio, We two will leave you but at dinner time I pray you hau in minde where we must meete.

Bass. I will not saie you.

Grat. You look not well signiour Antonio,

You have too much respect upon the world: They loose it that doe buy it with much care, Beleeue me you are marvellously chang'd.

Ant. I hold the world but as the world Gratiano; A stage where every man must play a part, And mine a sad one.

Grat. Let me play the foolie, With mirth and laughter let old wrinckles come, And let my Liver rather heat with wine, Then my heart cool with mortifying groans, Why should a man whose blood is warme within, Sit like his Grandfrite, cut in Alabasters? Sleep when he wakes? and creep into the laundres
The Merchant of Venice.

By being present? I tell thee what Antionia,
I leave thee, and it is my lone that speaks:
There are a sort of men, whose whole vigrants
Do own a man and mantle like a standing pond,
And do with sillfulness entertain them.
With purpose to be drest in an opinion
Of wickedness, gravity, profound conceit,
As who should say, I am an Oracle,
And when I open my lips, let no dogge bark.
O my Antionia, I do know of thee
That therefore only are reputed wise,
For saying nothing; when I am venere lute
If they should speak, would almost dam those ears
Which hearing them would call their brothers fooles:
Ille tell thee more of this another time.
But this not with this melancholy bate.
For this foolde Gudgin, this opinion:
Come good Lorenzo, farywell a while,
Ile end my exhortation after dinner.

Lor. Well, we will leave you then till dinner time.
I must be one of those fame dumbe wife men,
For Gratiano never lets me speak.

Grat. Well, keep me company but two yeares mo,
Thou shalt not know the sound of thine owne tongue.

Ant. Far you well, Ile grow a talker for this geare.

Grat. Thanks for silence, for silence is only commendable
In a few tongue trid'd, and a maid not vendible.

Exit. Ant. It is that any thing now.

Baf. Gratiano speaks an infinite deals of nothing,
More then any man in all Venice, his reasons are two Grains of where a hid in two buhlicks of chaffe; you shall Feel all day ere you finde them, & when you have them
They are not worth the search.

Ant. Well: tell me now, what Lady is the fame
To whom you fivre a secret Pilgrimage
That you to day promis'd to tell me of?

Baf. Tell me unkowne to you Antionia
How much I have disable myd cene,
By something thowing a more dwelling port
Then my fame names would grant continuance:
Nor do I now make none to be abridgd
From such a noble rate, but my checle care
Is to come fairely off from the great debts
Wherein in time something too prodigious
 Hath left me ggd'd: to you Antionia
I owe the moist in money, and in love,
And from your love I have a warranct.

To whom I have my doubts and pursipets,
How to get clearc of all the debts I owe.

Ant. I pray you good Bafio to let me know it,
And if it stand as you your selfe full do,
Within the eye of honour, be affir'd
My perf, my peron, my extremen meane
I ye all unkock'd to your occasion.

Baf. In my schoole days, when I had lost one shafft
I shot his fellow of the selfsame flight
The selfsame way, with more adoisd pheast
To finde the other forth, and by adventuring both,
I had found both. I urge this child-honde proofe,
Because what followes is pure innocenc.
I owne you much, and like a wilful youth,
That which I owe is lost: but if you pleasure
To shooe another arrow that selfe way
Which you did shot the first, I do not doubt,
As I will watch the yame: Or to finde both,
Or bring your latter hazard backe againe,

And thankfully reft debter for the first.

Ant. You know me well, and herein spend but time
To warme up my cause with circumstance,
And out of doubts you doe more wrong.

In making question of my extremet
Then if you had made waffe of all I have;
Then doe but say to me what I shoule doe
That in your knowledge may be me be done,
And I am prettli into it: therefore speake.

Baf. In Belmonit is a lady richly left,
And she is faire, and faire then that word,
Of wondrouses vertues, sometimes from her eyes
I did receeve faire speechleffe messages:
Her name is Portia, nothing vnderallowed
To Cato's daughter, Brutus Portia.

Nor is the wide world ignorant of her worth,
For the four windes blow in from eyery coast
Renowned futors, and her funny looks
Hang on her temples like a golden sheepe,
Which makes her feast of Belmonit Chiefeest,
And many Jasos come in quest of her.
O my Antionia, had I but the means
To hold a riall place with one of them,
I have a minde preages me fuch thrift,
That I should questiones be fortunate.

Ant. Thou knowest that all my fortunes are at sea.
Neither have I money, nor commodity
To raise a present cunning, therefore goe forth
Try what my credit can in Pune doce,
That shall be backe even to the vermonth,
To furnish thee to Belmonit to faire Portia.
Goe presently enquire, and so will I.
Where money is, and I no question make
To have it of my trust, or for my sake.

Enter Portia with her waiting woman Nerissa.

Portia. By my troth Nerissa, my little body is a weare
Of this great world.

Ner. You would be sweet Madam, if your misteries were in the fame abundance as your good fortunes are:
And yet for ought I see, they are as sickke that wither with too much, as they that flake with nothing; it is no fume happineffe therefor to bee facet in the meane, supertificio comes foder by white haires, but competence lives longer.

Portia. Good sentences, and well pronounc'd.

Ner. They would be better if well followed.

Portia. If to doe were as easie as to know what were good to doe, Chappells had beene Churche, and poore mens cottages Princes Palacess; it is a good Diuine that followes his owne instructiouns; I can easie teach twentie what were good to be done, thence be one of the twentie to follow mine owne teaching: the braine may de ufe lawes for the blood, but a hot temper leaspe a cold decree, such a hate is madneffe the youth, to skip the mether of good coumafie the cripple; but this reason is not in fasion to choosse me a husband: O me, the word choose, I may neither chooife whom I would,
and refuse whom I dislike, for is the wil of a living daugh ter curd by the will of a dead father: it is not hard Ner issa, that I cannot chooife one, nor refuse none.

Ner. Your father was ever vertuous, and holy men at ther death had good inspirations, therefore the lette terie that hee hath defiued in these three cheeffs of gold, fluer, and leades, whereof who chooises his meaning, chooses you, will no doubt never be cho'ne by any rig-right but one who shall right lust: but what warmth is there in your affection towards any of these Princely Lords, they have acquainted me with their determinations, which is indee to returne to their home, and to trouble you with no more fa1xe, vnille you may be won by some other fort than your Fathers imposition, depending on the Caskets.

Par. If I live to be as old as Sibilla, I will dye as shafe as Dianas: vnille I be obtained by the manner of my Fathers will: I am glad this parrell of woore are so reasonable, for there is not one among them but I doste on his verie absence: and I with them a fare departure.

Par. Doe you not remember Lacie in your Fathers time, a Venesian, a Scheller and a Sauldier that came hither in company of the Marquesse of Monteferrat?

Par. Yes, yes, it was Baffano, as I think, so was he called.

Par. True Madam, hee of all the men that euer my foolish eyes look'd upon, was the best decturing a faire
Lady.

Par. I remember him well, and I remember him worthy of thy praife.

Enter a Serving-man.

Skr. The fourt Strangers seek you Madam to take their leave: and there is a fore-runne com from a fit, the Prince of Monac, who brings word the Prince his Maister will be here to night.

Par. If I could but the fit welcome with so good hearts as I can bid the other fore farewell, I should glad of his approach: if he have the condition of a Saint, and the composition of a swall, I had rather he should be to me then wise me. Come Baffano, stirr go before; whiles wee shus the gate vpon one wiser, another knocks at the doore.

Execution.

Enter Baffano with Skylocke the Jew.

Skr. Three thousand ducats, well,
Baff. 1st, for three months.
Skr. For three months, well.
Baff. For the which as I told you,
Antonio shall be bound.
Skr. Antonio shall become bound, well.
Baff. May you fitted me? Will you pleasure me?
Shall I know your answere.
Skr. Three thousand ducats for three months,
Antonio bound.
Baff. Your answere to that.
Skr. Antonio is a good man.
Baff. Have you heard any imputation to the contrary.

Skr. How no, no, no: my meaning in saying he is a good man, is to have you understand me that he is sufficient, yet his means are in suspension: he hath an Augustie bond to Tripolis, another to the Indies. I undersstand moreover upon the Rylla, he hath a third at Mexico a fourth for England, and other ventures he hath squandered abroad, but ships are but boardes, Saylers but men, there be land rats, and water rats, water theefes, and land theefes, I meane Pyraets, and then there is the perill of waters, windes, and tocks: the man is not withstanding sufficient, three thousand ducats, I think I may take his bond.

Baff. Be assur'd you may.

I. ii. 34—I. iii. 29

188
Enter Antonio.

But more, for that in low simplicity
He lends out money gratis and brings downe
The rate of vance here with vs in Venice.
If I can catch him once upon the hip,
I will redeem the ancient grudge I bear him.
He hates our facted Nation, and his sailes
Even there where Merchants most doe congregate
On me, my bagses, and my well-worne thrift,
Which he calls interest: Curfed be my Trybe
If I forgive him.

This is signior Antonio.

How like a fawning publican he lookes.
I hate him for he is a Christian:
But more, for that in low simplicity
He lends out money gratis and brings downe
The rate of vance here with vs in Venice.
If I can catch him once upon the hip,
I will redeem the ancient grudge I bear him.
He hates our facted Nation, and his sailes
Even there where Merchants most doe congregate
On me, my bagses, and my well-worne thrift,
Which he calls interest: Curfed be my Trybe
If I forgive him.

Shy. This I do protest, most confident.

Shy. I am not to be brooked in my present flore,
And by the neere present of my memorie
I cannot indue the grosse

Of full three thousand ducats: what of that?

But fill you shall have moneys, you say so?
You that did waste your runes upon my head,
And foote me as you spurn a stranger curte
Ouer your threshold, moneys is your fuite.
What should I say to you? Should I not say,
Hath a dog money? Is it possible
A curre should lend three thousand ducats? or Shall I bend low, and in a bond-mans key
With bated breath, and whispering humbleness,
Say this: FAire sir, you spurt me on Wednesday last;
You spurted me such a day, another time
You calld me dog: and for these curtseys
He lend you thus much moneys.

And what is to be done?
To spurt on thee againe, to spurn thee too,
If thou wilt lend this money, lend it not
As to thy friends, for when did friendship take
A breede of bairanne metial of his friend?
But lend it rather to thine enemie,
Whoe he shall kneel and quail with better face
Exe the penalties.

Shy. Why look you how you do stand,
Would I were friends and yet have your love,
Forget the flames that you hare flamed me with,
Supply your present wants, and take no doite
Of vance for my moneys, and youre not hear me,
This is kinde I offer.

Shy. This is kindnesse.

Shy. This kindnesse will I shewe,
Goe with me to a Notarie, seale me there
Your single bond, and in a merrie sport.
If you reparie me not on such a day,
In such a place, such sum or sums as are Express in the condition, let the forfeite
Be nominated for an equall pound
Of your faire meat, to be cut off and taken
In what part of your body it please with me.

Shy. Content in faith, Ile seale to such a bond,
And say there is much kindnesse in the Jew.

Baff. You
The Merchant of Venice.

If I were ruled by cornets.

As is by if. If I should break his dare, what should I gaine.

By the election of the forfeiture?

A pound of man's flesh taken from a man, is not so estimable, profitable neither.

As flesh of Mutonis, Beelzebub, or Gostess, I say.

To buy his favour, I extend this friendship,

I will take it; so if not allow,

And for my loue, I praiy you wrong me not.

Then meete me to thristh at the Notaries,

Give him direction for this unsure bond,

And I will goe and put the ducats fraite.

See to my house left in the sealefull gard

Of an unsirrific knave; and pretendice

I be with you. Exeunt.

As hee the gentle Jew. This Hebrew will turne

Christian, he growes kind.

I like not faire teames, and a villaines minde,

Come on, is this there can be no dissiace,

My Shippes come home a month before the dale.

Enter Moroseus at last. More all sobbous, and three or foure followers accordingly, with Porsia, Nerrissa, and their teames.

Flo. Cornets.

Mars. Mislike me not for my complexion,

The shadowed hueste of the burnish'd sunne,

To whom I am neighbour, and nearer bred.

Bring me the fairest creature Northward borne,

Where Phoebus fire (rare and sweete to sally,

And let us make enisision for your loue,

To prove whose blood is reddest, his or mine.

I tell thee Lady this aipeft of mine,

Hath feared the valiant, (by my loue I sweare)

The beft regarded Virgins of our Clyme

Haueloud it to: I would not change this hue,

Except to streake your thoughts my gentle Queene.

Por. In teames of choise I am not folie led

By nice direction of a maidsens eyes:

Besides, the lustrie of my defenience

Bars me the right of voluntarie choosing:

But if my father had not trusted me,

And hedged me by his witts to yeidle my felde

His wife, who winnes me by that contenct I told you,

Your felde (renowned Prince) than flond as faire

As any commer I have look'd on yet

For my affection.

Mars. Even for that I thank you

Therefore I pray you leade me to the Caskets,

To trie my fortune: By this symble:

That flew the Sophie, and a Persian Prince

That won three fields of Sultan Solyman,

I would once flare the stermest ices that looke:

Out-brace the heart most daring on the earth:

Plucke the young lucking Cups from the fire Beare,

Ye, mocke the Lion when he rores for pray

To win the Lady. But alas, the while

If Heracles and Lycurgus were alive

Which is the better man, the greater throw

May turne by fortune from the weakest hand:

So is Alcidus beaten by his rage,

And lo may I, blinde fortune leading me

Mifie that which one unworthier may attaine,

And die with greying.

Por. You must take your chance,

And either not attempt to choose at all,

Or weake before you choose, if you choose wrong.

Never to speake to Ladie afterward

In way of marriage, therefore be advis'd.

Mars. Nor will not, come bring me into my chance.

Por. First forward to the temple, after dinner

Your hazard shall be made.

Mars. Good fortune then,

To make me blest or curst among men.

Enter the Clowns alone.

Cla. Certainly, my confidence will leere me to run from this Jew my Master: the fiend is at mine elbow, and temptes me, laying to me, Delude, Lancelot Lobbe, good

Lancedel, on good Lobbe, or good Lancedel Lobbe, ye your legs, take the stirs, run awei: my confidence faires

no; take heed honest Lancedel, take heed honest Lobbe, or ass-horse honest Lancedel Lobbe, doe not runne, forone running with thye helle: well, the most coragious fiend bids me packe, fits faiers the fiend, away faiers

the fiend, for the heauens route up a braue minde faiers

the fiend, and run; well, my confidence hanging about the necke of my heart, faiers were wilde to me: my honest friend Lancedel, being an honest mans fonne, or rather an honest womans fonne, for indeede my Father did nothing: and, some grown toope he had a kind of faire; we, my confidence faiers Lancedel loue not, loue faire the fiend, loue not my confidence, confidence fai

you conteaile well, fiend fai you conteaile well, to be buld by my confidence I should stave with the Jew

my Master, (who God blefe the marke) is a kind of di-uell: and to run away from the Jew I should be ruled by the fiend, who faying your reuerence is the diuell him

selve: certainly the Jew is the very diuell incarnation, and in my confidence, my confidence is a kind of hard confidence, to offer to conteaile me to stave with the Jew;

the fiend giues the more friendly counfaile: I will runne fiend, my heelles are at your commandement, I will runne.

Enter old Godboe with a Bajet.

God. Master yong-man, you I praiy you, which is the waie to Master Jewes?

Lou. O heavenes, this is my true begotten Father, who being more than rand-blinde, high gruel blinde, knows me not, I will trie confusions with him.

God. Master yong Gentleman, I praiy you which is the waie to Master Jewes.

Lou. Turne upon your right hand at the next turn-
The Merchant of Venice.

Not him, I will run as far as God has anie ground. O rare fortune, here comes the man, to him Father, for I am a few if serue the few anie longer.

Enter Baffino with a follower or two.

Baff. You may doe so, but let it be so haft that tupper be receiue at the farthest by fine of the clocke; see these Letters deliver'd, put the Letters to making, and define Gattiano to come anonie to my lodging.

Lan. To him Father.

Baff. God bleffe your worship.

Baff. Gramercie, would't thou ought with me.

Baff. Here's my fonne, a poore boy.

Lan. Not a poore boy fir, but the rich Ives man that would firs as my Father fhall fpecifie.

Baff. He hath a great infection firs, as one would fay to feuele.

Lan. Indeede the short and the long is, I ferue the few, and haue a definie as my Father fhall fpecifie.

Baff. His Maifter and he (faueing your worshipes reuerence) are scarce enter avec.

Lan. To be briefe, the verie truth is, that the few haue done me wepest, doth cauie me as my Father being I hope an old man fhall frutife unto you.

Baff. I have here a druff of Doones that I would beftow upon your worship, and my fuite is.

Lan. In verie briefe, the fuite is impertinent to my felle, as your worship shall know by this honest old man, and though I fay it, though old man, yet poore man my Father.

Baff. One speake for both, what would you?

Lan. Serue you firs.

Baff. That is the verie defect of the mater firs.

Baff. I know thee well, thou haft obtain'd thy fuite.

Baff. Thy Master spake with me this dtale, and haft preferc'd thee, if it be prefereable.

Baff. To leave a rich Ives tenure, to become

The followers of to poore a Gentleman.

Cle. The old preuor is verie well parted betwene my Master Shyfley and you firs, you have the grace of God firs, and he hath enough.

Baff. Thou speakest it well; go Father with thy Son, Take leaue of thy old Master, and enquire

My lodging out, give him a Lucerne

More garded then his fellows fee it done.

Cle. Father, in I cannot get a Seruice,yet, I have none more in this town, but here is a faire table which cloth offer to serue upon a booke, I shall have good fortune; goe too, here's a simple life of life, here's a fmall treffe of wines, also, fifteen wines is nothing, a leaue widdows and nine maides is a simple coming in for one man, and then to escape crowning thrice, and to be in perfon of my life with the edge of a featherbed, here are fimple fakes, I, if Fortune be a woman, she's a good woman for this gear. Father come, it take my leaue of the few in the twinking.

Exit Cleone.

Baff. I praye thee good Leonard think on this,

These things being bought and orderly betlowed

Return in haste, for I do feaft to night.

My biff offeend acquaintance, he thee geue.

Lan. My biff enuours shall be done here, enter Cleone.

Oxen, Where's your Matier.

Lan. Yonder.
Lew. Yonder is he walkes.
Gra. Signor Baffiano.
Bass. Gratiano.
Gra. I have a fute to you.
Bass. You haue obtain'd it.
Gra. You must not assaie me, I must goe with you to Belmot.
Bass. Why then you must: but heare thee Gratiano, Thou art to wilde, to rude, and bold of voyce, Passes that become thee happily enough, And in such eyes as ours appeare not faultes; But where they are not knowne, why then they show Something too libeall, pray thee take patience To alay with some cold drops of modestie Thy skipping spiritt, leaft through thy wilde behaviour I be misconnet in the place I goe to, And looke my hopes.
Gra. Signor Baffiano, heare me, If I doe not put on a sober latten, Talk with refpeete, and awarde but now and than, Weare prayer bookes in my pocket, looke demurely, Nay more, while grace is flying more mine eyes Thus with my hat, and ftight and say Amen: Vfe all the obferuation of a scholar Like one well studi'd in a tadt oldent To pleae his Grandam, puer tru't me more.
Bass. Well, weft I see your bearing.
Gra. Nay but I bare toght, you shall not gage me By what we doe to night.
Bass. Noe that were pittie, I would intreate you rather to put on Your boldft fute of mirth, for we haue friends That purpose merriment: but far you well, I haue none bufineffe.
Gra. And I mutt to Lorenzo and the ref, But we will vifitate you at supper time.

Exit.
Enter Ifficio and the Cloune.

Iff. I am forry thou wilt leaue my Father fo, Our house is hell, and thou a merrie duell Did it rob it of some taste of teodionifie; But fcarce thee well, there is a ducate for thee, And Lancelot, foone at fupper, if you thinke Lorenzo, who is thy new Master's geff, give him this Letter, doe it secretly, And fo farwell: I would not haue my Father See me takle with thee.

Clo. Aude, tears exhibit my tongue, most beautifull Pagan, moft sweete Ifficio, it a Christian do not, play the knave and get thee, I am much deceiued; but adue, these foolish drops doe some what drown my manly spirit: adue.

Exit.

Iff. Farewell good Lancelot, Alacke, what hauious times is it in me To be affhamed to be my Fathers childe, But though I am a daughter to his blood, I am not to his manners - O Lorenzo, If thou keepe promife I shall end this strife, Become a Christian, and thy loving wife.

Exit.
Enter Gratiano, Lorenzo, Starino, and Salucio.

Lor. Nay, we will flinke away in supper time, Diligive vs at my lodging, and returne all in an houre.
Gra. We haue not made good preparation.
Sul. We haue not spoke vs yet of Torch-bearers.

Sal. To vse vndele it may be quantitely ordered, And better in my mindes not underftooke.
Lor. I am now but foure of cloake, we haue two houres To fumifh vs friend Lucente what's the newest.
Enter Lucente with a Letter.
Lan. And it shall pleae you to breake vp this, shall it feeme to signifie.
Lor. I know the hand, in faith tis a faire hand And whiter then the paper it writ on, I the faire hand that went.
Gra. Lour newses in faith.
Lor. By your leisure fir.
Lor. Whither goest thou?
Lor. Marry fir to bid my old Master the Jew to sup to night with my new Master the Christian.
Lor. Hold here, take this, tell gentle Ifficio I will not tall her, speake it privately: Go Gentleman, will you prepare you for this Maske to night, I am prou'd of a Torch-bearer.

Exit.
Sul. I marry, we be gone about it ftra t.
Sul. And to well I.
Lor. Meet me and Gratiano at Gratiano lodging
Some howe hence.
Sul. To a good we do fo.
Exit.
Gra. Was not that: Letter from fair Ifficio?
Lor. I must receaue tell thee all, she hath directed How I shall take her from her Fathers houfe, What gold and jewels she is furnifhit with, What Page five the hain in readinesse: If ere the Jew his Father come to heaven, It will be for his gentle daughters sake; And never dare misfortune croffe her foote, Vnleffe she doe it vnder this excufe, That she is afficte to a faithlefe Jew:
Come goe with me, perufe this as thou goest, Freake ifficio fhall be my Torch-bearer.

Exit.
Enter Ifficio, and his man that was the Cloune.

Iff. Well, thou fhal fea, thy eyes fhall be thy judge, The difference of old Shykege and Baffiano;
What Ifficio, thou fhalt not gernanize As thou haft done with me: what Ifficio? And fpeepe, and fpeepe, and read apparell out.
Why Ifficio I say.
Clo. Why Ifficio.
Clo. Your worship was wont to tell me I could doe nothing without bidding.

Enter Ifficio.
Iff. Call you? what is your will?
Shy. I am bid forth to suppe Ifficio, There are my Keyes: but wherefor should I goe? I am not bid for love, they flatter me. But yet I goe in haste, to fee deede vpon The predigall Christian. Ifficio my guide, Looke to my houfe, I am right loath to goe, There is fome ill a burning toward my ref, For I did dreame of none but bag to night.
Clo. I befeech you for goe, my yong Master Doh expet your reproach.
Shy. So doe I his.
Clo. And they have confer'd together, I will not say you shall fee a Maske, but if you doe, then it was not for nothing that my note fell a bleeding on blacke monsy.
Exit, Shy. When you have finished this scene, unlock my doors, and when you hear the drum and the vile squealing of the way-side Fife, Clamber not you up to the casements then; Nor shut your head into the publice street To gaze on Christian fools with vanitif faces: But stop my housewara ears, I measure my casements, Let not the sound of shalow topporie enter My sober houe. By Jacob's staff I care, I have no mind of lasting durt to night: But I will goe: goe you before me faire, Say I will come. Clo. I will goe before fir. Misiris looke out as window for all this: There will come a Christian by, Will be worth a lewes eye. Shy. What fates that fool^ of Hearts off-spring? ha. Inf. His words were farewell misiris nothing else. Shy. The patch is kind enough, but a huge leider: So with-flow in profit, but he fleeps by day. More then the wild cat: dozens have not with me, Therefore I part with him, and part with him To one that would have him helpe to waste. His borrowed purs. Well hissing goes in, Perhaps I will resuite immediately; Don't as I bid you, shut doores after you, shut binde, shut finde, A provbe be never stale in thirstie minde. Exit. Inf. Farewell, and if my fortune be not croft, I haue Fathers, you a daughter lovt. Exit.

Enter the Maskers, Gratiani and Saline.

Gratiani. This is the penthouse vnder which Lorenzo Defired vto make a fland. Saline. His house is shalow ott. Gratiani. And it is meruall he out-dwels his house, For looters euer run before the clock. Saline. Oten times faflies Venus Pudiciss flye To fleale loues bonds new made,then they are wont To keepe obligeed faith Vernonster. Gratiani. That euer holds,who rife why from a feast With that keen approche that he fits downe? Where is the horse that doth ventrue againe His tedious measures with the vabated fire, That he did pace them first: all things that are, Are with more spirit chafed then enjoy'd. How like a younger or a prodigall The skarfed barke parts from her native bay, HUDG'd and embrased by the stumper windes: How like a prodigall doth she returne With ouer-wither'd ribs and ragged failles, Leane,rent, and beggar'd by the stumper windes?

Enter Lorenzo.

Saline. Neere comes Lorenzo, more of this hereafter. Lorenzo. Sweete friends, your patience for my long abode, Not I, but my affaires haue made you wait. When you shall pleasa to play the theesers for wives He warths as long for you then approch.

Enter Iffiana.

Iffiana. Who is it you talke me for more certainty, Albeit lle sweare that I do know your tongue. Lorenzo. And thy Loue. Iffiana. Lorenzo certaine, and my loue indeed, For who loue I too much? and now who knowes But you Lorenzo, whether I am yours? Lorenzo. Haueen and thy thoughts are wildnes that thou art. Iffiana. Hearc, catch this caskets, it is worth the paines, I am glad 'tis night, you do not looke on me, For I am much afraied of my exchange: But loue is blinde, and louers cannot see The pretty follies that them selves commit, For if they could, Coni would himslef would blushe To see me thus transformed to a boy. Lorenzo. Defend, for you must be my torch-bearer. Iffiana. What, must I hold a Candle to my therns? They in themselfes good tooth are too light, Why, 'tis an office of discord Loue, And I shoul be obser'd. Lo. So you are sweet. Euen in the lowes garnish of a boy but come at once, For the clock night doth play the run-away, And we are flaid for at Bassiano's greet. Iffiana. I will make fast the doores and gild my selfe With some more ducats, and be with you straight. Lorenzo. Now by my head, a gentle, and no few. Lo. Befeev me but I love her heartily, For she is wise, if I can judge of her, And faire she is, that mine eyes be true, And true she is as she hath prou'd her selfe: And therefore like her selfe, wife, fair, and true, Shall she be placed in my constant loue.

Enter Iffiana.

Iffiana. What, art thou come? en gentlemen, away, Our masking mates by this time for vs flay. Exit.

Enter Antonio.

Antonio. Who's there? Gratiani. Signior Antonio. Antonio. I fee, fea, Gratiani, where are all the rest? Gratiani. To nine a clocke, our friends all flay for you, No maske to night, the winde is most against, Bassiano presently will goe aboard, I have sent twenty out to fecke for you. Gratiani. I am glad on't, I defire no more delight Then to be vnder faile, and gone to night. Exeunt.

Enter Portia with Morosco, and both their trains.

Portia. Goe, draw aside the curtaine, and discover The fearefull Caskets to this noble Prince: Now make your choice. Morosco. The first of gold, who this inscription beares, Who chooseth me, shall gain what men defire, The second flater, which this promisie carrieth, Who chooseth me, shall get as much as he determination. This third, will lead with warning all as blunt, Who chooseth me, must give and hazard all he hath, How shall I know of I doe chooie the right? Portia.
How shall I know if I do choose the right.

Por. The one of them contains my picture Prince,
If you choose that, then I am yours withall.

Mor. Some God direct my judgment, let me see,
I will survey the inscriptions, backe againe:
What sites this leaden casket?

Who choose thee, muft give and hazard all he hath.

Muff guess, for what? for lead, hazard for lead?

This casket threatens men that hazard all.

Done in hope of faire advantages:

A golden minde floopes not to showes of droffe,
He then nor give nor hazard ought for lead.

What sites the Siluer with her virgin hue?

Who choose thee, shall get as much as he deferves.

As much as he deferves; paufe there Maros,
And weigh thy value with an even hand,
If thou beft rated by thy estimation.

Thou dost deferve enough, and yet enough
May not extend to farre as to the Lady.
And yet to be afraid of my defering,
Were but a weak dissembling of my felfe.

As much as I deferve, why that's the Lady.
I doe in birth deferve her, and in fortunes,
In graces, and in qualities of breeding:
But more then thefe, in love I do deferve.

What if there be no further, but choose her?
Let's fee once more this faying graud in gold.

Who choose thee shall gain all that many men defire:
Why that's the Lady, all the world defires her:
From the four corners of the earth they come to kiffe this fhrine, this mortall breathing Saint.
The Hiccanion deferts, and the vaffe wildes
Of wide Arabia are as throughfare now.
For Princes to come view faire Porcia.
The waterie Kingdome, whose ambitious head
Spets in the face of heauen, is no barre
To stop the forraigne spirits, but they come
As one brooke to feare faire Porcia.

One of thefe three contains her heauenly picture.
Isn't it that Lead contains her? were damnation
To think to beafe a thought, it was too grofe.
To rib her fecret cloath in the obscure grave:
Or shall I think in Siluer she's immortall:
Being ten times undervalued to pride gold;
O finfull thought, never so rich a flem.

Was fen in worfe then gold? They have in England
A coyne that beares the figure of an Angell
Stamp't in gold, but that's infclupt upon:
But here an Angell in a golden bed
Lies all within. Deliver me the key:
Here doe I choose, and thriue as I may.

Por. These take it Prince, and if my forme lye there
Then I am yours:

Mor. O hell! what have we here, a carrion death,
Within whose empie eye there is a written scroule;
I read the writing.

Mor. Cold indeede, and labour low,
Then farewell heare, and welcome freit:

Por. A gentle riddance; draw the curtain, go:
Let all of this complication choose me so.

Exeunt.

Enter Salario and Solanio.

Sal. Why man I saw Baffiano under fayle;
With him is Gratiano gone along;
And in their ship I am sure Lorenzo is not.

Sal. The villain Jew with oterries raid the Duke.
Who went with him to feach Baffianos ship,

Sal. He comes too late, the flip was vnderfaile;
But there the Duke was gien to vnderfland
That in a Goudilo were leone together.

Lorenzo and his amorous infidels.

Besides, Antonio certified the Duke
They were not with Baffiano in his ship.

Sal. I never heard a passion fo confend,
So strange, outrageous, and so variable,
As the dogge Jew did vter in the streets;
My daughter, O my ducats, O my daughter,
Fled with a Chriftian, O my Chriftian ducats!

Sal. The law, my ducats, and my daughter;
A fealed bag, two fealed bags of ducats.

Of double ducats, flone from me by my daughter,
And jewels, two flones, two rich and precious flones,
Stone by my daughther: justice, finde the girl,
She hath the flones vpon her, and the ducats.

Sal. Why all the boyes in Venice follow him,
Crying his flones, his daughter, and his ducats.

Sal. Let good Antonio looke he keeps his day
Or he flall pay for this.

Sal. Marry well remembred,
I reafon'd with a Frenchman yesterdaze,
Who told me, in the narrow seas that part
The French and English, there mischared
A vellif of our countrey richly fought;
I thought vpon Antonio when he told me,
And with it in flence that it were not his.

Sal. To were well to tell Antonio what you hear,
Yet do not fuddainly, for it may grieve him.

Sal. A kinder Gentleman treads not the earth,
I saw Baffiano and Antonio part,

Baffiano told him he would make one heed:
Of his returne she anwercd, doe not fo,
Slubber not busineld for my fake Bafiano,
But flay the very ripling of the time,
And for the Iewe bond which he hath of me,
Let it not enter in your minde ol loue:
Be merry, and impoy your chiftlef thoughts
To courtship, and fuch fawe offentts of loue
As fhall conveniently become you there;
And even there his eye being big with teares,
Turning his face, he put his hand behind him,
And with affection wondrous fecible
He wrung Baffianos band, and fo they parted.

Sal. I think he only loues the world for you,
I pray thee let vs go and flut him out
And quicken his embraced heaineffe
With some delight or other.

Sal. Do we fo.

Enter Nerissa and a Servante.

Ner. Quick, quick, I pray thee, draw the curtain ftrait,

P. The

Enter Arragon, his train, and Portia. For Comets.

Por. Behold, there stand the caskets, noble Prince, If you choose that wherein I contain'd, Straight shall our nuptial rights be solemniz'd: But if thou fail, without more speech my Lord, You must be gone from hence immediately. Arr. I am employ'd by oath to obseure three things; First, never to vield to any one Which casket was I chose; next, if I fail Of the right casket, never in my life To woe a maid in way of marriage; Lastly, if I do fail in fortune of my choice, Immediately to leave you, and be gone.

Por. To these impositions every one doth swear That comes to hazard for my worthie selfe, Arr. And so have I addrest me, fortune now To my hearts hope: gold, fluer, and base lead, Who chooseth me must giue and hazard all he hath. You shall looke faker er I give or hazard, What sies the golden chaff, ha, let me see: Who chooseth me, shall giue what many men desire: What many men desire, that may be meant By the foole multitude that chooseth by chance, Not learning more then the fand eye doth teach, Which pries not to 'nterior, but like the Martlet Builds in the weather on the outward wall, Even in the force and rode of tasteuice. I will not chose what many men desire, Because I will not ympe with common spirits, And ranke me with the barbarous multitudes. Why then to thee thou Siluer treasure house, Tell me once more, what title thou dost bear; Who chooseth me shall get as much as he defurers: And well said too: for who shall goo about To cover Fortune, and be honourable Without the flame of merit, let none presume To weare an untested dignitie: O that estates, degrees, and offices, Were not deriid corruptly, and that cleere honour Were purchas from the meritt of the wearer: How many then should couer that stand bare? How many be commended that command? How much low pleanntry would then be ginned From the true feele of honor? And how much honor Plick from the chaffe and midle of the times, To be new fassuht? Well, but to my chosse, Who chooseth me shall get as much as he defurers, I will affume defeur; give me a key for this, And instantly valooyce my fortunes here. Por. Too long a pause for that which you finde there. Arr. What's here, the portrait of a blinks cow idiot PREsenting me a feedeule, I will reade it: How much unlike art thou to Portia? How much unlike my hopes and my defurers? Who chooseth me, shall have as much as he defurers. Did I defure no more then a foole's head, Is that my prize, are my defurers no better? Por. To offend and judge are different offices, And of opposed natures. Arr. What is here? The far: some times tried this.

Senen times tried that indumet in, That did never choose amie, Some there be that shadowes kiffe, Such have but a shadowes kiffe: There be foole aline Twine'd d'ore, and so was this: Take what wish you will to bed, I will ever be your head: So be gone, you are freed.

Arr. Still more fool I shall appeare By the time I linger here, With one foole head I came to wooo, But I goe away with two. Sweet adue, let keepe my oath, Patiently to bear my wrooth. Por. Thus hath the candle fing'd the mous: O these deliberate foole when they doo chooshe, They have the wldome by their wit to loose. Ner. The ancient saying is no here,ie, Hanging and wiuing goes by definicie. Por. Come draw the curtaine Nerissa. Enter Messinger. Mef. Where is my Lady? Por. Here, what would my Lord? Mef. Madam, there is a lighted at your gate A yong Venerian,one that comes before To signifie th'approaching of his Lord, From whom he bringeth suffiuble regrets; To wit (besides commend and curteous breath) Gifts of rich value; yet I have not seen So likely an Embassador of love. A day in April never came so sweete To show how colly Sommer was at hand, As this fore-spurer comes before his Lord. Por. No more I praye thee, I am halfe a-feard Thou wilt say anone he is some kin to thee, Thou spend it rich high-day wit in praising him: Come, come Nerissa, for I long to see Quicke Cupide Polit, that comes so mannerly. Ner. Tuscan Lord, loue if thy will it be. Exeunt.

Nekus Tertius.

Enter Solano and Salario.

Sol. Now, what newes on the Ryalto? Sal. Why yet it liues there vncheck, that Antonio hath a ship of rich lading wrackt on the narrow seas. The Goodwins I thinke they call the place, a very dangerous flat, and farall, where the carasses of many a tall ship, lie burial, as they say, if my golpits report be an honest woman of her word. Sol. I would the were at lying a golpif in that, as ever knape Ginger, or made her neighbours beleue the wept for the death of a third husband: but it is true, without any flips of prolixity, or crossinc the plaines high-way of talke, that the good Antonia, the honesf Antonia; thot I had a title good enough to keep his name company! Sal. Come, the full stop. Sal. Ha, what sayest thou, why the end is, he hath lost a ship.

Sal. 1
Shy. You knew none so well, none so well as you, of my daughter’s flight.

Sal. That’s certain, I for my part knew the tailor that made the wings the fellow withal.

Shy. And Shylock for his own part knew the bird was fledged, and then it is the completion of them all to leave the dam.

Shy. She is dam’d for it.

Sal. That’s certain, if the devil may be her judge.

Shy. My own flesh and blood to rebel.

Sal. Out upon it old carrion, rebels it at these yeares.

Shy. I say my daughter is my flesh and blood.

Sal. There is more difference between thy flesh and her, then between let and lucret, more between thy bloods, then there is between red wine and remnant; by tell us, doth he think whether Anthony haue had ane loffe at sea or no?

Shy. There I have another bad match, a bankrupt, a prodigall, who dare flerce his head on the Ryalco, a beggar that was vid to come so smug upon the Mart; let him look to his bond, he was wont to call me Vtiuer, let him looke to his bond, he was wont to lend money for a Christian curst, let him look to his bond.

Sal. Why I am sure I If he forfaite, thou wilt not take his flesh, what’s that good for?

Shy. To bate fifth withal, if it will feeke nothing else, it will feeke my reuenge; he hath disgrac’d me, and hindered me a halfe a million, laught at my loffes, moakt at my gains, learned my Nation, thwarted my bargains, cooled my friends, heated mine enemies, and what’s the reason? I am a Jew: Hath not a Jew eyes? hath not a few hands, organs, aumetions, fencies, affections, paffions, fed with the same food, hurt with the same weapons, subjeft to the same diseases, blesed by the same meanes, warmed and cooled by the same Winter and Sommer as a Christian is; if you pricc vs do we not bleed? if you tickle vs, do we not laugh? if you poison vs do we not die? and if you wrong vs shall we not revenge? if we are like you in the well, we will refemble you in that. If a Christian wrong a Jew, what is his humiliation reuenge? If a Christian wrong a Jew, what should his suf- ference be by Christian example? why revenge? The vil- lany ye teach me I will execute, and it shall goe hard but I will better the instruction.

Enter a man from Anthony.

Gentlemen, my maister Anthony is at his house, and desires to speake with you both.

Sal. We have beene vp, and downe to seeke him.

Enter Tuball.

Sal. Here comes another of the Tribe, a third cannot be march’d, yelasse the diuell himselfe turne lew. * Exeunt Gentlemen.

Shy. How now Tuball, what news from Genova? hath thou found my daughter?

Tub. I often came where I did heare of her, but could not finde her.

Shy. Why there, there, there, there, a diamond gone oit me two thousand ducats in Frankland, the curst neuer fell upon our Nation till now, I never felt it till now, two thousand ducats in that, and other precious, preci-
How manie cowards, whose hearts are all as false
As flayers of land, were ye yet upon their chins
The heards of Hercries and crowning Mars,
Who inward searches, have yous white as milke,
And yet in forme but vables exremest,
To render them redeemed. Looke on beautie,
And you shall fee its purshta by the weight,
Which therein workes a miracle in nature,
Making them lightweight that weare moft of it:
So are those crisp'd fineke golden locks
Which makes such wanton symbols with the winde
Upon surposed faireneffe, often knowne
To be the downe of a second head,
The feul that bred them in the Sepulcher.
Thus ornament is but the guiled shore.
To a most dangerous sea: the beautious scarfe
Vailign an Indian beautie; In a word,
The seeming truth which cunning times put on
To infrap the wisefe. Therefore then you gauide gold,
Hard food for Midas, I will none of thee.
Nor none of thee thou pale and common drudge.
Thus man and man: but thou, thou meaner lead
Which rather threatneft then doft promise ought,
Typhaleneffe moues me more then eloquence,
And here choose I, to be the consequency.

Por. How all the other passions fleet to ayre,
As doubtfull thoughts, and rath imbaces defpaire:
And fludding feare, and greene-eyed jealousie.
O loue be moderate, alay thy extafie,
In measure rain this toy, fo canst this excelle,
I feel too much thy bleffing, make it keepe,
For feare I surfeit.

Bajf. What finde I here?
Faire Portia counterfeit. What demic God
Hath come to neere creation? moue these ets?
Or whether riding on the backs of mine
Seeme they in motion? Here are seuer'd lips
Parted with fnger breath, fo sweet a bare
Should funder [such sweer] friends: here in her haires
The Painter plaies the Splder, and hath wounen
A golden meath tinsrap the hearts of men
Faller then gnats in cobweb: but her ets,
How could he fee to do them? having made me,
I thinks she should have power to fleale both his
And lee it felie vnfinifht: Yet looke how farre
The tubfance of my praffe doth wrong this shadow
In vnderling it, to fale this brand
Doth limpe behinde the subfiance. Here's the scroule,
The continent, and fummari of my fortune.

Bajf. A gentle scroule: Faire Lady, by your leue,
I come by noe to glue, and to receave,
Like one of two contending in a prize
That thinks he hath don wel in peoples ets:
Hearing applause and vnderfalle thow,
Giddie in spirit, full gazin in a doubt.
Whether those peales of praffe be his or no.

The Merchant of Venice.
So thrice faire. Lady stand I even so,
As doubtfull whether what I see be true,
Vntill confirmd, sign'd, ratifh'd by you.

Fayr. You see my Lord Baffiano, where I stand,
Such as I am. though for myselfe alono
I would not be ambitious in my wife.
To such my selfe much better yet for you,
I would be rebeld twenty times my selfe.
A thousand times more faire, than thousand tyngs
More rich, that only to stand high in your account,
I might in vertue, beauties, hanging, friends.

Junior account: but the full summe of me
Is sum of nothing: which to terms in grace,
Is unfeled gude, unseeld, unparadiz'd,
Happy in this, this is not yet so old:
But she may leane, I happler then this.
She is not bred to dull but she can learn;
Happest all of all, that is her gentle spirit
Commits it selfe to yours to be directed,
As from her Lord, her Governor, her King.
My selfe, and what is mine, to you and yours
Is now commutted. But now I was the Lord
Of this faire manufactory of my fortunes,
Queen ere my selfe: and even now but now,
This howse, these straunes, and this fame my selfe
Are yours, my Lord, I give them with this ring,
Which when you part from, loose, or glue away,
Let it preface the name of your loues,
And be my vantage to exclame on you.

Baff. Madam, you have bereft me of all words,
Oonly my blood speakes to you in my vaines,
And there is such confusion in my powers,
As after font oration fairly spoke
By a blessed Prince, there doth appear
Among the buzzing piésed multitude,
Where every thing being blent together,
Tunes to a wilde of nothing, tayke of joy
Express, and not express: but when the ring
From this finger, then parts life from hence,
Or then he must be said Baffiano's dead.

Nor. My Lord and Lady, it is now our time
That haueth stood by: and since our wishes prosper,
To cry good myd, good myd my Lord and Lady
My Lord Baffiano, and my gentle Lady,
I wish you all the joy that you can wish:
For I am fort you can with none from me:
And when your Honours means to solemnize
The bargain of your faith, I doe beseech you
Even at that time I may be married too.

Baff. With all my heart, so thou canst get a wife.

Nor. I thank your Lordship, you gave me one.
My eyes my Lord can looke as twirt as yours:
You saw the mistres, I beheld the maid:
You lovd, I lovd for intermision,
No more pertinates to me my Lord then you
Your fortune flound upon the caskets there,
And so did mine too, as the matter falls:
For vwoing heree untill I vvoe againe,
And sweating till my very rough was dry
With oaths of loue, at last, if promise faile,
I got a promise of this faire one here.
To have her holy, provided that your fortune
Arche'd other mistres.

Nor. Is this true Nerrissa?

Baff. Madam it is so, so you fland pleas'd withall.

Nor. And do you Gratitude mean good faith?

Baff. Yes faith my Lord.

Nor. Our feast shall be much honored in your marriage.

Baff. Weeke play with them the first boy for a thousand ducats.

Nor. What and make downe?

Baff. No, we shall here win at that sport, and make downe.

But who comes heree? Lorenzo and his Infidel?
What and my old Venitian friend Salerio?

Enter Lorenzo, Ezzico, and Salerio.

Baff. Lorenzo and Salerio, welcome hether.
If that the youth of my new interest here.
Hauing power to bid you welcome: by your issue
I bid my very friends and Countitmen.

Nor. So do my Lord, they are intirely welcome.

Lor. I thank your honors; for my part my Lord;
My purpose was not to haste thee you here,
But meeting with Salerio by the way,
He did intreate mee passe all saying nay
To come with him along.

Saf. I did my Lord,
And I haue reason for it, Signior Antonio
Commends him to you.

Baff. Ere I open this Letter
I pray you tell me how my good friend doth.

Nor. Not fickle my Lord, vnlke it be in minde,
Nor wel, unufle in minde: his Letter there
Will shew you his effay.

Open the Letter.

Baff. Norreisa, desire you a stranger, bid her welcom.
Your hand Salerio, what's the newes from Venice?
How doth that royal Merchant good Antonio?
I know he wil be glad of our succeffe,
We are the benefactors, we have won the breez,
Saf. I would you had won the fiece that hee hath left.

Nor. There are some fine word, contents in yond same paper,
That shews the colour from Baffiano's cheeke,
Some deere friend dead, else nothing in the world
Could come to much the confitution
Of any conflagrant man. What, worse and worse?
With issue Baffiano I am half your felfe,
And I must freely have the half of any thing
That this name paper brings you.

Baff. O sweet Portia,
Heere are a fewe of the unpleasent wordes
That ever blotst paper. Gentle Ladi,
When I did first impart my loue to you,
I freely told you all the wealth I had
Ran in my vailors, I was a Gentleman,
And then I told you true: and yet deere Ladi,
Rating my felfe at nothing, you shall see
How much I was a Braggart, when I told you
My date was nothing, I should then haue told you
That I was worse then nothing: for indeede
I have ingag'd my felse to a deere friend,
Ingeg'd my friend to his more enemie
To feede my meanings. Heere is a Letter Ladi,
The paper as the bodie of my friend,
And euerie word in a gaping wound
Ifiging life blood. But is it true Salerio,

Hath.

193
This is the fool that lends out money gratis.

laylor, look to him.

Ant. Heare me yet good Shylock,

lov. He have my bond, speake not against my bond,

I have sworn an oath that I will have my bond.

 Thou call'd me dog before thou hadst a caule,

But since I am a dog, beware my phangs,

The Duke shall grant me justice, I do wonder

Thou noughty laylor, that thou art so fond

To come abroad with him at his request.

Ant. I pray thee hear me speake,

lov. He have my bond, I will not hear thee speake,

He have my bond, and therefore speake no more.

It be not made a soth and dull ey'd foolo,

To shake the head, relent, and sigh, and yeeld

To Christian intertollers: follow not,

He have no speaking, I will have my bond.

Exitlov.

Sal. It is the most imperetetible curte

That euer lapers with men.

Ant. Let him alone.

He follow him no more with bootless prayers:

He secket my life, his reason well I know;

I oft deliver'd from his forsetures

Many that have at times made more to me,

Therefore he hates me.

Sal. I am sure the Duke will never grant,

this forsetures to hold.

Ant. The Duke cannot deny the courte of law.

For the comonwealth that strangers have

With us in Venice, it be demeaned,

Will much impeach the outtie of the State.

Since that the trade and profit of the city

Confinth of all Nations. Therefore gce,

These greetes and toffes have to bated me,

That I shall hardly space a pound of fleth

To morrow, to my bloody Creditor.

Web Taylor, on pr'y God Baffano come

Twice me pay his debt, and then I care not.

Exeunt.

Enter Portia, Nerissa, Lorenzo, Jessica, and a man of Porti.

Lor. Madam, although I speake it in your presence;

You have a double and a true concei

Of god like entity, which appeareth most strongly

In bearing the silence of your Lord.

But if you knew to whom you shew this honour,

How true a Gentleman you send releafe,

How deer a lover of my Lord your husband,

I know you would be prouder of the worke

Then cunonary bounty can enforce you.

Por. I never did report for doing good,

Nor shall I now set in companions

That conceife and waste the time togethertogether,

Whose soules doe bear an egal yoke of foule;

There must be needs be like proportion

Of lymaments, of manner, and of spirit;

Which makes me thinke that this Ambtun

Being the bosoner lour of my Lord,

Muff needs be like my Lord. Ift be so,

How little is the cost I have bestowed

In purchasing the semblance of my soule;

From out the face of hellshs cruelty,

This comes too necer the praiing of my fele;

Therefore no more of it: here other things

Lorenz's commit into your hands,
The husbandry and manage of my house,
Vntill my Lords returne, for mine owne part
I have toward heaven breath'd a secret vow,
To live in prayer and contemplation,
Onely attened by Nerrissa heere,
Vntill her husband and my Lords returne :
There is a monitory two miles off,
And there we will abide. I doe desire you,
Not to deme this imposition,
The which my love and some necessity
Now lays upon you.

Loren. Madame, with all my heart,
I shall obey you in all faire commands.
Per. My people doe already know my minde,
And will acknowledge you and Iffica
In place of Lord Bassano and my selfe.
So far you well till we shall meete againe.
Lor. Fare thought, & happy hours attend on you.
Iff. I with your Ladship all hearts content.
Per. I thanke you for your wish, and am well pleas'd
To wirh it backe on you: tarryouresel Iffica. Exeunt.
Now Batista, as I have euer found thee honest true,
So let me finde thee still: take this same letter,
And use thou all the deuice of a man,
In speed to Mantua, see thou render this
Into my coffin hand, Doctour Beatrix,
And looke what nores and garments he doth giue thee,
Bring them I pray thee with imagin'd speed
Vnto the Tractet, to the common Peregre
Which trades to Venice; wast no time in words,
But get thee gone, I shall be there before thee.
Balt. Madam, I goe with all contentment speed.
Per. Come on Nerris, I have worke in hand
That you yet know not of; we'll see our husbands
Before they think of vs?

Nerris. Shall they see vs?
Peris. They shall Nerrissa: but in such a habit,
That they shall thinke we are accomplished
With that we lacke; Ile hold thee any wager
When we are both accoutr'd like yong men,
Ile proue the prettier fellow of the two,
And weare my dagger with the brawe grace,
And speake betweene the change of man and boy,
With arescia voice, and turn two miniing steps
Into a manly frinde; and speake of frayses
Like a fine bragging youth: and tell quints lyes.
How honourable Ladies bought my love,
Which I denying, they fell thick and died,
I could not doe withall: then Ie repent,
And with all that, that I had not kill'd them;
And twente of these punke lies Ie tell
That men shall swear I have discontinned school
Aboute a tweleue moneth: I haue within my minde
A thousand raw tricks of these bragging Jacks,
Which I will proue.

Nerris. Why shall we come to men?
Peris. Fie, what questions that?
If thou went were a lewd interpreter:
But countward heaven brent, Ie tell
When I am in my coach, which frays for vs.
At the Parke gate; and therefore haste away,
For we must measure twenty miles to day.

Enter Clownes and Iffica.

Clown. Yes truly; for looke you, the fortunes of the Fa-there are to be laid upon the children, therefore I promise you, I fear you, I was alwaies plaine with you, and to now I speake my agitati of the matter: therefore be of good cheere, for truly I thinke you are damn'd, there is but one hope in it that can doe you any good, and that is but a kinde of bastard hope neither.

Iffica. And what hope is that I pray thee?

Clown. Marrie you may partie hope that your father got you not, that you are not the Jews daughter.

Iff. That were a kinde of bastard hope indeed, to the fins of my mother should be visited upon me.

Clown. Truly then I fear you are damned both by father and mother; thus when I thinke Stella your father,
I fall into Christus your mother; well you, you are gone both wales.

Iff. I shall be sauid by my husband, he hath made me
e a Christian.

Clown. Truly the more to blame he, we were Christian before, ere as many as could well believe one by a-other: this making of Christians will raise the price of Hogs, if wee grow all to be poore-eaters, wee shall not shortlie haue a raffler on the coales for money.

Enter Lorenzo.

Iff. He tell my husband Lancelet what you say, heere he comes.
Loren. I shall grow wealeous of you shortly Lancelet, if you thus get my wife into corners.

Iff. Nay, you need not feare vs Lorenzo; Lancelet and I are out, he tells me flatly there is no mercy for mee in heauen, because I am a lewes daughter: and hee fayes you are no good member of the common wealth, for in converting lewes to Christians, you raise the price of Porke.

Loren. I shall sufioe that better to the Commonwealth, than you can the getting vp of the Negroes bel-tie: the Moore is with childe by you Lancelet?

Clown. It is much that the Moore should be more then reason: but if the belefe then an honest woman, fisce is indeed more than I took her for.

Loren. How euer foole can play upon the word, I think the bell grace of witte will shortly turne into ficence, and discourse grow commendable in none onely but Partrass: goe in ferra, bid them prepare for dinner?

Clown. That is done Sir, they have all foemacks.

Loren. Goodly Lord, what a witche-shapper are you, then bid them prepare dinner.

Clown. That is done to Sir, onley couer is the word.

Loren. Will you couer then Sir?

Clown. Not to Sir neither, I know my dutie.

Loren. Yet more quarrelling with occasion, wilt thou shew the whole wealth of thy wit in an infante: I pray thee understand a plaine man in his plaine meaning: goe to thy fellowes, bid them couer the table, forsoe in the meat, and we will come in to dinner.

Clown. For the table Sir, it shall be fet in, for the meat Sir, it shall bee couered, for your comming in to dinner Sir, why let it be as honoros and conceits shall goe.

Exit Clown.

Loren. O dear discretion, how his words are lust,
The foole hath planted in his memory
An Armie of good words, and I doe know
A many fooles that fland in better place,
Garnishfett like him, that for a trifle tive word
Defie the matter, how wreche'th thou Iffica,
And now good sweet say thy opinion,
The Merchant of Venice.

How do you like the Lord Bassiano’s wife?
Yep. Paft all expressing is very meere.
The Lord Bassiano grew an upright life.
For having such a blessing in his Lady,
He finds the joys of heaven here on earth,
And heaven he does not mean it.
Is reason he should not come to heaven?
Why, if two gods should play some heavenly match,
And on the wager lay two earthly women.
And certainty there must be something else
Pound with the other, for the poor rude world.
Hath not her fellow.

Unren. Even such a husband
Half of you, as she is for a wife.
Yep. Nay, but take my opinion to of that?
Lor. I will none, first let us go to dinner?
Yep. Nay, let me praise you while I have a good mark.
Lor. No pray thee, let it serve for table talk,
Then how some of thou speakst among other things,
I shall digest it.
Yep. Well, I let you forth.

Exeunt.

Actus Quartus.

Enter the Duke, the Magnifico, Antonio, Bassiano, and Gratiano.

Duke. What, is Antonio here?
Ant. Ready, so please your grace.
Duke. I am sorry for thee, thou art come to answer
A stone aduersary, an insomniable wretch,
Uncapable of pity, voyd, and empty
From my dram of mercy.
Ant. I trust heard
Your Grace hath taken great pains to qualify
His rigorous course: but since he stands obdurate,
And that no lawful means can carry me
Out of his enemie, I do oppose
My patience to his fury, and am arm’d
To suffer with a quiescent spirit.

The very tyrany and rage of his.

Duke. Go one and call the Jew into the Court.
Sal. He is ready at the door; he comes my Lord.

Enter Shylock.

Duke. Make room, and let him stand before our face.
Shylock the world thinks, and I think so too.
That thou but leastest this fashions of thy malice
To the Ift hour of eight, and then ’tis thought
Thou’lt shew thy mercy and remorse more strange,
Than is thy fange apparent cruelty;
And where thou now exact’st the penalty,
Which is a pound of this poor Merchant’s flesh,
Thou wilt not lose the forfeit,
But touch’d with human gentleness and love:
Forgive a mynte of the principall,
Glancing an eye of pity on his looses.
That house of lasse so huddled on his backe,
Enow to preffe a royall Merchant downe;
And plucke commeration of his flate
From traffike bottomes, and rough hearts of flints,
From stubborn Turk and Tatter never tried
To offices of tender curtesie,
We all except a gentle answer Jew?
Jew. I have poftiff your grace of what I purpose,
And by our holy Sabbath have I sworn
To hate the due and forfeit of my bond.
If you deny it, let the danger light
Upon your Chastity, and your Cities freedom.
You take me why I rather chose to haue
A weight of caron flesh, then to receive Three thousand Ducats? Do not answer that:
But say it is my humor; Is it answered?
What if my house be troubled with a Rat,
And I be pleasa’d to giue ten thousand Ducates
To have it bain’d? What are you answer’d yet?
Some men there are none but a gaping Pigge:
Some that are mad, if they behold a Cat;
And others, when the bag-pipe fings’th noise,
Cannot contain their Vene for affiction.
Matters of passion swayts to the moode.
Of what it likes or loathes, now for your answer:
As there is no firm reason to be rendred.
Why he cannot abide a gaping Pigge?
Why he a barmless neelesse Cat?
With a woollen bag-pipe, but of force
Must yield to such insomniable flame,
As to offend himselfe being offended:
So can I giue no reason, nor I will not,
More then a lodg’d hare, and a certaine loathing
I bear a Atrocity, that I follow thus
A looking hue against him? Are you answer’d?
Jew. If he is no answerer you unfewithing man.
To exceed the current of thy cruelty.
Jew. I am not hour’d to please thee with my answer.
Jew. Do all men kill the things they do not love?
Jew. Hate say what the thing he would not kill?
Jew. Euerie offence is not a hate at all.
Jew. What wouldst thou have a Serpent fling thee twice?
Ant. I pray you thinkke you question with the Jew:
You may as well go stand upon the beach,
And bid the maine foall bun his waist height,
Or even as well vfe question with the Wale,
The Ewe biete for the Lambe:
You may as well forbid the Mountain Pines
To wagge their high tops, and to make no noise
When they are fretted with the guffs of heaven:
You may as well do any thing most hard,
As seek to soffen that, then which what harder?
His Jewish heart. Therefore I do before you
Make no more offeres, vfe no further means,
But with all briefe and peace conscience
Let me have judgment, and the Jew his will.
Jew. For thy three thousand Ducates heere fix.
Jew. If euerie Ducat in five thousand Ducates
Were in five parts, and every part a Ducate,
I would not draw them, I would have my bond?
Duke. How shal I hope you for mee, rendering none?
Jew. What judgment shall I dread doing wrong?
You have among you many a punchast scabe,
Which like your Afees, and your Dogs and Mules,
You vfe in abject and in lowish parts,
Because you bought them. Shall I say to you,
Let them be free, marry them to your harts.
Why sweate they under burthen? Let their beds
Be made as soft as yours: and let their haues
Be fedon’d with rich Vinda: you will answer

III. v. 78—IV. i. 97

196
The Merchant of Venice.

The p cumbersome letters which I demand of him is deeply bought, its mine, and I will have it.

If you deny me, fie upon your Laws.

There is no force in the decrees of Venice;

I stand to judgment, answer, Shall I have it?

Do. Upon my word, I may dissemble this Court,

Vintifer Bellario a learned Doctor,

Whom I have determined to determine this,

Come here to-day.

Lis. My Lord, here be fays without

A Messenger with Letters from the Doctor,

Now come from Padua.

Do. Bring vs the Letters, Call the Messengers,

Baff. Good cheer Antonio. What man, corage yet.

The Jew shall have my heart, blood, bones, and all,

Ere thou shalt lose me one drop of blood.

Ant. I am a tainted Western of the rocks,

Mereft for death, the weakest kind of fruit

Drops extant to the ground, and so let me;

You cannot but employ'd Bellario,

Then to hue full, and write mine Epitaph.

Enter Nerissa.

Do. Came you from Padua from Bellario?

Ner. From both, my Lord Bellario greets your Grace.

Do. In what do you think my knife to constrictly?

Law. To cut the forfeiture from that banknote there.

Gr. Not on thy facile: but on thy facile hast few

Thou makest thy knife keen; but no mettall can,

No, not the hangman Axe beafle halfe the keannes.

O thy thong may. Can no prayers pierce thee?

Law. No, none that thou haft wit enough to make,

Gr. O be thou damn'd, inexorable dogge,

And by thy life let justice be acceded;

Thou almost mak'st me weep in my vision;

To hold opinion with Pithagoras,

That foules of Animals infringe themselves

Into the trunks of men. Thy currish spirit.

Gouten's a Wolfe, who hang'd for humane slaeft,

Even from the gallowes did his fell feule fret;

And whililst thou stayest in thy unhallowed dam,

Indit it fertile in thee: For thy defies

Are Woulful, bloody, fiur'd, and ravenous,

Law. Till thou canst raise the seale from off my bond.

Thou but offend if thy Legos to speake so loud;

Repair thy wit: good youth, or it will fall

To endlesse ruine. I stand here for Law.

Du. This Letter from Zulpho doth commend

A young and Learned Doctor in our Court;

Where he? Nero. He attendeth here hard by

To know thy answer, whether thou wilt admit him.

Do. With all my heart. Some three or four of you Go give him curteous conduct to this place,

Mean time the Court shall haue Bellari's Letter.

Our Gracefull underrind, that as the reicite of your Letter I am very giddy: but the inoiuate that your meif-fanger came, to longing xification, was with me a young Dolor of Rome. His name is Balthasar. I acquainted him with the confent in extraordinary, between the Law and Anthonio the Merchant: we sent we many Books together: he is in frained with my opened, which betted with his own learning, the great use whereof I cannot enough commend, comes with him at my impartiality, to fill up your Graces request in my friend. I beseech you, let this lack of years be no impeiment to like his lack of a rendered estimation: for he never knew so young a body, with so old a head. I have him to your gracious acceptance, my chiefest kind, that better publish his commendation

Lenten Pitta for Baldorazar.

Duke. You hear the learned Bellario what he writes,

And here I take it is the Doctor come.

Cauce your hand. Come you from old Bellario?

Por. I did my Lord.

Do. You are welcome: take your place;

Are you acquainted with the difference

That holds this preti question in the Court.

Por. I am informed throughly of the cause.

 Which is the Merchant hence? and what's the law?

Do. Salerno and old Sylverke, both stand toth.

Por. Is your name Shylverke?

Law. Shylverke is my name.

Por. Of a strange nature is the fate you follow,

Yet in such rule, that the Venices Law

Cannot imagine you as you do proceed.

You stand within his daigier, do you not?

Ant. I, to him says.

Por. Do you confend the bond?

Ant. I do.

Por. Then must the Jew be mercifull.

Law. On what compulsion must I? Tell me that.

Por. The quality of mercy is not stramm'd,

It drop pro as the gentle raise from heaven

Upon the place benth. It is twice blett,

It dleath him that giv's him, and him that takes,

Tis mightier in the mightiest, it becomes

The throned Monarch better then his Crowne.

His scepter soves the force of temporall power,

He attribute to awe and Majest,

Wherein doth the dread and fear of Kings;

But mercy is above this leaped sway,

It is enthroned in the hearts of Kings,

It is an attribute to God himselfe;

And earthly power doth then aver liket Gods

When mercie leasons Justice. Therefore, ew,

Though justice be the nies, confider this,

This in the corre of Justice, none of us

Should see fution: we do pray for mercy,

And that same prayer, doth teach vs all to render

The deeds of mercy. I have spoken thus much

To mutate the justice of thy ple.

Which if thou follow, this first course of Venice

Multinesters give severence against the Merchant there.

Sly. My deists upon my head, I charge the Law,

The penalty and forfeite of my bond.

Por. Is he not able to discharge the money?

Enf. Yes, here I tender it for him in the Court,

Yes, twice the summe, if that will not suffice,

I will be bound to pay it ten times ore,

On forfeit of my hands, my head, my heart.

If this will not suffice, it must appear

That malice bears downe truth. And I beseech you

Wret once the Law to your authority,

To do a great right, do a little wrong,

And curbe this cruel diuell of his will.

Por. It must not be, there is no power in Venice

Can alter a decree established:

Twill be recorded for a President,
And many an error by the same example,
Will rush into the state: it cannot be.

Iew. A Daniel come to judgment, says a Daniel.
O wife young Judge, how do I honour thee.
Per. I pray you let me looke upon the bond.

Iew. Here is't most reverend Doctor, here it is.
Per. Shylock, there's thire thiny money offered thee.

Shy. An oath, an oath, I have an oath in heaven:
Shall I break a promise upon my foole?
No not for Venice.

Per. Why this bond is forfeit,
And lawfully by this the Jew may claim
A pound of flesh, to be by him cut off
Necessft the Merchants heart; be mercifull,
Take thine thiny money, bid me tear the bond.

Iew. When it is paid according to the tenure,
It doth appear you are a worthy Judge:
you know the Law, your expostion
Hath beene most sound. I charge you by the Law,
Whereof you are a well:deferving pillar,
Proceed to judgment: By my foule I weare,
There is no power in the tongue of man
To alter me: I stay here on my bond.

An. Most heartily I do beleech the Court
To give the judgement.
Per. Why then thus it is:
you must prepare your bosome for his knife.

Iew. O noble Judge, O excellent young man,
Per. For the intent and purpose of the Law
Hath full relation to the penalitie,
Which heere appeareth due upon the bond.

Iew. 'Tis verie true: O wife and upright Judge,
How much more elder art thou then thy lookes?
Per. Therefore lay bare your bosome.

Iew. I, his brest,
So layoffs the bond, doth it not noble Judge?
Neeere his heart, those are the very words.

Per. It is so: Are there balsale heere to weigh the flesh?

Iew. I have them ready.

Per. Have by some Surgeon Shylock on your charge
To chop his wounds, lest he should bleed to death.

Iew. It is not nominated in the bond.

Per. It is not so expressi but what of that?
'Twere good you do to much for charitie.

Iew. I cannot finde it, 'tis not in the bond.

Per. Come Merchant, have you any thing to say?

Iew. But little: I am arm'd and well prepar'd.

Ghee me your hand Baffano, fare you well,
Greaten not that I am falne to this for you:
For heerein fortune flewes hereselle more kinde
Then is her cussifie. It is full her leve
To let the wretched man out live his wasthe,
To view with hollow eye, and wrinkled brow
An age of poverty. From which lingering penance
Of such misery, doth force the me off
Commend me to your honourable Wife,
Tell her the proceed of Antonio's end:
Say how I look'd you; speake me faire in death:
And when the tale is told, bid her be wise,
Whether Baffano had not once a Loan
Repeat nor you that you shall loose your friend,
And he repents not that he pays your debt.
For the Jew do cut but deep enough,
He is in instant, with all my heart.

Baffo. Antonio, I am married to a wife,
Which is as dear to me as life it selfe,
But life it selfe, my wife, and all the world,
Are not with me estem'd aboute thy life.
I would loose all, I sacrifice them all
Here to this deuil, to deliever you.

Per. Your wife would give you little thanks for that:
If it were by to hear you make the offer.

Gra. I have a wife whom, I protest I love,
I would be borne in heaven, so the could.
Intrest some power to change this errunish Jew.

Ner. 'Tis well you offer it beside her backe,
The wife would make else an unquiet house.

Iew. Thrice be the Christian husbands I have a daught.
Would any of the flocke of Barabbas
Had bene her husband rather then a Christian.
We trite time, I pray thee pursue sentence.

Per. A pound of that name merchants flesh is thine,
The Court awards it, and the law doth give it.

Iew. Most rightfull Judge.

Per. And you must cut this flesh from off his breast,
The Law allows it, and the Court awards it.

Iew. Most learned Judge, a sentence, come prepare.

Per. Tarry a little, there is something else,
This bond doth give thee here no iot of blood,
The words expressly are a pound of flesh:
Then take thy bond, take thou thy pound of flesh,
But in the cutting it, if thou dost not do
One drop of Christian blood, thy lands and goods
Are by the Laws of Venice confiscate
Vnto the state of Venice.

Gra. O upright Judge,
Marke Jew, O learned Judge.

Shy. Is that the law?

Per. Thy selle shalt fee the Ait,
For as thou warest iustice, be affurd
Thou shalt have iustice more then thou defiere.

Gra. O learned Judge, mark Jew, a learned Judge.
Iew. I take this offer then, pay the bond thrice,
And let the Christian goe.

Baffo. Here is the money.

Per. Soft, the Jew shall have all iustice, soft, no baffe,
He shall have nothing but the pelatry.

Gra. O Jew, an upright Judge, a learned Judge.

Per. Therefore prepare thee to cut off the flesh,
Shed thou no bloud, nor cut thou leffe not more
But iust a pound of flesh: if thou tak' it more
Or leffe then a tiue pound, be it so much
As makes it light or heavy in the subsistance,
Or the deuision of the twentith part
Of one poor scruple, say if the scale doe turne
But in the estimation of a hayre,
Thou diest, and all thy goods are confiscate.

Gra. A second Daniel, a Daniel Jew,
Now infidell I hate thee on the hip.

Per. Why doth the Jew paue, take thy forfeiture.

Shy. Give me my principall, and let me goe.

Baffo. I hate it ready for thee, here it is.

Per. He hath refus'd it in the open Court,
He shall have mercy iustice and his bond.

Gra. A Daniel still say I, a second Daniel,
I thank the Jew for teaching me that word.

Shy. Shall I not have bately my principall?

Per. Thou shalt have nothing but the forfeiture,
To be taken se at thy perill Jew.

Shy. Why then the Devil shall give him good of it:
He say no longer question.

—For Tarry

IV. i. 221—347
HAVE by your wife done been this day acquitted
Of grievous penatles, in lieu whereof,
Three thousand Ducats due unto the Jew
We freely cope your censure pains withall,
And stand indebted ever and above
In love and seruice to you euermore.

Per. He is well paid that is well satisfied,
And I delivering you, am satisified,
And therein doe account my selfe well paid,
My minde was neuer yet more meriteane.
I pray you know me when we meete againe,
I wish you well, and so I take my leave.

Bast. Deare sir, of force I must attempt you further,
Take some remembrance of vs as a tribute,
Not as fee: grant me two things, I pray you
Not to denote me, and to pardon me.

Per. You preffe mee faire, and therefore I will yeeld,
Give me your golues, Ile weare them for your sake,
And for your loue Ie take this ring from you,
Doe not draw back your hand, ite take no more,
And you in loue shall not deny me this?

Bast. This ring good sir, alas it is a trifle,
I will not shame my selfe to give you this.
Per. I will have nothing else but only this,
And now methinks I have a minde to it.

Bast. These is more depends on this then on the valew,
The dearest ring in Venice will I give you,
And finde it out by proclamation,
Onely for this I pray you pardon mee.
Per. I see sir you are liberal in offers,
You taught me first to beg, and now me thinkes
You teach me how a beggar should be anwer'd,

Bast. Good sir, this ring was given me by my wife,
And when she put it on, the made me vow
That I should neither fell, nor giue, nor lose it.
Per. That feule fences many men to faue their gifts,
And if your wife be not a madwoman,
And know how well I have defec't this ring,
She would not hold out enemy for euer.
For giving it to me: well, peace be with you.

Exeunt.

Ant. My L. Baffiano, let him haue the ring,
Let his deferuing and my loue withall
Be valued against your wifes commandement.

Bass. Go to Graiano, run and ouer take him,
Give him the ring, and bring his if thou canst
Vnto Antonius house, away, make haste.
Exit Gratian.
Come, you and I will chisme present.
And in the morning early will we both Flie toward Belmanto, comte Antonius.

Exeunt.

Enter Portia and Nerissa.

Per. Enquire the Jewes house out, give him this deed,
And let him figure it, wee' ll away to night,
And be a day before our husbands home:
This deed will be well welcome to Lorenzo.

Exit Gratiano.

Grat. Faice sir, you are well o'taste,
My L. Baffiano upon more advice,
Hath sent you hear this ring, and doth intreat
Your company at dinner.

Per. That cannot be;
His ring I doe accept most thankfully,
And do I pray you tell him: furthermore,
I pray you show my youth old Sylvesrzs house.

Grat. That will I doe.

Ner. Sir, I would speake with you:

Per. Tarry Jew,
The law hath yet another hold on you.
It is ensnird in the Laws of Venice;
It be prooued against an Alien,
That by direct, or indirect attempts
He leke the life of any Citizen,
The party gainst the which he doth contrive,
Shall loose one halfe his goods, the other halfe
Comes to the priuie coffere of the State,
And the offender lies in the mercy
Of the Duke onely, gainst all other voice.

In which predicament I say thou standst:
For it appeares by manifest proceeding,
That indirectly, and directly to,
Thou haft contruid against thee very life
Of the defendant and thou haft incurr'd
The danger formerly by merchezrft.

Downe therefore, and beg mercy of the Duke.

Grat. Beg that thou maist have leave to hang thy selfe,
And yet thy wealth being forfeitt to the state,
Thou haft not lost the value of a cord.
Therefore thou must be hang'd at the states charge.

Duke. That thou shalt see the difference of our punit,
I pardon thee thy life before thou askest it:
For halfe thy wealth, it is Antonius's,
The other he haue comes to the general state,
Which humblenesse may drive oune to a fine.

Per. For the sake out for Antonius.

Syr. Nay, take my life and all pardon not that,
You take my house, when you do take the prop
That doth suffice my house: you take my life
When you do take the meanes whereby I live.

Per. What mercy can you render him Antonius?

Ant. So please my Lord the Duke, and all the Court
To quitt the fine for one halfe of his goods,
I am content: so he will let me haue
The other halfe in life, to render it
Vpon his death, vnto the Gentleman
That lately stole his daughter.

Twothings provided more that for this favour
He presentely become a Christian :
The other, that he doe record a gift
Here in the Court of all he dies possi'ff
Vnto his sonne Lorenzo, and his daughter.

Duke. He shall doe this, or else I doe retake
The power that I late pronounced here.

Per. Art thou contented Jew? what doth thou say?

Shy. I am content.

Per. Clarke, draw a deed of gift.

Shy. I pray you give me leave to goe from hence,
I am not well, send the deed after me,
And I will signe it.

Duke. Get thee gone, but doe it,

In chaffing thou shalst haue two god fathers,
Had I been judge, thou shouldest have had ten more,
To bring thee to the gallowes, not to the font.

Duke. Sir I intreat you with me home to dinner.

Deu. Humbly doe desire your Grace of pardon,
I must away this night toward Padua,
And it is meere I presentely let forth.

Duke. I am sorry that your levyure fenes you not:
Antonius gratifies this gentleman,
For in my mind you are much bound to him.

Exeunt Duke and his traine.

Bass. Most worthy gentleman, I and my friend

Grat. In trust you were well o'taste,
My L. Baffiano upon more advice,
Hath sent you hear this ring, and doth intreat
Your company at dinner.

Per. That cannot be;
His ring I do accept most thankfully,
And so I pray you tell him: furthermore,
I pray you shew my youth old Sylvesrzs house.

Grat. That will I doe.

Ner. Sir, I would speake with you:

Atus Quintus.

Enter Lorenzo and Ieffica.

Lor. The moon doth shine bright. In such a night as this, When the sweet wind doth gently kiss the trees, And they did make no noise, in such a night Troylus me thinks mounted the Trojan walls, And light his foole toward the Grecian tents Where Creffid lay that night.

Ieff. In such a night Did Tuba with a Willow in her hand, Vpon the wild lea bankes, and waft her Love To come againe to Cuthage.

Ieff. In such a night Medea gathered the unchancted herbs, That did renew old E/on.

Lor. In such a night Did Ieffica steal from the wealthy jewe, And with an Vnfright Loue did runne from Venice, As tare as Belmont.

Ieff. In such a night Did young Lorenzo last be loud her well, Stealing her foule with many vowes of faith, And not a true one.

Lor. In such a night Did pretty Ieffica (like a little throw) Slander her Loue, and he forgave it her.

Ieff. I would our night you did no body come: But harke, I hear the footings of a man.

Enter Mifringer.

Lor. Who comes so late in silence of the night?

Mifr. A friend.

Lor. A friend, what friend? your name I pray you.

Mifr. Stephanie is my name, and I bring word My Miftrife will before the break of day Be heere at Belmont, she doth first say:

Lor. When she is come, who comes with her?

Mifr. None but a holy Hermit and her maid:

Lor. I pray you it my Miftrife yet return'd?

Mifr. He is not, we have not heard from him, But goe we in, I pray thee Ieffica,

And ceremoniously let vs prepare

Some welcome for the Miftrife of the house.

Enter Clowes.

Clo. Sola, fola: we ha ho, fola, fola,

Lor. Who calls?

Clo. Sola, did you see M.Lorenzo, & M. Lorenzo, sola, Lor. Leave hollowing man, heere, (sola)

Clo. Sola, where, where?

Lor. Here, heere.

Clo. Tell him there's a Post come from my Master, with his home full of good news, my Master will be here at morning sweet foule.

Lor. Let's in, and there expect their comming,

And yet no matter: why shoulde we goe in?

My friend Stephen, signifie you pray

Within the house, your Mistrife is a hand,

And bring your musique forth into the aire,

How sweet the moones-light fleapes vpon this banke, Heere will we sit, and let the founds of musique

Creep in our ears soft flinches, and the night

Become the tutches of sweet harmony:

Sit Ieffica, looke how the floore of heaven

Is thick inlaid with patten of bright gold,

There's not the smallest orb which thou beholdst,

But in his motion like an Angel fings,

Still quering to the young ey'd Cherubins;

Such harmony is in immortal soules,

But whilft that mudy vefture of decay

Doth grovly clothe in, we cannot hear it:

Come her, and wake Diana with a hymne,

With sweetly tutches parse your Mistrife ear,

And draw her home with musique.

Ieff. I am notwarry when I heare sweet musique.

Play musique.

Lor. Therefore, your spirits are attentive

For doe but note a wilder and warier heard

Or race of youthful and valiant colts,

Petching round bounds, bellowing and weighing loud,

Which is the hot condition of these bleed,

If they but hear a perchance a trumpet sound,

Or any eye of musique touch their ears,

You shall perceive them make a mutuell frond,

Their fadge eyes turnd to a modest gate,

By the sweet power of musique theirefore the Poet

Did faine that Orpheus drew the trees, fongs, and floods,

Since naught so toucheth, hard, and full of rage,

But musique for once doth change his nature,

The man that had no musique in humefic,

Nor is not mov'd with concord of sweet sounds,

Is fide for treason, stratagems, and spoyles,

The motions of his spirit are dull as night,

And his affections dale as Ethba,

Let no such man be trusted: make the musique.

Enter Portia and Nerissa.

Por. This night we see King in our hall:

How faire that little cardell throws his beames,

So bright, so pow'rful, in a naughty world.

(Exit)

Ner. When the moones flame we did not see the can

Por. So doth the greater glory dim the leffe,

A Sublimate flines brightly as a King

Vntill a King he by, and then his flare

Empties it selfe, as doth an inland brooke

Into the maine of waters: musique, harke.

Musique.

Ner. It is your musique Madame of the house.

Por. Nothing is good I see without repsect,

Methinks it sounds much sweeter then by day.

Ner. Silence before those that venture on it Madam.

Por. The Crow doth sing as sweetly as the Lake
The Merchant of Venice.

183

When neither is attend'd: and I think
The Nightingale if she should sing by day
When every Goose is cackling, would be thought
No better a Musitian than the Wren?

How many things by seamen, seamen dare
To their right praise, and true perfection:
Peace, how the Moone sleept with Endimion,
And would not be awak'd.

Musicke crosst.

Lor. That is the voice,
Or I am much deceiv'd of Portia.

Per. He knows me as the blinde man knows the Cuckow by the bad voice.

Lor. Deere Lady welcome home?

Per. We haue bene praying for your husbands welfare
Which speed we hope the better for our words,
Are they return'd?

Lor. Madam, they are not yet:
But there is come a Messenger before
To signifie their comming.

Per. Go in, Portia,
Gue order to my menants, that they take
No note at all of our being absent hence,
Nor you Lorenzo, Jefco or you,
On Tucket founds.

Lor. Your husband is at hand, I have his Trumpet,
We are no tell-tales Madam, feare you not.

Per. This night methinkes is but the daylight fickle,
It looks a little paler, 'tis a day,
Such as the day is, when the Sun is hid.

Enter Baffania, Antinoius, Gratiano, and their followers.

Baf. We should hold day with the Antipodes,
If you would walke in abscence of the sunne.

Per. Let me guie light, but let me not beleit,
For a light wife doth make a heittie husband,
And never be Baffania so for me,
But God for all, you are welcome home my Lord.

Baf. I thank you Madam, guie welcom to my friend
This is the man, this is Antionius,
To whom I am so infinitely bound.

Per. You should in all fonce be much bound to him,
For as I heare was much bound for you.

Ant. No more then I am well acquittance of.

Per. Sir, you are verie welcome to our house:
It muf appear in other wais then words,
Therefore I scant this breathing curtfees.

Gra. By yonder Moone I live are you do me wrong,
Infair I guie it to the Judges Cleark,
Would he were gett that had it for my part,
Since you do take it. Loue so much at hart,

Per. A quarrel how alreadie, what is the matter?

Gra. About a hoole of Gold, a patrye Ring
That the did give me, whole Poeticke was
For all the world like Cutlers Poetry
Upon a knife, Love mee, and leave mee not.

Ner. Whate talk you of the Poeticke or the valew:
You (wore to me when I did guie it you,
That you would ware it till the houre of death,
And that it should lye with you in your grave,
Though not for me, yet for your vehement oaths,
You should have bene respetfule and haue kept it.

Gauie it to Judges Cleark: but wel I knew
The Cleark will were ware haire on his face that had it.

Per. You were too blaine, I must be blaine with you,
To part so lightly with your wives first gift,
A thing fluceke on with oaths upon your finger,
And so rusted with faith unto your heath.
I guie my Loue a Ring, and made him swear
Never to part with it, and here he stands:
I dare be sworne for him, he would not leaue it,
Nor plucke it from his finger, for the wealth
That the world matters. Now in faith Gratiano,
You guie your wife too vnkind a caufe of griefe,
And twere to me I should be mad at it.

Baf. Why I were best to cut my left hand off,
And Iware I left the Ring defending it.

Gra. My Lord Baffania guie his Ring away
Vato the judge that beg'd it, and indeed
Defend'd it too: and then the Boy his Cleareke
That tooke some paines in writing, he begg'd mine,
And nether man nor matter would take oght
But the two Rings.

Per. What Ring guie you my Lord?
Not that I hope which you receiv'd of me.

Baf. If I could aide a heavt a fault,
I would dey it that you see my finger
Hath not the King your part, it is gone.

Per. Even fo void it your vsile heart of truth.
By heuren I will are come in your bed
Vntil I see the Ring.

Ner. Nor I in yours, til I gaine fee mine.

Baf. Sweet Portia,
If you did know to whom I gauie the Ring,
If you did know for whom I gauie the Ring,
And how it was mine, I had gauied it,
When ought would be accepted but the Ring,
You would abate the strength of your displeasure?

Per. If you had knowne the vertue of the Ring,
Or halfe her worthinesse that gauied the Ring,
Or your owne honour to containe the Ring,
You would not then have parted with the King:
What man is there so much unreasonable,
If you had pleaed to have defended it
With any termes of Zeal: wanted the modelie
To vige the thing held as a ceremonial
Neriffia reaches me what to beleue,
He die for't, but some Woman had the Ring.

Baf. No by mine honor Madam, by my soule
No Woman had it, but a ciell Doctor,
Which did refue three thousand Ducaties of me,
And beg'd the Ring: the which I did denie him,
And suffer'd him to go displeas'd away:
Even he that had hald up the verie life
Of my deare friend, What should I say sweete Lady?
I was inforced to send it after him.
I was best with frame and curtsees,
My honor would not let ingratitude
So much bemeane it. Pardon me good Lady,
And by thefe bleffed Candles of the night,
Had you bene there, I thinke you would have begg'd
The Ring of me, to guie the worthie Doctor?

Q. 2

V. i. 103—222

FINIS.
As you Like it.

Actus primus. Scena Prima.

Enter Orlando and Adam.

Orlando.

I remember Adam, it was upon this fashion I beseeched you by word, but no more a thousand Crowns, and as thou safest, charged my brother on his helping to breed me well: and there begins my father's: My brother Leques he keeps at school, and report speaks goldenly of his parts; for my part, he keeps me suitably at home, or to speak more properly it was me here at home unkept: for call you that keeping for a gentleman of my birth, that differst not from the stuffing of a Ox? his horses are bred better, for besides that they are fair with their feeding, they are taught their manage, and to that end Riders dearly bid'd: but I (his brother) gaineth nothing under him but growth, for the which his Aminals on his dung-hills are as much bound to him as I; besides this nothing that he to plentifully giveth me, the something that nature giveth me, his countenance seemeth to take from me: he lets me seek with his Hinds, barres mee the place of a brother, and as much as in him lies, mine my gentility with my education. This is it Adam that grieveth me, and the spirit of my Father, which I think is within mee, begins to mutine against this feititude, I will no longer endure it, though yet I know no wise remedy how to avoid it.

Enter Oliver.

Adam. Yonder comes my Master, your brother.

Orl. Go to a pauc-Adam, and thou shalt hear how he will shake me vp.

Orl. Now Sir, what make you here?

Orl. Nothing: I am not taught to make any thing.

Orl. What may you then be?

Orl. Marry sir, I am helping you to mar that which God made, a poore unworthy brother of yours with idleness.

Oliver. Marry sir be better employed, and be taught a while.

Orl. Shall I keepe your hogs, and eat husskes with them? what prodigall portion have I spent, that I should come to such penury?

Orl. Know you where you are sir?

Orl. Of Sir, very well: heere in your Orchard.

Orl. Know you before sir?

Orl. I, better then him I am before knowes me: I know you are my eldest brother, and in the gentle condition of bloud you should fo know me; the courtesie of nations allows you my better; in that you are the first born of the same tradition take not away my bloud, were there twenty brothers betwixt us I have as much of my father in mee, as you, albeit I confess your coming before me is nearer to his reverence.

Orl. What day?

Orl. Come, come elder brother, you are too young in Olr. What thou lay hands on me villain?

Orl. I am no villain: I am the yongest formes of Sir Rowland de Boys, he was my father, and he is thrice a villain that fasheth such a father begot villains: were thou not my brother, I would not take this hand from thy throat, till this other had puld out thy tongue for saying so, thou hast raised on thy felf.

Adam. Sweet Masters bee patient, for your Fathers remembrance, be at accord.

Orl. Let me see thee say.

Orl. I will not til I pleasure: you shall hear mee: my father charg'd you in his will to give me good education: you have train'd me like a peazzant, obseruing and hiding from mee all gentleman-like qualities: the spirit of my father growes strong in mee, and I will no longer endure it: therefore allow me such exercises as may become a gentleman, or gue mee the poore allotry of my father lett mee byssistment, with that I will goe buy my fortunes.

Orl. And what wilt thou do? beg when that is spent? Well sir, get you in. I will not longe be troubled with you: you shall have some part of your will, I pray you leave mee:

Orl. I will no further offend you, then becomes mee for my good.

Orl. Get you with him, you ole dogge.

Adam. Is old dogge my reward? most true, I have left my teeth in your jaws: God be with my ole master, he would not have spoke such a word. Exe.Orl. Ad.

Orl. Is it even so, begin you to grow upon me? I will physick your ranckenesse, and yet give no thousand crownes neyther: holla Dennis.

Enter Dennis.

Denn. Calls your worship?

Orl. Was not Charles the Dukes Wafller here to speake with mee?

Denn. So please you, he is heere at the doore, and importunates accessee to you.

Orl. Call him in't will be a good way: and to morrow the waflling is.

Enter Charles.

Ch. Good morrow to your worship.

Orl. Good Mounther Charles: what's the newes at the new Court?

Charles. There's no newes at the Court Sir, but the olde newes: that is, the old Duke is banished by his younger brother the new Duke, and three or foure loving Lords Fortune and if i. therefore and yet vnlelfeyou and hee came and emulator fori I I (hall is him loucs ftay that of Gentlemen with is fhall come vnder-hand thy doft graceuer I wonder* after fo come cleave her many a Vncie,then if my Vncele thy banished father had banished thy Vncele the DukeMy father , fo thou hadst beene full with me, i could haue taught my love to take thy father for mine; so wouldft thou,if the truth of thy love to me were to righteously tempter,d as mine to thee.

Ref. Well, I will forget the condition of my estate, to revenge in yours.

Ref. From henceforth I will Coz, and deuise sports to make thee, where to take you of falling in Love.

Col. Let vs fit and mocke the good houfwife Fortune from her wheel, that her gifts may henceforth be bestowed equally.

Ref. I would we could doe so; for her beneftes are mightily misplaced, and the bountifull blinde woman doth most mistake in her gifts to women.

Ref. Nay now thou goest from Fortune office to Na tures: Fortune reignes in gifts of the world, not in the lineaments of Nature.

Col. No; when Nature hath made a faire creature, may she not by Fortune fall into the fire? though nature hath given vs to flout at Fortune, hath not Fortune sent in this foole to cut off the argument?

Ref. Indeed there is fortune too hard for nature, when fortune makes natures natural, the cutter off of natures witte.

Ref. Paraduenture this is not Fortunes work neither, but Natures, who perceiuch our natural wits too dull to reason of such goddeshes, hath sent this Na tural for our whistle. for alwayes the dunelle of the foole, is the whistoffe of the wits. How now Witte, whether wander you?

Collect. Mistrefle, you must come away to your father.

Col. Were you made the meffenger?

Col. No by mine honor, but i was bid to come for you
As you like it.

1. ii. 67—210

178

Refr. Where learned you that oath foole?

Cel. Of a certaine Knight, that swore by his Honour
179 that they were good Pancakes, and swore by his Honour the Muffets were bought; now I fand lead to it, the Pancakes were bought, and the Muffet was good, and yet was not the Knight fooure.

Cel. How prove you that in the great heape of your knowledge?

Refr. I marry, now unmuzzle your wisedome.

Cel. Stand you both forth now: stroke your chinnes, and shave your beardes that I am a knaue.

Refr. By our beads (if we had them) thou art.

Cel. By my knaieri (if I had it) then I were: but if you swear by that that is not, you are not forsworn: this knight swearing by his Honor, for he never had none; or if he had, he had sworn it away, before ever he saw those Pancakes, or that Muffet.

Refr. Prithee, who is't that thou meanest?

Cel. That old Father you your Father loues.

Refr. My Fathers loue is enough to honor him enough; speak no more of him, you shall be whipt for taxation one of these daies.

Cel. The more pittie that fools may not speak witty, what Witenes do foolishly.

Refr. By my truth thou fact it true: for since the little wit that fools haue was felened, the little foolerie that wise men make is a great shew; Hecce comes Monfieur the Beu.

Enter le Beu.

Refr. With his mouth full of newes.

Cel. Which he will put on vs, as Digeons feed their young.

Refr. Then that we be newses-cram'd.

Cel. All the better, we shall be the more Marketable.

Duke. Monfieur le Beu, what's the newes?

Le Beu. Faire Princesse, you haue loth much sport.

Cel. Sport: of what colour?

Le Beu. What colour Madame? How shall I auntwery you?

Refr. As wit and fortune will.

Cel. Or as the delinies decares.

Cel. Well said, that was laid on with a crewel.

Cel. Nay, if I keep not my raine.

Refr. Tho fool'd thy old timell.

Le Beu. You amaze me Ladies: I would haue told you of good wrestling, which you haue loth the fight of.

Refr. Yet tell vs the manner of the Wrahting.

Le Beu. I will tell you the beginning and all it please your Ladiships, you may see the end, for the bell is yet to doe, and here where you are, they are coming to perform it.

Cel. Well, the beginning that is dead and buried.

Le Beu. There comes an old man, and his three fans.

Cel. I could match this beginning with an old tale.

Le Beu. This proper young men, of excellent growth and presence.

Refr. With bills on their neckers: Be it knowne vnto all men that these presents.

Le Beu. The elde of the three, wrastled with Charles the Dukes Wrahter, which Charles in a momenct threw him, and broke three of his ribbes, that there is little hope of life in him: So he sent'd the second, and fo the third: ynder they lie, the poore old man their Father, making such pittifull dole over them, that all the beholders take his part with weeping.

Refr. Alas.

"Cel. But what is the sport Mounfier, that the Ladies have lost?"

Le Beu. Why this that I speake of.

Cel. Thus men may grow wiser every day. It is the first time that ever I heard breaking of ribbes was sport for Ladies.

Cel. Or I, I promis thee.

Refr. But is there any else longs to see this broken Muffecke in his fides? Is there yet another doestes upon rib-breking? Shall we see that wrastling Cosin?

Le Beu. You must if you stay here, for here is the place appointed for the wrastling, and they are ready to perfume it.

Cel. Yonder fence they are comming, let vs noy stay and see it.

Flourish. Enter Duke, Lords, Orlando, Charles, and Attendant.

Duke. Come on, since the youth will not be intreated
His owne persill on his forward hefe.

Refr. Is yonder the man?

Le Beu. Even he, Madam.

Cel. Alas, he is too young: ye he looks successully
Dn. How now daughter, and Cousin:

Are you crept hither to see the wrastling?

Refr. I my Liege, so please you giue vs leave.

Dn. You will take little delight in it, I can tell you there is much oddes in the man: In pitie of the challengers youth, I would faine dissuade him, but he will not be entreated. Speak to him Ladies, see if you can move him.

Cel. Call him hether good Monfieur Le Beu
Duke. Do so: He not be by.

Le Beu. Monfieur the Challenger, the Princesse calls
for you.

Orl. I attend them with all respect and dutie.

Refr. Youngman, haue you challeng'd Charles the Wrahter?

Orl. No faire Princesse: he is the general challenger, I come but in as ethers do, to try with him the strength of my youth.

Cel. Yong Gentleman, your spirits are too bold for your ceyes: you haue seen cruel proofs of this mans strength, if you saw your selfe with your cyes, or know your selfe with your judgment, the fear of your adventure would consell you to a more equall enterprise. We pray you for your owne sake to embrace your owne sa tic and gauge over this attempt.

Refr. Do young Sir? your reputation shall not therefore be mispriz'd: we will make it our fuite to the Duke, that the wrastling might not go forward.

Orl. I brench you, punish mee not with your hard thoughts, wherein I confesse me much guiltie to denie to faire and excellent Ladies anie thing. But let your faire eies, and gentle wiffes go with mee to my triall; wherein if I bee fald, there is but one shal't d that was never gracieus: if kil'd, but one dead that is willing to be fo: I shal do my friends no wrong, for I have none to lament me: the world no inuere for it: I haue nothing: onely in the world I flipp a place, which may bee better supplied, when I haue made it emptie.

Refr. The little strength that I haue, I would is vvere with you.

Cel.
As you like it.

Cel. And mine to eke out hers.

Ref. Fare you well; praise heaven I be deceiv'd in you.

Cel. Your hearts desires be with you.

Char. Come, where is this young gallant, that is so destrous to lie with his mother earth?

Orl. Readie Sir, but his will hast in it a more modest working.

Duk. You shall trie but one fall.

Che. No, I warrant your Grace you shall not entertain him to a second, that haue so mightlie perswaded him from a first.

Orl. You mean to mocke me after: you should not have mock'd me before: but come your wares.

Ref. Now Hercules, be thy speeche yong man.

Cel. I would I were insensible, to catch the strong fellow by the legge.

Ref. Oh excellent yong man.

Cel. If I had a thunderbolt in mine eie, I can tell who should downe.

Duk. No more, no more.

Orl. Yes I befeech your Grace, I am not yet well breath'd.

Ref. How do's thou Charles?

Le Beau. He cannot speake my Lord,

Duk. Besee him awake.

What is thy name yong man?

Orl. Orlando my Liege, the yongest sonne of Sir Roland de Boys.

Duk. I would thou hadst beene son to some man else,
The world esteem'd thy father honourable,
But I did finde him full mine enemie:
Thou shouldst have better pleas'd me with this deede,
Hadst thou descented from another house:
But fare thee well, thou art a gallant youth,
I would thou hadst told me of another Father.

Exit Duke.

Cel. Were I my Father (Coze) would I do this?

Orl. I am more proud to be Sir Roland's sonne,
His yongest sonne, and would not change that calling
To be adopt'd heir to Frederick.

Ref. My Father loud Sir Roland at his soule,
And all the world was of my Fathers minde,
Had I before knowne this young man his sonne,
I should have given him tears into entreaties,
Ere he should thus haue vent'd,

Cel. Gentle Cozen,
Let us goe thank him, and encourage him:
My Fathers rough and mutious disposition
Sticks me at heart: Sir, you haue well deserv'd,
If you doe keepe your promises in love,
But solly as you haue exceed'd all promise,
Your Mistresse shall be happy.

Ref. Gentleman,
Weare this for me: one out of fortunes with fortune
That could give more, but that her hand lacks means.
Shall we goe Coze?

Cel. Is faire you well faire Gentleman.

Orl. Can I not say, I thank you! My better parts
Are all in worse downe, and that which here stands vp
Is but a quittance, a mere jettise blocke.

Ref. He saies vs backes: my pride fell with my fortunes,
He take him what he would: Did you call Sir?

Cel. You have wrasht well, and ouerthrown.

More then your enemys.

Cel. Will you goe Coze?

Ref. Have with you: fare you well. Exit.

Orl. What passion hanges these weighty vpo you toong?
I cannot speake to her, yet the vrg'd conference.

Enter Le Beau.

O poore Orlando! thou art ouerthrown.
Or Charles, or something weaker masters thee.

Le Beau. Good Sir, I do in friendship counsel you
To leave this place; albeit you haue deserv'd
High commendation, true applause, and loue;
Yet such is now the Dukes condition,
That he misconfers all that you have done:
The Duke is humorous, what he is indeede
More suite you to conceive, then I to speake of.

Orl. I thank you Sir, and pray you tell me this,
Which of the two was daughter of the Duke,
That here was at the Wrastling?

Le Beau. Neither his daughter, if we judge by manners,
But yet indeede the taller is his daughter,
The other is daughter to the banish'd Duke,
And here detain'd by her ybearling Yncle
To keepe his daughter companion, whole loues
Are deere then the natural bond of Sisters:
But I can tell you, that of late this Duke
Hath gone in pleade for'gainst his gentle Niece,
Grounded upon no other argument,
But that the people praise her for her vertues,
And pittee her, for her good Fathers sake;
And on my life his malice 'gainst the Lady
Will sodainly breake forth: Sir, fare you well,
Hereafter in a better world then this,
I shall deifie more loue and knowledge of you.

Orl. I tell much bounden to you: fare you well.
Thus must I from the snaile into the snother,
From tyrant Duke, into a tyrant Brother.

But heavenly Rosaline.

Exit.

Scene Tertius.

Enter Celia and Rosaline.

Cel. Why Cozen, why Rosaline? Cupid haue mercie,
Not a word?

Ref. Not one to throw at a dog.

Cel. No, thy words are too precious to be cast away
Upon curs, though some of them at me; come, come mee with reasons.

Ref. Then there were two Cozens laid vp, when the one should be land'd with reasons, and the other mad without any.

Cel. But is all this for your Father?

Ref. No, some of it is for my childer Father: Oh how full of bitters is this working day world.

Cel. They are but burs, Cozen, introwne vpon thee
In holiday foolerie, if we wake not in the stodden paths
Our very petty coates will catch them.

Ref. I could make them off my coate, these burs are in my heart.

Cel. Hem them away.

Ref. I would try if I could cry hem, and have him.

Cel. Come, come, wrashtle with thy affections.

Ref. O they take the part of a better wrashtler then my selfe.

Cel. Of a good with vpon you: you will trie in time in

l. ii. 211—l. iii. 26
in sight of all: but turning these lefts out of her face, let us talk in good earnest: Is it possible on such a matter you should fall into such a slumber with so reverend a soul as yourself?

Ref. The Duke my father lov'd his father dearly.

Cel. Doth. it therefore ensue that you should lose his son? By this kind of chase, I should hate him, for my father hated his father dearly; yet I have not Orlando.

Ref. No faith, hate him not for my sake.

Cel. Why should I not? doth he not deserve it well?

Enter Duke with Lords.

Ref. Let me love him for this, and do you love him because I do. Look, here comes the Duke.

Cel. With his cens full of anger.

Duk. Misstrue, dispatch you with your selfish haste, And get you from our Court.

Ref. Me Vnle.

Duk. You Cofen,

Within these ten days it that thou best found So more our publicke Court at twenty miles, Thou dost it for.

Ref. I do beseech your Grace, Let me the knowledge of my faults bear me: With my felie I hold intelligence, Or have acquaintance with mine owne desire, If that I do not dreame, or be not frantic, (As I do be true I am not) then deere Vnle, Neuer so much as in a thought rabbone, Did I offend your highnesse.

Duk. This doe all Tractors, If their purgation did consist in words, They are as innocent as grace it selfe; Let it suffice thee that I truft thee not.

Ref. Yet your mistrust cannot make me a Traitor; Tell me whereon the likelihoods depends?

Duk. Thou art thy fathers daughter, there's enough.

Ref. So was I when your highnesse took his dukedom, So was I when your highness banish'd him; Treston is not inherited my Lord, Or if we did derive it from our friends, What is that to me, my father was no Traitor, Then good my Lege, mistake me not so much, To shunke my povertie is treachery.

Cel. Deere Soveraigne hearse me speake.

Duk. 1 Cofen, we flaid her for your sake, Else she had with her father rang'd along.

Cel. I did not then intent to have her stay, It was your pleasure, and your owne remore, I was too young that time to value her, But now I know her: if she be a Traitor, Why so am I, as I still have slept together, Rofe at an infante, learn'd, praid, estate together, And wherefore we went, like honest Swans, Still we went coupled and insepert.

Duk. She is too subtle for thee, and her smoothnesses; Her vertue fincere, and per patience, Speake to the people, and they pattie her: Thou art a foole, the rob thee of thy name, And thou wilt show more bright, & feem more vertuous When she is gone: then open not thy lips.

Firme, and irreuocable is my doome, Which I haue paft upon her, she is banish'd.

Cel. Pronounce that sentence then on me my Lege, I cannot live out of her company.

Duk. You are a foole: you Nece prome you selfe, If you out-stay the time, you have mine honor, And in the greatnesse of my word you die.

Exeunt. Duke, &c.

Ref. 0 my poore Roseline, whether wilt thou goe? Wilt thou change Fathers? I will give thee mine: I charge thee be not thou more grieu'd then I am.

Ref. I haue more cause.

Cel. Thou haft not Cofen, Percebe thee be cheerfulfull, know'ft thou not the Duke Hath banish'd me his daughter?

Ref. That he hath not.

Ref. No, hath not? Roseline lacks then the love Which teacheth thee that thou and I am one, Shall we be bound? shall we part? weete girle? No, let my Father seeks another here: Therefore deuise with me how we may flee Whether to goe, and what to beare with vs, And doe not trosse to take your change upon you, To bear your grieues your selfe, and leaue me out: For by this heaven, now at our sorrowes palse, Say what thou canst, I goe along with thee.

Ref. Why, whether shall we goe?

Cel. To trosse my Vnle in the Forreft of Arden.

Ref. Alas, what danger will it be too,es, (Mades as we are) to trussell forth to farre? Because roudo the theeues sooner then gold.

Cel. He put my felle in poore and meane attire, And with a kind of vmbler smirch my face, The like do you, so shall we passe along, And neuer his affillants.

Ref. Were it not better, Because that I am more then common tall, That I did fitte one all points like a man, A gallant eartrax upon my thigh, A bare speare in my hand, and in my heart Lye there what hidden woman fare there will, Weele have a swasing and a marshall outide, As manie other manifieth towards,

Cel. That doe oufassie it with their semblances, That shall I call thee when thou art a man?

Ref. I haue no worse a name then honest owne Page, And therefore looke you call me Gauntwych.

But what will you by call'd?

Cel. Something that hath a reference to my face: No longer Cela, but Aliena.

Ref. But Cofen, what if we affaid to feale The clownsnes Foose out of your Fathers Court? Would he not be a comfort to our trauaille?

Cel. Heege goe along ore the wide world with me, Leave me alone to woe him; Let's away And get our Jewells and our wealth togither, Deuise the fittest time, and safest way To hide vs from pursuifte that will be made After my flight now goe in we content To libertie, and not to banishment.

Exeunt.

Atius Secundus. Scena Prima.

Enter Duke Senior: Almagis, and two or three Lords' like Forefeters.

Duk. Sen. Now my Cove-waste, and brosers in exile: Hath not old culome made this life more sweeet.
Then that of painted pomps? Are not these woods
More free from peril than the ensiuous Court?
Here fate we not the penalty of Adam,
The lessons difference, as the Icie change
And curstish chiding of the winters winde,
Which when it bites and blows upon my body
Euen till I shrunke with cold and fierce, and lay
This is no flattery: these are counsellors
That feelingly persuade me what I am:
Sweet are the vies of adversity
Which like the toad, ougly and venomous,
Wears yet a precious jewel in his head:
And this our life eexed prom publicke haunt,
Finds tongues in trees, bookes in the running brookes,
Sermon in stones, and good in every thing.

Amien. I would not change it, happy is your Grace
That can translate the rubbarmelle of fortune
Into so quiet and so sweet a style.

Du Sen. Come,shall we goe and kill a venefion?
And yet itrikes me the poore dappled foole
Being natue Burgers of this detest City,
Should inther Owne confines with forked heads
Hawe their round hanches garded.

1. Lord. Indeed my Lord
The melancholy Iapers grieves at that,
And in that kinde (wears you do more wyppe)
Then doth your brother that hath banished you:
To day my Lord of Amien, and my selfe,
Did stelte behind him as he lay along
Vnder an oak, whose antick rooste peepe out
Upon the brooke that braviles along this wood,
To which the place a poore quefitical Stag,
That from the Hunters ayme had tane a hurt,
Did come to languysh; and indeed my Lord
The wretched animal heald forth such groanes
That their dischare did frighten his leathern coat
Almoft to buftling, and the big round teates
Cours'd one another downe his innocent nole
In picteous chafe: and thus the haerie foole,
Much marked of the melanchole Iapers,
Stood on the treemell verge of the fine brooke,
Augmenting it with teares.

Du Sen. But what said Iapers?
Did he not moralize this spectacle?
2. Lord. O yes, into a thousand families.
First, for his weeping into the needleles strea\nS; Poor Deere quoth he, thou makst a testament
As wooldling doe, giving thy hum of more
To that which had too mutt: then being there alone,
Left and abandoned of his veluer friend;
Theright quoth he, thus melteth dute part
The fluxe of companie: anon a carelesse Hearde
Full of the pasture, jumps along by him
And never flaes to greet him: I quoth Iapers, Sweepye on you fat and greattie Citizens,
'Tis not the fashion; wherefore do you looke
Upon that pouse and broken bankrupt there?
Thus most innocently he pierce through
The body of Country, Citie, Court,
Yea, and of his owne life, sweareing that we
Are meere vuppers, tyrants, and whatso worde
To fright the Animals, and to kill them wp
In their affifed and native dwelling place.

Du Sen. And did you leave him in this contemplation?
2. Lord. We did my Lord,weeping and commenting Upon the sobbing Deere.

Du Sen. Show me the place,
I loue to cope him in the fullen fis,
For then he's full of matter.

1 Lor. He bring you to him strait.

Exeunt.

Scene Secunda.

Enter Duke, with Lordes.

Duke. Can it be possible that no man saw them?
It cannot be, some villaines of my Court
Are of confent and suffereance in this.

1. Lor. I cannot heare of any that did see her,
The Ladies her attendants of her chamber
Saw her a bed, and in the morning early,
They found the bed victasur'd of their Mistres.
2. Lor. My Lord, the roynish Clown, at whom to off,
Your Grace was wont to laugh is also miffing,
Hijeria the Princefle Gentlewoman
Confesseth that she secretely one-heard
Your daughter and her Cofen much commend
The parts and graces of the Wrasler
That did but lately goe the Fynowch Charlet,
And the beleues where euer they are gone
That youth is surely in their company.

Duke. Send to his brother, fetch that gallant hither,
If he be abente, bring his Brother to me,
He make him finde him: do this foadily;
And let not search inquisition quallie,
To bring against these foolish runaways.

Exeunt.

Scene Tertia.

Enter Orlando and Adam.

Orl. Who's there?

Ad. What my yong, Master, oh my gentle Master,
Oh my sweet Master, you remember
Of old Sir Rowland; why, what make you here?
Why are you vertuous? Why do poor people love you?
And wherefore are you gentle, strong, and valiant?
Why would you be so fond to overcomne
The bonnie prifer of the humorious Duke?
Your prais is come too swift the home before you.

Know you not Master, to seeme kind of men,
Their graces liue them but as enemies,
No more doe yours: your vertues gentle Master
Are sanctified and holy traitors to you:
Oh what a world is this, when what is comely
Emnenous him that bears it?
Why, what's the matter?

Ad. O unhappie youth,
Come not within these doore: within this roome
The enemie of all your graces liue:
Your brother, no brother, yet the fon
(Yet not the foud, I will not call him fon)
Of him I was about to call his Father,
Hath heard your praires, and this night he means,
To burne the lodging where you vse to lye,
And you within its: if he faile of that.
As you like it. 191

He will have other means to cut you off;
I hearder him: and his practises:
This is no place, this house is but a butcherie;
Abhorre it, fear it, do not enter it.

As. Why whether Adam wouldst thou have me go?
Ad. No matter whether, so you come not here.
Or. What wouldst thou have me goke beg my food,
Or with a bale and boistrous Sword enforce
A threnthiish living on the common road?
This I must do, or know not what to do:
Yet this I will not do, so how I can,
I rather will submitt me to the malice
Of a diereted blood, and bloudie brother.

Ad. But do not so: I have five hundred Crownes,
The thriftie hire I faued under your father,
Which I did store to be my latter Nurse,
When seruice should in my old limbs be lame,
And vregarded age in corners throwne,
Take that, and he that doth the Raunts feede,
Yea providently eaters for the Sparrow,
Be comfort to my age: here is the gold,
All this I give you, let me be your feuant,
Though I looke old, yet I am strong and lustie;
For in my youth I never did apply
Hot,and rebellious liquors in my blood,
Nor did not with unblest full forehead woe,
The meanes of weaknesse and debilite,
Therefore my age is as a lustie winter,
Frolick, but kindly; let me goe with you,
He do the service of a yoong man.
In all your businesse and necessitie.

Or. Oh good old man, how well in thee appears
The constant service of the antique world,
When seruice sweate for dutie,not for meede:
Thou art not for the fashion of these times,
Where none will sweate, but for promotion,
And hating that do choose their seruice vp,
Even with the hauing, it is so not with thee:
But poor old man, thou prunft a rotten tree,
That cannot so much as a blossome yeeld,
In lieu of all thy paines and husbandrie,
But come thy waies, wee cle doe along together,
And ere we hauie thy youthfull wages spent,
Wee cle wepe vpon somet danger low content.

Ad. Master goe on, and I will follow thee
To the left galle with truth and loyallie,
From levantene yeers, till now almoost foure score.
Here I layd, but now lye here no more
At leasstenee yeers, many their fortunes fecke
But at foure score, it is too late a wecke,
Yet fortune cannot recompense me better
Then to die well, and not my Makers dearter.

Scena Quarta.

Enter Rosaline for Ganison, Celia for Alcina, and Clowne, alias Touchstone.

Ros. O Jupiter, how merry are my spirits?
Cle. I care not for my spirits, if my legges were not wearie.
Ros. I could finde in my heart to disgrace my mans apperell,
And to crye like a women: but I must comfort the weakest vellell, as doublet and hose ought to show it felie coragious to pettie-coate; therefore courage good Alcina.

Cle. I praye you beare with me, I cannot goe no further.

Cle. For my part, I had rather beare with you, then beare you: yet I should beare no crosse if I did beare you, for I think you have no money in your purse.

Ros. Well, this is the Forrest of Arden.
Cle. I now am I in Arden, the more foole I, when I was at home I was in a better place, but Travellers must be content.

Enter Corin and Silvia.

Ros. I be so good Touchstone: Lock you, who comes here,
a young man and an old in solemn talk.
Cor. That is the way to make her scarce you stiill.
Sil. Oh Corin, that thou knewst how I do love her.
Cor. I partly gueffe: for I have lou'd e're now.
Sil. No Corin, being old, thou canst not gueffe,
Though in thy youth thou wast at true a louer,
As euer figh'd upon a midnight pillow:
But if thy loue were euer like to mine,
As fate I think did never man loue fo:
How many actions most ridiculous,
Hast thou beene drawn to by thy pastasie?
Cor. Into a thoufand that I have forgotten.
Sil. Oh thou didst then neuer loue fo bartely,
If thou remembreft not the flight teff folly,
That euer loue did make thee run into,
Hast thou haft not lound.
Or if thou haft not as I do now,
Wearing thy heart in thy Militia praise,
Thou haft not lound.
Or if thou haft not broke from companie,
Abruptly as my passion now makes me,
Thou haft not lound.
P. Phebe, Phebe, Phebe.

Ros. Alas poore Shepheard searching of they would,
I haue by hard adventure fou'd mine owne.

Cle. And I mine: I remember when I was in Loue,
I broke my fword vpon a stone, and bid him take that for comining a night to Loue Sonne, and I remember the kifing of her baser, and the Cowes dugs that her prettie chophsands had milkg'; and I remember the wooling of a peaces instead of her, from whom I tooke two cods, and giuing her them againe, said with wepeing tears, weare thefe for my fake: wee that are true Lou-eers, runne into strange capers; but as all is mortall in nature, so is all nature in loue, mortall in folly.

Ros. Thou speakst wiser then thou art ware of.

Cle. Nay, I shall nere be ware of mine owne wis, till
I break my fhrins against it.

Ros. Loue, Loue, this Shepheardes passion,
Is much upon my fashion.

Cle. And mine, but it grows something fiale with me.

Ros. I pray you, one of you queffion you'd man,
If he for gold will giue vs any foode,
I faine almoft to death.

Cle. Holla, you Clowne.

Ros. Peace fool, he's not thy kindman.

Cle. Who callst

Cle. Your betters Sirs.

Ros. Else are they very wretched.

Ros. Peace
your but that they call complements like th'encounter of two dog-Apes. And when a man thanks me hatfully, me thinks he has given me a penie, and he renders me the beggarly thanks. Come sing; and you will not hold your tongues.

Amy. Well, I'll end the song. Sirs, court the while, the Duke will drink vnder this tree; he hath bin all this day to looke you.

IQ. And I haue pin all this day to avoid him:
He is too disputable for my companie:
I think of as many matters as he, but I glue
Heaven thankes, and make no boast of them.
Come, warble, come.

Song.

Altsgether heare,
Who dare ambition brame,
And looke to Rae and Smittes:
Seeking the food be care,
And peace it with what he gets:
Come hither, come hither, come hither,
Hear shall be fee, &c.

IQ. He giveth you a venite to this note,
That I make yesteray a deputation of my Intention.

Amy. And he sing it.

Amy. Thus it goes,

If he do come to pluff, that any man turne Asse:
Leaving his wealth and care,
A fiddle borne will to please;
Died one, faire one, ad-vadone:
Here shall he for no enemies,
As she will come to me.

Amy. What's that Dead come?

IQ. This is a Greeke instruction, to call fools into a circle. He go sleepe if I can: if I cannot, I'll raise against all the first borne of Egypt.

Amy. And he go tecke the Duke,
His banke is prepar'd.

Scena Sexta.

Enter Orlando, & Adam.

Adam. Dearth Master, I can go no further:
O I die for food. Here I lie downe;
And mutter out my grasse. Farve of kindes matter.

Or. Why how now Adam? No greater heart in thee
Liueth little, consorts a little, cheere thy selfe a little.
If this voucouch Forrest yield any thing saucy,
I will either be food for it, or bring it for food to thee:
Thy conceit is neeter death, then thy powers,
For my face be comfortable, hold death a while
At the armes end: I will beere be with thee presently,
And if I bring thee not something to eate,
I will give thee leave to die: but if thou diest
Before I come, thou art a snacker of my labor.
Wel said, thou look it cheerely,
And I be with thee quickly: yet thou liest
In the bleake air. Come, I will bring thee
To some shelter, and thou shalt not die
For lacke of a dinner,
If there liue any thing in this Defert.
Cheerly good Adam.
Scene Septima.

Enter Duke Sen. Of Lords, like One-alone.

Du. Sen. I think he be transform'd into a beast, for I can no where find him, like a man.

1. Lord. My Lord, he is but even now gone hence, Here was he merry, hearing of a Song.

Du. Sen. The compact of jarrings grow Musical; We shall have shortly discord in the Spheres: Go seek him, tell him I would speake with him.

Enter Falstaff.

1. Lord. He saws my labor by his owne approach.

Du. Sen. Why how now Monstre, what a life is this That you poor friends must woe your companie, What, you looke merrily.

Iaq. A Foole, a foole: I met a foole i' th' Forest, A motley Foole (a miserable world!)

As I do live by foode, I met a foole, Who laid him downe, and bask'd him in the Sun, And rai'd on Lady Fortune, good reallly, they med for terms, and yet a motley foole.

Good morrow foole (quoth I): no Sir, quoth he, Call me not foole, till heauen hath sent me fortune, And then he drew a dial from his pocke, And looking on it, with lacke-lustre eye, Sayes, very wisely, it is ten a clocke: Thus we may see (quoth he) how the world waggis This but an hour agoe, since it was nine, And after one hour more, 'twill be eleven, And so from hour to hour, we ripe, and ripe, And then from hour to hour, we rot, and rot, And the eby hangs a tale. When I did hear The motley Foole, thus morall on the time, My Lungs began to grow like Chanticleere, That Fools should be so depe contemptuous: And I did laugh, fans intimation

An hour by his dial. Oh noble foole, A worthy foole: Motley's the onely weare.

Du. Sen. What foole is this?

Iaq. O worthie Foole: One that hath bin a Courtier And sayes, if Ladies be but young, and faire, They haue the gift to know it: and in his braue, Which is as drie as the remainder bustet After a voyage: He hath strange places cram'd With observation, the which he vents In mangled formes. O that I were a foole, I am ambitious for a motley coat.

Du. Sen. Thou shalt haue one.

Iaq. It is my onely suite, Prouided that you weed your better judgements Of all opinion that growes rank in them;

That I am wise, I must haue liberty

Winshall, as a large a Charter as the winde,

To blow on whom I please, for so foolees have:

And they that are most gaude with my selfly,

They mote miff laugh: And why? for methy they so?

The why is plain, as way to Parnell Church:

Hear, that a Foole doth very wisely hit,

Dogh very toodliilly, although he loath

Scene tenelle the bob. If not,
The Wilke-man tooilly is unaccomad:

Even by the squandering glinces of the floole.

Insteff me in my motley: Gie me leave To speake my minde, and I will through and through Cleanse the foule body of this intieded world, If they will patiently receive my medicine.

Du. Sen. Iie on thee. I can tell what shoule would do.

Iaq. What, for a Counter, would I do, but good?

Du. Sen. Most mifcheuous foule fin, in hiding fin:

For thou thy selfe haft bene a Librettine,

As fenfual as the brutifh ting it selfe,

And all th'inboffed fores, and headed sues,

That thou with licencse of free foot haft caught,

Would it disgorge into the generall world,

Iaq. Why who cries out on pride,

That can therein take any private party:

Doth it not flow as hugely as the Sea,

Till that the weare very incanies do obbe,

What woman in the Citie do I name,

When that I say the City woman bears

The cost of Princes on unworthy shoulders?

Who can come in, and say that I meane her,

When such a one as free, such is her neighbor?

Or what is he of basefll function,

That layes his braue: it is not on my cost,

Thinking that I meane him, but therein suitez His folly to the mettie of my speech,

There then, how then, what then, let me fee wherein My tongue hath wrong'd him: if it do him right,

Then he hath wrong'd himselfe: if he be free,

why then my taxying like a wild-goofe flies

Vitclain'd of any. man But who come here?

Enter Orlando.

Orl. Forbeare, and eare no more.

Iaq. Why I haue eare none yet.

Orl. Nor shall not, till nesciety be set.

Iaq. Of what kinde should this Coccke come of?

Du. Sen. Art thou thus bolden'd man by thy diftres? Or elle a rude despiser of good manners,

That in cunsiety thou art'to emptie?

Orl. You touchd my veins at first, the thorny point Of bare diftresse, hath tane from me the shew Of smooth cuenity: yet am I in-land bred,

And know somr nourtire; But forbeare, I say,

He dies that touches any of this fruites,

Till I, and my affaires are answerd.

Iaq. And you will not be answer'd with reason,

I must dye.

Du. Sen. What would you have?

Your gentlese shall force, more then your force

Moue vs to gentilesse.

Orl. I alnoft die for food, and let me have it.

Du. Sen. Sit donee and feed, & welcme to our table

Orl. Speake you so gently? Pardon me I pray you,

I thought that all things had bin saufage here,

And therefore put on the countenance

Of freme commandment. But what ere you are

That in this defert inceffible,

Vnder the shade of melancholy boughes,

Loafe, and neglect the countenecing hours of time?

If yee have you look'd on better dayes:

If yeuer beene where belles haue knoweld to Church:

If yeuer fate at any good mans feast:

If yeuer from your eye-hids wip'd a teare,

And know what itis to pitie, and be pitied:

Let gentleesse my strong eonfentemence be,

In the which hope, I blush, and hide my Sword.

\[\text{O.} \text{ And how like you this Shephersd lifes life My Touchstone? Cle.}\]
As you like it.

Clow. Truly Shepheard, in respect of it selfe, it is a good life; but in respect that it is a shepheardes life, it is naught. In respect that it is solitary, I like it very well; but in respect that it is private, it is a very quick life. Now in respect that it is in the fields, it pleased mee well; but in respect it is not in the Court, it is tedious. As it is a sparke life (lookes) it fits my humor well: but as there is no more pleasure in it, it goes much against my Romackle. Has any Philosophy in thee Shepheard?

Cor. No more, but that I know the more one seekes, the worse is eafe he is: and that hee that seekes money, meanes, and concit, is without three good frends. That the propertie of sine is to wet, and fire to burne: That good passeur makes for thepeare: and that a great caufe of the night, is lacke of the sunne: That hee that hath learned no wit by Nature, nor Art, may complain of good breeding, or comes of a very dull kindred.

Clo. Such a one is a natural Philosopher:

Was't ever in Court, Shepheard?

Cor. No truly.

Clo. Then thou art damnd:

Cor. Nay, I hope.

Clo. Truly thou art damnd, like an ill roaste Eggs, all on one side.

Cor. For not being at Court? your reason.

Clo. Why, if thou never wast at Court, thou never sawst good manners: if thou never sawst good manners, then thy manners must be wicked, and wickednes is sin, and Sinnes is damnation: Thou art in a pernicious estate Shepheard.

Cor. Not a whit Touchstone, those that are good manners at the Court, are as ridiculous in the Country, as the behaviour of the Countryis most mockable at the Court. You told me, you felte not at the Court, but you kiffe your handes; that courtiers would be vncleane, if Courtiers were shepheards.

Clo. Infance, briefly: come, infance.

Cor. Why we are still handling our Ewes, and their Felts you know are greasse.

Clo. Why do not your Courtiers hands sweate and is not the greasse of a Mutton, as wholesome as the sweat of a man? Shallows, shallow: A better instance I say: Come.

Cor. Besides, our hands are hard.

Clo. Your lips will feel thee the sooner. Shallows again: more founder instance, come.

Cor. And they are often tarr'd over, with the suruyge of our sheepe: and would you have vs kisfe Tarre? The Courtiers hands are perfoun with Citue.

Clo. Most shallow man: Thou wormes meat in respect of a good piece of flesh indeed: leaue of the name and perpend: Citue is of a baster birth then Tarre, the vertue vnmeanly fluxe of a Cat. Mend the infance Shepheard?

Cor. You haue too Courtly a wit, for me, he reft.

Cor. Sir, I am a true Labourer, I canne that I eat: get that I wear: owe no man hate, enue no mans happiness: glad of other mens good content with my barren: and the greatest of my pride, is to see my Ewes graze, & my Lambes fatten.

Clo. That is another simple finne in you, to bring the Ewes and the Rammes together, and to offer to get your living, by the capulation of Castle, to be bawd to a Belweather, and to betray a shee-Lambe of a twelvemonth to a crooked-pated old Cuckoldlye Ramme, out of all reasonable match. If thou be not damnd for this, the diuell himselfe will have no shepherdes, I cannot fee clee how thou shouldest speake.

Cor. Heere comes young Mr Gamined, my new Myllifles Brother.

Enter Rosalinde.

Ros. From the soft to weare I come, no ire at my Rosalinde,

Hir worth being mantained on the winde,

through all the world bears Rosalinde.

All the picture fairest Lindsie, are but blackes to Rosalinde:

Let no face be kept in mind,

but the faire of Rosalinde.

Clo. il time you so, right years together: dinners, and dippers, and sleeping houses excepted: it is the right Butter-womens rank to Market.

Ros. Of Foole.

Clo. For a taffle.

If a Hart die lacke a Hinde,

Let him seeke out Rosalinde:

If the Cat will after kinde,

so be fare will Rosalinde:

Wintred garment must be lende,

so must fender Rosalinde:

They that rep must be fende and kinde,

then to carrt with Rosalinde.

Sweetenut, both fawrz and rinde,

such a nut is Rosalinde.

He that fawz both, rt will with foole, must sende Lovez praise, & Rosalinde.

This is the verie falte gallop of Verstes, why do you infect your felles with them?

Ros. Peace you dull foole, I found them on a tree.

Clo. Truly the tree yesterdays bad fruite.

Ros. If I graffe it with you, and then I shall graffe it with a Meller: then it will be the earliest fruit in that country: for you will rotten ere you be half ripe, and that's the right venue of the Meller.

Ros. You have said: but whether wisely or no, let the Forrest judge.

Enter Celia with a writing.

Ros. Peace, here comes my bitter reading, stand aside.

Cel. Why should this Dsert bee, for it is onepoled? Noe:

Touger hee hang a core tree,
that shall send sayings floye.

Some, how briefe the Life of man runs his course pilgrimage,

That the stretching of a bow, huckles in his summe of age.

Some of violated owes,

swest the soules of friend, and friends.

But upon the fairest bowes,
or at longest sentence end;

Will I Rosalinde write,

teaching all that read to know

The quintessence of our spirit, heavenly would in little flow.

Therefore beamen Nature chang'd, that one bode should be full'd

With all Graces wide enlarg'd, nature profumptly defil'd

Ref. Of molf gentle Jupiter, what tedious horriblie of Loue haue you waried your paritions withall, and neuer cri'de, haue patience good people.
Cel. How now backe friends: shepheard, go off a little: go with him thrath.

Ref. Come Shepheard, let vs make an honorable retreat, though not with bagge and baggage, yet with scrip and scrippage.

Exe. Cel. Didst thou hear these verses?
Ref. O yes, I heard them all, and more too, for some of them in had more feete then the Veris would beare.

Cel. That's no matter: the feet might beare to verses.
Ref. T, but the feet were lame, and could not bear themselves without the verie, and therefore foond lamely in the verie.

Cel. But didst thou hear without wondering, how thy name should be hang'd and causd upon these trees?
Ref. I was feuen of the nine daies out of the wonder, before you came: for looke heere what I found on a Palme tree; I was neuer fo bemind of fince Cybgaras time that I was an Inff Rat, which I can hardly remembred.

Cel. Tro you, who hath done this?
Ref. Is it a man?

Cel. And a chaine that you once wore about his neck: change you colour?
Ref. I prethee who?
Cel. O Lord, Lord, its a hard matter for friends to meete; but Mountains may bee remoued with Earth-quakes, and fo encounter.

Ref. Nay, but who is it?
Cel. Is it possible?
Ref. Nay, I prethee now, with most petitionary vehemence, tell me who it is.

Cel. O wonderfull, wonderfull, and most wonderfull wonderfull, and yet againe wonderful, and after that out of all hooping.

Ref. Good my complection, doth thou think though I am captiori d like a man, I have a doublt e and hofe in my diposition? One inch of delay more, is a South sea of difcourse. I prethee tell me, who is it, quickly, and speake space: I would thou couldst fiammer, that thou might it power this conceale d man out of thy mouth, as Wine comes out of a narrow-mouth'd bouteleither too much at once, or none at all. I prethee take the Corke out of thy mouth, that I may drinke thy tydings.

Cel. So you may put a man in your belly.
Ref. Is he of Gods making? What manner of man is? Is his head worth a hat? Or his chin worth a beard?

Cel. Nay, he hath but a little beard.
Ref. Why God will fend more, if the man will bee thankfull: let me fay the growth of his beard, if thou delay me not the knowledge of his chin.

Cel. It is young Orlando, that tripp vp the Wrafflers heele, and your heart, both in an instant.

Ref. Nay, but the diuell take mocking: speake sadde brow, and true maid.
Cel. T'thief(Coz) tis he.

Ref. Orlando?
Cel. Orlando.

Ref. Alas the day, what shall I do with my doublt e and hofe? What did he when thou fawf h him? What fayde he? He left you? Wherein went he? What makes hee heere? Did he aske for me? Where remaines he? How parted he with thee? And when shall thou fhee him a-again? Answere me in one word.

Cel. You muft borrow me Gargantua mouth first: 'tis a word too great for any; mouth of this Age, to say I and no, to these particulars, is more then to answere in a Catechisme.

Ref. But doth he know that I am in this Forrest, and in mans apparell? Looks he as freilly, as he did the day he Waffled?

Cel. It is as easy to count Atomys as to refolve the propositions of a Louer: but take a taste of my finding him, and relifh it with good obloquie. I found him under a tree like a drop'd Acorne.

Ref. It may vveel be cal'd loues tree, when it droppes forth fruite.

Cel. Gius me audience, good Madam.
Ref. Proceed.
Cel. There lay hee fretch'd along like a Wounded knight.

Ref. Though it be pittie to see such a fight, it well becomes the ground.

Cel. Cry bulles to the tongue, I prethee; it currettes unreasonably. He was furnished like a Hunter.

Ref. O ominous, he comes to kill my Hart.

Cel. I would finge my song without a Butter, thou bringit me out of tune.

Ref. Do you not know I am a woman, when I think, I muft speake swee't, fay on.

Enter Orlando & Jaques.

Ref. You bring me out. Sotr, comes I not here?

Cel. 'Tis he, flanke by, and note him.

Jaq. I thank you to your company, but good faith I had as heere have bene myセル alone.

Orl. And to fuch I, but yet for fashion fake I thank you too, for your lovetrie.

Jaq. God by oes, let's meet as little as we can.

Orl. I do defire we may be better Strangers.

Jaq. I pray you marre no more trees with Writing Lous-fongs in their barks.

Orl. I pray you marre no moc of my verses with rea- ding them ill-fauouredly.

Jaq. T'is true is your loues name? Orl. Yes, Juft.

Jaq. I do not like her name.

Orl. There was no thought of pleasing you when thee was chriften'd.

Jaq. What firte is the of?

Orl. Tutt as high as my heart.

Jaq. You are full of pretty answeres: shauce you not bis ac- quainted with goldsmiths wisues, & cond the out of things.

Orl. Not for: but I answere you right pointed cloaths, from whence you have fludied your questions.

Jaq. You have a nimble wit: I thinke 'twas made of Attalanta's heele. Will you fitte downe with me, and wee two, will raile against our Mistis the world, and all our miserie.

Orl. I will chide no breather in the world but my felle against against whom I know no faults.

1. ag. The worst fault you have, is to be in love.

Orl. This is a fault I will not change, for your best virtue; I am weary of you.

1. ag. By my truth, I was seeking for a Foolie, when I found you.

Orl. He is drowned in the brooke, look but in, and you shall see him.

1. ag. There I shall see mine owne figure.

Orl. Which I take to be either a foolie, or a Cipher.

1. ag. He carries no longer with you, farewell good fellow Loue.

Orl. I am glad of your departure: A dieu good Monsieur Melancholy.

Ref. I spake to him like a fawcie Lucky, and unter that habit play the knave with him, do you hear Forre? Verie wel, what would you? (seltet)

Ref. I pray you, what it is a clocke?

Orl. You should ask me what time o’day: there’s no clocke in the Forre.

Ref. Then there is no true Louer in the Forre, else figuring euerie minute, and groaning euerie houre would dete the lazie foot of time, as well as a clocke.

And why not the wisque foote of time? Had not that bin as proper?

Ref. By no meanes sir; Time trauels in diuers paces, with diuers per sons: I tell you who Time ambes withall, who Time trots withal, who Time gallops withal, and who he flandes withal.

Orl. I profess, who doth he trot withal?

Ref. Marry he trots hard with a yong maid, between the contract of her marriage, and the day it is solemniz’d: if the interim be but a fennight, Times pace is so hard, that it feemes the length of euerie year.

Orl. Who ambes Time withal?

Ref. With a Priest that lacks Latine, and a rich man that hath not the Count: for the one sleepes ealily because he cannot study, and the other lues merrily, because he feeleth no paine: the one lacking the burthen of lean and wastfull Learning the other knowing no burthen of heauie tedious perturbe. These Time ambes withal.

Orl. Who doth he gallop withal?

Ref. With a theefe to the gallowes: for though he go as loftly as a toote can fall, he thunke he himselfe too soon there.

Orl. Who slates it fill withal?

Ref. With Lawyers in the vacation: for they sleepe betwixte Terme and Terme, and then they perceive not how time moues.

Orl. Where dwell you prettie youth?

Ref. With this Shephardesse my sister: heere in the skirts of the Forre, like fringe upon a petticoat.

Orl. Are you native of this place?

Ref. As the Coone that you fee dwell where fierce is kindled.

Orl. Your accent is something finer, then you could purchase in so remoued a dwelling.

Ref. I haue bin told so of many: but indeed, an olde religious Vnkle of mine taught me to speake, who was in his yOUTH an infault man, one that knew Courtship too well: for there he fel in Loue, I haue heard him read many of Lefbours against it, and I thank God, I am not a woman to be touch’d with soe many giddy offences as he hath generally tax’d on their whole sex withall.

Orl. Can you remember any of the principall euls, that he laid to the charge of women?

Ref. There were none principal, they were all like one another, as halfe pence are, equete one fault seeming more straunge, till his fellow-fault came to match.

Orl. I prethee give me a recuenta of them.

Ref. No: I wil not cast away my physicke, but on those that are sick. There is a man haunts the Forre, that abusing our yong plants with caruing Rosalinde on their barks; hangs Oades upon Hauhotmes, and Elegies on brambles; all (forsooth) defying the name of Rosalinde.

If I could meet that Faunte-monger, I would give him some good counsel, for he seemes to hate the Quotidian of Loue upon him.

Orl. I amle that is so Loue-fish’d, I pray you tel me your remedy.

Ref. There is none of my Vnckles marks vpon you; he taught me how to know a man in love: in which case of suffrers, I am sure you are not prisoner.

Orl. What were his marks?

Ref. A leane checke, which you have not: a blew eie and sunken, which you have not: an unquesionable spirit, which you have not: a beard neglectful, which you have not: but I pardon you for that, for simly having in beard, is a yonger brothers recrenew.

Then your hoope should be vnsettled, your bonnet vnbanded, your sleete vnbout’d, your shoo vntie’d, and euerie thing about you, demonstrating a carelesse deloration: but you are no fuch many you are rather point deuice in your accoutrements, as losing your selfe, then seeming the Louer of any other.

(II. Loue)

Orl. Fare youth, I would I could make thee beleue

Ref. Me beleue it? You may affonne make her that you Loue beleue it, which I warrant the is ater to do, then to confesse the do’s: that is one of the points, in the which women fill glue the lie to their confidences. But in good sooth, are you he quo hangs the verise on the Trees, wherein Rosalinde is so admired?

Orl. I sweare to thee youth, by the white hand of Rosalinde, I am that he, that unfortunate he.

Ref. But are you so much in Loue, as your times speake?

Orl. Neither time nor reason can express how much.

Ref. Loue is meerly a madness, and I tel you, defenses as well a darkhouse, and a whip, as madmen do: and the reason why they are not so pouiss’d and cured, is that the Lunacie is so arbitrarie, that the why pers are in love too: yet I prophete cuting it by counsil.

Orl. Did you euer cure any so?

Ref. Yes one, and in this manner. He was to imagine me his Loue, his Miftris: and I let him euerie day to woe me: At which time would I, being but a moonish youth, grieve, be extinguish, changeable, longing, and singing, pround, fantatical, apsii, shallow, inconstant, ful of teares, full of fin’s; for euerie passion something: and for no passion truly any thing; as boyes and women are for the most part, calle of this colour: would now like him, now lost him: then entertaine him, then forswear him: now weepe for him, then spit at him: that I drewe my Sutor from his mad humor of Loue, to a living humor of madness, and so to forswear the full stream of it would, and to live in a nooke morely Monsaffectick: and thus I cur’d him, and this way will I take vpon mee to wash your Li ner as clean as a sound sleepe, that there finall not be one foot of Loue in’t.

Orl. I would not be cured, youth.

Ref. I would cure you, if you would but call me R. I. Lord, and come euerie day to my Cost, and woe me.
As you like it.

Orlando. Now by the faith of my loue, I will; Tel me where it is.

Rey. Go’ with me to it, and Ile shew it you; and by the way, you shall tell me, where in the Forreft you live? Will you go?

Orl. With all my heart; good youth.

Rey. Nay, you must call mee Rosalind: Come sifter, will you go?

Scena Tertia.

Enter Clowne, Audrey, & Jaques.

Clo. Come apace good Audrey, I will fetch vp your Goates, Audrey: and how Audrey am I the man yet? Doth my simple feature content you?

Aud. Your feature, I ord warre not what features?

Clo. I am heere with thee, and thy Goates, as the most capicious Poet honett God was among the Goates.

Iag. O knowledge ill inhabited, worse then lace in a thatch’d house.

Clo. When a mans veres cannot be vnderstood, nor a mans good wit confounded with the forward child, vnderstanding; it strikes a man more dead then a great reckoning in a little room: truly, I would the Gods hadde made thee poetical.

Aud. I do not know what Poetical is: is it honett in der’d and word: is it a true thing?

Clo. No trulie: for the truell poetrie is the most faiing, and Lovers are giuen to Poetic: and what they sweare in Poetrie, may be fai as Lovers, they do feigne.

Aud. Do you will then that the Gods had made me poetical?

Clo. I do truly: for thou swe’rt it to me thou art honett: Now if thou wert a Poet, I might have some hope thou didst feigne.

Aud. Would you not haue me honett?

Clo. No truly, vtille thou wert hard fauour’d: for honettie coupled to beautie, is to haue thonie a fawce to Sugar.

Iag. A matieriall fowle.

Aud. Well, I am not faire, and therefore I pray the Gods make me honett.

Clo. Truly, and to cast away honettie vppon a foule flat, were to putt good meate into an vnconuenient dish.

Aud. I am not a flat, though I thanke the Goddes I am foule.

Clo. Well-prai’d be the Gods, for thy soultelle, glutifhnelle may come hereafter. But best, as it may bee, I will marrie thee: and to that end, I haue bin with Sir Oliver Mar-text, the Vicar of the next vllage, who hath pronoun’d to meete mee in this place of the Forreft, and to couple vs.

Iag. I would faine see this meeting.

Aud. Wel, the Gods give vs joy.

Clo. Amen. A man may if he were of a fentiial heart, flagger in this afertment, for heere wee haue no Temple but the wood, no affensibly but horse-beasts. But what thought Courage? As horses are odious, they are necessfarse. It is said, many a man knowes no end of his goods; right! Many a man has good Horses, and knowes no end of them. Well, that is the downe of his victre, this none of his owne getting: horses, then, to prove men alone:

No, no, the noblest Deere hath them as huge as the Raifcall: Is the single man therefore bleffed? No, as a wall’d Towne is more worther then a vllage, so is the fore- head of a married man, more honouurable then the bare browe of a Bacheller: and by how much defence is bettere then no skill, by so much is a horse more precious then to want.

Enter Sir Oliver Mar-text.

Iag. Hows comes Sir Oliver? Sir Oliver Mar-text you are wel met. Will you dispacht where vnder this tree, or shall we go with you to your Chappell?

Clo. Is there none here to giue the woman?

Iag. I will not take her on guilt of any man.

Aud. Truly the she must be giuen, or the marriage is not lawfull.

Iag. Proceed, proceede: Ile giue her.

Clo. Good even good Mr what ye call: how do you Sir, you are verie well met: good all for you for your left companie, I am verie glad to see you, even a toy in hand here Sir Nay, pray be couer’d.

Iag. Will you be married, Motley?

Clo. As the Ox has his bowr sir, the horese his curv, and the Falcon her bels, so man hath his defires, and as Pigeons bill, so vnderlocke would be nilling.

Iag. And will you (being a man of your breeding) be married vnder a biff as a begger? Get you to church, and have a good Priest that can reli you what marriage is, this fellow will but. since you gather, as they sayon Wakefowt, then one of you will prowe a fawne preach, and like greenes timber, warpe, warpe.

Clo. I am not in the minde, but I was better to bee married of him then of another, for he is not like to marrie me well: and not being well married, it will be a good excuse for me hereafter, to leave my wife.

Iag. Goeth thou with me, And let me counsel thee.

Clo. Come sweetes, audrey, We must be married, or we must live in bandle:

Farewel good Mr Oliver: Now Oliver, Oliver leave me not behind thee: But winde away, bee gone I say, I will not to wedd with thee.

Iag. Tho’ thar is no matter: Ne’er a fantastical kraue of them all shall flout me out of my calling.

Scena Quarta.

Enter Rosalind & Celia.

Rey. Neuer talke to me, I will wepe.

Cel. Do I prethee, but yet haue the grace to consider, that tears do not become a man.

Rey. But haue I not caufe to wepe?

Cel. As good caufe as one would deffire.

Rey. His very head.

Cel. O tis of the dillembing colour.

Rey. Something browner then ludesaffes:

Cel. Marrie his kisfes are ludesaffes owne children.

Rey. I praihe his hair is of a good colour.

Cel. An excellent colour:

Your Chelesnot was ever the onely colour.

Rey. And his kisfing is as tull of lenitue,

Cel. At the touch of holy bread.

III. ii. 456—III. iv. 14
As you like it.

Col. Hee hath bought a pair of carbines of Diana: a Nun of Winter's Sisterhood kill'd not more religiously, the very yeare of chastity is in them.
Ref. But why did he sweare he would come this morning, and come not?
Col. Nay certainely there is no truth in him.
Ref. Do you thinke so?
Col. Yea, I thinke he is not a picke purfe, nor a horfe-flaeker, but for his verity in love, I doe thinke him as concave as a cornered goblet, or a Worme-eaten nut.
Ref. Not true in love?
Col. Yes, when he is in, but I thinke he is not in.
Ref. You have heard him sweare downright he was.
Col. Way, is not it so? besides, the oath of Louer is not stronger then the word of a Tapster, they are both the confumers of false reckonings, he stands here in the forrell on the Duke your father.
Ref. I met the Duke yesterday, and had much question with him: he asked me what I was: I told him of a good as he, so he laugh'd and let mee goe. But what tale wee of Fathers, when there is such a man as Orlando!
Col. O that's a braue man, he sweares braue veriies, speaks braue words, sweares braue oaths, and breaks them brauely, quite trouers atwaist the heart of his louer, as a punny Tiler, yipurs his horfe but on one sole, breaks his shaffe like a noble goose, but all's braue that youth mounts, and folly guides: who comes here?

Enter Corin.

Corin. Mistreffe and Matter, you haue oft enquired After the Shephard that complained of love, Who you sawe sitting by me on the Turph, Praising the proud disdainfull Shepherdesse That was his Mistreffe.
Col. Well: and what of him?
Cor. If you will see a pageant truly plaid Betweene the pale complexion of true Loue, And the red glowe of feme and proud disdain, Goe hence a little, and I shall conduce you If you will make it.
Ref. O come, let vs remoue, The fight of Louers seedeth those in love: Bring vs to this fight, and you shal say Hee prove a bulfe actor in their play.

Exeunt.

Scena Quinta.

Enter Silvius and Phoebe.

Sil. Sweet Phoebe do not forshe me, do not Phoebe Say that you love me not, but say not to In bitterneffe, the common executioner Whole heart that accustom'd right of death makes hard Falls not the axe upon the humbered neck, But first begs pardon: will you ferene be Then he that dies and lies by bloody drops?

Enter Rosalind, Celia, and Corin.

Phoe. I would not be thy executioner, I fly thee, for I would not mine thee: Thou tellst me there is murder in mine eye, It is very sure, and very probable,

That eyes that are the fairest, and fairest things, Who thinke their coward gates on stomac, Should be called tyrants, butchers, murderers. Now I doe frowne on thee with all my heare, And if mine eyes can wound, now let them kill thee: Now counterfei't to frownd, why now fall downe, Or if thou canst not, oh for shame, for shame, Lye not, to say more eyes are murderers.
Now shew the wound mine eye hath made in thee, Scratch thee but with a pin, and there remains Some feares of it: Lase upon a rush

The Cicatrice and capable impressure Thy palate some moment keeps: but now mine eyes Which I have dared at thee, hurt thee not, Nor I am sure there is no force in eyes That can doe hurt.

Sil. O deere Phoebe, If euer (as that euer may be neere) You meet in some fresh chekke the power of lance, Then shal you know the woundes insuflible That Loues keene arrows make.
Phoe. But till that time Come not thou here mee: and when that time comes, All & me with thy meeker, pity mee not, A till that time I shall not pity thee.
Ref. And why I pray you who might be your mother That you insult, exult, and all at once Ouer the wretch'd: what though you haue no beauty As by my faith, I se no more in you Then without Candle may goe darke to bed: Must you be therefore proud and pittifull? Why what means this? why do you looke on me? I se no more in you then in the ordinary Of Natures sole-work'es ous my little life, I thinke the meanes to tangle my eies too: No faith proud Mistreff, hope not after it,
Tis not your inke broues, your blacke filke haire, Your bugle eye-ball, nor your cheeks of creame That can ename my spirites to your worship: You foolish Shephard, wherefore do you follow her Like foggy south, puffing with winde and raine, You are a thousand times a properer man I then fire a woman. 1 is such foules so you That makes the world full of ill-souerd children: Tis not her glaffe, but you that slatters her, And out of you she sees her felles more proper Then any of her lineaments can show her:
But Mistref, know your felles, downe on your knees, And thanke heauen, foisting, for a good mans loue; For I must tell you friendly in your ear, Sell when you can, you are not for all markets: Cry the man mercer, loue him, take his offer, Fan is most foule, being foule to be a scoffer.
So take her to thee Shephard, fare you well.

Phoe. Sweet youth, I pray you chide a yere together, I had rather here you chide, then this man weoe.
Ref. Hees false in love with you foulreff, & thee'll fall in love with my eyes, if he be so, as faith As hee answers thee with browning looks, heeifle Her with bitter words: why looke you so upon me?
Phoe. For no ill will I brese you.
Ref. I pray you do not fall in love with mee, For I am sfate thenXowes made in wine: Befides, I like you not: if you will know my houfe, Tis at the tuff of Olivare, here hard by: Will you goe Silter? Shepheardigly her hard :
As you like it.

Actus Quartus. Scena Prima.

Enter Rosalind, and Celia, and Jaques.

Jaq. I prethee, pretty youth, let me better acquainted with thee.

Ros. They say you are a melancholy fellow.

Jaq. I am so: I do looke it better then laughing.

Ros. Those that are in extremity of either, are abhominable fellows, and betray themselues to every modern cenfure, worse then drunkards.

Jaq. Why, 'tis good to be sad and say nothing.

Ros. Why 'tis good to be a poete.

Jaq. I haue neither the Scholler melancholy, which is emulation: nor the Musitians, which is fantasiefull; nor the Courtiers, which is proud: nor the Souldiers, which is ambitious: nor the Lawyers, which is Politick: nor the Ladies, which is nice: nor the Louers, which is all thefe: but it is a melancholy of mine owne, compounded of many simples, extracted from many obiects, and indeed the sundrie contemplation of my travels, in which by often rumination, wrapes me in a most humo

Ros. A Traveller: by my faith you have great rea

Jaq. Nay then God buy you, and you talke in blanke verse.

Ros. Farewell Mounfeur Traveller: looke you flie, and weare strange faires; diffolue all the benefites of your owne Countrie: be not a lime with your damaske, and unclose your mouth for making that contente you are: or I will learne you how you have beene in a Granvelle. Why how now Orlando, where have you bin all this while? you a louer? and you feerne me suchanother tricke, never come in my fighth.

Orl. My faire Rosalind, I come within an houre of my promife.

Ros. Breake an houres promife in loue? hee that will diuide a minute into a thousand parts, and breake but a part of the thousand part of a minute in the affauns of loue, it may be said of him that God hath clapt him oth' shoulder, but I warrant him heart hole.

Orl. Pardon me deere Rosalind.

Ros. Nay, and you be fo tardie, come no more in my fighth, I had as lief be wo'd of a Snail.

Orl. Of a Snail?

Ros. If, of a Snail: for though he comes lowly, he carries his house on his head, a better frock: I thinke then you make a woman: besides, he brings his detie with him.

Orl. What's that?

Ros. Why hones? wch as yourare faie to be beholdine to your wies for: but he comes armed in his fortune, and presents the flander of his wife.

Orl. Verue
Ori. Venite, no horse-maker: and ye Risalind is venous.

Ref. Sir, I am your Rofalind.

Col. It please him to call you so: but he hath a Rofaland of a better leer than you.

Ref. Come, wooe me, woone mee: for now I am in a holy-day humour, and like enough to consent: What would you say to me now, and I were your wife, verie Rofalind?

Ori. I would kiss before I spoke.

Ref. Nay, she be more speaks first, and when you were grave'd, for lacke of matter, you might take occasion to kiss: verie good Orators when they are out, they will pitty, and for louters, lacking (God warne vs)
matter, the cleanliest shift is to kiss.

Ori. How if the kiss be demide?

Ref. Then he puts you to entreatie, and there begins new matter.

Ori. Who could be out, being before his beloved Mirth?

Ref. Marrie that should if you were your Mirthis, orl should think my honestie ranker then my wit.

Ori. What, of my fuitie?

Ref. Not out of your appretell, and yet out of your fuitie:

Am not I your Rofalind?

Ref. I take some joy to say you are, because I would not be laughing of her.

Ori. Well, in her person, I say I will not have you,

Ref. Then in mine owne person, I die.

Ori. No faite, die by Attorney: the poore world is almost six thousand yeares old, and in all this time there was not one man died in his owne person (exsclent) in a loue caufe: Tyrone had his braines dash'd out with a Grecian club, yet he did what hee could to die before, and he is one of the patternes of loue. Leader, he would have liue'd manie a fayer yeere though Hero had tum'd Nun: if it had not bin for a hot MidSomner-night, for (good youth) he went but forth to wathim in the Hellepsont, and being taken with the cramp, was drown'd, and the foolish Chronicales of that age, found it was Hero of Ceflos. But these are all lies, men haue died from time to time, and womes have eaten them, but not for loue.

Ref. I would not have my right Rofalind of this mind, for I protest her frowne might kill me.

Ref. By this hand, it will not kill a flye: but come, now I will be your Rofalind in a more comming-on disposition: and ask me what you will, I will grant it.

Ori. Then loue me Rofalind.

Ref. Yes faith will, fridases and faterdies, and all.

Ori. And wilt thou have me?

Ref. I, and twenty fuch,

Ori. What faiete thou?

Ref. Are you not good?

Ori. I hope so.

Rofalind. Why then, can one define too much of a good thing: Come sifter, you shall be the Priefft, and marrie vs: give me your hand Orlando: What doe you say sifter?

Ori. Pray the marrie vs.

Ref. I cannot say the words.

Ori. You must begin, will you Orlando.

Col. Goe too: wil you Orlando, have to wife this Rof-alind?

Ori. I will.
As you like it.

Scena Secunda.

Enter Jaques and Lords, Forresters.

Jaq. Which is he that killed the Deere?

Lords, Sir, it was I.

Jaq. Let's present him to the Duke like a Roman Conqueror, and it would doe well to fet the Deeres horns upon his head, for a branch of Victory; have you no song Forrester for this purpose?

Lords. Yes Sir.

Jaq. Sing it: 'tis no matter how it bee in tune, so it make noysie enough.

Musicke, Song.

What shall be house that hold the Deere?

His Leather skin, and horns to weare:

Then sing him home, the roff shall bear this burden;

Take thou no forme to wear the horns,

It was a craftie wight wofulle borne,

By fathers father wore it,

And the fathcr bore it,

The horn the horn, the lustrous borne,

It was a thing to laugh to see.

Exeunt.

Scena Tertia.

Enter Rosalind and Celia.

Ros. How say you now, is it not past two a clock?

And here much Orlando.

Celt. I warrant you, with pure love, and troubled brain,

Enter Silvius.

He hath tane his bow and arrows, and is gone forth

To sleepe: looke who comes here.

Sil. My errand is to you, faire youth,

My gentle Phedre did bid me give you this:

I know not the contents, but as a gentle

By the Same bow, and wafli a fhotation,

Which she did verse, as she was writing of it,

It beares an angry tenure; pardon me,

I am but as a guillette mel linger.

Ros. Patience her felle would starrle at this letter,

And play the swaggerer, bear this bear all:

Shee fayes I am not faire, that I lacke manners,

She calls me proud, and that she could not come

We were men as rare as Phenis: 'tis od my will,

Her love is not the Hare that I doe hunt,

Why wacst thou to me? well Shepheard, well,

This is a Letter of your owne desire.

Sil. No, Phoebe, I know not the contents,

Phoebe did write it.

Ros. Come, come, you are a fool

And turn'd into the extremity of love.

I saw her hand, she has a leatherne hand,

A freethone coloured hand: I verily did thynke

That her old gloes were on, but twas her hands:

She has a hufwes hand, but that's no matter:

I say the other did invent this letter,

This is a mans invention, and his hand.

Sil. Sure it is hers.

Ros. Why, 'tis a boyishands and cruell filee,

A file for challengers: why, fie defense,

Like Tuk to Christian: wondrous gentle braine

Could not drop forth such gaint rude motion,

Such Ebiop wordes, slacker in their effect

Then in their countenance: will you heare the letter?

Sil. So, please you, for I never heard it yet:

Yet heard too much of Phedb worthlie.

Ros. She Phedeb me: mark how the tyrant writes.

Read, Art thou glad, to Shephead turning'd?

That a maiderd heart hath eard of?

Can a woman sale thus?

Sil. Call you this railing?

Ros. Read. Why, thy godhead looks a part,

Worft thou with a womans heart?

Did you ever heart such railing?

Wouldst thou the eye of man did weare me,

That couldst no vengeance to me.

Meaning me a beast.

If the forme of your brighte shine

Hame power to raise such loe in mine,

Alacke, in me, what strange effect;

Wouldst thou make in malefic power?

Whilest thou chide me, I did looke,

How then might your princes more?

He that brings this love to thee,

Little knowes that Love in me:

And by him sake up thy munde,

Which doeth thys youth endeuore

Will the faithful offer take

Of me, and all that I can make,

Or skill by mine own love done,

And then he finishe her to.

Sil. Call you this chiding?

Celt. Alas poore Shepheard.

Ros. Does he pity him? No, he defeutes no pity:

With all thou lovest such a woman? what to make thee an instrument, and play false (frains upon thee) not to be endur'd.

Well, goe your way to her; (for I see Loue hath made thee a stane once) and say this to her; That if she love me, I charge her to love thee: if she will not, I will never have her, whilest thou intent for her: if you bee

a true lover hence, and not a word, for here comes more company.

Ent. Sil.

When from the first to last between vs two,
Tears our encounters had most kindly bath'd,
As how I came into that Delite place.
I brieve, he led me to the gentle Duke,
Who gave me reft, and entertainment,
Committing me unto my brothers love,
Who led me into that his Caege.
There stript him selfe, and beece upon his arme
This Lyonne hadde borne some fleeth away,
Which all this while he bled; and now he fainted;
And crime in faining upon Rosefand.
Brieve, I recouer'd him, bound vp his wound,
And after some small space, being strong at heart,
He fent me hither, stranger as I am.
To tell this story, that you might excuse
His broken promise, and to give this napkin
Died in this bloud, unto the Shepheard youth,
That he in sport doth call his Rosefand.

Cecil. Why how now Gunned, sweet Gunned.
Oli. Many wil fnoon when they do look on bloud.

Cecil. There is more in it; Cofen Gunned.
Oli. Look, he recouers.

Rose. I would I were a home.

Cecil. We'll eeele you thither:
I pray you will you take him by the arme.

Oli. Be of good cheere youth: you a man?

You lasc a mans heart,

Rose. I doe fo, I confesse it:
Ah, hiera, a body would thinke this was well counterfei-ted, I pray you tell your brother how well I counterfei-ted: height-ho.

Oli. This was not counterfeit, there is too great te-mmony in your complexion, that it was a passion of ear-

Rose. Counterfeit, I affure you.

Oli. Well then, take a good heart, and counterfeit to be a man.

Rose. So I doe: but yfaith, I should haue beene a woman by right.

Cecil. Come, you looke paller and paller, pray you draw homewards: good firs, goe with vs.

Oli. That will I doe: I must ftrete anfvere backe
How you excufe my brother, Rosefand.

Rose. I fhall devote something: but I pray you commen-my counterfeiting to him: will you goe?

Enter Clown and Andrie.

Clown. We fhall finde a time Andrie, patience gentle Andrie.

Andrie. Faith the Prieft was good enought, for all the olde gentleman faying.

Clown. A moft wicked Sir Oliver, Andrie, a moft vile

Mar text. But Andrie, there is a youth beere in the Forrest lays claimes to you.

Andrie. I, I know who tis: he hath no intereft in me in the world: here comes the man you mean.

Enter Will.

Clown. It is meat and drinke to me to fee a Clowne, by my troth, we that have good wits, have much to answer for: we shall be floating: we cannot hold.

Will. Good even, Audrey.

Aud. God ye good even, William.

Will. And good even to you, Sir.

Clo. Good even, gentle friend. Cover thy head, cover thy head: Nay prehice bee couer'd. How olde are you Friend?

Will. Fune and twentie Sir.

Clo. A rige age: Is thy name William?

Will. William, Sir.

Clo. A faire name. Was't borne with Forrehe heere?

Will. I sir, I thank You, God.

Clo. Thanke God: A good answer:

Art rich?

Will. Faith sir, so, so.

Clo. So, so, is good, very good, very excellent good: and yet it is not, it is, so, so:

Art thou wise?

Will. I sir, I have a prettie wit.

Clo. Why, thou faulst well. I do now remember a flying: The Foole doth think his wit, and the witteman knowes himselfe to be a Foole. The Heathan Philosoph, when he had a desire to eate a Grape, would open his lips when he put it in his mouth, meaning thereby, that Grapes were made to eate, and lippes to open.

You do loue this maid?

Will. I do sir.

Clo. Gue me your hand: Art thou Learned?

Will. No sir.

Clo. Then leare this of me, To hauue, is to base. For it is a figure in Rhetoricke, that drink being power'd out of a cup into a glasse, by filling the one, doth empty the other. For all your Writers do content, that ghie is here: now you are a wise: for I am he.

Will. Which he sir?

Clo. He sir, that must marrie this woman: Therefore he Clowone, abandon: whose in the vulgar, loose the focisstre: which in the breth, is: some of, of this female: which in the commone, it woman: which together, is, abandon the society of this Female, or Clowone thou persiffl or to thy better understand, dyce: or (to wit) I kill thee, make thee away, tranflate thy life into death, thy libertie into bondage: I will seize in poynson with thee, or in battallino, or in steale: I will bandy with thee in faction, I will cow:see thee with police: I will kill thee a hundred and fifty wyes, therefore tremble and depart.

And do goo wylliam.

Will. God reit you merry sir.

Exit Corin.

Cor. Our Master and Mistris seekes you: come away, away.

Clo. Trip Audry, trip Audry, I attend, I attend.

Exit Corin.

Enter Orland, & Other.

Orl. Let no body, that ono to little acquaintance you trust, like her that, but seeing, you should love her?

And loowing wo? and wooling. We should granst? And will you preface to enjoy her?

Orl. Neither call the giddiness of in question; the puertie of her, the small acquaintance, my fadone wooling, nor fadone confenting: but say with mee, I love Alina: say with her, that the loves mee: content with both, that we may enjoy each other: it shall be to your good: for my fathers house, and all the reuennow, that was old Sir Rowlande will I estafe vpon you, and keepe line and die a Shepherd.

Enter Refaldin.

Orl. You have my content.

Let your Wedding be to morrow: thither will I

Inute the Duke, and all conscience followers: Go you, and prepare Alina; for looke you,

Hence comes my Refaldine.

Ref. God issue you brother.

Orl. And you faire sister,

Ref. Oh my deere Orlando, how it greeues me to see thee warre thy heart in a scarie.

Orl. It is my arme.

Ref. I thought thy heart had beene wounded with the chaves of a Lion.

Orl. Wounded it is but with the eyes of a Lady.

Ref. Did your brother tell you how I counteryeted to found, when he thowt me your handkerchier?

Orl. I, and greater wonders than that.

Ref. O, I know where you are may, tis true: there was never any thing to fadone, but the figh of two Ramers, and Cesars Thranacall bragge of I came, saw, and overcame. For your brother, and my sister, no fooner met, they look'd: no sooner look'd, but they loud: no sooner loud: but they sigh'd: no sooner sigh'd: but they ask'd one another the reason: no sooner knew the reason, but they bought the remedie: and in those degrees, hauing made a passe of flaves to marriage, which they will cline inconstant, or else bee incontinent before marriage; they are in the vaste wrath of lone, and they will together.

Chubbies cannot part them.

Orl. They shall be married to morrow: and I will bid the Duke to the Nuptiall. But O, how bitter a thing it is, to looke into happyes through another mans cleer: by so much the more shall I to morrow be at the height of heart hezimess, by how much I will thanke my brother happe, in hauing what he wishes for.

Ref. Why then to morrow, I cannot issue your turnes for Refalind.

Orl. I can live no longer by thinking.

Ref. I will wearie you then no longer with idle taking. Know of me then (for now I speake to some purpose) that I know you are a Gentleman of good conceit. I speake not this, that you should beare a good opinion of my knowledge: insomuch (I say) I know you steacher, nor do Labor for a greater success then may in some little measure draw a beleefe from you, to do your selfe good, and not to grace me. Believe then, if you please, that I can do strange things: I have since I was three years old conversed with a Magitian, most profound in his Art, yet not damnable. If you doe love Refalinde to necere the hart, as your gutter enteres it out: when your brother marries Alina, as all you marrieth. I know in to what straights of Fortune her desires, and it is not impossible to me, if it appeare not it comethent to you, to get her before your eyes to morrow, humane as she is, and without any danger.

Orel. Speak't thou in sober meanings?

Ref. By my life I do, which I render dearly, though I say I am a Magician: Therefore put you in your bell-ows, bid your friends: for if you will be married to morrow, you shall: and to Rofalinde if you will.

Enter Silvius & Thebe.

Look, here comes a Lovers of mine, and a lover of hers.

Phe. Youth, you have done me much unwarrantable, To shew the letter that I writ to you.

Ref. I care not if I have it, it is my studie To see one self full of eyes and modestly To you. you are therein folowed by a faithful shepheard, Look you upon him, looke him: he worships you.

Phe. Good shepheard, tell this youth what 'tis to love.

Sil. It is to be all made of sighes and tearcs, And so am I for Phebe.

Phe. And so am I for Ganymede.

Orel. And so am I for Rofalinde.

Ref. And so am I for no woman.

Sil. It is to be all made of fantasie, All made of passion, and all made of wishers, All adoration, dutie, and obseruance, All humbleness, all patience, and impatience, All puritie, all triall, all obseruance:

And so am I for Phebe.

Phe. And so am I for Ganymede.

Orel. And so am I for Rofalinde.

Ref. And so am I for no woman.

Ref. This be so, why blame you me to love you?

Orel. Do you speak too, Why blame you me to love you.

Orel. To her, that is not here, nor doth not here.

Ref. Pray you no more of this, 'tis like the howling of those Witches against the Moone: I will heare you if I can; I would loure you if I could:

To morrow meet me together: I will marry you, if ever I marry Woman, and be married to morrow: I will satisfie you, if ever I satisfie Man, and you shall be married to morrow. I will content you, if what pleases you contents you, and you shall be married to morrow: As you love Rofalinde meet, as you love Phebe meet, and as I have no woman, I have you left you commands.

Sil. Ile not faile, if I lIue.

Phe. Nor I.

Orel. Nor I.

Scena Tertia.

Enter Claudio and Audrey.

Or. To morrow is the joyfull day Audrey, to morrow will we be married.

And, I do defire it with all my heart; and I hope it is no dishonest defire, to defire to be a woman of your world?

Here come two of the banish'd Dukes Pages.

Enter two Pages.

Cla. By my troth we met: come, sit, sit, and a song.

2. Pa. We are for you, sit'th middle.

Or. Shal we clap into't roundly, without bawking, or spitting, or saying we are hoarse, which are the only prologues to a bad voice.

2. Pa. I faith, y'faith, and both in a tune like two gypies on a horse.

Song,

It was a Lover, and his lyfe,
With a key, and a he, and a key noming:

That he's the greene cornes field did passe,
In the spring time, the only pretty ryme time,
When Birds do sing, hey dyes a dyes dyes.
Sweet Lovers love the spring.

And therefore take the present time,
With a key, a she, and a key noming,
For I am crowned with the proune.
In spring time, &c.

Betweene the sexes of the Rye,
With a key, and a she, and a key noming:

The pretie Country folks would like,
In spring time, &c.

This Carroll they beguine at home,
With a key, and a she, and a key noming:

How that a life was but a flower,
In spring time, &c.

Cla. Truly young Gentlemen, though there was no great matter in the ditty, yet 'tis not worse.

1. Pa. you are deceiv'd Sir, we kept time, we hath no time.

Cla. By my troth yet: this count is but time loit to heare such a foolish song. God buy you, and God men your voices. Come Aude.

Scena Quarta.

Enter Duke Senior, Amiens, Launcelot, Orleas, Ober, Celia.

Da.Sen. Doth thou believe Orlando, that the boy
Can do all this that he hath promised?

Orel. I sometimes do believe, and sometymes do not,
As those that fear they hope, and know they feare.

Enter Rofalinde, Silvius, & Phebe.

Ref. Patience once more, whiles our copartie is vrg'd
You say, if it bring in your Rofalinde,

You will bowler her on Orlando here?

Da. Sen. That would I had I kinegloms to giue with hir
Ref. And you say you will have her, when I bring her?

Orel. That would I were i of all kinegloms King.
Ref. You say, you'll giue me, if I be willing.

Phe. That will I, should I die the house after.

Ref. But if you do refuse to marry me,
You'll give your selfe to this most faithfull Shepherd.

Phe. So is the bargaine.

Ref. You say that you'Jl have Phebe if she will.

Sil. Though to haue her and death, were both one thing.
As you like it.

Ref. I have promised to make all this matter even:
Keep you your word, O Duke, to give your daughter,
You yours Orlando, to receive his daughter:
Keep you your word, O Duke, that you may marry me,
Or else referring me to you that you may shew me:
Keep your word, Sirrah, that you may marry her.
If the reft be me, and from hence I go
To make their doubts all even. Exit Ref. and Celia.

Duke. I do remember in this shapeless boy,
Some lively touches of my daughter's favour.
Orl. My Lord, the first time that I ever saw him,
Mc thought he was a brother to your daughter:
But my good Lord, this Boy is Forreft borne,
And hath bin tutor'd in the rudiments
Of many desperate studies, by his vncle,
Whose he reports to be a very great Magitian.

Enter Clowne and Audrey.

Obfcrue in the circle of this Forrest.

Jag. There is sure another flood toward, and these couples are coming to the Ake. Here comes a payre of vere strange beafts, which in all tongues, are call'd Foolers.

Clo. Salutation and greeting to you all.

Jag. Good my Lord, bid him welcome: This is the Morley-minded Gentleman, that I have so often met in the Forrest; he hath bin a Countrier he sawtes.

Clo. If any man doe thot, I thot him put me to my purgation, I have trod a measure, I have flarret a Lady,
I have bin polinickte with my friend, floum with mine enemies. I have wandr'd three Tailors, I have had four quarrels, and like to have fought one.

Jag. And how was thot man vp?

Clo. 'Faith we met, and found the quarrel was upon the feuenthe caufe.

Jag. How feuenthe caufe? Good my Lord, like this fellow.

Don. Sir, I like him very well.

Clo. Good sir, I do desire you of the like I preffe in heare fir, amongst the rest of the Country copulacies to sawtes, and to for sawtes, according as marriage binds and blood breaks: a poore virgins fir, an ill-favor'd thing in, but mine owne, a poore honour of mine fir, to take that no man elle will: such honettie dwells like a mifer der, in a poore houfe, as your Pearle in your foule oy-fer.

Don. Sir, By my faith, he is very swift, and sententious
Clo. According to the foolses bolt fir, and such dilett dilies.

Jag. But for the feuenthe caufe. How did you finde the quarrel on the seuenthe caufe?

Clo. Vpon a lye, seuenthe times removed: (beare your bodie merci leeming Aduers) as thus fir: I did dislike the cut of a certain Countres beaft: he fent me word, if I paid his beaft was not well well, he was in the mude it was: this is call'd the returne courteses. If I fen him word again, it was not well well, he wold fende me word he cut it to pleafe hisfelfie: this is call'd the quip modest.
If againe, it was not well well, he disabled my judgment:
this is called, the reply churlifh againe it was not well well, he woulde anwer I faked not true: this is call'd the reprofe valiant. If againe, it was not well well, he wold lay, lie: this is call'd the counter-checke quarrelome:
and so the lyce circumstantial, and the lye direfled.

Jag. And how oft did you fay his beat was not well well?

Clo. I durft no further then the lye circumstantial:

not he durft no fay that the lye direft: and so we mea-mured lye, and parted.

Jag. Can you nominate in order now the, degrees of the lyce.

Clo. O fir, we quarrel in print, by the booke: as you have booke for good manners: I will name you the degrees. The firft, the Retort courteous: the second, the Quip-modell: the third, the reply Churlifh the fourth,
The Reprofe valiant: the fifth, the Counter-checke quarrelome: the fift, the Lye with circumftance: the fe-teenth, the Lye direft: and you may avoid, but the Lye direft: and you may avoide that too, with an If. I know when feuen luffices could not take vp a Querrell, but when the parties were met themfelues, one of them thought but of an If; as if you faide fo, then I faide fo:
and they thooke hands, and twore and therte. Your If, is the onely peace-maker: much vertue in it.

Jag. Is not this a rare fellow my Lord? He is as good at any thing, and yet a foole.

Don. Sir, He fies his folly like a falking-here, and under the preftentation of that he fhoots his wife.

Enter Hymen, Rafolded, and Celia.

Still muffeke.

Hymen. Then thore mourr in heven,
Where earthly things are made cannon take another.

Good Duke receivs thy daughter,
Hymen from Heven brought her,
Tea brought her heither.

That then might I have my band with his,
Witho, the heart in his is true fite.

Ref. To you I giue my telle, for I am yours.
To you I giue my telle, for I am yours.

Don. Sir, If there be truth in fight, you are my daughter.
Orl. If there be truth in fight, you are my Rafoldind.

If fight & shape be true, why then my loue adieu,

Ref. He have no Husband, if you be not he.

Nar ne te wed woman, if you be not thee.

Hr. Peace bow: I bare copulfion,

Tis I must make conclufion

Of thefe moff strange events:

Here's eight that muff take hands,
To Ioyne in Hymenes bands, the Truth holds true concems.

You are my young ones, no croffe Shall part;
You and you, are Hart in hart;
You, to his loue muff accord,
Or have a Woman to your Lord.
You and you, are fere togeth;

As the Winter to fowle Weather:
Whiles a Wedlocke Hymne weinge,
Feede your felues with queftioning:
That reason, wonder may diminuith.
How thus we met, and these things finifh.

Sing.

Wedding in great Ioues crownne,
O blefted bond of board and bed:

To Hymen peoples euerie towne,
High wedlocke joye be honored:

Honer, hight owne and renowne.

To Hymen, God of euerie Tongue.

Don. Sir, O my dearer Neece, welcome thou art to me,
Even daughter, welcome, in no lesse degree.

Enter Second Brother.

2. Br. Let me have audience for a word or two:
I am the second sonne of old Sir Rowland,
That bring these tidings to this faire assembly.
Duke Frederick, hearing how that euerie day
Men of great worth referred to this forset,
Addres a mightie power, which were on foot
In his owne conduct, purposely to take
His brother here, and put him to the sword:
And to the skirts of this wilde Wood he came:
Where, meeting with an old Religious man,
After some questio[n with him, was conwer'd
Both from his enterprize, and from the world:
His crowne begaunging to his banish'd Brother,
And all their Lands retor'd to him againe
That were with him exil'd. This to be true,
I do engage my life.

Duke. Welcome young man:
Thou offer'ft faithly thy brothers wedding:
To one his lands with-held, and to the other
A land not fife at large, a potent Duke's done.
First, in this forset, let vs doe those ends
That heere were well begun, and well begun:
And after, euery of this happy number
That have endur'd their dales, and nights with vs,
Shall share the good of our returned fortune,
According to the measure of their states.
Meane time, forget this new faine dignitie,
And fall into our Rusticke recrecit:
Play Museke, and you Brides and Bride-grooms all,
With meafeur heap'd in joy, to th'o Meafeur'd fall.

1. Br. Sir, by your patience sist'd I heard you rightly,
The Duke hath put on a Religious life,
And throwne into neglect the pompos Court.

As you like it.

2. Br. He hath.

1. Br. To him will I: out of these ceremonies,
There is much matter to be heard, and learnt:
you to your former Honor, I bequeath your patience, and your vertue, well deserues it.
you to a soule, that your true faith doth merit:
you to your land, and loose, and great allies:
you to a loug, and well-deferced bed:
And you to wrangling, for thy joyous voyages
Is but for two moneths vs quall'd: So to your pleasures,
I am for other, then for dancing measures.

1. Br. To see no paletime, is what you would have,
Ile stay to know, at your abandon'd cause.

Duke. Proceed, proceed: we'll begin these rights,
As we do trufl, they'll end in true delights.

Ref. It is not the fashion to see the Lady the Epilogue:
but is no more unhandome, then to see the Lord the Prologue. If it be true, that good wine needs no bufl's, 'tis true, that a good play needs no Epilogue.
Yet to good wine they do have good butties: and good players pronounce the better by the help of good Epilogues:
Whaa a cafe am I then, that am neither a good Epilologue, nor cannot inteinue with you in the behalf of a good play? I am not furnish'd like a Beggar, therefore to begge will not become mee. My way is to conurie you, and Ie begin with the Women. I charge you (O women) for the loose you beare to men, to like as much of this Play, as please you: And I charge you (O men) for the loose you beare to women (as I perceive by your fimping, none of you hates them) that betwixtene you, and the women, the play may please. If I were a Woman, I would kiss as many of you as had beards that pleas'd me, complication that bid'd me, and breaths that I deside not: And I am sure, as many as have good beards, or good faces, or sweet breaths, will for my kind offer, when I make cutt'le, bid me farewell.

FINIS.

Enter Beggar and Host. Christ Have Mercy Sirs.

Beggar.

Le see this world butt.

Host. Why do you stand so rash and so rude? Look you not how the Beggar is treated by our Lady and gentle Lord?

Beggar. I am not a beggar, but a worthy gentleman. All the world is my oyster, and I mean to eat of it.

Host. Go eat, and be not a rogue.

Beggar. I am not a rogue, but a gentleman. I mean to eat of all the world.

Host. You will not pay for the glasses you have burst?

Beggar. No, I will not.

Host. Then take him vp, and manage well the jest:

Carrie him gently to my fairest Chamber,

And hang it round with all my vantong pictures:

Balm his foul head in warme distilled waters,

And burne sweet Wood to make the Lodging sweete:

Procure me Musicke ready when he wakes,

To make a ducate and a heavenly found:

And if he chance to speake, be readie straight

(And with a lowe submissive reverence).

Say, what is it your Honor will command:

Let one attend him with a faire Banfe

Full of Rose-water, and beftrew'd with Flowers,

Another bear the Exter: the third a Diaper,

And fay wilt please your Lordship which your hands.

Some one be ready with a costly suite,

And make him what apparel he will wear;

Another tell him of his Hounds and Hors,

And that his Ladie mounnes at his dilet.

Petisade him that he hath bin Lunaticke,

And when he fayes he is, say that he dreams.

For he is nothing but a mighty Lord;

This do, and do it kindly, gentle Sirs,

It will be pattmore passions excellent,

Hisse banded with modelline.

Lord. Take him vp gently, and to bed with him,

And each one to his office when he wakes.

Sound trumpets.

Sirrah, go see what Trumpet's that sounds,

Belike some Noble Gentleman that meanes

(Travelling some Journey) to repose him here.

Enter Servauntes.

How now, who is it?

Sir. An't please your Honor, Players

That offer service to your Lordship.

Enter Players.

Lord. Bid them come nearer.

Now fellows, you are welcome.

Players. We thank your Honor.

Lord. Do you intend to stay with me to night?

Player. So please your Lordship we accept your dutie.

Lord. With all my heart. This fellow I remember,

Since once he plaid a Farmers eldest Sonne,

'Twas where you woot the Gentlewoman so well;

I have forgot your name: but sure that part

Was
The Taming of the Shrew.

Was aptly fitted, and naturally performed.

Sir Eat. I think twas Sires that your honor meant.

Lord. This were true, thou didst it excellent:
Well you are come to me in happy time,
The rather for I have some sport in hand,
Wherein your cunning can affistle me much.

There is a Lord who will have you play to night;
But I am doubfull of your modesties,
Left (over-eying of this odd behaviour,
For yet his honor never heards a play)

You break into some merrie passion,
And to offend him: for I tell you firs,
If you should famine, he grows impatient.

Plaie. Fears our Lord, we can contain our felues,
Were he the vertell amitie in the world.

Lord. Go sirra, take them to the Batterie,
And glue them friendly welcome euerie one,
Let them want nothing that your houfe affordes.

Exit one with the Players.

Sirra go you to Bardolphew my Page,
And fee him drest in all fuites like a Ladie:
That done, conduct him to the drunkards chamber,
And call him Madam, do him obeisance:
Tell him from me (as he will win my love)
He bear himselfe with honourable action,
Such as he hath obseru'd in noble Ladies:
Vnto their Lords, by them accomplished,
Such dute to the drunkard let him do:
With soft love tongue, and lowly curtesie,
And fay: What is't your Honor will command,
Wherein your Ladie, and your humble wife,
May shew her duty, and make know owre love.
And then with little embracements, tempting killer,
And with declining head into his bofonce
Bid him flend tear, as being ouer-joyed
To fee her noble Lord refolvd to health,
Who for this seven yeares hast ouer-reared him.
No better then a poore and losthorne beggar:
And if the boy have not a woman guift.
To raine a flower of commanded tears,
An Onion will do well: for fuch a shift,
Which in a Napkin (being clofe conuiled)
Shall in delight enforce a waterie eie:
See this dispatch'd with all the hatth thou canst,
Anon Ile give thee more instruction.

Exit a Servant.

I know the boy will wel vfurpe the grace,
Voice, gait, and action of a Gentlewoman:
I long to hear him call the drunkard husband,
And how my men will flay themselues from laughter,
When they do homage to this simple peafant,
He in to counfell them: haply my presence
May well abate the outer-merrie pleasure,
Which other wise would grow into extreames.

Enter Sir Theadward with attendants, fome with apparel,
Bafen and Ewer, & other apperances, & Lord.

Sir. For Gods sake take a pot of small Ale.

2d Serv. Wilt pleafe your Lord drink a cup of facke?

2d Serv. Wilt please your Honor taste of these Conferu'es?

3d Serv. What raiment will your honor weare to day.

Ben. I am Christopher Sly, call not me Honour nor Lordship: I ne're drank facke in my life: and if you give me any Conferu'es, give me conferu'es of Beefe; here ask me what raiment I'le weare, for I have no more dou-

lea then backes: no more stockings than legges: nor no more floates then feet, may sometyme more feett then floazes, or such floazes as my toes look through the other-leather.

Lord. Heauen eafe this idle hunter in your Honor.
Oh that a mightie man of such ducite,
Of such pollietions, and so high esteeme
Should be infliffed with the foule a fit.

Sir. What would you make me mad? Am not I Chrisfopher Sly, old Sies fonne of Burton-heath, by blyske Pedler, by education a Cardmaker, by transmutatiou a Bare-heard, and now by present profeflion a Tinker.

Afeke Mariano Hacker the fat Alweife of Wincot, if they know me not: if they say I am not xvised, on the score for thence Ale, score me vp for the lyingk knowe in Christen dome. What I am not besfraught: here's—

5. Mas. Oh this it is that makes your Ladie mourning.

2d Mas. Certes it is that makes your fervants droop.

Lord. Hence comes it, that your kindred fluns your
As best refine by your strange Lunacie,

Honour, but this, your heavenly birth,
Call honn thy ancient thoughts from baniennent,
And banish hence these abject lowlie dreams:

Looke how thy servants do attend on thee,
In his office ready at thy becke,
Will thou have Musick? Horake Apollo plaies,
Musick and sweetly caged Nightingales do sing.
Or will thou sleep? We'll have them to a Couch,
Sofer and sweeter then the lufiull bed
On purpose trim'd vp for Seminaries.

Say thou wilt wake: we will bestrow the ground,
Or wilt thou ride? Thy horses shall be trap'd,
Their harnesse fludded allwith Gold and Pearle.

Doo thou loue hawking? Thou hast hawkes will foare
Above the morning Looke. Or wilt thou hunt,
Thy hounds shall make the Welshmen shiver them:
And fetch shrill echoes from the hollow earth.

1. Mas. Say thou wilt courfe, thy gray-hounds are at
As breathed Stage: I fletcher then the Roce.

(Exit.)

2. Mas. Doit thou loue pictures we'll fetch thee a Adonis painted by a running brooke,

And Citherone all in fedges hid,
Which feene to move and wainton with her breath,
Ever as the waung fedges play with windes.

Lord. Well thought, thee was a Maid,
And how she was beguiled and surpriz'd,
As lute-live painted, as the deede was done.

3. Mas. Or Daphne roving through a thornie wood,

Scratching her legs, that one fiall sweare the bleed,
And at that fight fialf sad Apollo weep,
So worldamite the blood and teares are drawne.

Lord. Thou art a Lord, and nothing but a Lord:
Thou haft a Ladie faire more Beautifull,
Then any woman in this waining age.

1. Mas. And till the teares that he hath fre'd for thee,
Like enuious floods ore-run her loyfull face.
She was the faireft creature in the world,
And yet thee is inferior to none,

2d Mas. Am I a Lord, and have I such a Ladie?
Or do I dream? Or haue I dream'd till now?

I do not sleepe: I fee, I hear, I speake:
I felle sweet favours, and I feel foth things:
Vpon my life I am a Lord indeed,
And not a Tinker, nor Christopher Sly.

Well, bring our Ladie hither to our fight,

And once againe a pot o'th smallest Ale.

2. Man. Wilt please your mightiness to wash your hands:
Oh how we joy to see your wit restored,
Oh that once more you knew but what you are:
The fifteene yeeres you have bin in a dream,
Or when you wak'd, so walk'd as you slept.

Beg. Thefe fifteene yeeres, by my fay, a goodly nap,
But did I never speake of all that time.

1. Man. Oh yes my Lord, but vte ye idle words,
For though you lay heere in this goodlie chamber,
Yet would you fay, ye were beaten out of doore,
And raile upon the Hoftefe of the houfe,
And fay you would prefent her at the Leete,
Because the brought flame-lights, and no feall'd quarts:
Sometimes you would call out for Cicely Hacket.

Beg. I, the womanes made of the houfe.

3. man. Why fir you know no houfe, nor no fuch maid
Nor no fuch men as you have reckon'd vp,
As Stephan Slie, and oll John Naps of Greece,
And Peter Turph, and Henry Tempered,
And twentye more fuch names and men as thefe,
Which never were, nor no man ever faw.

Beg. No, none Lord be thanked for my good amends.

All. Amen.

Enter Lady with Attendants.

Beg. I thank thee, thou shalt not look by it.

Lady. How fares my noble Lord?

Beg. Marrie I fare well, for heere is cheere enough.
Where is my wife?

La. Here noble Lord, what is thy will with her?

Beg. Are you my wife, and will not call me husband?

My men should call me Lord, am I your good-man,

La. My husband and my Lord, my Lord and husband
I am your wife in all obedience.

Beg. I know it well, what maft I call her?

Lord. Madam.

Beg. Alc Madam, or Jou Madam?

Lord. Madam, and nothing else, fo Lords call Ladys.

Beg. Madame wife, they fay that I have dreamed,
And slept aboute fome fifteene yeares or more.

Lady. 1, and the time feeme's thirty vnto me,

Being all this time abandoned from your bed.

Beg. Tis much, fervants leave me and her alone:

Madam vnrefle you, and come now to bed.

La. Thrice noble Lord, let me intered you

To pardon me yet for a night or two:
Or if not fo, vntill the Sun be fet,

For your Phyfianes have exproprie charg'd,
In perill to incurke your former malady,
That I should yet abient me from your bed:

I hope this reafon flands for my excufe.

Beg. I lift flands fo that I may hardly tarry fo long:
But I would be both to fall into my dreams again;
I wil therefore tarry in defpite of the fleth & the blood.

Mef. Your Honors Players hearing your amendment,
Are come to play a pleafant Comedie,
For fo your doctors hold it very meete,
Seeing too much fadneffe hatti congall'd your blood,
And melancholy is the Nourse of frenzie,
Therefore they thought it good you heare a play,
And frame your minde to mirth and merriment,
Which bars a thoufand barren, and lengthens life.

Beg. Marrie I will let them play, it is not a Comon-tie, a Christmas gambold, or a tumulting tricke?

Lady. No my good Lord, it is more pleafing fluffe.

Beg. What, houfhold ftuffe.

Lady. It is a kind of hisfory.

Beg. Well, we'll fee:

Come Madam, let my fignor by my fide,
And let the world flipp, we fhall neer be younger.

Flourish. Enter Lucinda, and her Man Travio.

Luc. Travio, fince for the great defire I had To fee faire Padua, nurferie of Arts,
I am arrri'd for fruitful Lombardies,
The pleafant garden of great Italy,
And by my fathers love and leane am arm'd
With his good will, and thy good company
My trueffe fervant well approu'd in all,
Heere let us breath, and haply inftruite
A course of Learning, and ingenious studies.

Paffa renowned in grave Citizens
Gave me my being, and my father frift
A Merchant of great Traffick through the world:
"Fanciul's come of the Brightly,
Fanciul's firme, brough vp in Florence,
It fhall become to ferue all hopes conceived
To decke his fortune with his vertuous deeds,
And therefore Travio, for the time I flude,
Verue and that part of Philosophie
Will I applie, that treats of Happineffe,
By verue specially to be archeu'd.
Tell me thy minde, for I have Paffa left,
And am to Padua come, as he that leaves
A shallow plaffe, to plunge himmelf in the depe,
And with feticie seeks to quench his defire.

Trav. O faire Paduan, gentle matter mine
I am in all affeeted as your felfe,
Glad that you thus continue your refolute
To tucke the fweetes of fweete Philosophie,

Oney (good matter) while we do admire
This verue, and this meruell discipline,
Let's be no Strokes, nor no Stroke's I pray,
Or fo denote to Artificies checks
As Ouid, be an out-call quite absurd:

Balke Lodgicke with acquaintance that you have,
And pratts Rhetoricke in your common talke,
Muficke and Poeticke fife, to quicken you,
The Mathematics, and the Metaphyfickes
Fall to them as you finde your fhamecke fide:

No profit growes, where is no pleafure tone:

In briefe fite, whatfe ever you moft wifh.

Luc. Gramercies Travio, well doth thou admire,
I fhould like thou wert come afoare,
We could at once put vs in readineffe,
And take a Lodging fit to entertaine
Such friends (as time) in Padua shall beget,
But why a white, what company is this?

Trav. Mafter home fliue to welcome vs to Towne.

Enter Raphe with his two Daughters, Katerina & Bianca, Gremio a Pantalono, Horanzo fitter to Bianca.

Luc. Travio, flandby.

Rap. Gentlemen, importune me no farther,
For how I firmly am relou'd you know:

That is not to beflow my yongeft daughter,
Before I have a husband for the elder:

Neither of you both love Katherina,

Because
Because I know you well, and love you well,
Leave shall you have to court her at your pleasure.
Gre. To cast her rather. She's to rough for neat.
Kate. Be it not so, Mr. Wits.
Gre. To make a rule of me amongst these mates?
Kate. How mean you that?
Gre. To make a rule of me amongst these mates?
Kate. Aye, it is your will.
Gre. For what?
Kate. Aye, as you will.
Gre. To make a rule of me amongst these mates?
Kate. Master mine, how mean you that?

Because she will not be annoyed with suitors.

Luc.

Ab Tranio, what a cruel Father he is:

But art thou not adus'd, he took some care
To get her cunning Schoolmather to instruct her.

Tra.

I marry am I fur, and now 'tis plotted.

Luc.

I have it Tranio.

Tra. Maffer, for my hand.

But our intentions mee, and lumps in one.

Luc.

Tell me thine first.

Tra.

You will be schoolmather,

And understand the teaching of the maid:

That's your device.

Luc.

It is: May it be done?

Tra.

Not possible: for who shall bear your part,

And be in Padua here Lucienio's sonne,

Keep house, and play his books, welcome his friends,

Virt his Countriemen, and banquet them?

Luc.

But, content thee: for I have it full.

We have not yet bin leene in any house,

Nor can we be distinguish'd by our faces,

For man or woman: then it follows thus:

Though that be matter, Tranio in my head:

Keep house, and ports, and entertainers, as I should,

I will form other be, some Florentine,

Some Neapolitan, or meaner man of Figa.

'Tis hatch'd, and shall be so: Tranio at once

Vinceahe t: take my Conlord hat and cloake,

When Biondello comes, he waits on thee,

But I will charge him first to keep his tongue.

Tra. So had you neede:

In breede Sir, find it your pleasure is,

And I am tyed to be obedient,

For so your father charg'd me at our parting:

Be feruinceable to my sonne (quash he)

Although I think 'twas in another fence,

I am content to bee Lucienio,

Because so well I love Lucienio:

Luc.

Traino be so, because Lucienio loves,

And let me bee a faire, t'achieve that name,

Whose tendre right hand thats'd my wounded eye.

Enter Biondello.

Here comes the rogue. Sirra, where have you bin?

Bion.

Where have I beene? Nay how now, where are you? Maffier, he's my fellow Tranio holne your clothes, or you holne his, or both? Pray what's the newest?

Sirra comes hither, 'tis no time to left,

And therefore frame your manners to the time

Your fellow Tranio heere to face my life,

Put's my apparel, and my countenance on,

And for my escape have put on his:

For in a quarrel since I came a shooe,

I kill'd a man, and fear I was defenced:

Wait you on him, I charge you, as becomes:

While I make way hence to issue my life:

You understand me?

Bion.

I will, yet in the hast.

Luc.

And shot a bullet Tranio in your mouth,

Bion. The better for him, would I were so too.

Tra. So could I shooe boy, to have the next with after, that Lucienio indeed had Biondello youget daughther:

But fear, not for my sake, but your matters, I advice you to frame your manners directly in all kind of companies: When I am alone, why then I am Tranio: but in all places else, you maist Lucienio:

Luc.

Tranio let's go:

One thing more tells, that thy selfe execute,

To make one among these woorers: if thou ask me why,

Sufficeth my reasons are both good and weighty.

Exit Tranio, The Provosts Lent lodges.

1. Mum. My Lord you nod, you do not minde the play.

Beg. Yer by Saint Anne do I, a good matter surely;

Comes there any more of it?

Lady. My Lord, 'tis but began.

Beg. This a very excellent piece of worke, Madame

Lady: would 'twere done.

They fit and make.

Enter Petruchio, and his man Grumio.

Petr. Verona, for a while I take my leave,

To see my friends in Padua; but of all

My self beloved and approved friend

Hortensio: & I torow this is his house:

Here sirs Grumio, knocke I say

Grun. Knocke sir, whom should I knocke? Is there any man here's rebus'd your worship?

Petr. Villaine I say, knocke me heree foundly.

Grun. Knocke you beere sir? Why sir, what's am I,

that I should knocke you here sir.

Petr. Villaine I say, knocke me at this gate,

And rap me well, or lkee knocke your knuckles pate.

Grun. My Mr. is growne quarrelsome:

I should knocke you sir,

And then I know after who comes by the worste.

Petr. Will it not be?

Faith firrah, and you not knocke, lie ring it,

Ile trie how you can sol, Fa, and ring it.

Herings kindly the cause.

Grun. Help me fithe helps, my mallets is mad.

Petr. Now knocke when I bid you: sirrah villain.

Enter Hortensio.

Hort. How now, what's the matter? My oleth friend

Grumio, and my good friend Petruchio! How do you all at Verona?

Petr. Signior Hortensio, come you to part the fray?

Comites leere bene trovato, ma i tay.

Hort. Ab nontra cafo bene venire multo hnnaro rite, o nos Petruchio.

Rife Grumio tyle, we will compound this quarrell.

If this be not a lawfull caufe for me to loose his feruice, knocke you sir: He bid me knocke him, & rap him foundly.

Sir, was it for a servant to suo his master be, being perhaps (for I fee) twoe and thirty, a peape out? Whom would to God I had well knocke at first, then had not Grumio come by the worste.

Petr. A fencelfe villaine: good Hortensio,

I bad the ruffell knocke upon your gate,

And could not get him for my heart to do it.

Grun. Knocke at the gate? O heavens: spake you not those words plaine? Sirra, Knocke me here, rappe me here: knocke me well, and knocke me foundly: And come you now wish knocking at the gate?

Petr. Sirra be gone, or talke not I advife you.

Hort. Petruchio patience, I am Grumio's pledge:

Why this a heaue chance twixt him and you,

Your ancient truthe pleasant serviant Grumio:

And tell me now (sweet friend) what happe gale

Blows you to Padua here, from old Verona?

Petr. Such wind as flashes youngmen through 5 world,
To feake their fortunes farther then at home,
Where small experience grows but in a few.
Signior Hortenza, thou liest with me,
Among my father's decrees,
And I have thrust my selfe into this maze,
Happily to wise and thrive, as best I may Groundes in my purse I have, and good at home,
And so am come abroad to see the world.

Hor. Petruchio, shall I then come roundly to thee,
And with thee to a thwart'd ill-faunt'd wife? I
Thou didst make me but a little for my counsell,
And yet I promis thee that shal be rich,
And very rich: but th'art too much my friend,
And Icnot with thee to her.

Pet. Signior Hortenza, twice such friends as we,
Few words suffice: and therefore, if thou know
One rich enough to be Petruchio's wife:
(As wealth is burthen of my woing dance)
Be she as faine as was Florizelle Loue,
As sad as Sabel, and as curst and throw'd
As Socrates Zentrup, or a worse;
She moves me not, or not remoues at least Affections edge in me. Were the is as rough
As are the dwelling Astratice lass.
I come to wise it wealthily in Padua:
If wealthily, then happily in Padua.

Gru. Nay, looke you for't, but shal you flary what your minds is:
your give him Gold enough, and marry him to a Puppet or an Agile babet, or an old trot with ne'rea tooth in her head, though she have as manie diseases as two and fifteene horses. Why nothing comes amiss, so monie comes withall.

Hor. Petruchio, since we are flep thus farre in,
I will continue that I breach'd in left,
I can Petruchio helpe thee to a wife
With wealth enough, and yong and beautious,
Brought vp as best becomes a Gentlewoman.
Her only fault, and that is faults enough,
Is, that she is intolerable curst,
And throw'd, and forced, so beyond all meare,
That were my (late) faire worser then it is,
I would not wed her for a mine of Gold.

Pet. Hortenfia peace: thou know not golds effect,
Tell me her fathers name, and 'tis enough:
For I will board her, though she chide as loud
As thunder, when the clouds in Autumn crake.

Hor. Her father is Baptista Minola,
An affable and courtous Gentleman,
Her name is Katherine Minola,
Renown'd in Padua for her scolding tongue.

Pet. I know her father, though I know not her,
And he knew my deceased father well,
I will not deep. Hortenfia all I see her,
And therefore let me be thus bold with you,
To giue you over at this first encounter,
Wills ye will accompany me thither.

Gru. I pray you Sir let him go while the humor lasts.
A my word, and she knew him as well as I do, she would think scolding would doe little good upon him. Shee may perhaps call him halfe a scorne Knaut, or so: Why that's nothing; and he begin once, he'll rale in his rope tricks. Ile tell you what shee, and shee him but a little, he will throw a figure in her face, and doe disfigure her with it, that shee shal bauano more, cies to see withall
This Cat: you know him not fit.

Hor. Tartie Petruchio, I must go with thee,
For in Baptista keepe my treasure is:
He hath the Jewel of my life in hold,
His youthful daughter, beautiful Bianca,
And her with-holds from me, Other more:
Sueres to her, and rivalues in my Loue:

Supposing it a thing imposible,
For chose defects I have before rehearst,
That euer Katherine will be wood:
Therefore this order hath Baptista tane,
That none that have access unto Bianca,
Till Katherine the Curst, have got a husband.
Gru. Katherine the curst,
A title for a made, of all titles the worst.

Hor. Now that my friend Petruchio do me grace,
And offer me disgui'd in labor robes,
To old Baptista as a schoole-master
Well see in Muticke, to instruct Bianca,
That so I may by this deuce as least
Haue loose and losenbre to make love to her,

And was specd court her by her selfe.

Enter Grumio and Lucentio disguis'd.
Gru. Here's no knaunee. See, to bogueil the old Folkes, how the young folkes lay their heads together.
Master, matter, looke about you: Who goes there? ha.

Hor. Peace Grumio, it is the riuall of my Loue, Petruchio stand by a while.

Gru. A proper skilful, and an amorous,
Grumio. O very well, I have perus'd the note:
Hearske you fir, Ile hear them verei fairly bound,
All bookes of Loue, see that at any hand,
And see you reade no other Lectures to her,

You understande me. Ouer and befire
Signior Baptista liberalitie,
Ile mend it with a Large fee. Take your paper too,
And let me haue them verei well perfum'd;
For she is sweeter than perfum it felte.
To whom they go to: what wil you reade to her,
Luce. What ere I reade to her, Ile pleade for you,
As for my patron, stand you to affur'd,
As firmlie as your felle were still in place,
Yea and perhaps with more successfull words
Then you ac, where you were a scholler fit;
Gru. Oh this learning, what a thing it is.
Gru. Oh this Woodcocke, what an Affete it is.
Petr. Peace sirra.
Gru. Grumio mum: God saw you signior Grumio,
Gru. And you are wel met, Signior Hortenfia.

Trow you whither I am going? To Baptista Minola,
I promit to enquire carefully.
A bout a schoolmaister for the faire Bianca,
And by good fortune I have lighted well
On this young man: For learning and behavour
Fit for her turne, well read in Poetrie
And other bookes, good ones, I warrant ye.

Hor. 'Tis well and I haue met a Gentleman
Hath promit me to helpe one to another,
A fine Musitian to instruct our Milits,
So that I no whate be behind in dutie
To faire Bianca, So belov'd of me.
Gru. Beloved of me, and that my deeds shal prove.
Gru. And that his bags shal prove.
Hor. Grumio, 'tis now no time to vent our loue,
Litten to me, and if you speake me faire,
Ile tel you newes indifferent good for either.
Here is a Gentleman whom by chance I met.
Upon agreement from vs to his liking,
Will undertake to woo curst Katherine,
Yes, and to marry her, if her dowrie please.

Gre. So said, so done, is well:

Hortensia, haue you told him all her faults?

Pet. I know his is an inkefome brawling scold:
If that be all Makers, I heare no harme.

Gre. What, sayest thou to this Gentleman? What Countryman?

Pet. Born in Verona, old Diamon setonne:
My father dead, my fortune lites for me,
And I do hope, good days and long, to see.

Gre. Oh sir, such a life with such a wife, were straunge:
But if you have a homaace, too o Gods name,
You shall haue me afflicting you in all.

But will you woo this Wilde cat?

Pet. Will I love?

Gre. Wilde woo her? Is't lic hang her.

Pet. Why came I hither, but to that intent?

Think you a little dine can daunt mine cares?

Haue I not in my time heard Lions roare?

Haue I not heard the sea, putt vp with winde,
Rage like an angry Boare, chafed with sweat?

Haue I not heard great Orchonde in the field?
And heauen's artillery thunder in the skies?

Haue I not in a pitched battel heard
Loud harmonies, neighing freuds, & trumpets clangue?

And do you tell me of a womans tongue?

That gives not halle to so great a blow to heare,
As will a Cheefe-nut in a Farmers fire,

Tuft, tuft, feare boyes with bags.

Gre. For he feares none.

Gremio. And yet he speak.

This Gentleman is happily arrisse,
My minde pretumes for his owne good, and yours,

Hor. I proue it we would be Contributors,
And beare his charge of wooing whatsoeere,

Gremio. And so we will, prouided that he win her.

Gre. I would I were as free of a good dinner.

Enter Tranio, brace, and Bundello.

Tran. Gentlemen God fauour you. If may be bold
Tell me I beseech you, which is the readest way
To the house of Signior. Battiuse Minola?

Bass. He that's his the two faire daughters: if he you mean?

Tran. Even he Bundello.

Gre. Hearkie you sir, you are not her to——

Tran. Perhaps him and her wife, what have you to do?

Pet. Not her that claires for any hand I pray.

Tranio. I haue no childer sir; Bundello, let's away.

Lect. We'll begin Tranio.

Hor. Sir, a word ere you goe.

Are you a frende to the Maid you talk of, yea or no?

Tran. And if I be sir, is't any offence?

Gremio. No: if without more words you will get you hence.

Tran. Why sir, I pray are not the frends as free Formed as you?

Gre. But so is not free.

Tran. For what reason I beseech you.

Gre. For this reason if you thinke,
That she the choice love of Signior Hortensio.

Hor. That she the chosen of Signior Hortensio.

Tran. Softly my Masters: I pray be Gentleman
Do me this righe: hear me with patience.

Battiuse a noble Gentleman,

To whom my father is not all vnowne,
And were his daugther fairer then she is,
She may more futures have, and me for one,

Faire Lucrecia daugther had a thousand wooers,
Then well one more may faire Triana have;

And so the haule Lucentio shall make one,

Though Paris came, in hope to speed alone.

Gre. What, sayest thou to this Gentleman will ou-talks vs all,

Lect. Sir, give him head, I know he'll prove an Iade.

Pet. Hortensia, to what end are all these words?

Hor. Sir, let me be bold as ask you,

Did you yet euer see Battius as daughter?

Tran. No sir, but haue I do that he hath two:

The one, as famous for a scolding tongue,
As is the other, for beauteous modestie.

Pet. Sir, for, the frif's for me, let her go by.

Gre. Yes, leave that labour to great Hercules,
And let it be more then Alcides twelue.

Pet. Sir understand you this of me (inf broth)
The yongel daugther whom you haue seen for,

Her father keepes from all access of futurs,
And will not promise her to any man,

Until the elder sister frif be wedd.

To which the yeonger is free, and not before.

Tranio. It is to be, for you that are the man

Must feeke vs all, and me amongst the rest:

And if you break the ice, and do this fecke,

Achieue the elder; fet the yonger free,

For our access, where he shall be to haue her,

Will not so gracefull be, to be ingrate.

Hor. Sir you fay well, and wel you do conceiue,

And since you do professe to be a futur,

You must as we do, gratifie this Gentleman,

To whom all rest generally behoulding.

Tranio. Sir, I shall not be slacke, in signe whereof,

Please ye we may continue this afternoone,

And quarte crowleys to our Mirthfull health,

And doubt no further in our fashionable,

Strene meungly, but eare and drinke as friends.

Gre. Enlarg. Oh excellent motion: fellows let's be gone.

Hor. The motions good indeed, and be it so,

Petrouch. That is, you shall. When season.

Exit.

Enter Kathrina and Bianca.

Bass. Good fift wrong me not, nor wrong your self,

To make a bondmamed and a flave of mee,

That I did blame: but for these other goods,

Vebindings, my hands, I pubisht them to my felle,

Yes all my raiment, to my pecunia,
Or what you will command me, will I do,

So well I know my dutie to my eldrie,

Kate. Of all thy futurs heere I charge thee told

Whom thou loue'st beit: see thou dispensible not.

Bianca. Before me, or, on all the men alive,

I neuer yet beheld that specula face,

Which I could scarce, more then any other.

Kate. Mityn thou lyest? Is't not Hortensia?

Bass. If you affect him fifer, here be I sure

He pleade for you my felle, but you shall have him.

Kate. On then beke you latter riches more,

You will have Gremio to keepe you faire.

Bass. Is it for him you do enuise mee for?

Nay then you left, and now I wel perceiue

You haue but serfed with me all this while.

I preece fifer Kate, vntie my hands.

Kate. If that be left, then all the rest was in. Striket her

II. i. 143—255

Bett. How now my friend, why dost thou look so pale?
Her. For fear I come you, if you look so pale.
Bett. What, will my daughter prove a good Musitian?
Her. I think she doth sooner prove a souldier.
Bett. Why then cannot she break to the Lute?
Her. Why no, for she hath broke the Lute to me: I did but tell her she mistook her frets, and bow'd her hand to teach her fingering, when (with a most impatient distemper spirit) frets call you theorist (quaint fife) he fume with them: and with that word fife struck me on the head, and through the affliction my pate made way, and then I flood amaze for a while, as on a Pillorie, looking through the Lute, while she did call me Rascal, Fiddler, and swangling lacke, with twenty fuch vile stammers, as had fhe studied to miffpe fhe.

Teft. Now by the world, it is a buffe Wench, I fhoue her tentimes more then ere I did, Oh how I long to have fome chat with her.
Bett. Well go with me, and be not to difconfine.

Proceed in her life with my younger daughter, she's apt to learn, and in her words for good tunes:

Signior Petruchio, will you go with vs, or fhall I fend my daughter Kate to you.

Exit Petruchio.

Pet. I pray you do. Ile attend her here, and woo her with fome spirit when fhe comes, say that the wife, why then Ile tell her plain,

She fings as sweetly as a Nightingale:

Say that the Trowne, ile fay the lookes as cleare

Say thee be mute, and wilt not speake a word, Then ile commend her volubility, and say the verereth piercing eloquence:

If she do bid me packe, Withe gife her thanks,

As though she bid me lay by her a wecke:

If she deie to wecl, ile craue the day

When I shallake the banes, and whene married.

But here he fome, and now Petruchio speake.

Enter Kate.

Kate. Good morrow Kate, for thatts your name I heare,

Kate. Well have you heard, but something hard of hearing:

They call me Kate, they do call me of,

Pet. You may in faith, for you are call'd plain Kate,

And bony Kate, and sometimes Kate the curs:

But Kate, the prettiest Kate in Chrifletendome.

Kate of Kate-hall, my super-dainty Kate,

For dainties are all Kate's, and therefore Kate

Take this of me, Kate of my conflation,

Hearing thy mildneffe prais'd in every Towne,

Thy vertues spoke of, and thy beautey foured,

Yet not fo deeply as to thee belongs,

My felfe am moud'd to wone thee for my wife.

Kate. Mou'd, in good time, let him that moud thee better

Remoue you hence: I knew you at the first

You were a monible.

Pet. Why, what's a monible?

Kate. A loyn'd fwole.

Pet. Thou haft hit it: come fit on me.

Kate. Affers are made to beare, and lo are you,

Pet. Women are made to beare, and lo are you.

Kate. No such fadles as you, if you meane.

Pet. Alls good Kate, I will not burneth thee,

For knowing thee to be but young and light,

Kate. Too light for fuch a fwaume as you to catch,

And yet as beauteous as my weight fhoule be.

Pet. Shoule be, shoule be,

Kate. Well tane, and like a buzzard.

Pet. Oh flawing'f Turtell, flaw a buzzard take thee.

Kate. I for a Turtell, as he takes a buzzard.

Pet. Come, come you Waife, y faith you are too angrie.

Kate. If it be waife, beft beware my fling.

Pet. My remedy is then to plucke it out.

Kate. I, if the foolle could finde is where it lies.

Pet. Who knowes not where a Waife doth weare his fling? In his tale.

Kate. In his tongue?

Pet. Whole tongue.

Kate. Yours if you take of tales, and so farewell.

Pet. What with your tongue in your tale.

Nay, come againe, good Kate, I am a Gentleman,

Kate. That Ie trie.

Pet. I fwear Ie cufye you, if you flake againe.

Kate. So may you loose your armes,

If you flrike me, you are no Gentleman,

And if no Gentleman, why then no armes.

Pet. A Herald Kate? Oh put me in thy bookes.

Kate. What is your Cref, a Cofcomb?

Pet. A combileffe Cocke, fo Kate will be my Hen.

Kate. No Cocke of mine, you crow too like a crazed

Pet. Nay come Kate, come: you must not looke fo fawre.

Kate. It is my fation when I lea a Crayb.

Pet. Why here's no crayb, and therefore looke not sawre.

Kate. There is therefit.

Pet. Then flrow it me.

Kate. Had I a gaffe, I would.

Pet. What, what you meane my face.

Kate. Well aym'd of fuch a yonge one.

Pet. Now by S. George I am too yong for you.

Kate. Yet you are wither'd.

Pet. Tis with cares,

Kate. I care no.

Pet. Nay heare you Kate. Inbotho you fcape not fo.

Kate. I fear you if I carrie. Let me go.

Pet. No, not a whit, I finde you paffing gentle:

Twst told me you were rough, and coy, and fallen,

And now I finde report a very list:

For thou art pleafant, gambolme, paffing courteous,

But flow in speech: yet sweet as spring-time flowers.

Thou canst not frowne, thou canst not looke a fcone,

Nor bite the lip, as angry wenches will,

Nor had thou pleasure to be coldre in talke:

But thou with mildneffe entertain the woowers,

With gentle conference, foft, and affable.

Why does the world report that Kate doth limpe?

Oh flandyou world: Kate like the bazzle twig

Is fraught, and fnder, and as browne in hue

As hazle nuts, and sweeter then the kernels.

Oh let me fee thee walke: thou doft not hait.

Kate. Go foole, and whom thou keepit command.

Pet. Did ever Diom to become a Grouse

As Kate this chamber with her princely gait:

O be thou Diom, and let her be Kate,

And
Then let Kate be chaste, and Diana sportfull.

Kate. Where did you study all this goodly speech? Petr. It is extempore, from my mother's wit. Kate. A witty mother, yet else she's not so wise. Petr. Am I not wise? Kate. Yes, keep you warme. Petr. Marry so. I meant sweet Katherine in thy be. and therefore forget all this chaff aside, thus in plainest terms: your father hath confessed That you shall be my wife; your dowry greed On, and will you, I will marry you. Now Kate, I am a husband and for your turne, For by this light, whereby I fee thy beauty, Thy beauty that doth make me like thee well, Thou must be married to no man but me.

Enter Bap. Gremio, Tranio.

For I am he am borne to tame you Kate, And bring you from a vile Kate to a Kate Conformable as other household Kate: Here comes your father, neuer make denial, I must, and will have Katherine to my wife. (daughter.) Petr. Now Signior Petruchio, how speed you with my Pet. How but well and how but well? It were impossible I should speed amisse. (jump.) Petr. Why how now daughter Katherine, in your Kate. Call you me daughter now? I promise you You have found a tender fatherly regard To with me wed to one halfe Lunaticke, A mad-cap ruffian, and a svering jacke, That thinkes with othes to face the matter out. Petr. Father, 'tis thus, your selle and all the world That talk'd of her, haue talk'd amisse of her: If the be court, it is for policie, For shee's not froward, but more as the Douce, Shee is not hot, but temperate as the nurse. For patience shee will prove a second Grisell, And Romane Laurece for her chastitie. And to conclude, we haue greed so well together, That upon Sunday is the wedding day. Kate. Hee see thee hang'd on Sunday first. (first.) Petr. Hee Petruchio, the face thee'll see thee hang'd Petr. In this thy speed, saith the god of our part. Petr. Be patient gentlemen, I choose her for my selfe: If she be, and I be pleased, what's that to you? This bargain'd twist vs twain being alone, That she shall be court in company. I tell you 'tis incredible to beleue How much she loves me: oh the kindred Kate, Shee hang about my necke, and kiss on Kate Shee will do, protesteth oath on oath, That in a winke she woule to her love. Oh you are noicees, 'tis a world to see How tame when men and women are alone, A meacoock wretch can make the curseft fistraw: Giv mee thy hand Kate, I will unto Venice To buy apparel gainst the wedding day: Promote the feast father, and bid the guest, I will be sure my Katherine shall be fine. Petr. I know not what: to say, but give me your hds, God lend you joy, Petruchio, 'tis a match.

Grem. To amen say we, we will be wittincker, Petr. Father, and wife, and gentlemen adjure, I will to Venice, fonday comes space, We will haue rings, and things, and fine array, And kiss me Kate, we will be married a fonday.

Grem. Was ever match clapt vp so foddaily? Petr. Faith Gentlemen now I play a merchants part, And venture madly on a desperace Mart. Tran. Twas a commoditie lay frettting by you, Twill bring you gaine, or perifh on the seas. Petr. The gaine I feake, is quiet me the match. Grem. No doubt but he hath got a quiet catch: Put now B. on, to your yonger daughter, Now is the day we long haue looked for, I am your neighbour, and was fater first, Tran: And I am one that loue Diana more Then words can wittnefe, or your thoughts can guffle. Grem. Yonging thou canst not loue so deare as I. Tran. Gray-beard thy loue doe thine freeze. Grem. But thinke doue fee, Skipper hand backe, tis age that nourisht. Tran. But youth in Ladies eyes that flowerith. Petr. Content you gentlemen, I will ecompound this strife Tis deeds must win the prize, and he or both That can aflire my daughter greatest dowr, Shall have my Bapfies loue. Say signior Gremio, what can you aflire her? Grem. First, as you know, my house within the City Is richly furnishd with plate and gold, Binions and ewers to laue her dimity hands: My hangings all of rarest teffe: In lucyly coers I have fluft my crownes: In Cypres cheefts my arras counterpoints, Coffily apparel, tents, and Canopics, Fine Linnen, Turky cushions bost with pearle, Valens of Venice gold, in needle worke: Pewter and braffe, and all things that belongs To house or house-keeping: then I may fay I haue a hundred milch-kine to the pale, Six-tore atm Oxen standing in my stalls, And all things anfwerable to this portion. My felle amfrooke in yeare I must confefle, And if I die to morrow this is hers, If whilft I live the wil be onely mine. Tran. That onely came well in: fir, lift to me, I am my fathers heere and onely fonne, If I may haue your daughter to my wife, I cleave her houfes three or foure as good Within rich Pfa walls, as any one Old Signior Gremio has in Padua, Befides, two thousand Duckes by the yeere Of fruitfull land, all which shall be her ijyneter. What, haue I pinche you Signior Gremio? Grem. Two thoufand and Duckers by the yeere of land, My Land amounts not to fomuch in all: That the fhall haue, besides an Argosie That now is lying in Marcellus roade: What, haue I choockt you with an Argosie? Tran. Gremio, 'tis knowne my father hath no leffe Then three great Argosies, besides two Galliasse And twelueite Galliasse, thefe I will affure her, And twice as much what ete thou offert next. Petr. Nay, I have offerd all, I have no more, And shee can haue no more then all I haue, If you like me, the fhall haue me and mine. Tran. Why then the maid is mine from all the world By your fyme promife, Gremio is out vied. Petr. I must confefle your offer is the beff, And let your father make her the affurance,
The Taming of the Shrew.

She is your owne, elie you must pardon me:
If you should die before him, where is her dowry?

Tua. That's but a caust: he is of good age.

Gre. And may not young men die as well as old?

Bap. Well gentlemen, I am thus resolute,
On fonday next, you know

My daughter Katherine is to be married;
Now on the fonday following shall Bianca
Be Bridie to you, if you make this suffurance:
If not, to Signior Gremio:
And so I take my leave, and thank you both.

Gre. Adue good neighbour; now I scarce the not:
Sira, young gentle, your father was a foolo
To give thee all, and in his waying age
Set foot vnder thy table: out, a toy,
An odd Italian foxe is not to kinde my boy.

Tua. A vengeance on your craftsie withered hide,
Yet I have fac'd it with a card often:
'Tis in my head to doe my matter good:
I see no reason but suppos'd Lucentio
Muff get a father, call'd suppos'd Unscincho,
And that's a wonder: fathers commonly
Doe get their children: but in this case of wuing,
A child shall get a fire, if I faile not of my cunning.

Actus Tertia.

Enter Lucentio, Hortensio, and Bianca.

Luc. Frield forbear, you grow too forward Sir,
Hau you to loue forgot the entertainment
Her sister Katherine welcomed you withall.

Hort. But wrangling pedant, this is
The patroonete of harmony,
Then give me leave to have proueguage,
And when in Musick we have spent an hour,
Your Lecture shall have pleasure for as much.

Luc. Preposterous Aife that never read so farre,
To know the cause why musick was ordain'd:
Was it not to refresh the minds of man
After his fluxes, or his visaul paine?
Then give me leave to read Philosophy,
And while I paue, ferue in your harmony.

Hort. Sira, I will not beare these braues of shine.

Bian. Why gentlemen, you doe me double wrong,
To frirue for that which refresh in my choice:
I am no breeching feholier in the schoolies,
Ile not be tied to howres, nor pointed times,
But leame my Lessons as I please me felle,
And to cut off all frirue therre fit we downe,
Take you your instrumen, play you the whites,
His Lecture will be done ere you haue tund.

Entr. You shall loose his Lecture when I am in tune?

Luc. That will be neuer, tune your instrumen.

Bian. Where left we left?

Luc. Here I Madam: Hic ibat Simoain, hie est sgregia tellus, hic hie Setare Porimagi regia Celsa luna.

Bian. Contref them.

Luc. Hic ibat, as I told you before, Simeo, I am Lucenio, hie est, sgregia Vincenzi de Pfa, Sigeretelcus, dippugues thus to get your loue, hie estare, and that Lucentio that comes a wooing, prencis, is my man Tranio, regia, bearing my porr, celsa fema that we might be

The end of Pantalowne.

Hort. Madam, my Instrumen's in tune.

Bian. Let's hear, oh sir, the treble stayer.

Luc. Spirt in this holie man, and tune again.

Bian. Now let me see if I can confirce it.

Hort. That's false, I know you not, his est sgregia tellus, I trust you not, his estare Porimagi, take heed he haue not estare prencis, Celsa luna, defaire not.

Hort. Madam, is now in tune.

Luc. All but the bafe.

Hort. The base is right, 'tis the base knowe that is.

Luc. How ftirry and forward our Pedanxis,
Now for my life the knowe dueth court my loue,

Pedanxis, He watch you better yet;
In time I may believe, yet I mistrust.

Bian. Mistrust it not, for sure Ecides.

Was Ann said so from his grandfather.

Hort. I must believe my matter, elle I promyse you,
I shold be arguing still upon that doubt,
But let it reft, now Leto to you:
Good matter taketh it not vondly pry
That I have bene thus pleasant with you both.

Hort. You may go walk, and glue me leave a while,
My Leffons make no musicke in three parts.

Luc. Are you so formal, Sir, well I must wait
And watch withall, for but I be deuided,
Our fine Mutian growth amorous.

Hort. Madam, before you touch the instrumen,
To leave the order of my fingering,
I must begin with rudiments of Arts,
To teach you gamothe in a briefe fort,
More pleasant, pitty, and effectuall,
Then hath bene taught by any of my trade,
And there is in writing fairely drawn.

Bian. Why, I am pait my gamothe long agoe,

Hort. Yet read the gamon of Hortensio.

Bian. Gamon I am, the ground of all accord:
Are, to plead Hortensio's passion:

Become, Bianca take him for thy Lord
Cares, that loves with all affection
Do faire, one Clifte, two notes have I,
Elami, throw pity or I die,
Call you this gamon Truste you like it not,
Old Qlionons please me bille, I am not fonder
To charge true rules for old mentiones,

Enter a Pedanxis.

Nicky Mistrecce, your father prays you leave your
And helpes to drefs her sisters chamber vp,

Bian. You know to morrow's the wedding day.

Bian. Farewell sweet matters both, I must be gone.

Luc. Faith Mistrecce then I have no care to say.

Hort. But I haue caute to pay into this pedant, Methinckes he looks as though he were in loue.
Yet if thy thoughts Bianca be so humble
To caft thy wandering eyes on every stale:
Seize thee that Lift, if once I finde thee ranging,

Hortensio will be quit with thee by changing.

Exit.

Enter Baptista, Gremio, Tranio, Katherine, Bianca, and ouers, attendants.

Bap. Signior Lucentio, this is the pointed day
That Katherine and Patriccho should be married,
And yet we heare not of our fonne in Law:
What will be said, what mockery will it be?
To want the Bride-groom when the Priest attends
To speake the ceremoniell rites of marriage?
What fates Lucentio to this flame of ours?

No
Kate. No shame but mine, I must forsooth be for
To give my hand opposite against my heart.
Eres a mad-braine rusedly, full of spleene,
Whoe'wood in haue, and meanes to wed at leyure:
I told you, I, he was a frantike toole,
Hiding his bitter islets in blunte behavours,
And to be noted for a merry man;
He'll weare a thousand, point the day of marriage,
Make freinds, inure, and proclaime the banes,
Yet never meanes to wed where he hath wood:
Now muft the world point at poor Katherine,
And say, loe, there is maid Petruchio's wife
If it would please him come and marry her.

Patience good Katherine and Baptista too,
Upon my life Petruchio meanes but well,
Whateuer fortune flayes him from his word,
Though he be blate, I know him palling wife,
Though he be merry, yet withal he is honest.
Kate. Would Katherine had never seen him though.

Bap. Goegirl, I cannot blame thee now to weare,
For such an injury would vease a very faine,
Much more a shew of impatient humour.

Enter Bian. Bian. Matfer, mafter, newes, and such newes as you never heard of.

Bap. Is new and old too? how may that be?

Bian. Why, is it not newe to heard of Petruchio's
Bap. Is he come? (comming)

Bian. Why no fir.

Bap. What then?

Bian. He is coming.

Bap. When will he be here?

Bian. When he flands where I am, and fees youthere,
Bap. But say, what to thine olde newes?

Bian. Why Petruchio is comming, in a new hat and an old kerne, a paire of olde breeches thrice turnd;
A paire of bootees that have beene candle-cases, one buckled, another lac'd: an olde ruffy sword taine out of the Towne Armoury, with a broken hilt, and chapellest: with Two broken points: his horfe hop'd with an olde mothe shaddle, and fitrrops of no kindles: besides poefit with the glanders, and like to move in the chine, toulled with the Lampatle, infected with the fashions, full of Windgalls, sped with Spuanis, riad with the Yellowes, Pattit curs of the jayfe, flakefe you'd with the Staggers, begunawne with the Boys, Wall in the backe,
And shoulder-flatten, necke leg'd before,
And with a halfe-chek late & a headell of the cheepes leather, which Being refrain'd to keep him from stumbling, hath been often burft, and now repaired with knots; one girth five times peec'd, and a womans Grupper of velure, which Deth two letters for her name, falsely set down in fuds,
And these and there peec'd with packthred.

Bap. Who comes with him?

Bian. Oh fir, his Lackey, for all the world Caparison'd like the horfe: with a linnen flocke on one leg, and a kesley boot-hose on the other, garnished with a red and blew lift, an old hat, & the humour of forsty fancies pricket in for a feather: a monfieur, a very monfieur in apparel, & not like a Christian foot-boy, or a gentlemans Lacky.

The ftrange good humor pricks him to this fashion,
Yet oftemphmes he goes but meane apparel'd.

Bap. I am glad he's come, howsore he comes.

Bian. Why fir, he comes not.

Bap. Didst thou not say he comes?
And watch our vantage in this busineis,
We'll over-reach the grey-arsed Gremio,
The narrow prying fathers Minola,
The quaint Musician, amorous Licia,
All for my Mothers sake Lucentio.

Enter Gremio.

Signior Gremio, came you from the Church?
Gremio. As willingly as ere I came from school.

Exeunt.

Gremio. And is the Bride & Bridgroom coming home?
Gremio. A bridgroom say you? 'tis a groome indeed,
A grumling groome, and that the girk shall finde.

Enter Gremio.

Gre. Corifer then she, why 'tis impossible.
Gre. Why she's a deedill, a deedill, a very fiend.
Gre. Why she's a deedill, a deedill, the deed is damme.
Gre. Tur, she's a Lambe, a Doue, a foolie to him:
I tell you for Lucentio; when the Priest
Should ask if Katherine should be his wife,
I, by goosse woones quoth he, and swore so loud,
That all amaz'd the Priest left fall the bookes,
And as he floopp'd against to take it vp,
This mad-brain'd bridgroom tooke him such a cuffe,
That downe fell Priest and booke, and booke and Priest,
Now take them vp quoth he, if any lift.

Exeunt.

Gre. What said the wench when he rode againe?
Gre. Trembled and blooke: for why, he lump'd and swore, as if the Vicar meant to cozen him: but after many ceremonies done, hee calls for wine, a health quoth he, as if he had beene abroad carowing to his Mates after a fformre, quafst of the Mufedall, and threw the fops all in the Sextons face: hauing no other reason, but that his beard grew thinne and hungry, and feem'd it to take him fops as hee was drinking: This done,hee tooke the Bride about the necke, and kill her lips with such a clamorous ffaceke, that at the parting all the Church did echoe; and I seeing this, came hencethat for very shame, and after mee I know the rout is comimg, such a mad marryage neuer was before: harke, harke, I hear the miniftres play.

Musicke plays.

Enter Petruchio, Kate, Bianca, Hortensio, Baptista.

Pet. Gentlemen & friends, I thank you for your pains,
I know you thinke to dine with me to day,
And haue prepar'd a great store of wedding cheere,
But so it is, my haffe doth call me hence,
And therefore hence I meant to take my leave.

Bap. Is it possible you will away to night?
Pet. I must away to day before night come,
Make it no wonder: if you knew my buttocke,
You would intrest me rather goe then stay:
And honest company, I thank you all,
That haue beheld me give away my selfe
To this most patient, sweet, and vertuous wife,
Dine with my father, drinke a health to me,
For I must hence, and farewell to you all.

Exeunt.

Pet. I was intrest you flay till after dinner.

Pet. It may not be.

Gremio. Let me intrest you,
Petr. It cannot be.
Kate. Let me intrest you.
Set. I am conteent.
Kate. Are you content to flay?
Petr. I am content you shall entrest me flay,
But yet not flay,entrest me how you can.

Pet. Now if you love me stay.

Gremio. I sir, they be ready, the Oates have eaten the horses.

Kate. Nay then,

Doe what thou canst, I will not goe to day,
No, not to morrow, nor till I please my selfe,
The dore is open for, there liest your way,
You may be logging whiles your bootsre are greene:
For me, I be not gone till I please my selfe,
'Tis like you'll prove a folly furnly groome,
That take it on you at the first so sounding.

Pet. O Kate content thee, prettice be not angry.
Kate. I will be angry, what haft thou to doe?
Father, be quiet, he shall flay my leisure.

Pet. I marry sir, now it begins to worke.

Kate. Gentlemen, forward to the bridall dinner,
I see a woman may be made a foolie
If she had not a spirit to retell.

Pet. They shall goe forward Kate at thy command,
Obey the Bride you that attend on her.

Go to the feast, reuell and dinnere,
Caroile full measure to her maiden-head,
Be modest and merry, or goe hang your felices:
But for my bonny Kate, the muff with me:
Nay, looke not big, nor flatte, nor flate nor fret,
I will be matter of what is mine owne.
She is my goods, my chastels, she is my house,
My bouldr old-fuffle, my field, my barsne,
My horte, my owne my self, any thing,
And hence the flonds, touch her who euer dare,
Ile bring mine action on the proudleste
That fells my way in Padna: Gremio

Draw forth thy weapon, we are beset with theues,
Refuse thy Mistrefs if thou be a man:
Fear not the wench, they shall not touch thee Kate,
Ile buckler thee against a Million.

Exeunt. P.Ka.

Bap. Nay, let them goe, a couple of quiet ones.

Pet. Wenst they not quickly, I shold de with laugh.

Exeunt. Of all mad matches newer was the like.

Luc. Mistresse, what's your opinion of your fifter?

Bian. That being mad her felie, the smally mated.

Gremio. I warrant him Petruchio is Kated.

Bap. Neighbours and friends, though Bride & Bridegrome
Supply the places at the table,

(Groom wants
You know there wants no jentlesman at the feast:
Lucentio, you shall supply the Bridgroomes place,
And let Bianca take her fisters room.

Pet. Shall sweet Bianca prattle how to bride it?

Bap. She shall Lucentio; come gentillers let goe.

Enter Gremio.

Gremio. Fie fie on all tied ladies, on all mad Maffers,
And all foule waisters; was euer man to beares? was euer man to faide? was euer man to weaze? I am sente before to make a fire, and they are comming after to warme them:
now were no: I a little pot, & boone hot; my very lippes might freeze to my teeth, my tonge to the roofe on my mouth, my heart in my belly, ere I shold beone a fire to thaw me, but I with blawing the fire shall warme my selfe: for considering the weather, a taller man then I will take cold: Hollis, hoi Caris.

Enter Currie.

Curis. Who is that calls so coldly?

Gremio. A piece of Ice: if thou doubte it, thou must slide from my shoulder to thy heele, with no greater greater a run but my head and my necke. A fire good Curtain.

Cur. Is thy master and his wife coming Grumio?

Grum. Oh! I Curtiss, and therefore fire, fire, call on no

Cur. Is the foot to a Sirene as the report's

Grum. She was good Curtiss before this frost: but thou knowest winter turns man, woman, and beast: for it hath used my old master, and my new mistress, and my felé fellow Curtiss.

Cur. Away you three inch fool, I am no beast.

Am. But three inches! Why thy horse is a foot and so long am I at the left. But wilt thou make a fire, or shall I complain on thee to our mistress, whose hand

(the being now at hand) thou shalt synce feel, to thy cold comfort, for being flown in thy hot office.

Cur. I prethee good Grumio, tell me, how goes the world?

Grum. A cold world Curtiss in every office but thine, & therefore fire: do thy duty, and haue thy due, for my master and mistis is almost frozen to death.

Cur. There's the readye, and therefore good Grumio thee newes.

Grum. Why lacke boy, ho boy, and an swich newes

as wilt thou.

Cur. Come, you are so full of conidcting.

Grum. Why therefore fire, for I have caught extreme cold. Where's the Cooke, is supper ready, the house trust, witches threw'd, cobwebs swept, the servingmen in their new suittn, the white stockings, and every officer his wedding garment on? Be the lackes faire within, the Gils faire without, the Carpetts laide, and euerie thing in order?

Cur. All reade: and therefore I pray thee newes.

Cur. First know my horse is tired, my master & mistis false out.

Cur. How?

Grum. Out of their saddles into the durr, and thereby had a tale.

Cur. Let's ha' good Grumio.

Grum. Leave that care.

Cur. Here.

Grum. There.

Cur. This 'tis to feele a tale, not to hear a tale.

Grum. And therefore 'tis calld a fitable tale: and this

Coffe was but to knocke at your care, and beleeach lfitting: now I begin, Inprimis wee came downe a foulte hill, my Master riding behinde my Mistis.

Cur. Both of one horse?

Grum. What's that to thee?

Cur. Why a horse.

Grum. Tell thou the tale: but hadst thou not crost me, thou shouldst haue heard how her horse fel, and she under her horse: thou shouldst haue heard in how mery a place, how she was bremlit, how she left her with the horse upon her, how she beat me because her horse stumbled, or the wante through the durt to plucke him off me: how she swore, how the praid, that neuer praid before: how I cried, how the horses ranne away, how her bridle was burst: how I loft my crupper, with mane things of worthye memorie, which now shalt fell in obliution, and thou returnne inexperienced to thy grace.

Cur. By this teckning he is more threnow than fife.

Grum. I, and that thou and the proudlest of you all shal fine when he cometh home. But what tale I of this?

Call forth Nathaniel, Ioseph, Nichoole, Philip, Walter, Su-

graye and the rest: let their heads belickely com'd, their blew coats brughtes, and their garters of so indifferent knit, let them curtiss with their left legges, and not preume to touch a haire of my Masters horse-tale, till they kiss their hands. Are they all readie?

Cur. They are.

Grum. Call them forth.

Cur. Do you hear he: you must make my mistis to concieuance my mistis.

Grum. Why the hath a face of her owne.

Cur. Who knowes not that?

Grum. Thou it tesmes, that calls for company to coun-terue her

Cur. I call them forth to credit her.

Grum. Why she comes to borrow nothing of them:

Nat. Welcome home Grumio.

Phll. Now grumio.

In. What Grumio.

Nick. Fellow Grumio.

Nat. How now old lad.

Cur. Welcome you: show now you: what you: fellow: and thus much for greeting. Now my i sperce companions, is all readie, and all things neate?

Nat. All things is readie, how secure is our mistas?

Cur. Fine a hand, slighted by this: and therefore be not— Cockes passion, silence, I hear my mistas.

Enter: Petruchio and Kate.

Pet. Where be she? knowes What no man at doore

To hold my fitting, not to take my horse?

Where is Nathaniel, Gregory, Philip.

Alfre. Here, here sir, here sir.

Pet. Here sir, here sir, here sir, here sir.

You logger-headed and vnpollisht grooms: What no attendance? no regard? no dutie?

Where is the foolish knave I sent before?

Grum. Here sir, as foolish as I was before.

Pet. You pesant, swain, you horison malte-horse drawg

Did I not bid thee mee me in the Parke,

And bring alonge these rafcai knaues with thee?

Grumio. Nathaniels cause sir was not fully made,

And Gabrets pumpes were all vapike i'th helle.

There was no Linke to colour Peir's hat,

And Walters dagger was not come from sheathing:

There were none fine, but Adams, Rafe, and Gregorys,

The rafcai were ragged, old, and beggarly.

Yet as they are, here are they to come meet you.

Where is the life that late I led? Where

Are thoues? Sit downe Kate,

And welcome. Soud, soud, soud, soud.

Enter seruants with supper.

Why when I say? Nay good sweet Kate be merrie.

Of off with my boots: you rogues: you villains, when?

It was the Friar of Orders grey,

As hee forth walked on his way.

Out you rogue, you plucke my foote awrie,

Take that, and mend the plucking of the other.

Be merrie Kate: Some water heere: what ha's.

Enter one with water.

Where's my Spanish Troilus? Sirra, get you hence,

And bid my cozen Ferdinand come hither:

One Kate that you must kiss, and be acquainted with.

Where are my Slippers? Shall I have some water?

Com Kate and wash, and welcome heartily:

you horson villains, will you leat fall?

Kate.

The Taming of the Shrew

Kate. Patience I pray you, 'tis a fault unwilling.
Pet. A horrid bitish-headed flap-eard knave.

Come Kate sit down, I know you have a famacke.
Will you giue thanks, sweete Kate, or else shall I?
What's this, Mutton?

1. Ser. I.

Pet. Who brought it?

2. Peter. I.

'Tis burnt, and so is all the meate:
What dogges are these? Where is the rerfall Cooke?
How durt you villaines bring it from the dretler
And ferue it thus to me that love it not?

There, take it to you, tretchers, cups, and all:
You needleff iolt-heads, and waifmanned flauces.

Kate. I pray you husband be not so diuilid, This meate was well, if you were so contented.

Pet. I tell thee Kate, 'twas burnt and alired away;
And I expressly am forbid to touch it.
For it engenders choller, plaintful anger,
And better 'twerp that both of vs did fail,
Since of our felues. ourselves are chollerick,
Then feede it with fuch eu-rolled stiffe:

Be patient, to morrow it shall be mendid,
And for this night wef through for comuds.

Come I will bring thee to thy Brishel chamber.

Enter Seniors senates.

Nath. Peter did ever live the like.

Peter. He kills her in her owne humor.

Granio. Where is he?

Enter Curtis a Servant.

Cur. In her chamber, making a lamentation concress to her, and raile, and swears, and rates, that fhee (poore foule) knowes not which way to stand, to looke,

To speake, and fitts as one new eftien from a dreame.
Away, away, for he is comming hither.

Pet. Thus have I pollictickly begun my enemye.
And 'tis my hope to end fully:
My Faucon now is sharpe, and paffing empeire,
And till the flooe, the must not be full gorg'd,
For then the fener lookes vpon her lure.

Another way I have to run my Haggard,
To make her come, and know her keepers call:
That is, to watch her, as we watch thefe Kites, That baftes, and beate, and will not be obedient:
She eat no meate to day, nor none shall eate.
Laff night fhe flept not, nor to night fhe fiall not:
As with the meate, some undeferued fault
She finde about the making of the bed,
And heere fhe fling the pillow, there the boulfer,
This way the Coureret, another way the fluccs:
I, and amidst this hurlic I intend,
This all is done in reuered care other,
And in conflufion, the fiall watch all night,
And if the chance to nod, fhe raile and brawle,
And with the clamor keep her fill awake:
This is a way to kis a Wife with kindneffe,
And thus fhe curbe her mad and headstrong humor:
He that knowes better how to tame a fheare,
Now let him speake, 'tis charity to shew.

Exeunt Tranio and Hortensia.

Tra. It po{ible friend Lufia, that milfirs Bianca
Doth name any other, but Lucetia.
I tel you fir, the heares me faire in hand.

Luc. Sir, to satisfie you in what I have fay'd,

Stand by, and mark the manner of his teaching.

Enter Bianca.

Her. Now Milfirs, profite you in what you reade.

Bian. What Master read you first, resolute me that?

Her. I reade, that I profite the Art to love,

Bian. And may you prove it Master of your Art,

Luc. While you yet dece peere Milfrefs of my heart.

Her. Quecke procedere marry, now tel me I pray,

You that darft fwear that your milfirs Bianca

Loud me in the World so well as Lucetia.

Tra. Oh delightfull Lufia, vifcountant womankind,

I tel thee Lifio this is wonderfull.

Her. Milfike no more, I am not Lufia,

Nor a Musitian as I feeme to bee,

But one that forci to live in this disfrige,

For fuch a one as leaues a Gentleman,

And makes a God of fuch a Citizen;

Know fir, that I am call'd Hortensio.

Tra. Signior Hortensio, I have often heard

Of your entire afection to Bianca.

And fine mine eyes are witneffe of her lightneffe,

I wil with you, if ye be fo contented,

Forfware Bianca, and her love for euer.

Her. See how they kiffe and court Signior Lucetia,

Here is my hand, and here I firmly vow

Never to woo her more, but do forsworne her,

As one who owch all the former faueres

That I haue fondely flater'd them withall.

Tra. And here I take the like unfaithed oath,

Never to marry with her, though fhe wil intente,

Fix on her, fee how beafily the doth court hir.

*Her. Would all the world but he had quite forsworn

For me, that I may surely keep mine oath.

I will be married to a wealthy Widdow,

Ere three dayes paife, which hath as long lou'd me,

As I haue lou'd this proud disdainful Haggard,

And fo farewell Signior Lucetia,

Kindneffe in women, not their beauteous looks

Shal win my love, and fo I take my leaue;

In refolucion, as I fpoke before.

Her. Milfirs Bianca, bleffe you with fuch grace,

As longeth to a Louers bleffe caue:

Nay, I haue tane you napping gentle Loue,

And haue forsworne you with Lucetia.

Bian.* Tranio you left, but haue you both forsworne me?

Her. Milfirs we haue.

Luc. Then we are rid of Lufia.

Tra. I faith he'll haue a lustic Widdow now,

That shall be wood, and wedded in a day.

Bian. God guie him joy.

Tra. I, and hee I tamer hir.

*Lucetia. He layses fo Tranio,

Tra. And in thys heys gone into the taming fricole.

Luc. The taming (choole) what is there inuch a place?
Tra. I milfirs, and Petruchiois the master,

That teacheth trickes eleuen and twentie long,

To tame a shrew, and charme her chattering tongue.

Exeunt Tranio, and Lucetia.

Luc. Oh Milfir, master I haue watch'd fo long,

That I am dogge-ware, but as I fpoke

An ancient Angel comming down the hill,

Will ferue the turne.

Tra. What in your Friends?

Bian.* Master, a Marcantor, or a pedant, who...

The Taming of the Shrew.

I know not what, but formal in apparel,
In gate and countenance surely like a Father.
Are. And what of him I mean?

Theo. If he be credulous, and trust my tale,
He makes him glad to seem Fervente,
And give assurane to Baptista Minola.
As if the were the sight. Ucimia.

Par. Take me your love, and then let me alone.

Enter a Pedant.

Ped. God save you sir.

Theo. And you sir, you are welcome,
Trausile you fatre on, or are you at the fasthead?

Ped. Sir at the fasthead for a weeke or two,
But then, if fasther, and as fastre as Rome.

And to Tripolje, if God lend me life.

What Countricaymen I pray?

Of Mantua.

Of Mantua. Sir, ma"rie God forbid,
And come to Padua carelesse of your life.

My life sir? how I pray for that goes hard.

To die for any one in Mantua.

To come to Padua, know you not the cause?
Your ships are laid at Venice, and the Duke
For private quarrel twist your Duke, and him,
Hath publish'd and proclaimed it openly.

To see, but that you are but newly come,
you might haue heard it else proclaimed about.

Alas sir, it is worue for me then so,
For I haue bills for monie by exchange
From Florence, and must here deliver them.

Well sir, so do you courtse,
This will I do, and this I will advise you.

First tell me, haue you euer beene at Pisa?

In Pisa haue I often bin,
Pisa renown'd for grace Citizens.

Among them know you one Vincenzo?

I know him not, but I haue heard of him:
A Merchant of incomparable wealth.

He is my father sir, and sooth to say,
In count'nance somewhat dooth ressemble you.

As much as an apple doth an oytter, & all one.

To fame your life in this extremitie,
This fauer will I do you for his fake,

And think it not the worst of all your fortunes,
That you are like to Sir Fervente.
His name and credite shall you verterke,
And in thy house you shall be friendly lodg'd,
Looke that you take upon you as you shald,
you standare me sir: so that you stay
Till you haue done your businesse in the City:
If this be courtse' sir, accept of it,

Oh sir, do, and will repute you ever
The patron of my life and libertie.

Then goe with me, to make the matter good,
This by the way I let you understand,
My father is here. He look'd for me to day,
To passe assurance of a dower in marriage
Twist me, and one Baptista daughter hear.
In all these circumstances Ill instruct you,
Go with me to cloath you as becomes you.

Enter Petruchio, and HORTENSIO.

Petr. How fares my Kate, what sweeting all a round?
Hort. Misfitness, what sheere?

Kate. Faith as cold as can be.

Plucke vp thy spirits, looke cheerfully vp
Here I loue, thou feell how diligent I am.
To dresse thy meate, and bring it thee.
I am sure sweet Kate, this kindnesse merites thankes.
What, not a word? Nay then, thou loue it not,
And all my painses is forced to no proofs.
Here take away this dith.

Petr. I pray you let iceland.

The poorest service is repaid with thankes.
And so shall mine before you touch the meate.

Kate. I thank you sir.

Signior Petruchio, fie you are too blame.

Come Misfitres Kate, I loue you, you compound.

Petr. Eat it vp. All Hortensio, if thou louest me.

Much good do it into thy gentle heart.

Kate este space; and now my honie Love,
Will we returne unto thy Fathers house,
And renelle it as brauely as the beft,
With flitten coats and caps, and golden rings.
With Rohenne and Caftles, and Pardineales, and things:
With Scarfes, and flames, & double change of brauty.
With Amber Bracelets, Bezares, and all this knetty.
What hast thou done? The Tailor fates thy leasure.
To decke thy bodie with this ruffling treasur.

Enter Tailor.
Come Tailor, let vs see thesee ornaments,

Enter Flabberdasher.

Lay forth the gowme. What newes with you sir?

Flab. Heere is the cap your Worship did bepeake.

Pet. Why this was moulded on a porrengar,

A Velvet ciff : Fie, fie, this lewd and filthy,

Why is this caffle or a wunet-thell,

A knacke, a toy, a tricke, a babies cap:

Away with it, come let me have a bigger.

Kate. Ie have no bigger, this doth fit the time,

And Gentlemwomen weeare such caps as theye.

Pet. When you are gentle, you shall have one too,

And not till then.

Her. That will not be in haste,

Kate. Why sir I trull I may have leaue to speake,

And speake I will. I am no child, no babbie,

Your betters have haue indu'd me fay my minde,

And if you cannot, beft you stop your ears.

My tongue will tell the anger of my heart,

Or els my heart concealing it will breake,

And rather then it fall, I will he free,

Euen to the vtermost as Ipleas in words.

Pet. Why thou falt true, it is patric cap,

A cuffard coffen, a babble, a filken pie,

I loue thee well in that thou lik't it not.

Kate. Loue me, or loue me not, I like the cap,

And it I will haue, or I will haue none.

Pet. Thy gowme, why I: come Tailor let vs fee't.

Oh but the God, what making fluffe is this?

What fhit a fluffe? this is like deems cannon,

What, vp and downe cauld like adapple Tart,

Heeres snap, and nip, and cut, and fish and flaff,

Like to a Cenfor in a barbers floppes:

Why what a deuils name Tailor call thou this?

Her. I fee feees like to have neither cap nor gowme.

Tailor. You bid me make it ordeike and well,

According to the fashion, and the time,

Pet. Marrie and did he; but if you be remember'd,

I did not bid you make it to the time.

Go hop me ouer every kennell home,

For you shall hop without my cutome firs:

I none of it; hence, make your beh of it.

Kate. I never saw a better fashion'd gowme,

More quaint, more pleafing, nor more commendable:

Belike you meanes to make a puppett of me.

Pet. Why true, he meanes to make a puppett of thee.

Tailor. She laies your Worship meanes to make a puppett of her.

Pet. Oh monitrous arrogance:

Thou leaft, thou thred, thou thimble,

Thou yard three quarreurs, half yard, quarter, axle,

Thou Flea, thou Nit, thou冬天 crickes thou:

Braud in mine owne house with a skene of thred:

Away thou Ragge, thou quantitie, thou remnant,

Or I shall lo be mette thee with thy yard,

As thou shalt thinke on prating whilst thou leuat:

I tell thee I, that thou haft mar't her gowme.

Tailor. Your worship is deceu'd, the gowme is made

Lift as my master had direction:

Grumia gauze order how it should be done.

Grumia. I gave him no order, I gave him the stuffe.

Tailor. But how did you define it should be made?

Grumia. Marrie fit with needle and thread.

Tailor. But did you not requeft to haue it cut?

Grumia. Thou haue fit'd many thing.

Tailor. I haue.

Grumia. Face not mee: thou haft brau'd mane membrous not mee; I will neither beffe face'd nor brau'd.

I say vnto thee, I bid thy Master cut out the gowme, but I did not bid him cut it to pieces. Ergo thou left.

Tailor. Why heere is the note of the fashion to teftify,

Pet. Read it.

Grumia. The note lies in's threat if he say I said so,

Tailor. Inpintim, a loole bodied gowme.

Grumia. Master, if euer I said loole-bodied gowme, low me in the skirts of it, and beate me to death with a bot-tome of browne thred: I faid a gowme

Tailor. With a small compact cape.

Grumia. I confesse the cape.

Tailor. With a trunke fleece.

Grumia. I confesse two fleeces.

Tailor. The fleeces curiously cut.

Pet. There's the villain.

Grumia. Error i'th bill fir, error i'th bill? I commanded the fleeces should be cut out, and would vp againe, and that Ile proue uppon thee, though thy little finger be armed in a thimble.

Tailor. This is true that I fay, and I had thee in place where thou shouldest know it.

Grumia. I am for thee freight: take thou the bill, give me thy meat-yard, and spare not me.

Her. God-a-mercif Grumia, then hee shall have no other.

Pet. Well fit in breefe the gowme is not for me.

Grumia. You are i'th right fir, this for my mistrie.

Pet. Go take it vp vnto thy masters fve.

Grumia. Vllaine, not for thy life: Take vp my Mistrefse gowme for thy masters fve.

Pet. Why fir, what's your conceit in that?

Grumia. Oh fir, the conceit is deeper then you think for,

Take vp my Mistrefse gowme to his masters fve.

Oh fie, fifte.

Pet. Herr's, fay thou will fsee the Tailor paid:

Go take it hence, be gone, and lay no more.

Her. Tailor, Ie pay thee for thy gowme to morrow,

Take no vundiabe or of this hoffle words:

Away I fay, commend me to thy master.

Exit Tailor.

Pet. Well, come my Kate, we will vote thy fathers,

Euen in thesee hoffle meanes habillemens:

Our purfes shall be proud, our garments poore:

For this the minde that makes the bodie rich,

And as the Sunne breaks through the darkeft clouds,

So honor goether in the meanefl habit.

What is the lay more precius then the Laske?

Because his feathers are more beautifull.

Or is the Adder better then the Elee,

Because his painted skin containes the eye.

Oh no good Kate, neither art thou the worfe

For this poore furniture, and meane array,

If thou accounted it shame, lay it on me,

And therefore trifle, we will hence forthwith,

To feall and sport vs at thy fathers house,

Go call my men, and let vs straight to him,

And bring our horses into Long-lane end,

There will we mount, and thinke more on fcoote,

Let's fee, I thinke 'tis now some feuens a clocke,

And well we may come there by dinner time.

Kate. I dare affure you firs, it is almost two,

And 'twill be fupper time ere you come there.

Pet. It fhall be fennent I go to hande:

Look what I fpeak, or do, or thinke to doe,
The Taming of the Shrew

The Actor. When do you think the business will be finished, and the play be done?

The Player. In time, sir, we shall do it. But I must first speak to you, sir. I have some matters to attend to, and I must go at once. If you please, sir, you may come with me. I have some business to attend to, and I must go at once. If you please, sir, you may come with me.
And wander we to see thy honest sone,
Who will of thy service be full joyous.
Vince.
But is this true, or is it else thy pleasure,
Like pleasant travailors to break a left
Vpon the company thou owestake?
Hort.
I doe assure thee father is it.
K.
Come got along and bee the truth hereof,
For our lift instrument hath made thee jealous.
Exeunt.
Hort.
Well Petrucho, this hath put me in heart;
Hau to my Widdow, and if the froward,
Then haft thou taught Hortensio to be vnoward,
Exeunt.

Enter Biondello, Lucanio and Bianca, Greenio
in our before.

Bion.
Softly and softly sit, for the Priest is ready.
Luc.
I fte Biondello; but they may chance to neede thee at home, therefore leafe vs.
Exeunt.
Bion.
Nay fairies, He see the Church a your backe, and then come backe to my mistis as soones as I can.
Gre.
I marrie Cambio comes not all this while.

Enter Petrucho, Kate, Lucanio, Grumio with Attendants.

Pet.
Sir here doeth the doo, this is Lucanioe honest,
My Fathers beastes more toward the Market-place;
Thither muft I, and here I lease you fir.
Gre.
You shall not choose but drinke before you goe,
I think I shall command your welcome here;
And by all likelihood some cheer is toward.
Knock.
Grim.
They're bute within, you were bute knocke lower.

Pedant looks out of the window.
Pead.
What's he that knockes as he would beat downe
The gate?

Vin.
Is Signior Lucanio within?
Pead.
He's within fir, but not to be spoken withall.

Vin.
What if a man bring him a hundred pound or two to make merrie withall.
Pead.
Keeps your hundred pounds to your selfe, hee shall neede none so long as I live.

Pet.
Nay, I told you your sone was well belaued
In Padua: doe you hear it, to leafe frivolous circumstancies,
I pray you tell signior Lucentio that his Father is come from Pisa, and is here at the doore to speake with him.
Pead.
Thou left his Father is come from Padua, and here looking out at the window.

Pet.
Art thou his father?
Pead.
I tru, for his mother sakes, if I may beleue her.
Pet.
Why how now gentleman? why this is flat kna-urotie to take upon you another maintaine.
Pead.
Say hands on the villaine, I beleue a meanes to collen some bodie in this Citie under my countenance.

to change me.
Pead.
I have seene them in the Church together, God sendem good flippin; but who is here? mine old Master Vincentio? now wee are endone and brought to nothing.

Vin.
Come hither crack hempe.
Pead.
I hope I may choose Sir.

Vin.
Come hither you rogue, what have you forgot mee?
Pead.
Forgot you, no fir: I could not forget you, for
I never saw you before in all my life.

Vin.
What, you notorious villaine, didst thou never see thy Mistis fathers, Vincentio?

Pead.
What.
Enter Petruchio, with servants, Baptista, Tranio.

Tra. Sir, what are you that other to beate my ser-

Vnc. What a! I say what are you first? oh immortal

Goddes oh fine villain, a filken doublet, a vel-

et-hope, a feather cloak, and a copastaine hat : oh I am

vndone, I am vndone : while I place the good husband at home, my fortune and my servant spend all at the ven-turier.

Tra. How now, what's the matter?

Bap. What is the man lunatick?

Tra. Sir, you frame a fober ancient Gentleman by your habit, but your words shew you a mad man: why

Bap. What serves it you, if I wearie and goldish thank my good Father, I am able to maintain it.

Vnc. Thy father: oh villain, he is a solc-maker in Bergamo.

Bap. You mistake sir, you mistake sir, praise what do you think he is his name?

Vnc. His name, as if I knew not his name: I have brought him vp ever since he was three yeares old, and his name is Tranio.

Petruchio. Lucienio, oh he hath murdered his Master; late held upon him, I charge you in the Dukes name: oh my fonne, my fonne, tell me thou villain, where is thy son

Lucienio?

Tra. Call forth an officer: Carrie this mad knave to the late father Baptista, I charge you that he be forth coming.

Vnc. Carrie me to the Isle?

Gre. State officer, he shall not go to prison.

Bap. Take heede signor Baptista, lest you be con-cathed in this businesse: I dare swear this is the right

Baptista.

Pedro. Swear if thou darst.

Gra. Naie, I dare not swear it.

Tra. Then thou wert best faire that I am not Lu-

*centio.

Gre. Yes, I know shee to be signior Lucienio.

Bap. Awaie with the dotard, to the Isle with him.

Enter Bianculla, Lucentio, and Katerina.

Vnc. Thus strangers may be hald and abased: oh monstrous villain.

Bian. Oh we are spoil'd, and yonder he is, denie him, for swear him, or else we are all vndone.

Luc. Pardon sweete father.

Katerina.

Vnc. Liues my sweete fonne?

Bian. Pardon deere father.

Bap. How haft thou offended, where is Lucienio?

Luc. Here's Lucentio, right sonne to the right Lu-

*centio.

That haue by marriage made thine daughter nine,

While counterfeit supplys blest thine one.

Gre. Here's packing with a minnesse to deceive vs all.

Vnc. Where is that damned villain Tranio,

That faid he was mad in this matter too?

Bap. Why, tell me is not this my con*bour?

Bian. Cambio is chang'd into Lucienio.

Luc. Loue wrought these miracles. Biancullas loue

Made me exchange my fiate with Tranio,

While he did baze my countenance in the towne,

And happilie I have arrived at the at.

Vnc. To the wished haven of my blisse:

What Tranio did, my fette entreat me to;

Then pardon him sweete Father for my fake.

Vnc. He fitte the villains note that would haue sent me to the Isle.

Bap. But doe you haere sir, haue you married my daughter without asking, my good will?

Vnc. Fear not Baptista, we will content you, goe to:

but I will in to revenged of this villain.

Exeunt.

Bap. And I to sound the depth of this woe.

Luc. Look not pale Biancullas thy father will not frown.

Exeunt.

Gre. My aske is doue, but he is in among the reft.

Out of hope of all, but my share of the feast.

Kate. Husband let's follow, to see the end of this ado.

Petruchio. First kisse me Kate, and we will.

Kate. What is this somet of the three.

Kate. What art thou ashamed of me?

Kate. Mo fir, God forbid, but ashamed to kisse.

Petruchio. Why then let's home againe: Come Sira let's awaie.

Kate. Nay, I will give thee a kisse, now praise thee

Loue sempe.

Petruchio. Is not this well? come my sweete Kate.

Better once then uter, for neuer to late.

Exeunt.

Atius Quintus.

Enter Baptista, Vincenzio, Gremio, the Pedant, Lucentio, and

Bianculla, Tranio, Bianculla Gremio, and Widow:

The Seruengmen with Tranio bringing in a Banquet.

Luc. At laft, though long, our iarring notes agree,

And time is when raging warre is come,

To smilke at scapers and perils ouerblowne;

My faire Biancullas bid my father welcome,

While I with selfsame kindnesse welcome this:

Brother Petruchio, sifter Katerina,

And thou Hortensio with thy louing Widow:

Feast with the best, and welcome to my house,

My Banker is to close our fromakes vp

After our great good cheete: praise you fit downe,

For now we fit to chaer as well as eate.

Petruchio. Nothing but fit and fast, and eate and eate.

Baptista. Padua affords this kindnesse, fenne Petruchio.

Petruchio. Padua affords nothing but what is kind.

Hortensio. For both our fakes I would that word were true.

Petruchio. Now for my life Hortensio fears his Widow,

Wid. Then neuer trust me if I be affraid.

Petruchio. You are very tenible, and yet you misse my fence:

I mean Hortensio is a scard of you.
The Taming of the Shrew.

Wid. He that is giddie thinks the world turns round.

Kat. Miftris, how mean you that?

Wid. Thus I conceive by him.

Pet. Conceives by me, how likes Hortensia that?

Hor. My Widdow faire, thus the conceives her tale.

Pet. Verey well mended; kisst him for that good Widdow.

Kat. He that is giddie thinks the world turns round,
I praise you what you meant by that,
Wid. Your husband being troubled with a shrew,
Measures my husband's sorrow by his woe:
And now you know my meaning.

Kat. A verey mean meaning.

Wid. Right, I mean you.

Kat. And I am mean indeed, respecting you.

Pet. To her Kate.

Her. To see Widdow.

Pet. A hundred marks, my Kate does put her down.

Her. That's my office

Pet. Spoke like an Officer: hit to the lad.

Drink to Hortensio.

Bap. How likes Cremio these quick witted folkes?

Gre. Belleeue me sir, they But together well.

Bian. Head, and bat an haffie witted bodie,
Would say your Head and But were head and home.

Vit. I Miftris Bride, hath this awakend you?

Bian. I, but not frighted me, therefore Ile sleepe a-gaine.

Pet. Nay that you shall not since you have begun:
Hauiep for you a better left or too.

Bian. Am I your Bird, I mean to shift my bullis,
And then pursue me as you draw your Bow.

You are welcome all.

Pet. She hath prevented me, here sight: Transi,
This bird you aim'd at, though you hit he, not,
Therefore a health to all that shot and miff.

Tri. Oh sir, Lucrison fhad like his Gray-hound,
Which runs himselfe, and catches for his Mafter.

Pet. A good swift female, but something currie.

Tra. 'Tis well that for you hunted for your felle:
'Tis thought your Deere does hold you at a bair.

Bap. Oh, or Petruchio, Transi hits you now.

Luc. I thank thee for that gird good Petruchio.

Hor. Confesse, confesse, hath he not hit you here?

Pet. A has a little gald me I confesse:
And as the left did glance awaie from me,
'Tis ten to one man'd you too out right.

Bap. Now in good fadnecf' Jonte Petruchio,
I think thou hit the veriety shrew of all.

Pet. Well, I say no: and therefore firc affurance,
Let's each one fend unto his wife,
And he whole wife is most obedient,
To come at fift when he doth fend for her,
Shall win the wager which we will propofe.

Luce. Content, what's the wager?

Luc. Twenty crowns.

Pet. Twenty crowns,
Ile venture to much of my Hawke or Hound,
But twenty times so much upon my Wife.

Luc. A hundred then.

Hor. Content.

Hor. Who shall begin?

Luce. That will I.

Goec Bionella, but your Miftris came to me.

Bap. Igoce.

Luce. Ibe by your hafle, Bionella comes.

Luc. Ile have no halves: Ile beare it all my felke,

Enter Bionella.

How now, what news?

Bian. Sir, my Miftris sends you word
That she is busie, and she cannot come.

Pet. How? she's busie, and she cannot come: is that an answer?

Gre. I, and a kinde one too:

Praise God fit your wife send you not a worfe.

Pet. I hope better.

Hor. Sirra Bionella, goe and intreate my wife to come to me forthwith.

Bap. Oh, oh, intreate her, nay then shee must needs come.

Hor. I am afraid sir, doe what you can

Enter Bionella.

Yours will not be entreated: Now, where's my wife?

Bian. She faies you have tome goodly left in hand,
She will not come: the bids you come to her.

Pet. Worfte and worfe, she will not come:

Oh, well, intolerable, not to be undr'd:

Sirra Cremio, goe to your Miftris,
Say I command her come to me.

Hor. I know her anfvere.

Pet. What?

Hor. She will not.

Pet. The fouler fortune mine, and there an end,

Enter Katherine.

Bap. Now by my boolldam here comes Katherine,
Kat. What is your wife, that you fend for me?

Pet. Where is your fifter, and herefor fix wife?

Kate. They fit conferring by the Parler fire.

Pet. Goe fetch them bifer, if they deny to come,

Swinge them fould forth vou into their husbands:
Away Ilay, and bring them fither ftraight.

Luc. Here is a wonder, if you talke of a wonder.

Hor. And to this I wonder what it bodes.

Pet. Maffie peace it boades, and loue, and quiet life.

An awfull rule, and height fupprecie:
And to be forth, what not, that's sweete and happier.

Bap. Now faire beall thee good Petruchio;

The wager thou haft won, and I will addde
Vnto their loffer twenty thicchand crowns,
Another dowrie to another daughter,
For the is chang'd as she had never bin.

Pet. Nay, I will win my wager better yet,
And shew more fign of her obedience,

Her new built vertue and obedience:

Enter Kate, Bionella, and Widdow.

See where the comes and brings your froward Wives
As prisoners to her womanlie paffion:
Katherine, that Cap of yours be comes you not,
Off with that bable, throw it underfooe.

Pet. Lord let me never have a cane to figh,
Till I be brought to fuch a fickle paffe.

Bian. Fie what a foolish dutie call you this?

Luc. I would your dutie were as foolish too:
The wildome of your dutie faire Bionella,
Hath cough me fice hundred crownes fince supper time.

Bian. The more fooles you for laying on your dutie.

Pet. Katherine I charge thee tell these head-true women,what dutie they doe owe their Lords and hufbands.

Wid. Come,
Finis.
ALLS

Well, that Ends Well.

Actus primus. Scena Prima.

Enter young Bertram Count of Rossneke, his Mother, and Helena, Lord Laffan, all in blacke.

Mother.

In delivering my fonne from me, I burie a second husband.

Laf. And I going Madam, weep on my fathers death anew; but I must attend his mislies command, to whom I am now in Ward, evermore in tublication.

Laf. You shall find of the King a husband Madame, you see a father. He that is generally is all times good, must of necessity hold his virtue to you, whose worth hee would shew it vp where it wanted rather then lack it where there is much abundance.

Mons What hope is there of his Maiesties amendment?

Laf. He hath abandon'd his Positions Madam, under whose protection he hath percutted time with hope, and finds no other advantage in the proceede, but only the looking of hope by time.

Mons This young Gentlewoman had a father, O that had, how sad a passage tis, whose skill was almost as great as his honesty, had it stretch'd so far, would have made nature immortal, and death should have play for lacke of works. Would for the Kings like hee were living, I think it would be the death of the Kings desire.

Laf. How call'd you the man you speake of Madam?

Mons He was famous for his profession, and it was his great right to be so: Gerard de Navar.

Laf. He was excellent indeed Madam, the King very late spoke of him admiringly, and moreover hee was skill'd enough to have had knowledge could be let vp against mortallitie.

Laf. What is it (my good Lord) the King languisht of?

Laf. A fitfull my Lord.

Reyn I heard not of it before.

Laf. I would it were not notorious. Was this Gentlewoman the Daughter of Gerard de Navar?

Mons His Isle childe my Lord, and besought to my outer looking. I have those hopes of her good, that her education promises: her dispositions free inherits, which makes faire gifts fairest: for where an uncleane mind carrieth vextuous qualities, there commendations go with strie, they are vextures and vittories too: in her they are the better for their simplicity; she derives her honesty.
Must he comforted, not in his sphere;
The ambitious in my love thus plagus in spite:
The bane that would be staled by the line;
Must die for love, 'twas prettie, though a plague
To see him euerie hour to fit and draw
His arched brows, his hawking eie, his cutles
In our hearts table; heart too-capable
Of euerie line and tricke of his fierce favour.
But now he's gone, and my idolatrous fancie
Must fanfihic his Religues: Who comes here?

Enter Parolles.

One that goes with him: I love him for his sake,
And yet I know him a notorious liar,
Think him a great way toole, folle a coward,
Yet these six calls fit for fit in him,
That they take place, when Verusch flee bones
Looks blaskeith cold wind: withall, full ofte we see Cold wife dominated on superfluous follie.

Par. Saye you faire Queene,
Hel. And you Monarch,
Par. No,
Par. Are you meditating on virginitie?
Hel. Ye have some place of foulde in you: let me ask you a question. Man is enemie to virginitie, how may we barracade it against him?
Par. Keep him out.
Hel. But he affaitles, and our virginitie though valiant, in the defence yet is weak: vtile ford to vs some warlike refinance.
Par. There is none: Man setting downe before you, will vndermine you, and blow you vp.
Hel. Bleffe our pure Virginity from vnderminers and blowers vp. Is there no Military policy how Virginys might blow vp men?
Par. Virginity beeing blowne downe, Man will quicklier be blowne vp: many in blowing him downe againe, with the breach your felles made, you lose your Citty. It is not politike, in the Common-wealth of Nature, to preserve virginity. Losse of Virginity, is reasonall encreas, and there was never Virgin ge, till virginitie was first loft. That they were made ofvs mettall to make Virginys. Virginity, by beeing once loft, may be ten times found: by being euer kept, it is euer lofts: its too cold a companion: Away with it.
Hel. I will stand for vs a little, though therefore I die a Virgin.
Par. There's little can bee faide in't, 'tis against the rule of Nature. To speake on the part of virginitie, is to accuse your Mothers; which is most infallible disobedience. He that hangs himselfe is a Virgin: Virginitie murthers it selfe, and should be buried in highways oft all fattish Limit, as a desperate Offendedre against Nature. Virginiti beeectes mites, much like a Cheethe, consumes it selfe to the very payring, and so dies with feeding his own flamacke. Besides, Virginitie is peevish, proud, ylde, made of selfe-loue, which is the most inhibited flame in the Cannon. Keep it not, you cannot choose but loose by't. Our wit't: within ten yeare it will make it selfe two, which is a goodly increase, and the principal it selfe not much the worse.
Away with't.
Hel. How might one do fir, to loose it to her owne liking?

of the rich are damn'd, but if I may have your Ladiships a good will to go to the world, such the woman and w will do, as may.

Com. Why needs be a begger?

Clo. I doe beg your good will in this case.

Com. In what case?

Clo. In libels, cafe and mine owne; for such is no heritiage, and I thinke I shall never have the blessing of God, till I have issue my bodye: for they say bartes are blessings.

Com. Tell me thy reason why thou wilt marry?

Clo. My poore bodie Madame requires it, I am driven only by the flesh, and hee must needs goe that the dull drive.

Com. Is this all your worshippe's reason?

Faith Madam I have other bothe reasons, such as they are.

Com. May the world know them?

Clo. I haue beene Madame a wicked creature, as you and all flesh and blood are, and imbrue I doe matric that I may repent.

Com. Thy marriage foore then thy wickednesse.

Clo. I am not a friend Madame, and I hope to have friends for my owne sake.

Com. Such friends are shorne enemies knoue.

Clo. Ye are shallow Madame in great friends, for the knoues come to doe that for which I am a wastrie:
that he erys my Land, spoiles my name, and gues mee leave to inner the crop: if he be his cuckold here's my dridge: he that conforts my wife, is the chenifer of my flesh and blood: hee that enchafes my flesh and blood, hee that loves my flesh and blood is my friend, he that killeth my wife is my friend: they must be contented to be what they are, there were no fears in marriage, for yong Charbon
the Parisian, and old Pajam the Papit, how forserc their hearts are secer'd in Religion, their heads are both one, they must oule unions together like any Desse'th Herd.

Com. With whom bese a foule mouth'd and calam-ouis young?

A Prophet Madame, and I speake the truth the next waze, for the Ballad will repeat, which we full true shall find, your marriage comes by definiue, your Cuckow flings by kinde.

Com. Get you gone sir. I'll take with you more anon.

Sire. May it please you Madame, that hee bid Helen come to you, of whom I am to speake.

Sire. Sirra tell my gentewoman I would speake with her, Helen lorne.

Com. Was this faire face the cause, that she,
Why the Gregians fack'd Troy,
Fond done, done, fond was this King Priam's toy,
Withaith she fighed as the flood,
And gave this sentence then, among nine bad if one be good, among nine bad if one be good, there's yet one good in ten.

Com. What, one good in tenne? you corrupt the song sirra.

Clo. One good woman in ten Madame, which is a puifying th'fong: would God would secure the world fo all the verry, weede fond not fault with the swe the woman if I were the Tarbon, one inten thment and wee might ever have a good woman borne but one ame blazing faire, or an earthquake, twould mend the Lorticewell, a man may draw his heart out ever a pluckle one.

Com. You be begone for kinde, and doe I command
you?

Clo. That man should be at woman's command, and yet no hurt done, though honestie be no part of it, yet it will doe no hurt, it will wear the Surplis of humiditie over the blacke-Gowne of a bigge heart: I am going forsooth, the businesse is for Helen to come hither.

Exeunt Helen.

Enter Helen.

Old.Cou. Euen so it was with me when I was yong.
If euery we be natures, there are ours, this thone
Doth to our Rof of youth rightlie belong.
Our blood to vs, this to our blood is borne,
It is the show, and felle of natures truth,
Where loues strong passion is impaird in youth,
By our remembrance of daies forgon,
Such were our faulty, or then we thought them none,
Her eie is feke on't, I obserue her now.

Hell. What is your pleasure Madame?

Old. Cou. You know Helen I am a mother to you.

Hell. Mine honorable Mirth.

Old. Cou. Nay a mother, why not a mother? when I feed a mother

Me thought you saw a serpent, what's in mother,
I that you start at it? I say you my mother.
And put you in the Catalogue of thine.
That were enwombed mine, it's often seen
Adoption fits with nature, and chose breedes
A native flipp to vs from sovereigne feedes:
You were opprct me with a mothers groane,
Yet I expresse to you a mothers care.

(Gods mercie maiden) dost it curdt thy blood
Today I am thy mother? what's the matter,
That this dippempered messenger of wet?

The
The manie colour’d Iris rounds thine eye?

_Hell._ That I am not.

_Old. Cow._ I say I am your Mother.

_Hell._ Pardon Madam.

The Count ReSham cannot be my brother;

I am from humble, he from honored name;

No note upon my Parents, his all noble,

My Maller, my deere Lord he is and I

His tender line, and will his will full die;

He must not be my brother.

_Old. Cow._ Nor I your Mother.

_Hell._ You are my mother Madam, would you were

So that my Lord your sonne were not my brother,

Indeed my mother, or were you both our mothers,

I care to more for, then I do for heaven,

So I were not his sister, cant no other,

But I your daughter, must not be my brother.

_Old. Cow._ Yes _Hellen_, you might be my daughter in law,

God shield you meant it, nor, daughter and mother

So sience upon your pulse; what pale agen?

My feare hath catcht your fondness! I know I see

The misrife of your lowlineffe, and finde

Your falt tears head, now to all fence its grofte;

You love my lone, intention is aharm’d

Against the proclamation of thy paffion

To say thou dost not: therefore tell me true,

But tell me then ’tis fo, for looke, thy chekes

Comme as I trust to the other, and thine eyes

See it so grofely flowne in thy behavious,

That in their kinde they speake it, oneely fume

Annd hellish obstinacie thy tongue thy tongue

That truth should be supfected. speake it fo?

If it be fo, you have wound a goodly clewe.

If it be not, for my wont how ere I charge thee,

As heaven full work in me for thine sake

To tell me truelie.

_Hell._ Good Madam pardon me.

_Cow._ Do you love my Sonne?

_Hell._ Your pardon noble Multrin.

_Cow._ Loue you my Sonne?

_Hell._ Do not you love him Madam?

_Cow._ Goe not about, my loue hath in a bond

Whereof the world takes note: Come, come, disclofe:

The face of your affection, for your passion

Have to the full applie’d.

_Hell._ Then I confesse

Here on my knee, before high heauen and you,

That before you, and extre into high heauen, I love your Sonne:

My friends were poor but honest, so’s my loue:

Be not offended, for it hurts not him

That he is loud of me; I follow him not

By any token of prefumptuous fute,

Nor would I hate him, still I doe detest him,

Yet never know how that detest should be:

I know I love in vaine, truce against hope:

Yet in this captious, and intemible Site,

I still pore in the waters of my loue

And lacke not to kneel still; thus iman like

Religious in mine ens, I adore

The Sunne that lackes upon his worshipper,

But knowes of him no more. My deere Madam,

Let not your late encounter with my loue,

For loosing where you doe; but if your felle,

Who aged honor cites a vertuous youth,
All's Well; that Ends Well.

After well entred fouldiers, to returne
And finde your guilt in health.
King. No, no, it cannot be; and yet my heart
Would confede he owes the malady
That doth my life besiege: farwell young Lords,
Whether I live or die, be you the bonnes
Of worthy Frenchmen: let higher Italy
(Tho' heate that inherit but the fall
Of the last Monarchy) fee that you come
Not to worse honour, but to wed it, when
The bruitel quellant shrinke's: finde what you feke,
That fame may cry you loud: I say farewell.
L.G. Heales it at your bidding ferve your Majeflty.
King. Thofe giries of Italy, take heed of them,
They say our French, lacke language to deny
If they demand: beware of being Captive
Before you ferece.
'Sa. Our hearts receive your warnings.
King. Farewell, come hether to me.
1. L.G. Oh my sweet Lord you will fay behind vs.
Parr. 'Tis not his fault the spark.
2. L.G. Oh 'tis braue warres.
Parr. Most admirable, I have fene thofe warres.
Roff. I am commanded here, and kept a coyle with,
Too young, and the next yeere, and 'tis too early.
Parr. And thy minde fland not too boyl,
Stale away brately.
Roff. I shall lay here the for-horse to a smocke,
Checking my fmanes on the plaunc Mainy
Tell honour be bought vp, and no fword worne
But one to dance with: by heaven, Hee flalez away.
1. L.G. There's honour in the theft.
Parr. Commit it Count.
2. L.G. I am your accofary, and fo farewell.
Roff. I grow to you, & our parling is a tortu'd body
1. L.G. Farewell Captaine.
2. L.G. Sweet Mounfer Paroles.
Parr. Noble Horses; my fword and yours is kinne,
Good sparkes and lucrous, a word good metaus.
You fhall finde in the Regiment of the Spus, one Captaine
Spris his fiatecre, with an Embleme of warre hereon
On his finiftre cheeke: it was this very fword entrench'd it: fay to him I live, and obferue his reports for me.
L.G. We fhall noble Captaine.
Parr. Mær doace you on for his noyces, what will ye doe?
Roff. Stay the King.
Parr. Vie a more spacios ceremonie to the Noble
Lords, you haue reftrain'd you felle within the Lift
Of too cold an adieu: be more expreffive to them for they Weare themfelves in the cap of the time, there do murder true gate; eat, fpeak, and moft under the influence of the moll receiv'd ftrare, and though the devil luiates the meafure, fuch are to be followed: after them, and take a more diſfared warre.
Roff. And I will doe fe.
Parr. Worthy fellowes, and like to procure moft finewe fword-men. Exeunt.

Enter Lafe.
1. Laf. Pardon my Lord for me and for my tidings.
King. Ile fee thee to fland vp. (pardon.
2. Laf. Then heres a man flands that has brought his
I would you had kneeld my Lord to ake me mercy,
And that at my bidding you could to fland vp.
King. I would I had, fo I had broke thy pate
And ask thee mercy for't.
Laf. Goodfaith a-croute, but my good Lord 'tis thus,
Will you be call'd of your infirminet?
King. No.
Laf. O will you eat no grapes my royall foxe?
Yes but you will, my noble grapes, and if
My royall foxe could reach them; I have seen a medicine
That's able to breath life into a stone,
Quick'n a rocke, and make you dance Canari
With fprightly fire and motion, whole simple touch
Is powerfull to arayfe King Pippet, nay
To give great Charlemame a pen in's hand
And write to her a love-line.
King. What her is this?
Laf. Why doctors fre: my Lord, there's one arra'd,
If you will fee her: now by my faith and honour,
If seriously I may conuay my thoughts
In this my light deliverance, I have spoke
With one, that in her fexe, her yeeres, profeflion, Wifdomome and confantly, hath amaz'd me more
Then I dare blame my weakeffe: will you fee her?
For that is her demand, and know her busineffe?
That done, laugh well at me.
King. Now good Lafe,
Bring in the admiration, that we with thee
May spend our wonder too, or take off theine
By wondering how thou tookst it.
Laf. Nay, hee fit you,
And not be all day neither.
King. Thus he his peculiar nothings ever prologues.
Laf. Nay, come your waies.

Enter Helene.
King. This haffe hath wings indeed,
Laf. Nay, come your waies,
This is his Majefly, lay your minde to him,
A Traitor you doe lookke like, but fuch Traitors
His Majefly feldome feares: I am Crifled Vnle,
That dare leauze two together, far you weel.
Exit. King. Now faire one, doe your busines follow vs?
Hel. I my good Lord,
Gerard de Narbon was my father,
In what he did profefle, well found.
King. I knew him.
Hel. The rather will Ipare my praiſes towards him,
Knowing him is enough: on's bed of death,
Many receiue he gave me, chieflie one,
Which as the deareft iflike of his præife
And of his olde experience, thonifie darling,
He bad me flore vp, as a triple eye,
Safere then mine owne two: more deare I have fo,
And hearing your high Majefly's touch
With that malignat caue, wherein the honour
Of my deare fathers gift, ftands cheere in power,
I come to tender it, and my praiſes
With all bound humblesse.
King. We thank you maiden,
But may not be fo credulous of cure,
When our moft learned Doctors leauze vs, and
The congregated College haue concluded,
That labouring Art can never rafomstrate
From her inadible efface: I fay we muft not
So flaine our judgement, or corrupt our hope,
To proffite our paft-cure mafladie
To empericks, or to diffeuer fo
Our great felle and our credit, to effete
A feneffe helpe, when helpe paft fence we deeme.

Hel. My
And well designed: not helping, death's my fee,
But if I help, what does you promise me.

Kim. Make thy demand.

Helt. But will you make it soon?

Kim. I by my Scepter, and my hopes of helpe,

Helt. Then shalt thou give me with thy kingly hand

What husband in thy power I will command:

Exempted be from me the arrogance

To choose from forth the royal bed of France,

My low and humble name to propagate

With any branch or image of thy face:

But such a one thy vassal, whom I know

Is free for me to ask, thee to befofe.

Kim. Here is my hand, the premiess obstera'd,

Thy will by my performance shall be found;

So make the choice of thy owne time, for I

Thy releas'd Patient, on thee still relyes:

More should I question thee, and more I must,

Though more to know, could not be more to trust:

From whence thou cant'st, how tended, but rest

Vnquestion'd welcome, and undoubted blest.

Gue me fame helpe here he, if thou proceed,

As high as word, my deed shall match thy deed.

Enter Countesse and Clowns.

Lady. Come on for, I shall now put you to the height of your breeding.

Clown. I will livest my selfe highly fed, and lowly taught, I know my businesse is but to the Court.

Lady. To the Court, why what place make you specially, when you put off that with such contempt, but to the Court?

Col. Truly Madam, if God haue lent a man any manner, hee may eallie parke it off at Court, thee that cannot make a legge and put off the caps, kiffe his hand, and lay nothing, has neither legge, hands, lippe, nor cap: and indeed such a fellow, to say precisely, were not for the Court, But for me, I have an answer we will ferue all men.

Lady. Marry that's a boutnist answer that fits all questions.

Col. If it is like a Barbers choice that fits all buttockes, the pin buttocke, the quitch buttocke, the brawn buttocke, or any buttocke.

Lady. Will your answer feste fit to all questions?

Col. As I sayt ten greats is for the hand of an Attorny, as your French Crowne for your treffy punke, as

The ruff for Tom's fore-finger, as a pancake for Shroudeday, a Morris for May-day, as the naille to his hole, the Cuckold to his hole, as a scoolding quene to a wrangling knave, as the Nuns lippe to the Friets mouth, stay as the pudding to his skin.

Lady. Have you, I say, an answer of such finetie for all question?

Col. From below your Duke, to beneath your Constable, it will fit any question.

Lady. It must be an answer of most monstrouse, that must fit all demands.

Col. But a trifle neither in good faith, if the learned should speake truth of it: here it is, and all that belongs to it.

Ask me if I am a Courties, it shall doe you no harme to learne.

Lady. To be young againe if we could: I will bee a fool in question, hoping to bee the wiser by your answere.

Lady,

La. I pray you sir, are you a Courteir?

Cla. O Lord, sir here a simple putting off: more, more, a hundred of them.

La. Sir, I am a poor friend of yours, that loves you.

Cla. O Lord sir, thirteen, thirteen, spare not me.

La. I think sir, you can execute none of this homely meate.

Cla. O Lord sir, may put me too, I warrant you.

La. You were lately whipper as I think he.

Cla. O Lord sir, spare not me.

La. Do you call O Lord sir at your whipping, and spare me? Indeed your O Lord sir, is very frequent to your whipping: you would adwell very well to a whipping, if you were buckbound too.

Cla. There had worse luck in my life in my O Lord sir: I fee things in vertelling, but not verse ever.

La. I play the noble husband with the time, to entertain it mercurially with a boole.

Cla. O Lord sir, why there's serves well again.

La. And end sir to your beneficence: give Helen this, and urge her to a present answer backe.

Cla. O Lord sir, was I not much commanded to her, and my house, This is not much.

La. Not much commendation to them.

Cla. Nor much employment for you, you understand.

(fio. Moll faithfully, I am there, before my legges.

La. Haft you again.

Coun. By what observance I pray you.

Clo. Why he will look vp on his boote, and sing: mend the Ruffs and sing, sake questions and sing, picke his teeth, and sing. I know a man that has this tricke of melancholy hold a goodly Manor for a song.

La. Let me see what he writes, and when he means to come.

Clown. I have no minde to Iftill since I was at Court. Our old Lingo, and our lings with Country, are nothing like your old Ling and your Lings with Courtesie. The brains of my Cupid's knock'd out, and I beginne to loue, as an old man loutes money, with no stomacke.

Lad. What have we here?

Clo. In that you have there

A Letter.

I have sent you a daughter-in-law, your hat recover'd the King, and undone me: I have wedded her, not bedded her, and sworn to make the not uncertain. You shall have I am sworn away, know it before the report come. If she be breake enough in the world, I will hold a long distance. My duty to you.

Your unfortunate Sorrow,

Bertram.

This is not well rath and unbridled boy, To flye the favours of so good a king, To plucke his indignation on thy head, By the misprizing of a Madge, too venous. For the contempt of Empire.

Enter Clowne.

Clown. O Madam, yonder is beauteousnesse within between two soildiers, and my yong Ladie.

La. What is the matter.

Clo. Nay is there some comfort in these, some comfort. Your fonne will not be kild to loose as I thought he would.

La. Why should he be kill'd?

Clo. So say I Madam, if the rume away, as I heare he does, the danger is in standing too, that's the losse of men, though he be the getting of children. Hereby they come will tell you more. For my part I only heare your fonne was run away.

French E. Saw you good Madam.

Hel. Madam, my Lord is gone, for ever gone.

French G. Do not say so.

La. Think not upon patience, pray you Gentlemen, I have feate so many quirkes of joy and greefe, That the first rate of neither on the other Can woman me vnto. Where is my fonne I pray you?

French G. Madam he's gone to ferue the Duke of Florence.

We met him thitherward, for thence we came:

And after some dispatch in hand at Court,

Thither we bend again.

Hel. Lookes on his Letter Madam, here's my Passport.

When thou canst get the Ring upon my finger, which never shall come of, and those are a child of fashion of thy body, that I am father too, then shall I call me husband, but in mother's (then) I write a Neuer.

This is a dreddfull sentence.

La. Brought you this Letter Gentlemen?

I. G. I Madam, and for the Contents take are forrie for our pangs.

Old La. I prethee Ladie have a better cheere,

If thou engroffe, all the greefe's are thine,

Thou rob't mee of a moysty. He was thy fonne,

But I do wash his name out of my blood,

And thou art all my children. Towards Florence is he?

French G. I Madam.

La. And to be a soildier.

French E. Such is his noble purpose, and bleem't

The Duke will lay vp on him all the honour

That good conveniency claims.

La. Resume you thither.

French E. I Madam, with the twisftest wing of speed.

Hel. Till I have no wife, I have nothing at France,

'Tis better

La. Findes you that there?

Hel. I Madam.

French E. 'Tis but the boldnesse of his hand haply, which his heart was not confenting too.

There's nothing there that is too good for him:

But onely the, and the desires a Lord:

That twenty such rude boys might attend sport,

And call her hourly Miftris. Who was with him?

French E. A servant only, and a Gentleman: which I have sometime known.

La. Parver was it not?

French E. I say good Ladie, hee.

La. A firft rate of fellow, and full of wickednesse,

My fonne corrupts a well devided nature

With his inducement.

French E. Indeed good Ladie the fellow has a desire of that, too much, which holds him much to hate.

Frn. Till I have no wife I have nothing in France.

Nothing in France until he has no wife:

Thou shalt have none Raffilion, none in France,

Then hast thou all again: poor Lord, is't I

That chafe thee from thy Country, and expose

Thou tender limbers of thine, to the event

Of the none-sparing warre? And is it I,

That drive thee from the Spurtwine Court, where thou

Wast'st that at with faire eyes, to be the mark

Of imskoole Muskers? O you leden messengers.

That ride upon the violent speedes of fire,

Fly with false symne, moue the still-peering aire

That fings with piercing, do not touch my Lord

Who ever shootes at him, I fet him there.

Who ever charges on his forward brest

I am the Gauiffe that do hold him too't,

And though I kill him not, I am the caufe

His death was so effect'd; Better't were

Were mine at once. No come thou home Raffilion,

Whence honor but of danger winnes a scare,

As oft it looses all. I will be gone:

My being here it is, that holds thee hence,

Shall I paye here to do't? No, no, although

The ayre of Paradise did fan the house,

And Angles oftho'c'd all: I will be gone.

Dia. There is a Gentleman that serves the Count.

Reports but courteful of her.

Hel. What is his name?

Dia. Monsieur Parolles.

Hel. Oh, I believe with him, In argument of praise, yet on the worth.

Of the great Count himselfe, he is too mean to have her name repeated, all her deferuing. Is a referral honest, and that.

I have not heard examin'd, 1.

Dia. Alas poore Lady.

'Tis a hard bondage to become the wife Of a deserving Lord.

Parol. I worte a good creature, wherefore she is, Her hart weightes sadly: this yong maide might do her a shrewd turne if she pleas'd.

Hel. How do you mean?

May be the amorous Count solicites her.

In the vnlawfull purpose.

And broches with all that can in such a fater.

Corrupt the tender honour of a Maide:

But she is arm'd for him, and keeps her guard

In honeylef defence.

Drumme and Colours.

Enter Count Raffilion, Parolles, and the whole Army.

Mar. The goddess forbid else.

Parol. So, now they come,

That is Anthony the Duke eldest sonne,

That Eufalus.

Hel. Which is the Frenchman?

Dia. Hee,

That with the plume, 'tis a most gallant fellow,

I would he loud his wife: if he were honester He were much gooditer. It's not a handsum Gentleman

Hel. I like him well.

Parol. His pitty he is not honest: yonds that same knave

That lends him to these places: were I his Lady,

I would poison that yile Raffall.

Hel. Which is he?

Parol. That lacke an apes with feares. Why is he Melancholly?

Hel. Perchance he's hurts in battale.

Parol. Loose out our drum? Well.

Mar. He's threadly west at something. Lookes he has spied vs.

Wild. Marie hang you.

Mar. And your custodie, for a ring-carrie.

Exit. Wid. The troope is past: Come pilgrim, I will bring you, Where you shall hoff: Of injoynd penitents.

There's four or five, to great St. Jaques bound,

Alreadie at my house.

Hel. I humbly thank you:

Please it this Matron, and this gentle Maide

To eate with us to night, the charge and thanking

Shall be for me, and to requite you further,

I will bellowe some precepts of this Virgin,

Worthy the note.

But wh. We'ltake your offer kindly, Exeunt.

Enter Count Raffilion and the Frenchmen

at as oft.

Cap.E. Nay good my Lord put him not: let him have his way.

Cap.G. If your Lordshippe finde him not a Hilding, hold meno more in your respect.

Ber. Do you think I am so faire

Deceived in him.

Cap.E. Believe it my Lord, in mine owne direct knowledge, without any malice, but to speak of him as my kinman, hee's a most notable Coward, an infinite and endless Lyer, an hourly promisse-breake, the owner of no one good qualitie, worthy your Lordships entertainment.

Cap.G. I were not so know you him, least repeating too farre in his verite which he hath not, he might at some great and trulifie businesse, in a maine danguer, sayle you. Ber. I would I knew in what particular a how to try him.

Cap.G. Note better then to let him fetch off his drumme, which you heare him so confidentely undertake to do.

C.E. I with a troop of Florentines will sodainly sur prize

All's Well that ends Well.

prize him such I will hate whom I am sure he knowes not from the enemie: we will binde and hoodwinkle him so, that he shall supposse no other but that he is carriied into the Legers of the aduersaries, when we bring him to our owne tents; be but your Lordship presett as his examination, if he do not for the promise of his life, and in the highest compulsion of base feare, offer to betray you, and deliver all the intelligence in his power against you, and that with the diame forteste of his soule upon oath, never truft my judgemen't in anie thing.

Cap. G. O for the love of laughter, let him fetch his drunmes, he sayes he has a fragagenta for't: when your Lordship fees the bottome of this susceffe in't, and to what mettle this counterfeyt lamp of ours will be mettel'd if you give him not John drunmes entertainement, your inosluting cannot be removed. Here he comes.

Enter Parolles.

Cap. E. O for the love of laughter hinder not the hono'r of his defigne, let him fetch off his drunmes in any hand.

Ber. How now Monsieur? This drunmes ficks forely in your disposition.

Cap. G. A poxon's, let it go, 'tis but a drunme. Par. But a drunme! lift but a drunme! A drum fo loft. There was excellent command, to charge in with our harte upon our owne wings, and to rend our owne soulldiers.

Cap. G. That was not to be blam'd in the command of the seruice: it was a disaffar of warre that Cesar him selfe could not have prevented, if he had beene there to command.

Ber. Well, wee cannot greatly condemne our susceffe: some difhonour wee had in the loffe of that drum, but it is not to be recouered.

Par. It might have beene recouered.

Ber. It might, but it is not now.

Par. It is to be recouered, but that the merit of seruise is fildome attributted to the true and exact performer, I would have that drunme or another, or his saecet.

Ber. Why if you have a stomache, too to Monsieur: if you thinke your mylteryne in stratagem, can bring this infirmity of honoure againe into his native quarter, be magnanimous in the enterprise and go on, I will grace the attempts for a worthy exploit: if you speeke well in it, the Duke shall both speake of it, and extend to you what further becomes his greatnesse, even to the virtuous sillable of your worthinesse.

Par. By the hand of a soullder I will vndertake it.

Ber. But you must not now flumber in it.

Par. He about it this evening, and I will presently pen downe my dilemnes, encourage my selfe in my ceramite, put my selfe into my most regret preperation: and by midight looke to heare further from me.

Ter. May I bee bold to acquaint his grace you are gone about it.

Par. I know not what the susceffe will be my Lord, but the attempt I vow.

Ber. I know that you shall, And to the possibility of thy loyalls, it Will add the fire to thee: Farewell.

Par. I love not many words.

Exit

Cap. E. No more thena fifth lonnes water. Is not this a strange fellow my Lord, that so confidetely deemes to vndertake this businesse, which he knowes is not to be done, damnes him selfe to do, & dare better be damned then to do't.

Cap. G. You do not know him my Lord as we doe, certaine it is that he will steale him selfe into a mans fauour, and for a weake escape a great deal of difficulties, but when you finde him out, you have him ever after.

Ber. Why do you thinke he will make no deede at all of this thing so seriouse he doeth address him selfe vnoe?

Cap. E. None in the world, but returne with an inuention, and clap vpon ywo or three probable lies: but we have almoost imbof him, you shall fee his fall to night; for indeed he is not for your Lordships respect.

Cap. G. Weele make you some sport with the Foxe ere we care him. He was first smock'd by the old Lord Lafeur, when his difguife and he is parted, telle me, what a sprat you shall finde him, which you shall see this very night.

Cap. E. I must go looke my twiggges,

He shall be caught.

Ber. Your brother he shall go along with me.

Cap. G. As pleasse your Lordship, He leave you,

Ber. Now will I leade you to the house, and shew you The life I spoke of.

Cap. E. But you say she's honest.

Ber. That's all the fault: I spoke with him but once, And found her wondrous cold, but I bent to her By this same Coxcombe that we haue't winde Tokens and Letters, which did reftand, And this is all I have done: She's a faire creature, Will you go fetcher? I

Cap. E. With all my heart my Lord.
From some to some, some were the glee of this,
Since the first father he wrote it. This Ring he holds
In most rich choice: yet in his idle fire,
To buy his will, it would not seem too dear,
How ere repented after.

Now I see the bottom of your purpose.

Hel. You see in lawfull then, it is no more,
But that your daughter ere she seemes as woman,
Defies this Ring; appoints him an encounter;
In fine, delivers me to fill the time,
Her selfe most chalby absent: after
To marry her, she adds three thousand Crownes
To what is past already.

Thou yelded:
Instruct my daughter how the best perferrer,
That time and place with this deceite to lawfull
May prove coherent. Every night he comes
With Mischicks of all sorts, and songs compos'd
To her vnconcieffe: It nothing needes,
To child him from our eues, for he perferrs
As if his life lay on.

Hel. Why then to night,
Let us say our plot, which if it speed,
Is wicked meaning in a lawfull deed;
And lawfull meaning in a lawfull act,
Where both not finite, and yet a finnfull fact.
But let's about it.

Aetas Quintus.

Enter one of the Frenchmen, with five or sixe other Soldiers in arms.

1. Lord E. He can no other way but by this hedge corner: when you fallate upon him, speake whatterrible Language you will: though you understand it not your false, no matter; for we must not seeme to vnderstand him, vilifie some one among vs, whom wee must produce for an Interpreter.

2. Sal. Good Capitaine, let me be th' Interpreter.

3. Le. E. Are not acquainted with him? knowes he not thy voice?

4. Sal. No sir I warrant you.

5. Le. E. But what lineat wolff hath thou to speake to vs again.

6. Sal. En fath, as you speake to me.

7. Le. E. He must think, vs some band of strangers, 1th aduertraries entertainment. Now he hath a smake of all neighbouring languages; therefore we must every one be a man of his owne fanchie, not to know what we speake one to another: so we seem to know, is to know straight our purpose: thoughts language, gibber enough, and good enough. As for you interpreter, you must seeme very politike. But coach ho, here hee comes, to beguile two houre in a sleepe, and then to returne & swear
the lies he forges.

Enter Parolles.

Par. Ten clocke: Within these three houres I will be time enough to goe home. What shall I say I have done? It must bee a very plausable intention that caries
it. They begin to fomake me, and digraces like of late, knock'd too oft at my door: I finde my tongue is too foole-harde, but my heart hath the cause of Mars before it, and of his creatures, not daring the reports of my tongue.

Le. E. This is the first truth that ere thine own tongue was guiltie of.

Par. What the diuell should moue me to undertake the recovery of this drunke, being not ignorant of the impossibility, and knowing I had no such purpoe? I must give my selfe some hurts, and say I got them in exploit: yet flight ones will not carrie it. They will lay, come you off with so little? And great ones I dare not give, wherefore what the instance. Tongue, I must put you into a Butter-womans mouth, and buy my selfe another of Bancke's Mule, if you prattle mee into these perillles.

Le. E. Is it possible he should know what he is, and be that he is.

Par. I would the cutting of my garments wold serue the turne, or the breaking of my Spanish sword.

Le. E. We cannot afford you to.

Par. Or the baring of my beard, and to say it was in stratagem.

Le. E. 'Twould not do.

Par. Or to drowne my cloathes, and say I was a tript.

Le. E. Hardly serue.

Par. Though I swore I kept from the window of the Citadell.

Le. E. How deepe?

Par. Thirty fadome.

Le. E. Three great oakes would scarce make that be beleued.

Par. I would I had any drunke of the enemies, I would sweare I recovered it.

Le. E. You shall hear one anon.

Par. A drunke now of the enemies.

Alorum within.

Le. E. Thrice a comonfua, cargo, cargo, cargo.

All. Cargo, cargo, cargo, villandra per corbo, cargo.

Par. O ranfome, ranfome,

Do not hide mine eyes.

Inter. Baske the embo the baske.

Par. I know you are the Muske Regiment,
And I shall loose my life for want of language.
If there be one German or Dane, Low Dutch,
Italian, or French, let him speake to me,
I'll discover that, which shall endo the Florentine.

Int. Baske vanwade, I vnderstand thee, & can speake thy tongue: Kerelybuno frs, batake thee to thy faith, for fourteenne ponycardes are at thy bosome.

Par. Oh.

Inter. Oh pray, pray, pray,

Allan, resuma dutche.

Le. E. Offrebande oh, salutant.

Int. The General is content to spare thee yet,
And hooowinke as thou art, will leade thee on to gather from thee. Haply thou mayst informe
Something to saue thy life.

Par. O let me live,

And all the secrets of our camp Ie shew,
Their force, their purpuses: Nay, Ie speake that,
Which you will wonder at.

Inter. But wilt thou faithfully?

Par. If I do not, damme me.

Inter. Accordi lima,

Come on, thou are granted space.

Exit

A short Allorum within.

Bequeathed downe from many Ancestors,
Which were the greatest obloque 11th world,
In mee to loose. Thus your owne proper wifedome Brings in the Champion honor on my part,
Against your vaine selfe.

But, hear, take my Ring,
My house, mine honor, yea my life be thine,
And let be bid by thee.

Dia. When midnight comes, knock at my chamber window:
Ille order take, my mother shall not heare.
Now will I charge you in the band of truth,
When you have conquer'd my yer maide-bed,
Remaine there but an houre, nor speake to me:
My reasons are most strong, and you shall know them,
When backe against this Ring shall be deliver'd:
And on your finger in the night, Ile put Another Ring, that what in time proceed,
May taken to the future, our paist deeds.
Adieu then, then faile not: you have wonne
A wife of me, though there my hope be done:

Dia. A heaven on earth I have won by wooing thee.
Dia. For which, Iue long to thank both heaven & me,
You may fo in the end.
My mother told mee how hee would woo,
As if the fate in his heart. She says, all men
Have the like oaths: he had sworn to receive
When his wife's dead: therefore Ile lye with him
When I am buried. Since Frenchmen are to braise, Marry that will, I lye and die a Maid:
Onely in this difguise, I think not it fine,
To colne him that would vnfaithfully want.

Enter two French Capitaine, and some two or three Soldiours.

Cap.G. You have not given him his mothers letter.
Cap.E. I have deuoutly as an houre since, there is som thing in't that stings his nature: for on the reading it, he chang'd almost into another man.

Cap.G. He has much worthy blame laid upon him,
For breaking off to a good wife, and so sweet a Lady.

Cap.E. Especially, hee hath incurred the exceeding displeasure of the King, who had expected his bounty to ring happiness to him. I will tell you a thing, but you shall let it dwell darkly with you.

Cap.G. When you have spoken tis dead, and I am the grater of it.

Cap.E. Hee hath persecuted a younge Gentlewoman here in Florence, of a most chaste renown, & this night he fetches his will in the spoyle of her honours hee hath given her his monumentall Ring, and thinkes himselfe made in the vnchaste composition.

Cap.G. Now God delay our rebellion as we are in our selves, what things are we.

Cap.E. Mereely our owne traitours. And as in the common course of all treasons, we shall see them redeem themselves, till they attaine to their abhorred ends: to be that in this action contrives against his owne Nobility in his proper fireame, once flows himselfe.

Cap.G. Is it not meant damnable in vs, to be Trumpeters of our vnlawfull intents? We shall not then have his company to night.

Cap.E. Not till after midnight: for hee is diered to his house.

Cap.G. That approaches space: I would gladly have him fee his company anathemaz'd, that hee might take.

IV. i. 94—IV. iii. 38
a measure of his own judgments, wherein so curiously
he had set this counterfeit.

Cap. E. We will not meddle with him till he come;
for his presence must be the whisper of the other.

Cap. G. In the mean time, what hast thou of these Warrors?

Cap. E. I heare there is an outure of peace.

Cap. G. Nay, I assume you a peace concluded.

Cap. E. What will Count Raffilion do then? Will he traverse higher, or returne againe into France?

Cap. G. I perceive by this demand, you are not altogether of his council.

Cap. A. Let it be forbid him, soould I be a great deale of his a2.

Cap. G. Sir, his wife some two months since fledde from his house, her presence is a pilgrimage to Saint Jacques le Grand; which holy undertakings, with most suliere landcharmes, nor complaint: and there refiding, the tenderness of her Nature, became as a prey to her griefe; in fine, made a groane of her last breath, & now the fings in heaven.

Cap. E. How is this justified?

Cap. G. The stronger part of it by her owne I letters, which makes her fiorie true, even to the point of her death; her death is false, which could not be her office to say, is done: I was faithfully confirmed by the Rechtor of the place.

Cap. E. Hath the Count all this intelligence?

Cap. G. I, and the particular confirmations, point from point, to the full arming of the veriste.

Cap. E. I am heartily forris that he'll be gladde of this.

Cap. G. How mightily sometime, we make vs comforts of our loffers.

Cap. E. And how mightily some other times, wee drawne our gaine in teares, the great dignitie that his valour hath here acquired for him, shall at home be encountred with a fame as ample.

Cap. G. The webbe of our life, is of a mingled yarn, good and ill together: our vertues would bee proud, if our faults whip them not, and our crimes would dis-pair if they were not cherished by our vertues.

Enter a Messenger.

How now? Where's your master?

Sir. He met the Duke in the street, fir, of whom hee hath taken a solemn lease: his Lordhippe will next morning for France. The Duke hath offered him Letters of commendations to the King.

Cap. E. They shall be no more then needfull there;
if they were more then they can commend.

Enter Count Raffilion.

Ber. They cannot be too severe for the Kings tart-nesse, here's his Lordship now. How now my Lord,
I ffl think noon wars?

Ber. I have to night dispach'd sixseene busineses, a moneths length a piece, by an abstract of sixe cafe: I have congied with the Duke, done my advice with his necessitie: buried a wife, mourn'd for her, writ to my Ladie mother, I am returneing, enter'd my Connoy, & beuene these maine parcels of dispach, affected manier needs: the last was the greatnest, but that I have not ended yet.

Cap. E. If the businesse bee of any difficulty, and this morning your departure hence, it requires halft of your Lordship.

Ber. I mean the businesse is not ended, as fearing to heare of it hereafter: but shall we have this dialogue betweene the Poole and the Soldiour. Come, bring forth this counterfeet module, he's decree'd mee, like a double meaning Propherser.

Cap. E. Bring him forth, he's face I the flockes all night poore gaultian knau.

Ber. No matter, his hecles haue deperado it, in vir-ping his figures so long. How does he carry himselfe?

Cap. E. I have told your Lordship alreadie: The flockes carrie him. Butto answer you as you would be vnderstood, bee weepes like a vrench that had fled her mile, he hath conffent himselfe to Muson, whom bee fupposeth to be a Friar, fro the time of his remembrance to this very infant infatater of his fetting forth flockes:
and what thinkes you he hath conffent?

Ber. Nothing of me, he's a?

Cap. E. His conffention is taken, and it shall bee read to his face, if your Lordshippe be in't, as I beleue you are, you must have the patience to heare it.

Enter Parlells by his Interpreter.

Ber. A plague upon him, muflell he can say nothing of me: hum, hum.

Inter. He calleth for the tortures: what will you say without em.

Par. I will conffess what I know without conftraint,
I ye pinch me like a Pauly, I can say no more.

Int. Bale Charnsche.

Cap. G. Faiths churche.

Int. You are a mercifull General: Our General bids you answer to what I shall ask you out of a Note.

Par. And truly, as I hope to live.

Int. First demand of him, how many hosfe the Duke is strong. What say you to that?

Par. Five or fixe thousand, but very weake and unferuicible: the troopers are all scattered, and the Commanders were poore rogues, upon my reputation and credit, and as I hope to live.

Int. Shall I set downe your answer for t?

Par. Do, be take the Sacrament on't, how & which way will you: all's one to him.

Ber. What a paff-faving face is this?

Cap. G. Y'are decid'd my Lord, this is Mounsieur Parrelles the gallant militairift, that was his owne phare that had the whole theorike of warre in the knot of his fcarfe, and the prafide in the chape of his dagger.

Cap. E. I will never trust a man againe, for keeping his sword cleane, nor beleue he can have euerie thing in him, by wearing his apparrel nearly.

Int. Well, that's set downe.

Par. Five or fixe thousand here I fed, I will fry true, or thereabouts set downe, for lie feakes truth.

Cap. G. He's very necer the truth in this.

Ber. But I con him no thanks for t in the nature he delivers it.

Par. Poore rogues, I pray you say.

Int. Well, that's set downe.

Par. I humbly thank you fir, a truth's a truth, the Rogues are maruilsous poore.

Interp. Demaund of him of what strength they are a foot. What say you to that?

Par. By my troth fir, if we were to live this present houre, I will tell true. Let me fee, Spars a hundred & fifte, Sebaftian so many, Carembus so many, Agues so many: Gulliams, Cymo, Lodwicks, and Gratty, two hundred fifte each: Mine owne Company, Cisphor, Daumond, Denny, two hundred fifte each: so that the mutter file, rotten and found, vnpon my life amounts not to fifteene thousand pole, halfe of which, dare not flake thev none from oft their Callcockes, leis they flake themselues to pecces.

Ber. What shall be done to him?
Cap. G. Nothing, but let him have thankes, Demand of him my condition: and what credite I have with the Duke.

Int. Well that's set downe: you shall demand of him, whether one Captaine Damauan bee it Campe, a Frenchman: what his reputation is with the Duke, what his valour, benefite, and expertness in waues: or whether he thinks it were not possible with well-waighting stannes of gold to corrupt him to a revolt, What say you to this? What do you know of it?

Par. I beleef you let me answer to the particular of the interrogatories. Demand them singly.

Int. Do you know this Captaine Damauan?
Par. I know him, was a Butchers Demitez in Paris, from whence he was whipt for getting the Shriennes fool with childe, a dume innocent that could not say him nay.

Ber. Nay, by your lease hold your hands, though I know his brannes are forfite to the next tile that falls.

Int. Well, is this Captaine in the Duke of Florence's campe?
Par. Vpon my knowledge he is, and lowlie.

Cap. G. Nay looke not so vpon me: we shall hear of your Lord anon.

Int. What is his reputation with the Duke?
Par. The Duke knowes him for no other, but a poore Officer of mine, and vnto vnto this other day, to turne him out a tabb band. I thank him to have his Letter in my pocke.

Int. Marry well we search.
Par. In good fashione I do not know, either it is there, or it is vpone a file with the Duke's other Letters, in my Tent.

Int. Herec'tis, here's a paper, will I reade it to you? Par. I do not know it be or no.

Ber. Our Interpreter doth it well.

Cap. G. Excellently.

Int. Dian, the Count's a fool, and full of gold.
Par. That is not the Duke's letter let: that is an advertisement to a proper man in Florence, one Diawo, to take heed of the alienement of one Count Coffillius, a foolish idle boy: but for all that very vuttifh. I pray you for pur it vp again.

Int. Nay, he read it first by your favour.
Par. My meaning in't I protest was very honest in the behalfe of the mind: for I knew the young Count to be a dangerous and licentious boy, who is a whale to Virginia, and deuours vp all the try it finds.

Ber. Damnable both sides to goe.

Int. L. When he suerves other, kill him drop gold, and taketh:

After hee seere, he never payes the sore:

Him weep to match well made: match and well make it,
He rare payes after debts, take it before,
And by a farther (Dian) told thee this:
Men are to well with, losses are not to his.

For count of this, the Count a fool I know it,
Whose heart before, but not when he does one it.
'Thine as he vow'd to thee in thine eare, Parlour.

Ber. He shall be whipt through the Armye with this rim. Cap. E. This is your devoted friend sir, the manifold Lingwiff, and the army potent foullier.

Ber. I could endure any thing before but a Cat, and now he's a Cat to me.
Int. I perceiue sir by your Generals lookes, you shall be faise to hang you.

Par. My life sir in any case? Not that I am afraid to dye, but that my offences being many, I would repent out the remainder of Nature. Let me lie fir in a dungeon, as a flecker, or any where, so I may live.

Int. We'll see what may be done: so you confesse freely: therefore once more to this Captaine Damauan: you have answr'd to his reputation with the Duke, and to his valour. What is his honifie?

Par. He will faile in an Egge out of a Cloister: for rapes and raufflinges he paralles Neufius. He professes not keeping of oaths, in breaking em he is stronger then Hercules. He will lyfe fit, with such volubility, that you would think truth were a foule drunkennefis his best vertue, for he will be swme-drinke, and in his sleepe he does little harme, save to his bed clothes about him: but they know his conditions, and lay him in strawe. I have but little more to say for his honestly, he's a curie thing: that an honest man shold not have; what an honest man should have, he has nothing.

Cap. G. I begin to loue him for this.

Ber. For this description of shine honifie? A pox upon him for me, he's more and more a Cat.

Int. What say you to his experton in warre?

Par. Faith sir, he's led the drumme before the English Tragedians: to belye him I will not, and more of his foullie: I know not, except in that Country, he had the honour to be the Officer at a place there called Mistelend, to inuinct for the doublet offifles, I would doe the man what honour I can, but of this I am not certaine.

Cap. G. He hath ou't villain'd my selfe so farre, that the rantie redeemes him.

Ber. A pox on him, he's a Cat still.

Int. His qualities being at this poore price, I neede not to aske you, if Gold will corrupt him to revolt.

Par. Sir, for a Cardcuse he will fell the fee-fimpole of his salvation, the inheritance of it, and cut th'inteitale from all remainderes, and a perpetuall successe for it perpetually.

Int. What's his Brother, the other Captaine Damauan?

Cap. E. Why doe's he ask him of me?

Int. What's he?

Par. Een a Crow sh'fame neft: not altogether so great as the first in goodhife, but greater a great deal in euill. He exelst his Broder for a coward, yet his Brother is reputed one of the beas that is. In a recreate he out runs any Lackey; marry in comming on, hee ha's the Crampa.

Int. If your life be safed, will you vnderake to betray the Florentine,

Par. I, and the Captaine of his horse, Count Roffillon.

Int. He whisper with the Generall, and knowes his pleasure.

Par. He no more drumming, a plague of all drummers, onely to ferme to defend well, and to begufe the suspifion.
fition of that illustrious yong boy the Count, haue I run into this danger: yet who would have suspected an ambassad where I was taken.

Int. There is here a remedy, but you must dye: the General says, you that have fortrausorly discovered the secrets of your army, and made such perfidious reports of men very nobly held, can suffer the world for no honore life: therefore you must dye. Come headman, off with his head.

Par. O Lord I fir le meme, or let me see my death.

Int. That shall you, and take your leave of all your friends:
So, looke about you, know you any here?
Capt. Good morrow noble Captaine.
Laf. God bless you Captaine Paralle.
Cap. G. God true you noble Captaine.
Le. F. Captaine, what greetings will you to my Lord
Lafen? I am for France.
Cap. G. Good Captaine will you give me a copy of the former wrote to Diana in behalfe of the Count.
Koffhce, and I weare not a verry Coward, I doe compel it of you, but for you well.

Exeunt,
for You are undone Captaine all but your feafe,
that has a knot on tyt.

Par. Who cannot be truff'd with a plot?

Int. If you could finde out a Countrie where but women were that had received so much flame, you might begin an impudent Nation. Fare ye well sir, I am for France too, we shall speake of you there. Exeunt.

Par. Yet am I thankfull if my heart were great.

Int. Would buft at this, Captaine Ile be no more,
But I will ear, and demeke, and sleep as soft
As Captaine shall. Simply the thing I am
Shall make me liue; who knowes himselfe a bragget
Let him feare this; for it will come to paff,e,
That every bragget shall be found an Affe.
Ruff fword, coole blushes, and Parreller lieue
Safest in thame: being foule by footie trieue;
There's place and measures for every man alio.
Ile after them.

Ent. Enter Helen, widow, and Diana.

Hel. That you may well perceive I have not wrong'd you,
One of the greatest in the Christian world
Shall be my juretie: for whole throne tis needfull
Ere I can perfect mine intents, to kneele.
Time was, I did him a defired office
Dure almost as his life, which gratitude
Through blithe Tardis bosome would pese forth,
And wither thankes, I duly ant inform'd,
His grace is at Marselle, to which place
We haue convenient courty; you must know
I am suppos'd dead, the Army breaking,
My husband lies him home, where heaven aying,
And by the leave of my good Lord the King,
We hope to returne with ease.
Wed. Gentle Madam,
You never had a seruante to whose trust
Your bufines was more welcome?

Hel. Nor you Misfirs
Euer a friend, whose thoughts more truly labours
To recompence your love: Doubt not but heaven
Hath brought me vp to be your daughters doyver,
At it hath freed her to be my moissige,

And helper to a husband, But O strange men,
That such sweete vice make of what they hate,
When faire trufing of the most constant thoughts
Defiles the piteous night, to foul death play
With what it leaseth, for that which is away,
But more of this heresafter: you Diana,
Vnder my poore instruccion yet must suffer
Something in my behalfe.

Dian. Let death and honestie
Go with your impositions, I am yours
Upon your will to suffer.

Hel. Yet I pray you:

But with the word the time will bring on summer,
When Briars shall have leaves as well as thornes,
And be as sweet as sharpe: we must away,
Our Wagon is prepar'd, and time requires us,
All's well that ends well, still the fones the Crowne;
What ere the course, the end is the renome. Exeunt.

Enter Clowne, old Lady, and Latier.

Laf. Na, na, no, your sonne was misled with a Swift tallia fellow there, whose villanous sisson would have made all the vnbak'd and dowd youth of a nation in his colour: your daughter-in-law had bene alive at this hour, and your fonne here at home, more aduaned by the King, then by that red-tail'd humble Bee I speak
of.

Laf. I would I had not knowne him, it was the death of the most veruous gentlewoman, thtat ever nature had prais for creating. If she had persent of my flethes and cloth mee the decrepit groans of a mother, I could not haue owed her a more rooted love.

Laf. Twas a good Lady, twas a good Lady. Wee may picka thousand falles are wee light on such another beare.

Clou. Indeed sir she was the sweete Margerome of the faller, or rather the beare of grace,

Laf. They are not beares you knowe,they are noble beares.

Clowne. I am no great Notchades nor sir, I have not much skill in grace.

Laf. Whether deoth thou profess thy selfe, a kneas or a fool?

Clo. A foolo sir at a womans servise, and a knave at a man.

Laf. Your definition.

Clo. I would confen the man of his wife, and de his servise.

Laf. So you were a knave at his servise indeed.

Clo. And I would give his wife my bauble sir to doe her servise.

Laf. I will subscribe for thee, thou art both knave and foule.

Clo. At your servise.

Laf. No, no, no.

Clo. Why sir, if I cannot serve you, I can serve as great a prince as you are.

Laf. Whole that, a Frenchman.

Clo. Fitath sir has an English mane, but his fino mice is more hotter in France then there.

Laf. What prince is that?

Clo. The blacke prince sir, alias the prince of darkne.

Laf. Hold thee there's many purses, I give thee not this to suggest thee from thy matter thou talk't off, serve him still.

Clow.

IV. iii. 337—IV. v. 49

267
Cl. I am a woodland fellow, sir, that always loved a great fire, and the master I speak of ever keeps a good fire, but sure he is the Prince of the world, let his Nobility remain in his Court. I am for the house with the narrow gate, which I take to be too little for pompe to enter: some that humble themselfes may, but the main will be too chill and tender, and they like the forrowe way that leads to the broad gate, and the great fire.

La. Go thy ways, I begin to be a wearie of thee, and I tell thee so before, because I would not fall out with thee. Go thy ways, let my horses be wel look'd too, without any tricks.

Cl. If I put my tricks upon em, sir, they shall bee Jades tricks, which are their owne right by the law of Nature.

La. A fiend's knave and an unhappie.

Lady. Soazis. My Lord that's gone made himselfe much sport of him, by his authoritie he remains here, which he thinks is a patent for his favonine, and indeed he has no pace, but runnes where he will.

La. I like him well, 'tis not amiss, and I was about to tell you, since I heard of the good Ladies death, and that my Lord your fonne was upon his returne home, I mov'd the King my master to speake in the behalfe of my daughter, which in the minority of thet both, his Maiestie out of a selle gracious remembrance did first propole, his Highnesse hath promis'd me to doe it, and to stoppe vp the diplasfure he hath conceived against your fonne, there is no fitter matter. How do's your Ladyship like it?

La. With very much content my Lord, and I wish it happily effect'd.

La. His Highnesse comes post from Marcellus, of so able bodie as when he number'd thirty, a will be heree to morrow, or I am deceiv'd, by him that in such intellegence hath feldome faile'd.

La. It rejoices me, that I hope I shall see him ere I die. I have letters that my fonne will be heree to night: I shall before your Lordship to remayne with mee, till they doe meete together.

La. Madam, I was thinking with what manners I might safely be admitted.

La. You neede but pleade your honourable privilege.

La. Ladies, of that I have made a bold charater, but I thank my God, it holds yet.

Enter Clowne.

Cl. O Madam, yonders my Lord your fonne with a patch of velvet on his face, whether there bee a feare vader or no, the Velvet knowes, but it is a goodly patch of Velvet, his left cheeke is a cheeke of two pile and a half, but his right cheeke is wore bare.

La. A facee nobly got, or a noble facee, is a good little of honor, so belike is that.

Cl. My Lord is your carbinado face.

La. Let vs goe to your fonne I pray you, I long to talke

With the yong noble ladde.

Clowne. Faith there's a dozen of em, with delicate finne faces, and most convenient cheeks, which bow the head, and nod at euery man.

IV. v. 50—V. ii. 15

Aulus Quintus.

Enter Helen, Wildam, and Diana, with two Attendants.

Hel. But this exceeding putting day and night, Must wear your spirits low, we cannot help it: But since you have made the daies and nights as one, To weare your gentle limbs in my affaires, Be bold you do so grow in my requisiuall, As nothing can wrouse you. In happy time,

Enter a gentle Attornge.

This man may helpes me to his Maudities ear, If he would spend his power. God faue you sir.

 Gent. And you.

Hel. Sir, I have scene you in the Court of France.

 Gent. I have beene sometymes there.

 Hel. I do prelume sir, that you are not faine
 From the report that goes vp your goodnesse, And therefore goaded with most sharpe occasions, Which laynice manners by, I put you to
 The ve of your owne vertues, for the which I shall continue thankfull.

 Gent. What's your will?

Hel. That it will please you
 To give this poor petition to the King,
 And sayde me with that store of power you have
 To come into his presence,

 Gen. The Kings not heere.

 Hel. Not heere sir?

 Gen. Not indeed,

 Hel. He hence remou'd last night, and with more haift
 Then is his ve.

 Wid. Lord how we looie our paines.

 Hel. Allis well that end's well yet,
 Though time seeme to aduerse, and means vatisf.
 I do beseech you, whither he is gone?

 Gen. Marris saithke to Ruffion,
 Whether he is going.

 Hel. I do beseech you sir,
 Since you are like to see the King before me,
 Command the paper to his gracious hand,
 Which I presume shall reader you no blame,
 But rather make you thanke your paines for it,
 I will come after you with what good speede
 Our meanes will make vs meanes,

 Gent. This Ile do for you.

Hel. And you shall finde your selle to be well thanke
 What e'er fallers more. We must to horte againe, Go, go, prepare.

Enter Clowne and Parrottes.

Par. Good Mr' s Lauatsh give my Lord Lauatsh this letter, I have ere now for bene better knowne to you, when I have held familiaritie with frether clothing: but I am now sir muddied in fortunes mood, and smell somewhat strong of her strong displeasure.

Cl. Truly, Fortunes displeasure is but fluttish ifr sniff mould so strongly as this speak't of, I will henceforth ease no Fifth of Fortunes ifr but ring, Pre thee allow the winde.

Par. Nay you neede not to stop your note for I take it but by a Metaphor.

Cl. Indeed sir, if your Metaphor finke, I will stop my note, or against any mans Metaphor. Preste get thee further.

Humbly call'd Mist'res.

Kin. Praising what is lost,
Makes the remembrance dear. Well, call him thither,
We are reconcil'd, and the first view shall kill
All repetition: Let him not ask our pardon,
The nature of his great offence is dead,
And deeper than oblivion, we do burie
The incendiary reliques of it. Let him approach
A stranger, no offender; and informe him
So 'tis our will he should.

Gen. I shall my Liege.

Kin. What sayes he to your daughter,
Have you spoke ?

Laf. All that he is, hath reference to your Highness.

Kin. Then shall we have a match. I have letters sent me, that sets him high in fame.

Enter Jaime Bermam.

Laf. He looks well on't.

Kin. I am not a day of season,
For thou must see a sun-shine, and a bale
In me at once! But to the brightest beams
Distracted clouds give way, fo fland thou forth,
The time is faire again.

Ber. My high repented blame
Dece Souraigne pardon to me.

Kin. All is whole,
Not one word more of the confermed time,
Let's take the infant by the forward top:
For we are old, and on our quick it decrees
This inaudible, and noiseless foot of time
Steales, ere we can effect them. You remember
The daughter of this Lord?

Ber. Admiringly my Liege, as first
I bucke my choice upon her, ere my heart
Durst make too bold a herald of my tongue:
Where the imprudense of mine eye enflaing,
Contemps his scornfull Perseverence did lead me,
Which warped the line, of euerie other favour,
Scorn'd a faire colour, or expresst it (thome,
Extended or contrasted all proportions
To soe hideous oblest. Thence it came,
That fire which all men prais'd, and whom my selfe,
Since I have lost, have lou'd; was in mine eye
The dut that did offend it.

Kin. Well excused:
That thou didst lose her, strik'st some scores away
From the great compt: but loue that comes too late,
Like a remortfull pardon slowly carried
To the great fender, turns a false offence,
Crying, that's good that's gone: Our rath faults,
Make trouishall price of serious things we have,
Not knowing them, until we know their graue.

Off our displeasures to our selves vniust,
Destroy our friends, and after werepe their dut:
Our owne loue waking, cries to see what's done,
While shamefull hate sleepe out the aftercume,
Beth this sweet Helen's knell, and now forget her.
Send forth your amorous token for faire Maudlin,
The maine contents are had, and here we'll lay
To see our widowers second marriage day:
Which better then the first, O deere heaven bleffe,
Or, ere they meete in me, O Nature effe.

Laf. Come on my fonne, in whom my houses name
Must be digellet: give a favour from you
To sparkel in the spirt's of my daughter,

That
All's Well that ends Well.

That she may quickly come. By my old beard, And cutie hirse that's so run, Helen that's dead. Was a sweet creature, such a ring as this, The last that ere I took her leave at Court, I saw upon her finger.

Bor. Hers it was not.

King. Now pray you let me see it. For mine eye, While I was speaking, oft was fallen'st one; This Ring was mine, and when I gave it Helen, I had her; if her fortune ever rose Necesitated to help, that by this token I would relieve her. Had you any craft to rescue her Of what should dead her muff?

Bor. My gracious Bourage, How ere it pleased you to vouch it for, The ring was never hers.

Old Lu. Some, on my life I have seen her wear it, and she reckond it At her last rate.

Laf. I am sure I saw her wear it.

Bor. You are deceiv'd in my Lord, she never saw it: In Florence was it from a casement throwne one, Wrap'd in a paper, which contain'd the name Of her that threw it: Noble she was and thought I loved ungag'd, but when I had subscrib'd To mine own fortune, and unform'd her fully, I could not answer in that course of Honour As she had made the outward, she cast In beauty satisfaction, and would never Receive the Ring again.

Kim. Plaw his ownself, That knowes the tinct and multiplying med'cine, Hath not in nature mysteries more science, Then I have in this Ring. Twas mine, twas Helen's, Who ever gave it you: then if you know That you are well acquainted with your life, Confesse twas hers, and by what rough enforcement You got it from her. She said to the saints to fireste, That she would not put it from her finger, Vnlesse she gave it to your selfe in bed, Where you have never came: or intende vs.

Upon her great disfaire.

Bor. She never saw it.

Kim. Thou speakest it falsely: as I have mine Honor, And make it common to scarce to come into me, Which I would have shut out: if it should prove That thou art to shunne, 'twill not prove so: And yet I know not, thou shalt hate her deadly, And the is dead, which nothing but to close Her eyes my selfe, could wilt me to beleue, More then to see this king. Take him away, My forepath proofes, how e're the matter fall Shall daze my leaves of little vantage, Having vainly feared too little. Away with him, We'll fit this matter further.

Bor. If you shall prove This Ring was ever hers, you shall as easie Peace that I husbanded her bed in Florence, Where yet the never was.

Enter a Gentleman.

King. I am wrapt in diffaines thinkings.

Gen. Gracious Soveraigne: Whether I have bene too blame or no, I know not, Here's a petition fro a Florentine, Who hath for fourre or five moneths com short, To tender it her selfe: I vnderrook it, Varouf'sh'd thereto be the faire grace and speech Of the poor foppish man, who by this I know Is hieere attending: her businesse lookes in her With an importing visage, and I told her In a sweet verball breefe, it did concerne Your highnesse with her felic.

A Letter.

Upon his many protestations to marry me when his wife was dead, I kindly say to him, he wroune me. Now in the Count Ruff, follow a Widdower, his owne are forfet to mee, and my honors payed to him. Her Floe from Florence, taking to leave, and I follow him to his Country for justice: Great is it, O King, in you it best lieth, otherwise a slender flourished, and a poor Maid in wade.

Diana Capilet.

Laf. I will buy me a sonne in law in a faire, and coule for this. Then none of him.

Kim. The heuens have thought well on thee Lafort, To bring forth this difficure, seeke theire fathers: Go speightly, and bring againe the Count.

Enter Bertram.

I am a feare the life of Helen (Lady) Was fowly inacht.

Old Lu. Now justice on the doers.

King. I wonder fir, fir, whies are moneths to you, And that you lyfe them as you are waue them Lordship, Yet you desire to marry. What woman's that?

Enter Widow Francis, and Parolles.

Dis. I am my Lord a wretched Florentine, Deem'd from the ancient Capilet, My suche as I do understand you know, And therefore know how faire I may be pitied.

Iud. I am her Mother fir, whole age and honour Breake bofer under this complaint we bring, And both fhall crease, without your remedie.

Kim. Come hither Count, do you know these Women?

Bor. My Lord, I neither can nor will deeme, But that I know them, do they charge me further?

Dis. Why do you looke so strange upon your wife?

Bor. She's none of mine my Lord.

Dis. If you shall marrie

You give away this hand, and that is mine, You give away heuens vowses, and those are mine: You give away my selfe, which is knowne mine: For I by vow am so embolden'd yours, That the which marries you, must marrie me; Either both or none.

Laf. Your reputation comes too short for my daughter, you are no husband for her.

Bor. My Lord, this is a fond and delp rate creature, Whom sometime I have laught with: Let your highnes Lay a more noble thought upon mine honour, Then for to thinke that I would flinke it heere.

Kim. Sir for my thoughts, you have thee it to friend, Till your deeds gaine them faire sproue your honor, Then in my thought it lies.

Dis. Good my Lord,

Ask him upon his oath, if hee do's thinke He had not my virginity.

Kim. What failest thou to her?

Bor. She's impudent my Lord,

And was a common gamelle to the Camps.

Dis. He do's not know my Lord: If I were so, He might have bought me at a common price.
Is he a good drummer? A poor man, and at your Majesty's command?

Par. Do you know he promises me marriage?

Par. Faith! I know more than I speak.

Kim. But will you not speak all you know?

Par. Yes to please your Majesty; I did go between them as I said, but more than he knew her, for indeed he was made for her, and took of such, and of Limbo, and of Furies, and I know not what; yet I was in that credit with them at that time, that I knew of their going to bed, and all motions, as promising her marriage, and things which would deserve a wish to speak of; therefore I will not speak what I know.

Kim. Thou hast spoken all already, vouch safe you can't by they are married, but they are too fine in thy answer, therefore I find wise. This Ring you say was yours.

Dis. I am a poor man,

Kim. Where did you buy it? Or who gave it you?

Dis. It was not given me, nor I did buy it.

Kim. Who lent it you?

Dis. It was not lent me neither.

Kim. Where did you finde it then?

Dis. I found it not.

Kim. If were yours by none of all these ways, How could you give it him?

Dis. I never gave it him.

Kim. This woman's an else gone my Lord, she goes off and on at pleasure.

Kim. This Ring was mine, I gave it his first wife.

Dis. It might be yours or he's for ought I know.

Kim. Take her away, do not like her now,

To prison with her: and away with him,

Vouchsafe thou tell me where thou hast this Ring,

Then die within this hour

Dis. He never tell you.

Kim. Take her away.

Dis. He put in baile my lady.

Kim. I think she now some common Curtamer.

Kim. By love of her I knew man was you.

Kim. Wherefore hal she accuse him at this while.

Dis. Because he's guite, and he is not guilty.

He knows I am no Maid, and he I ware so too:

He swears I am a Maid, and he knows not.

Great King I am no trumpet, by my life,

I am either Maid, or else this old man's wife.

Kim. She does abuse our ears, to prison with her.

Dis. Good mother fetch my bayle. Stay Royalty,

The waster that owes the Ring is few for,

And he shall sure me. But for this Lord,

Who hath abusive me as he knows himselfe,

Though yet he never harm'd me, hence I quit him.

He knows himselfe my bed he hath defil'd,

And at that time he got his wife with child:

Though dead the he, she fees her young one kick:

So there's my riddle, one that's dead is quicker,

And now behold the meaning.

Enter Hellen and Widow.

Kim. Is there no exorcist

Beguiles the true Office of mine eyes?

It's rascal that I see?

Hel. No my good Lord,
Tis but the shadow of a wife you see,
The name, and not the thing.
Rej. Bath, both, O pardon.
Hel. O my good Lord, when I was like this Maid,
I found you wondrous kinde, there is your Ring,
I found you wondrous kinde, there is your Ring,
And looke you, hearres your letter: this it syes,
When from my finger you can get this Ring,
And is by me with childe. &c. This is done,
Will you be mine now you are doubly wonne?
Rej. If the my Liege can make me know this clearly,
He love her dearly, eier, euer dearly.
Hel. If it appeares not plaine, and proue vntrue,
Deadly divorce step betwenee me and you.
O my deere mother do I see you living?
Laf. Mine eyes small Onions, I shall weepe anon:
Good Tom Drumme lend me a handkercher.
So I thanke thee, waite on me home, Ile make sport with thee: Let thy curties alone, they are fcury ones.

King. Let vs from point to point this storie know,
To make the euen truth in pleasure flow:
If thou best yet a fresh vncrepted flower,
Choose thou thy husband, and Ile pay thy dower.
For I can guesse, that by thy honest syde,
Thou keipt a wife her selfe, thy selfe a Maide.
Of that and all the progresse more and leffe,
Refoldedly more leasure shal expresse:
All yet formes well, and if it end so meete,
The bitter past, more welcome is the sweet.
Flourish.

The Kings Begger, now the Play is done,
All is well ended, if this swete be wonne.
That you expresse Content: which we will pay,
With strefs to please you, day exceding day:
Ours be your patience then, and yours our parts,
Your gentle bands lend vs, and take our hearts. Exeunt omu.

FINIS.
Twelve Night, Or what you will.

Aequus Primus, Scena Prima.

Enter Othello Duke of Venice, Cassio, and other Lords.

Duke. If Musick be the food of Love, play on: Give me excess of it that surfeits. The appetite may sicken, and so die. That then again, it had a dying fall; O, it came ere my care, like the sweet sound That breathes upon a bank of Violets; Stealing, and giving Oubour. Enough, no more, Thus not to feed too much, as it was before. O Spring of Love, how quaketh and frets at thou, That now withstanding thy capacity, Receiveth as the Sea. Nought enters there, Of what validity, and pitch too ere, But filleth into abatement, and low price Even in a name; to full of shades is fancy, There alone, is high fantastical.

Duke. Why so I do, the Noblest that I have: O when mine eyes did see Olina first, Methought the spurg'd the very speare of pettishness; That infant was I turn'd into a Hart, And my desires like fell and cruel hounds, Feverish and hasty. How now what news from her?

Enter Valentine.

Val. So please my Lord, I might not be admitted, But from her handmaid do return this answer: The Element it fellte, till seven yeares hence, Shall not behold her face at amiable view: But like a Clayfigure she will vailed walk, And water once a day her Chamber round With eye-offending brine: all this to leason A brothers dead love, which the she would keepen fresh And lafting, in her mind remembrance. Do. O thee that hast a heart of that fine frame To pay this debt of love but to a brother, How will the mens, when the rich golden flowes Hath kill'd the flocke of all affections fife That lies in her. When Limer, Braine, and Heart, Those foungarne Etheres, are all supply'd and fill'd Their sweete perfection with one felle king: A way before me, to sweetes beds of flowres, Love-thoughts I ye rich, when canope it with bowres.

Exeunt

Scena Secunda.

Enter Viola, a Captaine, and Sylvers.

Vio. What Country (Friends) is this? Cap. This is Illlyria, Lady. Vio. And what should I do in Illlyria? My brother he is in Edium. Perchance he is not drown'd: What thinke you Sylvers? Cap. It is perchance that your selfe were faine. Vio. O, my poor brother, and no perchance may he be. Cap. True Madam, and so comfort you with chance, Affaire your selfe, after our ship did fliue, When you, and those poore numbers faine with you, Hung on our driving boates: I saw your brother Most prouident in peril, binde hymselfe. (Courage and hope both teaching him the pradice) To a strong Mifte, that thid upon the sea; Where like Orphee on the Dolineous backe, I saw him hold an acquittance with the waues, So long as I could fee.

Cap. And to is now, or was so very late: For but a month ago I went from hence, And then I was feath in murmur (as you know What great ones do, the leffe will prattyle of,) That he did feake the loane of faire Olina. Vio. What's faire? Cap. A vertuously maid, the daughter of a Count. That dide some trelaemoonth since, then leaving her In the protection of his soune, her brother, Who shortly also dide: for whose dear soune (They say) the hath abur'd the fight And company of men.

Vio. O that I knew'd that Lade, And might not be deliuere to the would Till I had made nine owne occasion mellow
What my effaire is.
  Cap. That were hard to compass. Because she will admit no kind of suite, No not the Duke.
  Van. There is a faire behaviour in thee Captaine, And though that nature, with a beauseous wall, Duthe not close in pollution yet she will beleeue thou hast a minde that suits With this shye faire and outward character, I prethee (and I say thee countenantly) Conceale me what I am, and be my syde, For such disguise as haply shall become The forme of my intent. I feare this Duke, Thou shalt present me as an Eunuch to him, It may be worth thy paines; for I can sing, And speake to him in many sorts of Mufick, That shall give every worth his service. What elfe may hap, to time I will commit, Onely shape thou the silence to my wit. Cap. Be ye his Eunuch, and your Merc I belee, When your tongue blubs, then let mine eyes not see. O he, I thanke thee: Lead me on.

\section*{Scene Tertia.}

\textbf{Enter Sir Toby, and Maria.}

\textbf{Sir To.} What a plague means my Niece to take the death of her brother thus? I am sure I care an enemy to life.

\textbf{Mar.} By my troth in Toby, you must come in early nights: your Cousin, my Lady, takes great exceptions to your ill hours.

\textbf{To.} Why let her except, before excepted.

\textbf{Mar.} I, but you must confine your selfe within the modest limits of order.

\textbf{To.} Confine? Ile confine my selfe no finer then I am: these clothes are good enough to drink in, and bee these boots too: and they be not, let them hang themselues in their owne frans.

\textbf{Mar.} That quaffing and drinking will valde you: I heard my Lady talk of it yesterdai: and of a foolish knight that you brought in one night here, to be her wed.

\textbf{To.} What, Sir Andrew Ague-clokke?

\textbf{Mar.} He, he.

\textbf{To.} He's still a man as any's in Illyria.

\textbf{Mar.} What's that to th'purpose?

\textbf{To.} Why he's three thousand ducats a yeare,

\textbf{Mar.} I, but he'll have but a yeare in all these ducates: He's a very foole, and a prodigall.

\textbf{To.} Regular at your lay to: he players o'th Viol.de-gaun boys, and speaks three or four languages word for word without books, & hath all the good gifts of nature.

\textbf{Mar.} He had, indeed, doubt quarelling; for besides that he's a foole, he's a great quarreller, and but that hee hath the gift of a Coward, to play the faultless in quarrelling: 'tis thought among the prudent, he would quickly have the gift of a grave.

\textbf{To.} By this hand they are foundred, and substra\textbf{Mar.} In what fpy to them. Where are they?

\textbf{To.} They ad libitum, he's drunk nightly in your company.

\textbf{To.} With drinking healths to my Niece: He drink to her as long as there is a passage in my throat, & drink in Illyria: he's a Coward and a Coftrill that will not drink to my Niece till his braines are o'th toe, like a parish tap. What wench? Coftrill on wing: for here comes Sir Andrew Ague-clokke.

\textbf{Enter Sir Andrew.}

\textbf{And.} Sir Toby Relch. How now sir Toby Relch?

\textbf{To.} Sweet sir Andrew.

\textbf{And.} Bless you faire Shrew.

\textbf{Mar.} And you too sir.

\textbf{Toh.} Accost Sir Andrew, accost.

\textbf{And.} What's that?

\textbf{To.} Your Neeces Chamber-maid.

\textbf{Mar.} Good Miftris accost, I desire better acquaintance

\textbf{Mar.} My name is Mary sir.

\textbf{And.} Good miftris Mary, accost.

\textbf{To.} You milflake knight: Accost, is front her, board her, woe her, play the her.

\textbf{And.} By my troth I would not undarske her in this company. Is that the meaning of Accost?

\textbf{Mar.} Far you well Gentlemen.

\textbf{To.} And that leet past to Sir Andrew, would thou mightst never draw sword again:

\textbf{And.} You and past to miftris, I would I might never draw sword again; for I prays you bring you hand to'th Entry bare, and let it drink.

\textbf{To.} Wherefore (except-heart) What's your Mephras?

\textbf{Mar.} It's dry fi.

\textbf{To.} And why I think to. I am not much an off, but I can keep my hand dry. But what's your left?

\textbf{Mar.} A day tell Sir.

\textbf{And.} Are you full of them?

\textbf{Mar.} Sir, I have them in my fingers, end marry now I let go your hand, I am boron.

\textbf{Exeunt.}

\textbf{To.} Of knight, thou Xt'd a cup of Cafrick when did I live thee to pass downe?

\textbf{Mar.} Neater in your life I thinke, unless ye see Cafrick put me downe: how thanks sometimes I have no more what then a Christians, on an ordinary man he's: but I am a great eater of beefe, and I believe that does harms to my wye.

\textbf{To.} No question.

\textbf{Mar.} And I thought that I'd forewears it. He ride home to borrow for 7 days.

\textbf{To.} Pur quoy my desire knights?

\textbf{Mar.} What is purgo? Do, or not do? I would I had beflowed that time in the tongue, that I have in fencing dancing, and bare-baying; O had I but followed the Arts.

\textbf{To.} Then haflfl thou had an excellent head of haire.

\textbf{Mar.} Why, would that have mended my haire?

\textbf{To.} Paff question, for the streets it will not cool my \textbf{And.} But it becomes we well enough, both not. (nature

\textbf{To.} Face, let things like fis fis upon a disfaire: and I hope to see a woman take them between her lips, & spin it off.

\textbf{Mar.} Sir, I come here to borrow Sir Toby your niece will not be seen, or if the he's four to one, I none of me: the Corner haflfl be here bard, withowes her.

\textbf{To.} She'll none o'th Count, she hath match above her degree neither in estate, years, nor wit: I have heard her \textbf{And.} There's he's not man.

\textbf{Exeunt.}
Twelve Night, or, What you will.

And. He stay a monach longer. I am a fellow o'th strange mide' th world: I delight in Maskes and Re-\nveals sometimes altogether.
To. Art thou good at thine kickche-cawlies Knight?
And. As any man in Illyria, whatsoever he be, under the degree of my betters, & yet I will not compare with an old man.
To. What is thy excellence in a galliard, knight?
And. Faith, I can cut a caper.
To. And I can cut the Motion too.
And. And I think I have the backe-trick, simply as strong as any man in Illyria.
To. Wherefore are these things bid? Wherefor have these two a Carrant before 'em? Are they like to take duff, like mixture'd Mistre picture? Why dost thou not goe to Church in a Galliard, and come home in a Carrant?
My very walke should be a ligge: I would not]so much as make water but a make a pace?: What doest thou mean? Is it a world to hide venemens in? I did think by the excellent constitucion that thy legge, it was fooned under the sale of a Carrant.
And. I, I, I think it. And it does indifferent well in a stand colour'd Jolde. Shall we be about some Revels?
To. What shall we do else? were we not borne under Taurus?
And. Taurus? That sides and heart.
To. No for, it is legs and thighs: let me see thee catch. Ho, higher sha, thy excellent.
Exeunt.

Scena Quarta.

Enter Valentine, and Viola in masque attire.
Val. If the Duke continue these tales towards you Cesario, you are like to be much advanced, he hath known you but three days, and already you are no stranger.
Vi. You either feare his humour, or my negligence, that you call in question the continuance of his love. Is he insufficient for, in his favours.
Val. No beleue me.
Enter Duke, Conio, and Attendants.
Val. I thank you; here comes the Count.
Duke. Whosefaw Cesario box?
Val. On your attendance my Lord here.
Duke. Stand you a white aloofe. Cesario,
Thou knowest no life, but all : I have vnedapd 't
To thee the bookes even of my secret foule.
Therefore good youth, addresse thy gate unto her,
Be not demiss'd, accesse, land at her doores.
And tell them, there thy fixed foot shall grow
Till thou have audience.
Vi. Sure my Noble Lord;
If he be so abandoned to her sorrow
As it is spoke, the newer will admit me.
Thou, be clamorous, and heap all envy bounds,
Rather then make reproved returnes.
Val. Say I do speake with her (my Lord) what then?
Duke. Often, vnfold the passion of my love,
Surprize her with discourse of my deere faith;
It shall become thee well to act my woes:
She will attend it better in thy youth,
Then a Nuntio's more grave aspel.
Vi. I think not so, my Lord.
Duke. Deere Lad, beleue it;

For they shall yet before thy happy yeares,
That say thou art a man.
Dance up
Is not more smooth, and rousous: thy small pipe
Is as the maids organ, shrill, and found,
And all is feantius a woman's part.
I know thy contellation is right age.
For this affayre: some tourne or fine attend him,
All if you will: for I felie an belt
When tell in companie a proper well in this,
And thou shalt live as freely as thy Lord,
To call his fortunes three.
Duke. Ile do my bel.
To wooe thy Lady: yet a barefull firte,
Who ere I woe, my felie would be his wife.
Exeunt.

Scena Quinta.

Enter Maria, and Cleone.
Mar. Nay, either tell me where thou hale bin, or I will not open my lippes to wide as a brasile may enter, in way of thy excufe: my Lady will hang thee for thy absence.
Cleo. Let her hang me: shee that is well hangde in this world, needs to feare no colours.
Mar. Make that good.
Cleo. He shall see none to feare.
Mar. A good lenent answer: I can tell thee where yaying was borne, of I feare no colours.
Cleo. Where good misfris Mary?
Mar. In the wars, &c that you be bolede to fay in your foolerie.
Cleo. Well, God give them wisedome that hive it: & thoere that are fools, let them wite their talents.
Mar. Yet you will be hang'd for being so long absent, or to be turned away: is not that as good as a hugging
to you?
Cleo. Many a good hanging, presents a bad marriage:
and turning away, let summer bear it out.
Mar. You are refolute then?
Cleo. Not fo meythre, but I am resolved on two points
Mar. That if one brake, the other will hold or if both brake, your gaine fall.
Cleo. He's in good faith, very apt: well go thy way, if for thy sake should I leave drinking, thou wert as witty a piece of Enti fisht, as any in Illrria.
Mar. Peace you rogue no more o'th; here comes my Lady: make your excrets widely, you were belst.
Enter Lady Olivia, with Malvolio.
Cleo. Will you not be thy self, put me into good footing:
these wits that thouke they have thee, doe very of proue foole: and I that am sure I lacke thee, may passe for a wife.
for what faees Quips and blasts, better a witty fool, then a fool d witt. God blefe thee Lady.
Ol. Take the fool ease away.
Cleo. Do you not heare fellow, take away the Lady.
Ol. Go to, you're a dry fool: else more of you obe-side you grow dis-honerd.
Cleo. Two faults Madona, that drinke & good counell will amend: for give the dry foolo drink, then is the foolo not dry: bid the diffonned man mende him, if he mend, he is no longer diffonned; if he cannot, let the Botcher mend him: any thing that's mended, is but patch'd ewer that tranfgrettes, is but patches with finne, and fin that a-monds, is but patchr with puncture. If that this simple Stilling line will sere, for it will not, what remedy?

I. iii. 121— I. v. 55

275
As there is no true Cuckold but calumniy, so beautes a flower; the Lady bad take away the fool, therefore I say againe, take her away.

Ol. Sir, I bad them take away you.

Clo. Misprision in the highest degree. Lady, Cucullus non factis monachos: that's as much to say, as I were not mov'd in my braine: good Madona, gie me leave to proove you a foolce.

Ol. Can you do it?

Clo. Dexteroisly, good Madona.

Ol. Make your proove.

Clo. I must entreate you for it Madona, Good my Moose of virtue answer mee.

Ol. Well sir, for want of other idente, ile bide your proove.

Clo. Good Madona, why mourne thou? O. Good foole, for my brothers death.

Clo. I thinke his foole is in hell, Madona.

Clo. I know his foole is in heauen, foole.

Clo. The more foole (Madona,) to mounre for your Brothers foole, being in heauen. Take away the Foole, Gentlemen.

Ol. What thinke you of this foole Maluolio, doth he not mend?

Mal. Yes, and gulli do, till the pangs of death flanke him: Infamity that detayes the wife, doth ever make the better fool.

Clo. God fend you sir, a speedie Infalluity, for the better increasing your folly: Sir Toby shall be sworn that I am no Fox, but he will not pafs his word for two pence that you are no Foole.

Ol. How say you to that Maluolio?

Mal. I maruell your Ladyship takes delight in such a barren rascall: I saw him put down the other day, with an ordinary fool, that has no more braine then a floone. Looke you now, he's out of his gard already: viles you laugh and minfier occasion to him, he is gag'd. I protest I take these Vilemen, that cross how these let kinde of fools, no better then the foolies Zamas:

Ol. O you are ficke of selfe love Maluolio, and raffe with a dillemper'd appetite. To be generous, guileffe, and of free disposifion, is to take thofe things for Bird-boles, that you deeme Cannon bullets: There is no flander in an allow'd foolce, though he do nothing but rage: nor no railing, in a knowe disreverent man, though he do nothing but reproce.

Clo. Now Mercury induceth thee with loving, for thou speakst well of foolces.

Entrp Maria.

Mnr. Madam, there is at the gate, a young Gentleman, much defires to speake with you.

Ol. From the Count Orsino, is it?

M. I know not (Maluolio) 'tis a faire young man, and well attended.

Ol. Who of my people hold him in delay:

M. Sir Toby Madam, your kinman.

Ol. Fetch him off I pray you, he speakes nothing but madman: Fie on him. Go you Maluolio; if it be as fait from the Count, I am ficke, or not at home. What you will, to difmiss it.

Exit Maluolio.

Now you see sir, how your fooling growes old, & people dislike it.

Clo. Thou hast spoke for vs (Madona) as if thy eldest fonere should be a foolce: who if full, lose creames with braines, for here he comes.

Enter Sir Toby.

One of thy kin has a most weake head, what is he at the gate Orsino?

Ol. By mine honor halfe drunke. What is he at the gate Orsino?

To. A Gentleman.

Ol. A Gentleman? What Gentleman?

To. This Gentleman here. A plaue of these pickle herring: How now Sot.

Clo. Good Sir Toby.

Ol. Orsino, Orsino, how haue you come so early by this Lethargie?

To. Letcherie, I defie Letchery: there's one at the gate.

Ol. I marry, what is he?

To. Let him be the duell and he will, I care not: gie me faith sir. Well, it's all one, Exit Ol. What's a drunken man like, foolce?

Clo. Like a downright man, a foolce, and a madde man:

Ol. One draughts about heute, makes him a foolce, the second maddes him, and a third drownes him.

Ol. Go thou and seek the Crowner, and let him take o' my Coz: for he's in the third degree of drinke: he's drown'd: go looke after him.

Clo. He is but mad yet Madona, and the foolce shall looke to the madman.

Enter Maluolio.

Mal. Madam, yong young fellow sweares hee will speake with you. I told him you were sicke, he taakes on him to vnderstand so much, and therefore comes to speake with you. I told him you were asleep, he seems to have a fore knowledge of that too, and therefore comes to speake with you. What is to be said to him Ladie, he is terrified against any denial.

Ol. Tell him, he shall not speake with me.

Mal. He's bence told so: and he sapes he'll stand at your doorste like a Sherifes poft, and be the supporter to a bench, but he'll speake with you.

Ol. What kinde o'man is he?

Mal. Why of mankind.

Ol. What manner of man? Mal. Of very ill manner: he'll speake with you, will you, or no.

Ol. Of what perfonage, and yeeres is he?

Mal. Not yet old enough for a man, nor young enough for a boy: as a squash is before it is a pece, or a Codling when its almost an Apple: This with him in flanding water, betweene boy and man. He is very well-fauour'd, and he speakes very showringly: One would thinke his mothers milk were scarce out of him.

Ol. Let him approach: Call in my Gentlewoman,

Mal. Gentlewoman, my Lady calles.

Exit Maluolio.

Ol. Glue me my vail I come throw it o'er my face, We'll once more hear Orsino Embasifie.

Enter Viola.

Vi. The honorable Ladie of the house, which is she?  Ol. Speake to me, I shall answer for her: your will.

Vi. Most radiant, exquisite, and incomparable beautie. I prye you tell me if this bee the Lady of the house, for I never saw her. I would bee loath to cast away my speech: for besides that it is excellently well pend, I have taken great paines to conit. Great Beauties, let mee faue none: I am very compitable, even to the least finister vgage.

Ol. Whence came you sir?

Vi. I can say little more then I have studied, & that qutation's out of my part. Good gentle woman, give mee modest affurance, it you be the Ladie of the house, that Twelve Night, or What you Will.

Ol. Are you a Comedian?

Vi. No, my profound heart: and yet (by the verie phang of malice, I swear) I am not that I play. Are you the Lady of the house?

Ol. If you do not usurp my fefe, I am.

Vi. Most certainly, if you are the, you do usurp your fefe: for what is yours to betowe, is, not yours to re- serve. But this is from my Commissione: I will on with my speech in your praise, and then shew you the heart of my affege.

Ol. Come to what is important in it: I forgive you the praise.

Vi. Alas, I took great pains to fludie it, and 'tis a Poetrical.

Ol. It is the more like to be reigned. I pray you keep it in. I heard you were fawce at my gates, & allow'd your approach rather to wonder at you, then to heare you. If you be not mad, be gone: if you have reason, be breve: 'tis not that time of Monto with me, to make one in so skipping a dialogue.

Ul. Will you hoyst fayle fir, here lies your way.

Ol. No good fawcher, I am to hold here a little longer. Some mollification for your Giant, sweete Ladie; tell me your mind, I am a meffenger.

Vi. Sure you have some hideous matter to deliver, when the curtesie of it is so fearfull. Speake your office.

Ul. It alone concerns your care: I bring no overture of warre, no taxation of homage; I hold the Olyfe in my hand: my words are as full of peace, as matter.

Ol. Yet you began rudely. What are you? What would you?

Vi. The rudeness that hath appea'd in me, haue I learn'd from my entertainment. What I am, and what I would, are as secreat as maiden-head: to your ears, Diuinity; to any others, prophanation.

Ol. Give vs the place alone.

We will hear this dramatie. Now fir, what is your text?

Vi. Moll sweet Ladie.

Ol. A comfortable doctrine, and much may bee aside of it. Where lies your Text?

Vi. In Orfonsr bofome.

Ol. In his bofome? In what chapter of his bofome?

Vi. To answer by the method, in the fift of his hart.

Ol. I, haue read it: it is here. Have you none more to? What is it?

Vi. Good Madam, let me fee your face.

Ol. Have you any Commissione from your Lord, to negotiate with my face: you are now out of your Text: but we will draw the Curtain, and shew you the picture. Look you fir, such a one I was this prefent: if not well done?

Ul. Exceffently done, if God did all.

Vi. In graine fir, 'twill endure wind and weather.

Vi. In beauty truly blent, whose red and white, Nature owne sweet, and cunning hand laid on: Lady, you are the cruellest shee alive, If you will lease the graces to the graue, And leaze the world no copie.

Ol. If I fir, I will not be so hard-hearted: I will give our lites forders of your beautie. It fialbe Incorromptible and every particle and venefile label'd to my wills: As Item two lippes indifferent redde, Item two grey eyes, with lids to them: Item, one nekke, one chun, & so forth. Were you fent hither to praise me?

Vi. I see you what you are, you are too proud:
But if you were the dwuell, you are faire: My Lord, and matter loues you: O such love Could be but remembre'd, though you were crown'd The non-paralel of beautie.

Ol. How dothes he love me?

Vi. With adorations, fentill tears, With groanes that thunder loue, with fighes of fire.

Ol. Your Lord does know my mind, I cannot love him Yet I suppose him vertuous, know him noble, Of great estate, of freth and flameffe youth; In voyces well divulg'd, free, learn'd, & valiant, And in dimenion, and the shape of nature, A gracious perfon; But yet I cannot love him: He might have took his answer long ago.

Vi. If I did love you in my matter flame, With such a fuffling, such a deadly life: In your denial, I would finde no fenece, I would not underrand it.

Ol. Why, what would you?

Vi. Make me a willow Cabine at your gate, And call upon my fottle within the house, Write layall Canons of contemned loue, And fing them loud even in the dead of night: Hallow your name to the reverberate hilles, And make the babling Goilip of the aire, Cry ou Oliver: O you should not refit Betweene the elements of ayre, and earth, But you should pittie me.

Ol. You might do much:
What is your Parentage?

Vi. Above my fortunes, yet my ftece is well: I am a Gentleman.

Ol. Get you to your Lord: I cannot love him: let him fend no more, Violette (perchance) you come to me again, To tell me how he takes it: Fare you well: I thank you for your pains: spend this for mee.

Vi. I am no feather fowl, Lady, keep your purfe, My Maller, not my felfe, lacks recompence. Love make his heart of flint, that you shal loue, And let your fercour like my mailers be, Pla'ted in contempt: Farewell fayre cruellie.

Ol. What is your Parentage?

Vi. Above my fortunes, yet my ftece is well; I am a Gentleman. I be twome thou art, Thy tongue, thy face, thy limbs, thine actions, and spirit. Do you thee fuch-fold blazon: not too falt: soft, soft, Violette the Maller were the man. How now? Even fo quickly may one catch the plague? M I thinkes I feel this youths perfections With an inuible, and tuble flenath To crepe in at mine eyes. Well, let it be. What houe, Malvolio.

Enter Malvolio.

Mal. Heere Madam, at your fenence.

Ol. Run after that fame peuciff Meffenger The Counters man he left this Ring behind him Would I, or not: tell him, Ie none of it. Defire him not to flatter with his Lord, Nor hold him vp with hopes, I am not for him: If that the youth will come this way to morrow, Ile glue him reafons for't: fie the thee Malvolio.

Mal. Madam, I will.

Ol. I do I know not what, and feare to finde Mine eye too great a flatterer for my mindes

Farewell.

I. v. 194—330
Fate, shew thy force, our felvies do we not owe,
What is decreed, must be: and be this so.

Fine, Action primus.

Actus Secundus, Scena prima.

Enter Antonio & Sebastian.

Ant. Will you stay no longer: nor will you not that I go with you.

Seb. By your patience, no: my fingers thine darkely outs me: the malignancy of my fate, might perhaps disfigure yours: therefore I shall crave of you your leave, that I may bear my eunus alone. It were a bad compensation for your love, to lay any of them on you.

An. Let me yet know of you, whither you are bound.

Seb. No stop. sir: my determinate voyage is mere extravagance. But I perceive in you so excellent a touch of modellie, that you will not extort from me, what I am willing to keep em: therefore it charges me in manners, the rather to express my felle: you must know of me, then Antonio, my name is Schiffen (for which I call'd Rodrigo) my father was that Schiffen of Messaline, whom I know you have heard of. He left behind him, my felle, and a fitter, both borne in an house: if the Heavens had beene pleas'd, would we had so ended. But you sir, after'd that, for some houre before you took me from the breach of the lea, was my fitter drown'd.

An. Alas the day.

Seb. A Lady sir, though it was said faire much remembred me, was yet of many accounted beautiful: but though I could not with such eunus worthy a fitter, being that yet fairer I will boldly publish her, faire bore a minde that ensy could not but call faire: Shee is drown'd already fair with salt water, though I fente to drowne her remembrance against with more.

An. Pardon me sir, your bad entertainment.

Seb. O good Antonio, forgive me your trouble.

An. If you will not murder me for your lose, let me be your tenant.

Seb. If you will not undo what you have done, that is kill him, whom you have recover'd, defend it not. Fare ye well: at once, my bosome is full of kinde, and I am yet to recee the manners of my mother, that upon the least occasion more, mine eyes will tell tale of me: I am bound to the Count Orsino's Court, farewell.

Exit.

Ant. The gentleness of all the gods go with thee: I have many enemies in Orsino's Court, Else would I very shortly fee thee there: But come what may, I do adore thee so, That danger shall come spoit, and I will go.

Exit.

Scena Secunda.

Enter Viola and Malvolio, at several doors.

Mal. Were not you eu'n now, with the Countesse Orsino?

Vio. Even now sir, on a moderate pace, I have since arriv'd but hither.

Mal. She returns this Ring to you (fur) you might have faied mee, my pains, to have taken it away your selfe. She adds moreover, that you should put your Lord into a desperate assurance, she will none of him. And one thing more, that you be never so hardie to come againe in his affaires, vsellest bee to report your Lords taking of this: receive it so.

Vio. She take the Ring of me, I lie none of it.

Mal. Come sir, you pernecly threw it to her: and she will it, it should be to return'd: If she bee worth flopping for, there it lies, in your eye: if not, bee it his that finds it.

Exit.

Vio. I left no Ring with her: what means this Lady? Fortune forbid my out-side have not charm'd her: She made good view of me, indeed too much, That me thought her eyes had lost her tongue, For she did speake in flarts distraffedly, She loues me fure, the cunning of her passion Invites me in this chastifレス messenger: None of my Lords Ring? Why he sent her none; I am the man, it is before astis, Poor Lady, she were better looue a dream: Disgufite, fie thou art a wickedwille, Wherein the pregnant enemie does much, How eafe is it, for the proper tale In women wasen hearts to let their forms: Alas, O frailtie is the caute, not wee, For such as we are made, if such we bee: How will this fadge? My master loues her deere, And I (poore moniter) fond allmush on him: And (mifaken) fente mee to dote on me: What will become of this? As I am man, My flate is depreate for my matteres looue: As I am woman (now alas the day) What thriftlefs lightes shall poor Orsina breath? C time, thou muft contang this, not I, It is too hard a knot for me t'ouvy.

Scena Tertia.

Enter Sir Toby, and Sir Andrew.

To. Approach Sir Andrew, not to be a bedle after midnight, is to bee wp betimes, and Delicato sujurge, thou know'st.

And. Nay by my troth I know not: but I know, to be wp late, is to be wp late.

To. A falle conclusion: I hate it as an unfild Canne. To bee wp after midnight, and to go to bed then is early: so that to go to bed after midnight, is to go to bed betimes. Does not our burns confilt of the foure Elements?

And. Faith so thry fay, but I thinkc is rather confilt of eating and drinking.

To. That's a Scholler; let us therefore eate and drink. Marano I say, a floupe of wine.

Enter Clown.

And. Heere comes the foole yesth.

CIt. How now my harte? Did you not fee the Picture of we threere?

To. Welcome soe, now let's have a catch.

And. By my troth the foole has an excellent breath. I had rather then forly shinlings I had such a leggo, and to sweate a breath to sing, as the foole has. Inſomthes what was in very gracious looking last night, when thou Spoke of the Operation of Progromutis, of the Vapors paling the Equinoxial of Qunomus: twas very good yath. I feene thee fine pace for I. v. 331—II. iii. 27

We did keep time in our Catches, Snecke vp.

Mal. Sir Toby, I must be round with you. My Lady bad me tell you, that though the harkes you as her kin-man, she's nothing sly'd to your disorderly. If you can separate your sely and your midlemannes, you are welcome to the house; for, and it would please you to take leave of her, she is very willing to bid you farewell.

To. Farewell dear heart, since I must needs be gone.

Mar. Nay good Sir Toby.

To. His eyes do shew his dayes are almost done.

Mal. It's even so?

To. But I will never dye.

Mal. Sir Toby there you lye, Mal. This is much credit to you.

To. Shall I bid him go.

Clow. What and if you do?

To. Shall I bid him go, and fare not? clo. O no, no, no, you dare not.

To. Our oute sire, relye: Art any more then a down.

Mar. Dost thou thinke because thou art ven-true, there shall be no more Cakes and Ale?

Tob. Yes by S.Anne, and Ginger shall bee hotte y th mouth too.

To. That's thright. One sir, rub your Chaine with coins, A hope of Wine Maria.

Mar. Milton Mary, if you priz'd my Ladies fauour at any thing more then contempt, you would not give meanes for this you will rule: she shall know it by this hand.

Exit

Mar. Go shake your ears.

An. Twereas a good deed is to drink when a man is hungrye, to challenge him the field, and then to break promis with him, and make a foole of him.

To. Don't knyght, Ile write the Challenge: or Ile deliver thy indignation to him by word of mouth.

Mar. Sweet Sir Toby be patient for to night: since the youth of the Counts was to day with my Lady, the is out of quiet. For Monieur Maltsolio,let me alone with him: If I do not pull him into any word, and make him a common recreation, do thinke I have write enough to lye thrall in my bed: I know I can do it.

Poif. vse, Polly, and tell vs something of him.

Mar. Marrie sir, sometimes he is a kite of Puritane.

An. If, if I thought that, Ile beare him like a dogge.

To. What for being a Puritan, thy exquisite reason, deer knight.

An. I have no exquisite reason for't, but I haue reason good enough.

Mar. The diu'll a Puritane that hee is, or any thing constantly but a time-pleaser, an affection'd Affe, that else where without bookes, and vsers it by great thrauths.

The bell perrivaded of him: be came (as he thiknes) with excellences, that is his grounds of faith, that all that look on him, lye him: and on that vice in him, will my reuse finde notable caufe to worke.

To. What wilt thou do?

Mar. I will drop in my way some obscure Epilfes of luke, whereby in the colour of his beard, the shape of his legges, the manner of his gare, the exprefure of his eye, forhead, and complexion, he shall finde himfelfe most feelingly perforated. I can write very like my Lady your Neece, on a forgotten Coziers Catches without any figuration or remose of voice?

Mal. My mothers are you mad? Or what are you?
Have you no wit, manners, nor honefie, but to gabble like Tinkers at this time of night? Do yee make an Alehoufe of my Ladies house, that ye squeeak out your Cozi-c Catches without any mitigration or remose of voice?
Is there no respect of place, persons, nor time in you?
that they come from my Niece, and that she's in love with him.

Mar. My purpose is indeed a horrid of that colour.

An. And your horrid now would make him an Asse.

O twill be admirable.

Mar. Sport royall I warrant you: I know my Phylis will work with him, I will plant you two, and let the Foolo make a third, where he shall finde the Letters: observe his construction of it: for this night to bed, and dream on the event: Farewell.

To. Good night Penthisela.

An. Before me she's a good wench.

To. She's a bargele true bred, and one that adores me: what of that?

An. I was ador'd once too.

To. Let's to bed knight: Thou hadst neede send for more money.

An. If I cannot recover your Neece, I am a foule way out.

To. Send for money knight, if thou haft her not ith end, call me Cut.

An. If I do not, never trust me, take it how you will.

To. Come, come, I go burne fame Sacke, 'tis too late to go to bed now: Come knight, come knight.

Enter Dike, Viola, Curio and others.

Du. Give me some Mufick: Now good morow friends.

Now good Cefario, but that piece of song,
That old and Anticke song we heard last night;
Me thought it did relieve my passion much,
More then light ayes, and recollected terms
Of these molt briske and guldy-paced times.
Come, but once verfe.

Cur. He is not here (to please your Lordshippe) that should fing it?

Du. Who was it?

Cur. Fife, the officer my Lord, a fool that the Lady Olivettes Father took much delight in. He is about the house.

Du. Seeke him out, and play the tune the while.

Mufick plays.

Come bithor Boy, if thou must shew love
In the sweet pangs of it, remember me:
For such as I am, all true Lovers are,
Unfluid and quittith in all motions else,
Save in the constant image of the creature
That is belou'd. How doth thou like this tune?

Vo. It gives a verie echo to the foate
Where love is throned.

Du. Thou dost speak matterly,
My life upon's young though thou art, thine eye
Hath shined upon some faviour that it loves:
Hast it not boy?

Vo. A little, by your favour.

Du. What kinde of woman is it?

Vo. Of your complexion.

Du. She is not worth thee then, What yeares is she?

Vo. About your yeares my Lord.

Du. Too old by heaven: Let full the woman take

An elder then her fitter, to weares she to him:
So sways the leuell in her husbands heart:
For boy, however we do praise our felues,
Our fancies are more giddie and vnsirme,
More longing, wauering, sooner loft and wone,
Then womens are.

Du. I think it well my Lord.

Du. Then let thy Leue be yonger then thy selfe,
Or thy effection cannot hold the bent:
For womens are as Roses, whose faire flore
Being once diplaid, doth fall that verie hauore.

Vo. And so they are: alas, that they are so:
To die, begun when they to perfection growe.

Enter Curio & Clarine.

Du. O fellow come, the song we had last night;
Marke it Cefario, it is old and plaine;
The Spinsters and the Knitters in the Sea,
And the free maides that weave their thread with bones,
Do we to close it: it is sily loue,
And dailies with the innocence of love,
Like the old age.

Clo. Are you ready Sir?

Dike. I prethee sing.

Mufick.

The Song.

Come away, come away death,
And so sad effecfe let me be laid.
Eye away, for eye abroad,
I am frame by a faire craft beside.
My thread of white, flack all with Em, O prepare it.
My part of death no one but me did share it.

Not a flower, not a flower sweete
On my blanches face, let these be freeme:
Not a friend, not a offered friend.
My poor clore, where my bones shall be burrowne:
A Tramp and a thousand fancies to sene, to my beloved,
Sad tune I never, I never my grace to wepe there.

Du. There's for thy painter.

Clo. No paints sir, I take pleasure in singing sir.

Du. He say this pleasure shone.

Clo. Truly sir, and pleasure we will be made one time or another.

Du. Give me now leaves, to leaue thee.

Clo. How the melancholy God protect thee, and the Tailor make thy doubtles and changeable Taffira, for thy mindes is a very Oppall, I would have men of such confance Put to Sea, that then butifneffe might be every thing, and their intent enerie, where for that his, that always makes a good voyage of nothing. Farewell.

Du. I let all the rett-gius place: Once more Cefario, Get thee to yond fame fowre signe eredule:
Tell her my love, more noble then the world,
Prizes not quantity of these kinds,
The parts that fortune hath bellow'd upon her:
Tell her I hold as giddily as Fortune,
But as that mirilage, and Queenes of Iems
That nature prakses her in, attract my foule.

Vo. But is the cannot live you sir.

Du. Ic; Ic, must not be answer'd.

Vo. Sooth but you must.

Say that some lady, as perehapes there is,
Hath for your love as great a pangs of heart
As you haue for Olima: you cannot loose her
You tell her for Muff the next then be answer'd?

Du. There's no women fides
Twelve Night, or, What you will. 263

Can bide the beating of so strong a passion,
As love doth gibe my heart: no woman's heart
So bigg'd, to hold so much, they lacke retention,
Alas, their love may call'd appetite.
No motion of the Liver, but the Pallet,
That suffer shutting, clowing, and teuelo,
But mine is all as hungry as the Sea,
And can digest as much, make no compare
Between that love a woman can bear to me,
And that I owe Olivia.

Do. But I know.

Du. What dost thou know?

Do. Too well; what love to women to men may owe:
In faith they are as true of heart, as we.
My Father had a daughter loud a man
As it might be perhaps, were a woman
I should your Lordship,

Du. And what's her history?

Vos. A blanke my Lord: she ne'er told her love,
But let conceit like a worme in th' budde
Feede on her damaste cheeke: the pond'm in thought,
And with a green and yellow melancholly,
She gane like Patience on a Monument,
Smiling at greefe. Was not this love indee?
Women may say more, sweare more, but indeed
Our fluresse are more then will: for still we prose
Much in our ownes, but little in our love.

Du. Put did she shere of her love my Boy?

Vos. I am one of all the children of my Fathers house,
And all the brother too: and yet I know not.
Sir, shall I to this Lady?

Du. I that's the Threame,
To her in hafe: glie her this Jewell: say,
My love can give no place, bide no delay,

Scena Quinta.

Enter Sir Toby, Sir Andrew, and Fabian.

Toby. Comely wayes Signior Fabian.

Fab. Nay I come: if I looke a frapule of this sport,
Let me be boy'd to death with Melancholy.
To. Wouldst thou not be glad to have the riggardly Raschely sheepes-biter, come by some notable flame?
Ga. I would exult man: you know he brought me out ofavour with my Lady, about a Barre, bartting here.
To. To anger him we'll have the Beere againe, and we will foule him blacke and blew, shall we not sir Andrew?

An. And we do it, nor it is pittie of our liues.

Maria. Enter Maria.

To. Here comes the little villain: how now my Mettle of India?

Maria. Get ye all three into the box tree: Malvolio's coming down this walk, he has beene yonder 'tis the Sunne praischly behavinge to his own shadow this hafe houre: obtaine him for the love of Mockerie: for I know this Letter will make a contemptible Idea of him. Cloze in the name of casting, Iyre shut there: for here comes the Towre, that must be caught with ticking. Exit
Enter Malvolio.

Mal. 'Tis but Fortune, all is fortune. Maria once told me she did affe her, and I have heard her selfe come this neere, that should fere fancie, it should bee one of my compleiion. Besides the vies me with a more exalted respect, then any one else that follows her. What should I thinke on?

To. Here's an ouer-weening rogue.

Ga. Oh peace: Contemplation makes a rare Turkey
Cocke of him, how he lets under his adven't plumes.

And. Slight I could to beate the Rogue,

To. Peace I say.

Mal. To be Count Malvolio,

To. Ah Rogue.

To. Peace, peace.

Mal. There is example for't: The Lady of the Stra-chy, married the yeoman of the wardrobe.

An. Fie on him Isabella.

Ga. O peace, now he's deeply in: looke how imagination blows him.

Mal. Having borne three moneths married to her, fitting in my state.

To. O for a flone-bow to hit him in the eye.

Mal. Calling my Officers about me, in my branch'd Velvet gowne: having come from a day bedde, where I have left Olivia sleeping.

To. Fire and Brimstone.

Mal. And then to have the humor of state: and after a durene trustle of regard: telling them I knowe my place, as I would they should doe theirs: to aske for my kinman Toby

To. Boltes and shackles,

Ga. O peace, peace, peace, now, now.

Mal. Seeing, Cofine Toby, my Fortunes having cast me on your Neece, give me this priographer of speeche.

To. What, what?

Mal. You must amend your drunkennesse.

To. Out feb.

Fab. Nay patience, or we breake the finewes of our plot?

Mal. Besides you waste the treasurie of your time, with a foolish knight.

And. That's mee I warrant you.

Mal. One sir Andrew,

And. I knew'twas I, for many do call mee foole.

Mal. What employment have we here?

Ga. Now is the Woodcocke neere the gin.

To. Oh peace, and the spirit of humors intimate readings aloud to him.

Mal. By my life this is my Ladies hand: these be her very C's, her U's, and her T's, and thus makes thee her great P's. It is in conemp of question her hand.

An. Her C's, her U's, and her T's why that?

Mal. To the unknowne bodie, thus, and my good sisters:

Her very Prayles: By your leaue was. Soft, and the im-pressure her Lady, with which the vies to seal: tis my Lady: To whom should this be?

Fab. This winnes him, Luer and all.

Mal.
Twelfe Night, or, What you will.

Mal. True knowes I love, but why, Lips do not move, no man must know. No man must know, What followes? The numbers alter d: No man must know, If this should be thee Malvolio? To. Marry hang thee brooke.

Mal. In command where I adore, but silence like a Lucrece knave: With bloodtie I broke my heart do die, C.M.O.A.I. doth swill my life.

Fob. A fustian riddle.

To. Excellent Wench, say I.

Mal. C.M.O.A.I. doth way my life. Nay but first let me see, let me see, let me see.

Fob. What dills a pocon has the drest him? To. And with what wung the falcon checks at it? Mal. I may command, where I adore : Why thee may command me: I ferne her, she is my Lady, Why this is evident to any formal capacitie. There is no obfuscation in this, and the end: What should that Alphabetical position portend, if I could make that refeble something in me? Softly, C.M.O.A.I.

To O, make up that, he is now at a cold fent.

Fob. Sooner will cry won't for all this, though it bee as rank as a Fox.

Mal. M. Malvolio, at why that begins my name.

Fob. Did not I say he would work it out, the Cure is excellent at faults.

Mal. But then there is no confusion in the sequell that suffers under probation: A should follow, but O. does.

Fob. And O shall end, I hope.

To. I, or Ile cudgel him, and make him cry O.

Mal. And then I comes behind.

Fob. I, and you had any eye behind you, you might see more desolation at your heelees, then Fortunes before you.

Mal. M.O.A.I. This inulation is not as the former: and yet to crush this a little, it would bowe to mee, for every one of these Letters are in my name. Soft, here follows prose: If his fall into thy hand, rehearse. In my thys I am about thee, but be not affraid of greatness: Some are become great, some steeues gleaneth, and some have greatness drafte upon em. The fites open they hands, let thy blood and spirit embrace them, and to inure thy fells to what thou art like to be: cut thy humble floygl, and appear freeth. Be opposite with a knifman, furly with feruants: Let thy tongue tang arguments of flate; put thy felly into the tricke of singularitie, Shee thus aduises thee, that, fights for thee. Remember who commend thy yellow stockings, and will to see thee ever crose partie: Fay remember, goe too, thou art made if thou defire it to be so: If not, let me see thee one ward still, the fellow of feruants, and not weathre to touch Fortunes fingers. Farewell, Shee that would alter devices with thee, the fortunate unhappy daylight and champion dffencors not more: This is open. I will bee proud, I will rede politike Authors, I will battle Sir Toby, I will walk off grave acquaintance, I will make point of the, the very man. I do not now spoil my fells, to let imagination lade mee; for every reason excites to this, that my Lady loves me. She did commend my yellow stockings of late, fée did praise my legge being crose gartered, and in this thee manifests her felte to my love, & with a kind of induction drives mee to these histories of her liking. I thank my staries, I am happy: I will bee strange, flour, in yellow stockings, and crose Garter'd, even with the swiftnesse of putting on. Ioue, and my staries be praisel. Here is yet a postscript. They can't not choose but know who I am. If thou enter'st again my love, let it appeare in the flashing, thy senses become the well - There fore in my presence still smile, deare my freewe, I praieth. Ioute I thanke thee, I will freewe, I will do euerthing that thou wilt have mee. Exit. Tho. I will not give my part of this sport for a pension of thousands to be paid from the Soppy.

To. I could marry this wench for this delicate.

An. So could I too.

To. And ask no other dowry with her, but such another left.

Enter Maria.

An. Nor I neither.

To. Here comes my noble gall catcher.

An. Or o'mine either.

To. Shall I play my freedome at trio-trip, and become thy bondfiaue?

An. If I'faith, or I either.

Tho. Why, thou laff put him in such a dreaume, that when the image of it leaves him, he must tum mad.

Mai. Nay but say true, do's it work upon him?

To. Like Aquia wine with a Midwife.

Mai. If you will then see thee, the truth of thee, mark his first approach before my Lady: hee will come to her in yellow stockings, and a colourlie shawes, and crose gartered, a fashion free details: and hee will finde upon her, which will now be so unfortable to her disposition, being addicted to a rachtanchily, as theeis, that it cannot but turn him into a notable contempl: if you will see it follow me.

To. To the gates of Tartis, thou most excellent dweller of wit.

An. And, he make one too.

Exeunt.

Alitus Tertius, Scena prima.

Enter Viola and Clonew.

Clon. Saw thee Friend and thy Musick: doth thou live by thy Tabor?

Cri. No fis, I live by the Church.

Clon. Art thou a Churchman?

Cri. No such matter fis, I do live by the Church: For, I do live at my house, and my house doth stand by the Church.

Clon. So thou must say the Kings syes by a begger, it's a begger dweller in him: or the Church stands by thy Tabor, if thy Tabor stand by the Church.

Cri. You have saide fis: To see this age: A lenience is but a churl's gloue to a good-witte, how quickly the wrong fide may be turn'd outward.

Clon. Nay this's certaine: they that daily nicely with words, may quickly make them wanted.

Cri. I would therefore my fitter had had no name Sir.

Clon. Why man?

Cri. Why fir, her names a word, and to dulle with that word, might make my fitter wanted: But indeede, words are very Rafeals, since bonds disgrace'd them.

Cri. Thy reason man?
Poor Man. O, I warrant thou art a merry fellow, and can't for nothing.

Cle. No; I do care for something; but in my conscience, I do not care for you; if that be to care for nothing, I would it would make you insensible. art not thou the Lady Olivia's fool?

Cle. No indeed, sir; the Lady Olivia has no folly, she will keep no fool for, till she be married, and fools are as like husbands, as Pilchers are to Herrings, the Husband the bigger, I am indeed not her fool, but his corrupter of words.

Pros. I saw thee late at the Count Orsini's.

Cle. Foolery, sir, does walk about the Orsini like the sun; it shines every where. I would be forry for, but the fool should be as oft with your Master, as with my Mistresse: I think I saw your wife done there.

Pros. Nay, and thou passest down, I see no more with thee; Hold there's excesse for thee.

Cle. Now I joinest in his next commodity of hayde, fend thee aboard.

Pros. By my troth I tell thee, I am almost sick for one, though I would not have it grow on my chime. Is thy Lady within?

Cle. Would not a pair of these have bored fit?

Pros. Yes being kept together, and put to vice.

Cle. I would play Lord Pandarus of Platys fit, to bring a Cressida to this Troyan.

Pros. I understand you firs, till well begg'd.

Cle. The master I hope is not great firs, begging, but a beggar: Cressida was a beggar. My Lady is within firs. I will confer with them wherefore you come, who you are, and what you would are out of my walking. I might say Element, but the word is our-worne.

Exit.

Pros. This fellow is wise enough to play the fool, and to do that well, creates a kind of wit: He must observe their mood on whom he sits, the quality of persons, and the time: And like the Haggard, check at every Feather that comes before his eye. This is a practice, as full of labour as a Wife-mans Art: For folly that he wildly shewes, is fit; But wifemen's folly false, quite taint their wit.

Enter Sir Toby, and Andrew.

Sir Toby. Say you Gentleman.

Andrew. Who do you speak to?

Pros. Ee wos, orfite soffe furniture.

Andrew. I hope firs, you are, and I am yours.

Pros. Will you encounter the house, my Niece is distant you should enter, if your trade be to her.

Pros. I am bound to your Niece firs, I mean firs is the lift of my voyage.

Pros. Take your legs firs, put them to motion.

Pros. My legs do better understand me firs; then I understand what you mean by bidding me take my legs.

Pros. I meant to go firs, to enter.

Pros. I will answer you with gate and entrance, but we are present.

Enter Olivia, and Gentlemen.

Moft excellent accomplished Lady, the heauen's raine O-dours on you.

Pros. That youth's a rare Courter, raine odours, wel.

Pros. My matter hath no voice Lady, but to your owne most pregnant and vouchsafed care.

And. O'dours, pregnant, and vouchsafed: Ie get'em all three already.

Ol. Let the Garden door be shut, and leace mee to my hearing. Give me your hand fir.

Pros. My dutie Madam, and mott humble service.

Ol. What is your name?

Pros. Cesarine is your servants name, faire Princesse.

Ol. My servants fir? I was never mott werry world, since lowly feigning was call'd complement: y'are servant to the Count Orsini youth.

Pros. And he is yours, and his mott needs be yours: your servants servant, is your servant Madam.

Ol. For him, I thinke not on him: for his thoughts, Would they were blankes, rather then fill'd with me.

Pros. Madam, I come to what your gentle thoughts On his behalf.

Ol. O by your leve I pray you.

Pros. I bad you neuer speake againe of him: But would you vnderstand another suite I had rather heare you, to solict that,

Then Mufccke from the spheres.

Pros. Dearce Lady.

Ol. Give me leave, befeech you: I did send,

After the last enchantment you did heart, A ring in chace of you. So did I humble My selfe, my servant, and I feare you me: Vnder your hard constution muff I fit, To force that on you in a stemefull cunning Which you knew none of yours. What might you think? Have you not set mine Honor at the stake,

And brained it with allthy mused thoughts That tyrannous heart can think: To one of your receiuing Enough is thew, a Ciprefle, not a boleone, Hides my heart: so let me hear you speake.

Pros. I pittie you.

Ol. That's a degree to love,

Pros. No not a grize: for this a vulgar prose That weue off we witty enemies.

Ol. Why then me thinkes this time to smile agen:

O world, how apt the poor are to be proud If one should be a prey, how much the better To fall before the Lion, then the Wolfe?

Clock strikes.

The clocke upbraides me with the waste of time: Be not afraid good youth, I will not have you.

And yet when wit and youth is come to hauell, your wife is like to despeare a proper man: There lies your way, due Well.

Pros. Then Welford hau.

Grace and good disposition attend your Ladyship you're nothing Madam to my Lord, by me:

Ol. Stay: I prether tell me what thou thinkest of me?

Pros. That you do thinke you are not what you are.

Ol. If I thinke so, I thinke the fate of you.

Pros. Then thinke you right: I am not what I am.

Ol. I would you were, as I would have you be.

Pros. Would it be better Madam, then I am? I wish it might, for now I am your fool.

Ol. O what a deale of sorne, lookses beautifull? In the contempt and anger of his lip, A mordace guile shewes not it fellre more soone, Then loue that would seeme hid: Loues night, is noone. Cesarine, by the Roies of the Spring, By maid-hood, honor, truth, and every thing, I loue thee so, that mucre all thy pride,
Not wit, nor reason, can my passion hide:
Do not extort thy reasons from this clause,
For that I woo, thou therefore haft no cause;
But rather reason thus, with reason better:
Love sought, is good; but given vnought, is better.

Whoso innocence I swear to, and by youth,
I have one heart, one bosome, and one truth,
And that no woman has, nor neuer none
Shall mirths be of it, fast I alone.
And so alien good Madam, nevermore,
Will I my Matters teares to you deplore.

Oh! Yet come againe: for thou perhaps mayst more
That heart which now abhorres, to like his love.

Scena Secunda.

Enter Sir Toby, Sir Andrew, and Fabian.

And. No faith, Ile not stay a far longer:
To. Thy reason doth venem, give thy reason.
Fab. You must needs yeeld to your reason, Sir Andrew.
And. Marry I saw your Necee do more fautors on the Counts Seruing-man, then cares the better you knew me:
I saw with the Orchard.
To. Did she thee the while, old boy, tell me that.
And. At plaines as I see you now.
Fab. This was a great argument of love in her toward you.

And. Slight; will you make an Affe o' me.
Fab. I will prove it legitimate Sir, upon the Oathes of the Judge, and reason.
To. And they have beene grand tirie men, since before
Nob was a Saylor.

Fab. Shee did shew favour to the youth in your fight, only to exasperate you, to awake your dormant soule,
To purifie in your Heart, and brimstone in your Livers:
You shou'd then have accoast her, and with some excellent acts,
Tis new from the mint, you should have bagn'd
The youth into damnable off, this was look'd for as at your hand, and this was built with the double gift of this opportunitie you let me wash off, and you are now fayld into the North of my Ladies opinion, where you will hang, like a yekele on, Dutchmen beard, vntill you doe deeme it,
by some lablect attempt, either of Valour or policke.

And. And at the axe way, it must be with Valour, for policke I hate: I had a hife be a Brownit, as a Polititian.
To. Whyle then build me thy fortunes upon the basis of Valour. Challenge me the Counts youth to fight withalam lurth in eleven places, my Necee shall take note of it,
And affifie thy felfe, there is none in the world,
can more prarke in mans commendation with woman,
then report of valour.

And. There is no way but this Sir Andrew.

Ant. Will either of you beare me a challenge to him?
To. Yea, write it in a marial hand, be curt and briefe;
it is no matter how witty, so it bee eloquent, and full of invention, taunt him with the licence of Joke: if thou wouldst him twice thricce, it shall not be amisse, and as many Lyes, as will lye in thy fether of paper, although the fleete were bigge enough for the bedde of

Scena Tertia.

Enter Sebastian and Antonio.

Seb. I would not by my will have troubled you,
But since you make your pleasure of your paines,
I will no further chide you.
And. I could not but behind you my desire
(More sharp then filed fleete) did spurr me forth,
And not all loute to see you (though so much
As might have drawnne one to a longer voyager)
But letaloufe, what might befal your reare
Being skilfle in the heapes parts which to a stranger
Vanguard, and unfriend, often prove
Rough, and vnbaptizble. My willing loute,
The rather by these arguments of feare
Sect forth in your purporte.

Seb. My kinde Antonio,
I can no other answer make, but thanker,
And thanker: and ever off good tunes,
Are flumefd off with such vurrent pay.
But were my worth, as is my confident assurance,
Twelve Night, or, What you will. 267

You should finde better dealing: what's to do?
Shall we go see the relics of this Towne?
Ste. To morrow, sir, be off first go see your Lodging?
Ste. I am not weasty, and tilis long to night.
I pray you let not fastifie your eyes
With the memorials, and the things of fame
That do renowne this City,
Ste. Would you'll pardon me:
I do not without danger walke thefe Preeters,
Once in a fea-fight gainst the Count his galleys,
I did some service, of such note indece,
That were I take heere, it would scarce be answer'd.
Ste. Belike you flew great number of his people.
Ste. The effence is not of such a bloody nature,
Abett the quality of the time, and quarrell
Might well have given us bloody argument:
It might have since bene answer'd in repaying
What we took from them, which for Tragfiques fife
Most of our City did. Oney my felfe stood out,
For which if I be tapp'd in this place
I shall pay dere.
Ste. Do not then walke too open.
Ste. It doth not fit me: hold fi, here's my purfe,
In the South Suburbs at the Elephant is best to lodge: I will beforef our dyet,
Whilst you begin the time, and fend your knowledge
With viewing of the Towne, there shall you have me.
Ste. Why your purfe?
Ste. Haply your eye fhall light upon fome toy
You have defire to purchafe: and your store
I thinke is not for idle Markets, fir.
Ste. Ile be your purfe-bearer, and leafe you
For an houre.
Ste. To th' Elephant.

Scena Quarta.

Enter Olivia and Maria.

Ol. I haue fent after him: he fayes hee'1 come:
How fhall I fea him? What befow of him?
For youth is bought more oft, then begg'd, or borrow'd.
I fpeak too loud: Where's Malvolio, he is fad, and ciulill,
And luttes well for a fonitur with my fortunes,
Where is Malvolio?
Mar. He's comming Madame:
But in very ftrange manner. He is fure poftell Madame:
Ol. Why what the matter, do you raze?
Mar. No Madame, he does nothing but fmile: your Lady ship were best to have done guard about you, if hee come, for fure the man is tainted in's wits.
Ol. Go call him hither.

Enter Malvolio.

I am as madde as hee,
If fad and merry madneffe equall bee.
How now Malvolio?
Mal. Sweet Lady, ho, ho.
Ol. Smiff thou, a fad fer thee upon a sad occafion.
Mal. Sad lady, I could be fad:
This fее make fome obftacule in the blood:
This croffe-gar'tering, but what of that?

If it please the eye of one, it is with me as the very true
Sonnets: Plea't one, and pleafe all.
Ol. Why, how doft thou man? What is the matter with thee?
Mal. Not blacke in my minde, though yellow in my legges: It did come to his hands, and Commands fhall be executted, I thinke we doo know the fweet Rom[an hand.
Ol. Will thou go to bed Malvolio?
Mal. To bed! I fweet heart, and Ile come to thee.
Ol. God comfort thee. Why def't thou smilefo, and kifie thy hand fo oft?
Mar. How do you Malvolio?
Mal. At your request:
Yes Nightingales anfwerd Dawes.
Mar. Why appeare you with this ridiculous boldneffe before my Lady.
Mal. Be not afraid of greatneffe'to was well writ.
Ol. What meanit thou by that Malvolio?
Mal. Some are borne great.
Ol. Ha?
Mal. Scant acheuee greatneffe.
Ol. What fayft thou?
Mal. And fone have greatneffe thrift upon them.
Ol. Heaven reforce thee.
Mal. Remember who commended thy yellow stockings.
Ol. Thy yellow stockings?
Mal. And with'd to fee thee croufe garter'd:
Ol. Croffe garter'd?
Mal. Go too, thou art made, if thou defirft it to be so.
Ol. Am I made?
Mal. If not, let me fee thee a fervant still.
Ol. Why this is very Midsummer madneffe.

Enter Servant.

Ser. Madame, the young Gentleman of the Count Or fond's is return'd, I could hardly entreate him bacce: he attends your Lady'ship pleafure.
Ol. He come to him.
Good Marz, let this fellow be look'd too. Where's my Coffine Toby, let fome of my people have a speciall care of him, I would not have him miscarrie for the halfe of my Dowry.

Exeunt.

Mal. Oh ho, do you come neere me now: no worfe man then firs Toby to looke to me. This concures directly with the Letter, he fends him on purpose, that I may appeare fubborne to him: for he incites me to that in the Letter.caf't hy humble flough fayes he be oppofite with a Kintman, furly with foniturts, let thy tongue langer with arguments of faze, putry felfe into the trick' of singularite: and confequently fets downe the manner how: as a fad face, a treuered carriage, a flow tongue, in the habit of late Sir of note, and fo fourth.
I haue lynde her, but it is lues doing, and loue make me thankfull. And when she went away now, let this Fellow be look'd too: Fellow? Not Malvolio, nor after my degree, but Fellow. Why every thing aheres togethe, that no dranno of a fcruple, no ftcruple of a fcruple, no obfinate, no incredulous or vnife Circumflance: What can be faine? Nothing that can be, can come betwenee me, and the full profped of my hopes. Well loue, not I, is the doer of this, and he is to be thankfull.

Enter Toby, Fabian, and Maria.

285
Twelve Night, or, What you will.

To. Which way is Jue in the name of sanctity, If all the dews of hell be drawn in little, and Legion himselfe, possest him, yet I speake to him.

Fab. Here he is, here he is: how lift with you sir? How lift with you man?

Mai. Go off, I discard you: let me enjoy my private.

Fab. And, I, how hollow the fiend (speakes within him;) did not I tell you? Sir Toby, my Lady prays you to have a care of him.

Mai. Ah ha, does he so?

To. Go too, go too: peace, peace, wee must deale gently with him: Let me alone. How do you Malvolio? How lift with you? What man, defie the dews; consider, he’s an enemy to mankind.

Fab. Do you know what you say?

Mai. In you, and you speak ill of the dews, how he takes it at heart. Pray God he be not bewitch’d.

Fab. Carry his water to the wifes woman.

Mai. Marry and it shall be done to morrow morning if I live: My Lady would not lose him for more then he say.

Mai. How now mistress?

Fab. Oh Lord.

To. Prethee hold thy peace, this is not the way: Do you not fee you move him? Let me alone with him.

Fab. No way but gentlelimes, gently, gently: the Priefd is rough, and will not be roughly vv’d.

To. Why how now my bowcock how doy chack?

Mai. Sir, I biddie, come with me. What man, tis not for gravity to play at chessmen, pit with fathan. Hang him foul Collar.

Fab. Get him to fay his prayers, good fit Toby gette him to pray.

Mai. My prayers Minc.

Mai. No I warrant you, he will not hear of godly-nelle.

Mai. Go hang your felues all: you are ydle shallowe things: I am not of your element, you shall knowe more hereafter.

To. Ift possible?

Fab. If this were plaid upon a stage now, I could con-demne it as an improbable fiction.

To. His very genius hath taken the infection of the deuise man.

Mai. Nay pursue him now, leaff the deuise take ayre, and staiit.

Fab. Why shal we make him mad indeede.

Mai. The house will be the quieter.

To. Come, weel haue him in a darke room & bound. My Nece is already in the beleefe that he’s mad: we may carry it thus for our pleasure, and his penance, til our ve-ry payntyme tyre out of breath, prompt vs to have mercy on him: at which time, we will bring the deuise to the bar and crown the thee for a finder of madmen; but fee, but fee.

Fab. More matter for a May morning.

An. Here’s the Challenge, reade it: I warrant there’s vinegar and pepper in’t.

Fab. Ift too fancy?

And. 1,1, I warrant him: do but read.

To. Give me.

Youth, when better thou art, thou art but a fancy fellow.

Gent. And valiant.

To. Wonder not, nor admire not in thy minde why I doe call thee so, for I will form thee no reason for’t.

(Law. A good note, that keeps you from the blow of)

To. Thou comft to the Lady Olivia, and in my right five, the kindely: but thou art in thy threats, that is not the master. I challenge thee for.

Fab. Very breathe, and to exceeding good fence, leffe.

To. I will my lyer gone home, where if he be the chance to kill me.

Fab. Good.

To. Thou lyft me like a rogue and a villain.

Fab. Still you keepeth w. windie side of the Law: good, Toby. Farewell, and God have merce upon one of our foes. He may have merce upon mine, but my hope is better, and so looks to thy selfe. This friend as thou wouldest him, or thy fancy enemies, Andrew Ague-checkke.

To. If this Letter move him not, his legges cannot.

He giu’t him.

Mai. You may have verie fit occasion for: the is now in some commerce with my Lady, and will by and by depart.

To. Go for Andrew: scoot me for him at the corner of the Orchard like a bum-Baylue: so toone as ever thou refellt him, draw, and as thou draw’st, teweare horrible: for t’es to paifie of, that a terrible ooth, with a swagger-ring accent thrappily twanged’d off, giues manhood more approbation, than ever probe of selfe would haue eared him. Away.

And. Nay let me alone for swearing.

To. Now will not I deliuer his Letter: for the behavi-

oue of the young Gentleman, giues him too to be of good capacity and breeding: his employment betweene his Lord and my Nece, confirms no leffe. Therefore, this Letter being so excellently ignorant, will breed no terror in the youth: he will find it comes from a Clodde-pole. But sir, I will deliuer his Chellenge by word of mouth; let upon Ague-checkke a notable report of valor, and drive the Gentleman (as he knoweth his youth will aptly receive it) into a most hideous opinion of his rage, skill, fortune, and impiemotiti. This will so fright them both, that they will kill one another by the lookes, like Cockatrices.

Enter Olivia and Viola.

Fab. Heere he comes with your Nece, giue them way till he take leauze, and presently after him.

To I will mediate the white upone some horrid message for a Chellenge.

Ol. Have said too much was a hint of, And laid mine honour too whereby on’t: There’s something in me that reproves my fault: But such a head-forent potant fault it is, That it but makes reproofs.

Vio. With the fame hautour that your passion doth, Goes on my Matters grees.

Ol. Heere, wear this Jewell for me, tis my picture: Refute it not, it hath no tongue, to vex you: And I beforth you come againe to morrow. What shall you aske of me that Ie deny, That honores (faud) may upon asking giue.

Vio. Nothing but this, your true love for my mater. Ol. How with mine honor may I giue him that, Which I have giuen to you.

Vio. I will acquie you.

Ol. Well, come againe to morrow: far-thee-well, A Fiend like thee might beare my soule to hell. Enter Toby and Fabian.

To. Gentleman, God save thee.
To make the motion: stand here, make a good shew on't, this shall end without the perdition of souls; marry I'll ride your horse as well as I ride you.

Enter Fabian and Viola.

I have his horse to take vp the quarrell, I have persuaded him the youths a duell.

He is as horribly conceited of him: and pants, & looks pale, as it's Bearc were at his heels.

There's no remedy, he will fight with you for your oath fake: matric hee hath better bethought him of his quarrell, and he finds that now scarce to bee worth talking of: therefore draw for the supputation of his worse, he procels he will not hurt you.

Pray God defend me: a little thing would make me tell them how much I lack of a man.

Gue ground if you see him furious.

Come sir Andrew, there's no remedy, the Gentleman will for his honors fake have one bout with you: he cannot but by the Duello anioide it: but hee has promised me, as he is a Gentleman and a Solidour, he wilt not hurt you. Come on, too.

Pray God he keepe his oath.

Enter Antonio.

I do assure thee against my wili.

Put vp your word: if this young Gentleman have done offence, I take the fault on me:
If you offend him, I tor him defaye you.

To, You sir? Why, what are you?

One, fir, that for his loose dares yet do more
Then you hate heard him brag to you he will,

Nay, if you be an uidtaker, I am for you,

Enter Officers.

O good sir Toby hold: hence come the Officers;

Ile be with you anon.

Pray sir, put your sword vp if you please.

And, Marry will I fir: and for that I promis'd you Ile be as good as my word. Hes: will bear you easily, and raises well.

1. Off. This is the man, do thy Office.

Ae. You do mistake me fir.

1. Off. No fir: not a: I know your favour well:

Though now you have no sea-cap on your head:

Take him away, he knows I know him well.

Ant. I must obey. This comes with seeking you:
But there's no remedy, I shall answer it:

What will you do: now my necessitie
Makes me to ask you for my purse. It greets mee

Much more, for what I cannot do for you,

Then what befalls my selfe: you stand amaz'd,

But be of comfort.

2 Off. Come sir away.

Ae. I must entreat of you some of that money.

1. Off. What money fir?

For the fayre kindnesse you have shew'd me here,
And part being promised by your present trouble,

Out of my leane and hard ability
I leud you something: my hosuing is not much,

Ie make division of my present with you:
Hold, there's half my Coffe.

Ant. Will you deny me now,

Itt possible that my defferts to you

Can lacke perwaision. Do not tempt my misery,

Leaft that it make me so unfound a man

As to upbraid you with those kindnesse
Twelve Night, or, What you will.

That I have done for you,
Fie, I know of none,
Nor know I you by voyage, or any feature:
I have ingratitude more in a man,
Then lying, vainness, babbling drunkennesse,
Or any taint of vice, whose living corruption
Subsides our frail blood.
Ant. Oh heavens themselves.

Ant. Let me speake a little. This youth that you see
I sawch'd one halfe out of the jaws of death, (here, Relee'd him with fuch fadneffe or fottie;
And to his image, which I thought did promise
Molt venerable worth, did I devotion.
1. Off. What's that to vs, the time goes by? Away.
Ant. But oh, how wide an idol proves this God:
Thou haft Sebastian done good feature, fame,
In Nature, there's no blemiffh but the minde:
None can be call'd deform'd, but the unkind.
Vertue is beauty, but the beauteous euiil
Are empty trunks, ore-fourish'd by the deuill.

1. Off. The man groves mad, away with him:
Come, come sir.
Ant. Leave me on.

Fie. Me thinks his words do from such passion flye
That he belieues himselfe, fo do not I:
Proue true imagination, oh prove true,
That I deere brother, be now rane for you.
To. Come hither Knight, come hither Fabian: Weel whisper ore a couplets or two of mist fage fawes.
Fie. He nam'd Sebastian: Yet my brother know
Yet living in my foffie: even fuch, and fo:
In favour was my Brother, and he went
Still in this fashion, colour, ornamente,
For him I immite: Oh ift prove,
Tempests are kinde, and falt waues frefh in loue.

To. A very dillinent paltry boy, and more a coward then a Hare, his dillineffe appeares, in leaving his friend here in neceffity, and denying him: and for his coward chip flake Fabian.
Fal. A Coward, a moft detruet Coward, religious in it.

And. Shal I eie after him againe, and beate him,
To. Do, buffe him founlyly, but never draw thy fword
And. And I do not.
Fal. Come, let's fee the event.
To. I dare lay any money, will be nothing yet.

Actus Quartus, Scena prima.

Enter Sebastian and Clowne.

Cio. Will you make me beleue, that I am not fent for you?
Sob. Go too, go too, thou art a foolish fellow,
Let me be clement of thee.
Cio. Well beli eu faith: No, I do not know you, or I am not fent to you by my Lady, to bid you come speak with her: nor your name is not Maffier Csfan, or this is not my name neyther: Nothing that is fo, is fo.
Sob. I prighte vntilly fome where elfe, thou know not me.

Cio. Vntill my folly: He has heard that word of some great man, and now applyes it to a foole. Vntill my folly: I am afraid this great lubber the World will prose a Cockney: I prighte now vngird thy strangenes, and tell me what I shall vnto my Lady? Shall I vnto her that thou art comming?
Sob. I prighte foolish greake depart frome me, there's more of thee, if you tarry longer, I fhal give worse paiments.

Cio. By my troth thou haft an open hande: these Wisemen that giue foole money, get themfelves a good report, after fourteen yeares purchase.

Enter Andrew, Toby, and Fabian.

And. Now fit, hauce I met you again: ther's for you.
Sob. Why there's for thee, and there, and there,
Are all the people mad?
To. Hold fit, or Ile throw your daguer oer the house.
Cio. This will I tell my Lady straight, I would not be in some of your coats for two pence.
To. Come on fir, hold.
An. Nay let him alone, Ile go another way to worke with him: Ile haue an action of Battery against him, if there be any law in Illyria: though I stroke him firft, yet it's no matter for that.
Sob. Let go thy hand.

To. Come fit, I will not let you go. Come my yong fouldeir put vp your yron: you are well felleth; Come on.

Sob. I will be free from thee. What would I now?
If thou disturbe me further, draw thy fword.
To. What, what? Nay then I must haue an Ounce or two of this malaper blood from you.

Enter Clytie.

O1. Hold Toby, on thy life, charge thee hold.
To. Madam.
O1. Will it be euer thus? Vngracious wretch,
Fit for the Mountains, and the barbarous Caucus,
Where manners were were preach'd out of my right,
Be not offended, deere Cfsaro:
Rudeby be gone. I prighte the gentle friend,
Let lybe, ye waterone, not the passion way
In this your caule, and with what intent.
Against thy peace. Go with me to my houfe,
And there thou there how many fmallle pranks
That Raffian hath botch'd vp, that thou thereby
Mayst smale at this: Thou shalt not fhoue but goe:
Do not denie, beftrew his foule for mee,
He flarted one perfe heart of mine, in thee.
Sob. What reliefs is in this? How runs the streame?
O1. I am mad, or else this is a dreame.
Let fame thall my refe in Leche ftepe,
If it be thus to dreame, thall let me sleepe.
O1. Nay come I prighte, would thou shalt be rul'd by me
Sob. Madam, I will.
O1. O lay to, and be.

Scena Secunda.

Enter Maria and Cloume.

Mar. Nay, I prighte put on this gown, this hearde, make me beleue thou art Sir Topas the Curate, doe it quickly. Ie call for Toby the whilte.

Cio. Well, Ile putt on it, and will dispence my felte in it, and I would were the first that ever diffbembl'd in

III. iv. 388—IV. ii. 7
Scena Tertia.

Enter Sebastian.

This is the ayre, that is the glorious Sunne,
This pearle fie gave me, I do feel, and feele,
And though tis wonder that enravisheth us,
Yet is not madness. Where's Anthony then, I could not finde him at the Elephant, Yet there he was, and there I found this credite, That he did range the town to seize me out, His conceill now might doe me golden service, For though my foule disputes well with my sense, That this may be some error, but no madness, Yet doth this accident and flood of Fortune, So farre exceed all instance, all discourse, That I am ready to distrust mine eyes, And wrangle with my reason that perplexes me To any other trust, but that I am mad, Or else the Ladies mad; yet if 'twere so, She could not lay her house, command her followers, Take, and give backe aliasseyes, and their dispatch, With such a smooth, discreet, and stably bearing As I perceive the do's; there's something in't That is deceivable. But here the Lady comes.

Enter Olima, and Prikt.

Oli. Blame not this haste of mine; if you mean well No way go with me, and with this holy man Into the Chantry by: there before him, And vnderneath that consecrated roof, Plight me the full assurance of your faith, That my most leauish, and too doublesfull soul May live at peace. He shall conclude it, Whiles you are willing it shall come to note, What time we will our celebration keepe According to my birth, what do you say?
Seb. 1 do follow this good man, and go with you, And hauing drawn truth, ever will be true. Oli. Then lead the way good father, & heauen so fine, That they may fairely note this side of mine.

Enter Eliza, and Scotchman.

Eliza. Now as thou lou'st me, let me see his Letter.
Clo. Good M. Fabian, grant me another request.
Fab. Any thing.
Clo. Do not desire to see this Letter.
Fab. This is to giue a dogge, and in recompence desire my dogge againe.

Enter Duke, Viusta, Chirch, and Lords.

Duke. Belong you to the Lady Olima, friends?
Clo. I sir, we are some of her trappings.
Duke. I know thee well; how dost thou my good Fellow?
Clo. Truly sir, the better for my foeces, and the worse for my frend's.
Duke. Juit me contrary the better for thy frend.
Clo. No sir, the worse.
Duke. How can that be?
Clo. Marry sir, they praise me, and make an idle of me, now my foeces tell me plainly, I am an Afe: so that by my foeces sir, I profit in the knowledge of my selfe, and by my friends I am abused: so that conclusions to be as killes, if your foure negates make your two affirmations, why then the worse for my friends, and the better for my foeces.

Du. Why this is excellent.

Clo. By my troth sir, so: though it please you to be one of my frends.
Du. Thou shalt not be the worse for me, there's gold.

Clo. But that it would be double dealing, I would you could make it another.
Du. O you give me ill counsell,

Clo. Put your grace in your pocket sir, for this once, and let your fleirs and blood obeye it.

Du. Well, I will be so much a fisner to be a double dealer: there's another.

Clo. Primo, secundo, tertio, is a good play, and the olde saying is, the third payes for all; the triplex fitr, is a good tripping measure, or the belles of S. Bennetts, may put you in minde, one, two, three.

Du. You can foule no more money out of mee at this throw: if you will let your Lady know I am here to speake with her, and bring her along with you, it may awake my bounty further.

Clo. Marry sir, lullaby to your bountytill I come a gen. I go sir, but I would not have you to thinke, that my defe of hauing is the same of countouinelsite: but as you say sir, let your bounty take a nappie, I will awake it anon.

Enter Anthony and Officers.

Vio. Here comes the man sir, that did rescue mee.

Du. That face of his I do remember well, yet when I saw it last, it was benifated As blacke as Vulcan, in the instake of warre: A bawbling Velfell was the Captaine of, For shalow draught and bulke unprizable, With which such a frail and grapple did he make, With the most noble battaone of our Fleet; That very euyy, and the tongue of loose Crude fame and honor on him: What's the matter?

Off. Orfuce, this is that Anthony That tookke the Phoenix, and her fraught from Candy, And this he that did the Tiger board, When your yong Nephew Thos. left his legge; Here in the streets, desperate of shame and hate, In private brabble did we apprehend him.

Vio. He did me kindnesse sir, drew on my side, But in conclusion put strange speecch upon me, I know not what twas, but dratation.

Du. Notable Pyrate, thou full-water Theefe, What foolish boldnesse brought thee to their merces, Whom thou in termes so bloudie, and so deere Hatt made thine enimyes?

Ant. Orfuce. Noble Sir,
Be not afy. I stakke off these names you giue mee, Anthony newer yet was Thoese, or Pyrate, Though I confess, on base and ground enough Orfuce's enimyes. A witchcraft drew me bither: That most ingratefull boy there by your side, From the rude fees enng'd and foamy mouth Did I redeem: a wraek path hope he was: His life I gue, and did thereto addde My love without retention, or restraint, All his in dedication. For his sake,

Did I expose my selfe (pure for his lone) Into the danger of this audeire Towne, Drew to defend him, when he was befed: Where being apprehended, his falle cunning (Not meaning to partake with me in danger,) Taught him to face me out of his acquaintance.
And grew to twentie yeares remov'd thing
While once would wink: I desire me mine owne purge,
Which I had recommend'd to his wife,
Not halfe an houre before.

V. How can this be?
Do. When came he to this Towne?
Ant. To day my Lord: and for three months before,
No in strait, nor a minutes vacancie,
Both day and night did we neglect company.

Int. Olivia and Attendants.

Do. Here comes the Counsellor, now heauen walks on earth:
But for the most, fellow, fellow thy words are madeness,
Three months this youth hath tended upon mee,
But more of that anon: Take him aside.

O. What would my Lord, but that he may not have,
Wherein Olivia may seeme scarce capable?

Olivia. You do not keep the promise with me.

Do. Gracious Olivia,
O. What do you say Cofaro? Good my Lord.
Do. My Lord would speake, my dutie hitt me.
O. If he be ought to the old tune my Lord:
It is at last and fullsome to shine care.

As howling after Musick.

Do. Still so cruel?
O. Still so constant Lord.

Do. What to procure her? you woulde Ladie
That woulde engage me, and so audacious Aria.
My soul she hathfull of offers, have breath'd out
That ear devotion tender'd: What shall I do?
O. Even what it please my Lord, that shall become him
Do. Why should I not, (had I the heart to do it)
Like to th' Egyptian thief, at point of death Kill what I love (a fagine infolue,
That some time iours nobly) but heare me this:
Since you to non-regardance call my faith,
And that I partly know the instrument
That serves me from this true place in your favoure:
Like you the Marble-breasted Tirant still.
But this your Minion, who an I know you love,
And whom, by heauen I sweare, I tender dearly,
Will I tear out of that cruel eye,
Where he is crowned in his matters sight.
Come boy with me, my thoughts are ripe in mischife:
He facieth the Lambe that I doe love,
To spight a Rauens heart within a Doure.

U. And I most locum, apt, and willinglie,
To do you reft, a thousand deaths would dye,
O. Where goes Cofaro?

V. After him I houre,

More then I love these eyes, more then my life,
More by all morees, then ere I shal lose wife.
If I do bring you witnesse such
Punish my life, far taiming of my love.

O. Aye me detested, how am I beguil'd?
U. Who does beguil my? who does who wrongs you?
O. Halfe thou forget thy selfe is it so long?

Call forth the holy Father,

Do. Come away,
O. Whether my Lord? Cofaro, Husband flay,

Do. Husband?

O. I Husband, Can he that deny?!

Do. Her husband, ifsh?

V. No my Lord, not I.

O. Alas, it is the bafineffe of thy fear,
Twelve Night, or, What you will.

D.S. Get him to bed, and let his hurt be look'd to. Enter Sebastian.

Sh. I am sorry, Madam. I have hurt your kinman:
But had it been the brother of my lord,
I must have done it less with wit and safety.
You thaw a strange regard upon me, and by that I do perceive it hath offended you.
Pardon me (sweet one) even for the voices
We made each other, but to late ago.

D.S. One face, one voice, one habit, and two persons,
A natural Perspective, that is, and not.

Sh. As you say, O my dear Anthinias,
How have the hours stuck'd, and tortur'd me,
Since I have lost thee? Ant. Sebastian are you?

Sh. Fear it thou that Anthinias?
Ant. How have you made division of your selfe,
An apple eaten in two, is not more twin.
Then these two creatures. Which is Sebastian?

D.S. Most wonderfull.

Sh. Do I stand there? I never had a brother;
Nor can there be that Deity in my nature
Of heer's, and every where. I had a fitter,
Whom the blinde wastes and furies haue devoured;
Of charity, what kinne are you to me?
What Countryman? What name? What Parentage?

D.S. Of Christ; but Sebastian was my Father,
Such a Sebastian was my brother too:
So wen he fust to his watery tombe:
If spirits can affume both forme and face,
You come to fright vs.

Sh. A spirit I am indeed,
But am in that dimension grossely clad:
Which from the wounde I did partake.
Where you a woman, as the red goes euen,
I should yeares let fall upon your cheeks,
And say, thrice welcome dwoncast Flora.

Vir. My father had a masque upon his brow.
Sh. And so had mine.

Vir. And did that day when Flora from her birth
Had numbered thirteene yeares.

Sh. Othertwoe is truly in my soule,
He finish'd indeed his mortall aile.
That day that made my fitter thirteene yeares.

Vir. If nothing lets to make vs happie both,
But this my maladie vforp d attyre:
Do not embrace me, till each circumstance,
Of place, time, fortune, do co-here and unme.
That I am Flora, which to confirme,
He bring you to a Captain in this Towne,
Whereby my maiden weedeys: by whose gentle helpe,
I was prefer'd to ferve this Noble Count:
All the occurrence of my fortune since
Hath beene betweene this Lady, and this Lord.

Sh. So comes at Lady, you have bene mistooke:
But Nature to her bias drew in that,
You would have bin contract to a Maid,
Nor are you therein (by my life) deceu'd,
You are betroth'd both to a maid and man.

D.S. Be not amaz'd, right noble is his blood:
If this be fo, as yet the gaffe fumes true,
I shall have store in this most happy wracke,
Boy, thou hast faide to me a thousand times,
Thou never stould not lose woman like to me.

Vir. And all those sayings, will I ouer swear,
And all those swearings keepe as true in foule,
FINIS.
The Winters Tale.

Actus Primus. Scena Prima.

Enter Camillo and Archdeacon.

Arch. If you shall chance (Camill'e) to visit Bohemia, on the like occasion whereon my seruices are now on-foot, you shall see (as I have said) great difference betwixt our Bohemia, and your Sicilia.

Cam. I think, this comming Summer, the King of Sicilia means to pay Bohemia the Visitacion, which hee

Arch. Wherein our Entertainments fhall fhine; we will be inflfted in our Loues: for indeed—

Cam. Bleffeth you—

Arch. Verely I speak it in the freedome of my knowledge; we cannot with fuch magnificence—in so rare—I know not what to fay—Wee will give you fleepie Drinks, that your Sences (in-intelligent of our insufficiency) may, though they cannot prafiue vs, as little accufe vs.

Cam. You pay a great deale to deserve, for what's given freely.

Arch. 'Believe me, I fpeak as my understanding inftueth me, and as mine honfelel puts it to vnterarce.

Cam. Sicilia cannot fhew himfelfe over-kind to Bohemia: They were trayd together in their Child-hoods; and there rooted betwixt them then such an afffection, which cannot chufe but branch now. Since their more mature Dignities, and Royall Neceffities, made separation of their Societie, their Encounters (though not Perfonall) hath been Royally arranged with enter-change of Gifts, Letters, loving Embafties, that they have seem'd to be together, though almoft: fhall hands, as over a Vaffal, and embrac'd as it were from the ends of oppofed Winds. The leaften their Loues.

Arch. I thinke there is not in the World, either Malice or Matter, to alter it. You have an unfpoken comfort of your young Prince Mamillius: it is a Gentleman of the greatest Promife, that euer came into my Note.

Cam. I very well agree with you, in the hopes of him: It is a gallant Child; one, that (indeed) Payficks the Subjeft, makes old hearts fresh; they that went on Cruizes ere he was borne, defire yet their life, to fee him a Man.

Arch. Would they elfe be content to die?

Cam. Yes, if they were not other excuse, why they should defire to live.

Arch. If the King had no Sonne, they would defire to live on Cruizes till he had one.

Exeunt.

Scena Secunda.

Enter Leontes, Hermione, Polixenes, Camillo.

Pol. Nine Changes of the Warre-State hath been.

The Shepheards Note since we have left our Throne Without a Burthen: Time as long againe Would be fill'd vp by my Brother with our Thanks, And yet we fhould, for perpetuation, Goe hence in debt: And therefore, like a Cypher (Yet standing in rich place) I multiply With one we thank you, many thousands moe, That goe before it.

Leo. Stay your Thanks a while, And pay them when you part.

Pol. Sir, that's to morrow:

I am question'd by my feares, of what may chance, Or breed upon our abstinence, that may blow No heaping Winds at home, to make vs fay, This is put forth too truly: besides, I hate fay'd To tire your Royaltie.

Leo. We are rougher (Brother) Then you can put vs to.

Pol. No longer fay, Leo. One Seize night longer.

Pol. Very looth, to morrow.

Leo. We'rele part the time betwixt's then and in that he no gaine-faying.

Pol. Prefe me not (beleech you) to:

There is no Tongue that moues none, none 'th World So foon as yours. could win me: so it should now, Were there necellite in your requelt, although 'twere needful I deny'd it. My Affairs Doe even drag me home-ward: which to hinder, Were (in your Loue) a Whip to me; my fay, To you a Charge, and Trouble: to faue both, Farewell (our Brother.)

Leo. Tongue-ty'd our Queene? speake you.

Her. I had thought (Sir) to have held my peace, until You had drawne Oathes from him, not to fay: you (Sir) Charge him too coldly. Tell him, you are sure All in Bohemia's well: this fatisfaction,

The by-gone-day proclaym'd, fay this to him;

He's beat from his broth word.

Leo. Well said, Hermione.

Her. To tell, he longs to fee his Sonne, were strongs;

But let him fay fo then, and let him goe;

But let him fwear fo, and he fhall not fay,

We'll thwack him hence with Diffafte.

Yet of your Royall prefence, Ie adventure

The borrow of a Weake, When at Bohemia,

You take my Lord, Ie give him my Commination,

To let him there a Moneth, behind the Geft

Prefh'd for the parting; yet (goodeed) Leontes,

I loue thee not a Jarrre o'th'Clock, behind

I. i. 1—I. ii. 43
The Winters Tale.

What Lady theher Lord. You'd eay ?

Pol. No, Madame.

Her. Nay, but you will ?

Pol. I may not verely.

Her. Verely?

You put me out with limber Vowes: but I,
That Lady would feek t'otherplace the Stars with Oaths,
Should yet say, Sir, no going: Verely
You shall not goe; a Ladies Verely is
As potent as a Lords. Will you goe yet?

Force me to keepe you as a Prisoner,
Not like a Guest: so you shall pay your Fees
When you depart, and faue your Thanks. How lay you ?
My Prisoner ? or my Guest ? by your dread Verely,
One of them you shall be.

Pol. Your Guest then, Madame:
To be your Prisoner, should import offending;
Which is for me, lest eafe to commit,
Then you to punish.

Her. Not your Gaoler then,
But your kind Hostelsse. Come, Ile question you
Of my Lords Tricks, and yours, when you were Boys:
You were pretty Lording then ?

Pol. We were (faire Queene.)
Two Lads, that thought there was no more behind,
But such a day to morrow, as to day,
And to be Boy eternall.

Her. Was not my Lord
The verier Wag o'th' two ?

Pol. We were as wrym'd Lambs, that did frisk i' th' Sun,
And bleat the one at the other what we chang'd,
Was Innocence, for Innocence: we knew not
The Doctrine of ill-doing, nor dream'd
That any did: Had we purf'd that life
And our weke Spirits he're been higher read
With stronger blood, we should have answer'd Heaven
Boldly, not guilty; the Impostion clear'd.
Heredianse ours.

Her. By this we gather
You have tript since,

Pol. O my most facet Lady,
Temperations have since then been borne as's for
In those unled'd days, was my Wife a Gifie;
Your precious selfe had then not crost'd the eyes
Of my young Pha. fellow.

Her. Grace to boor:
Of this make no conclusion, lest you say
Your Queene and I are Devils: yet got on,
Th'o' offences we have made you doe, we're answer'd,
If you first find'd with us: and that with us
You did continue faults; and that you flippes not
With any, but with vs.

Leo. Is he woon yet ?

Her. Here he lay (my Lord.)

Leo. At my request he would not.

Vermina (my dearest) thou never spake't
I better purpose.

Her. Neuer ?

Leo. Neuer, but once.

Her. What haste I twice said well? when was't before?
I perswade tell me: cram's with prystle, and make's
As fas as same thing: One good deed, dying tongueleffe, Slaughters a thouand, weeping upon that,
Our prayers are our Wages. You may ride.
With one soft Kifle a thouand Furlongs, ere
With Spur we hear an Acre. But to th' Goalse:

My last good deed was to entreat his flay.
What was my first it's an older Sifter,
Or I mistake you: O, would her Name were Grace,
But once before I spoke to th' purpose' when?
Nay, let me haue't: I long.

Her. Why, that was when
Three cruelled Months had fowrd' themselves to death,
Ere I could make thee open thy white Hand:
A clap th'fely my Lust; then didst thou viter,
I am yours for ever.

Her. 'Tis Grace indeed,
Why do you now, I haue spoke to th' purpose twice:
The one, for ever earn'd a Royall Husband;
The other, for some while a Friend.

Leo. Too hot, too hot:
To mingle friendship farre, is mingling bloods,
I haue Trimmer Cardu on me: my heart daunces,
But not for joy: not joy. This Entertainment
May a free face put on: desire a Libertie
From Heartrin'fle, from Bountie, fertile Bosome,
And well become the Agent; may; grant;
But to be palming Palmes, and pinching Fingers,
As now they are, and making prach'd Smiles
As in a Looking-Glasse; and then to figh, as 'twere
The Moors o'th' Deece: oh that is entertainments
My Bosome likes not, nor my Browes. Mammaeus, Art thou my Boy?

Mom. I, my good Lord.

Leo. Flicks :
Why that's my Bawcock; what's that 'smuch't dhy Nefz?
They lay is a Coppy out of mine. Come Captaine,
We must be near; not near, but cleanly, Captaine;
And yet the Steere, the Heycer, and the Calfe,
Are all call'd Near. Still Virginalling
Upon his Palmes: How now (you wanten Calfe)
Art thou my Calfe ?

Mom. Yes, if you will (my Lord.)

Leo. Thou want'st a rough path, & the shouts that hint
To be fell, like me: yet they say we are Almof as like as Eggs: Women say fo,
(That will say any thing.) But were they false
As to the'd y'd Black's, as Wind, as Waters, false
As Dice are to be wiff'd, by one that tries
No borne 'twixt him and inne: yet were it true,
To say this Boy were like me. Come (Sir Page)
Looke on me with your Welkin eye: sweet Villain,
Most dear of, my Collops: Can thy Dam, may't be Affection? thy Intention flabs the Center.
 Thou d'ot make possible things not so held,
Communists it with Dreams (how can this be?)
With what's vnreal: thou enuahge art,
And fellow'd nothing. Then's it very credent,
Thou may'lt co-syme with something, and thou d'ot.
(And that beyond Commission) and I find it,
(And that to the infection of my Braines, And harding of my Browes.)

Pol. What means Sicilia?

Her. He something seems uneftted.

Pol. How? my Lord?

Leo. What chearst? how is't with you, best Brother?

Her. You look as if you held a Brow of much distracion.
Are you moud' (my Lord?)

Leo. No, in good earnest.

How somevme Nature will betray it's folly?
It's tenderrife? and make it felte a Pafime
To harder bofomes? looking on the Lynes
Of my Boyes face,me thoughts I did requoyle
Twentie three yeares, and saw my felfe vn-breech'd d'
In my greene Vellut Coat,my Dagger muzzel d,
I left it shold bire it's Matter, and so preue (An Ornaments o't do's) too dangerous:
How like we thought i't then was to this Kennel,
This Squaith, this Gentleman More honfet Friend,
Will you take Eages for Money?

Cam. No (my Lord) He fight.
Leo. You will why happy man b'ts dote My Brother Are you fo fond of your young Prince, as we Do seem to be of our?
Pol. Et at home (Sir)
It's all my Exercise,my Mirth,my Matter;
Now my true Friend: and then mine Enemy;
My Parfite my Souldier State-m'f:I,
He makes a holidays day,short as December,
And with his varying child-nelle, cures in me
Thoughts,that would thich my blood,
Leo. So stands this Squire.
Off'd with me: We two will walke (my Lord)
Andleave to your grauer steps. Herewore,
How thou lassn't,shew in our brothers welcome;
Let that be due in Sicily be cheap:
Next to thy felfe, and my young Ruler,he's Apparent to my heart.
Her. If you would feek vs,
We are yours i't Garden: shall's attend you there?
Leo. To your owne bents dispotie you: he'll be found,
Be you beneath the Sky: I am angling now,
(though you perceive me not how I guise Lync)
Go to, goe too.
How this holds up the Neft: the Bill to him?
And arrane her with the boldneffe of a Wife
To her allowing Husband. Gone already,
Yneh-thick, knee-deeptree head and ears a fork'd one.
Goe play (Boy)? play thy Mother play.
I play too: but dirig'd a part, whose ifue
Will hince me to my Grace. Contemt and Clamer
Will be my Kneill. Goe play (Boy)? play, there have been (Or I am much deceu'd) Cuckolds ere now,
And many a man there is (even at this present,
Now while I speak this) holds his Wife by th'Arme,
That little thinks the he's have flue'd in's abfence,
And his Pond fild by his next Neighbor (by Sir Smite, his Neighbor): say, there's comfort in't,
While other men have Gates, and thofe Gates open'd
(As mine) against their will. Should all deprize
That have resouled Wifes, the tenth of Mankind
Would hang their Faces, Physick for't, there's none:
It is a bawdy Planet, that will strike,
Where it's prominent and its powerfull: think it is,
From Eaf't, Wett, North, and South, it is concluded,
No Barricade for a Belly. Knows,
It will let in and out the Enemy,
With bag and baggage: many thonfand on's
Have the Diife and feel not. How now Boy?

Cam. I am like you say,
Leo. Why, that's some comfort.
What? Camillo there?
Cam. I, my good Lord.
Leo. Goe play (Mamillum) thou hast an honfet man:
Camillo, this great; Sir will yet flay longer.
Cam. You had much ado to make his Anchor hold,
When you call out, it flill came home.
Leo. Didst note it?

Cam. He would not flay at your Petitions, made
His Buinneffe more mater.ILL.
Leo. Didst perceive it?
They're here with me already; whifpering rounding:
Sicilia is a fo forth: this farre gone,
When I fhall giue it left. How can't (Camillo)
That he did flay?

Cam. At the good Queenes entresettie.
Leo. At the Queenes b't: Good shoold be pertinent,
But for it i't, it is now. Was thia taken
By any understanding Pate but thine?
For thy Conceit is looking, will draw in
More then the common Blocks. Not noted, is't,
But of the finer Nature's by some Seuealls
Of Head-piece extraordinarie; Lower Meffes
Perchance see to this Bufonelle purblind? say,
Cam. Bufonelle, my Lord? I thinke yett vnderland Telleftas stays here longer.

Cam. Ha?

Cam. Stays here longer.
Leo. 1, but why?

Cam. To satisfi your Highntffe, and the Entretaxies
Of our most giouious Miffellie.

Leo. Satisfi?

Theentretaxies of your Miflord? Satisfye?
Let that suffice. I have trusted thee (Camillo)
With all the nearest things to my heart, as well
My Chamber-Connects, wherin (Priet-like) thou
Hast clame'd my Befome; from thee departed
Thy Penitent reform'd: but we have been Decei'd in thy Integrste, decei'd
In that which feemes so.

Cam. Be it forbid (my Lord.)
Leo. To hide vpont: thou art not honest of
If thou inclin't that way, thou art a Coward,
Which hoxes honestie behind, reftafining
From Courfe requir'd: or else thou must be counted
A Scoundrel, graffed in my feros Truth,
And therein negligent; or else a Foole,
That fees a Game play'd home, the rich Stake drawne,
And tak'st it all for reft.

Cam. My gracious Lord,
I may be negligent foolifh, and fcatrefull,
In every one of thoe, no man is free,
But that his negligence, his folly, fcare,
Among the infinite doings of the World,
Sometime puts forth in your affaires (my Lord).
If euere I were willful negligent,
It was my folly: if indulgiously
I play'd the Foole, it was my negligence,
Not weigthing well the end: if euere featrefull
To doe a thing, where I the ifue doubted,
Whereof the execution did cry out Against the non performance (twas a fcare
Which oft infects the wifeft those (my Lord)
Are fuch allow'd Infamities, that honestie
Is neuer free of. But befiech your Grace
Be plaine with me, let me know my Trait
By it's owne wilfe, if I then deny it,
'Tis none of mine.
Leo. Ha' not you feene Camillo?
(But that's paft doub: you have, or your eye-glaffe is thicker then a Cuckolds Home) or heard?
(For to a Vision fo apparant, Rumor
Cannot be mute) or thoughtes (for Cognition
Refides not in that man, that do's not thinke)
My Wife is flippere? If thou wilt confesse,
Or eke be impudently negatue,
To have nor Eyes, nor Eares, nor Thought, then say
My Wife's a Holy Horfe, deferves a Name
As rank as any Fiax-Waft, that puts to Before her troth-night: fey, and trifly's.
Cam. I would not be a flander-ey, to hearse
My Soueraigne Miftrefte clouded fo, without
My prefent vengeance taken: threw my heart,
You never spoke what did become you elfe
This thinf, which to reiterate, were fin
As deepe as that, through true.
Lee. Is whispering nothing?
In leaning Cheek to Cheek? is meeting Noises?
Kifling with in-fide Lip? clapping the Caifer
Of Laughter, with a fight? (a Note infallible
Of breaking Hornefe) horfing foot on feet?
Skulling in corners? withving Clacks more toift?
Hours, Minutes? Neone, Mid-night? and all Eyes
Blind with the Pin and Web, but theirs; theirs only,
That would viforne be wicked? is this nothing?
Why then the World, and all that's right, is nothing.
The covering Skifte is nothing, Behemis nothing,
My Wife is nothing, nor Nothing haue thole
Nothing, if this be nothing.
Cam. Good my Lord; be cur'd
Of this difeafe Opinion, and betimes,
For'tis most dangerous,
Lee. Say it be'ts true.
Cam. No, no, my Lord.
Lee. But, I pr'ythee, pray eyes:
I pray thou lyft Contflag, and hate thee,
Proonounce thee a gifle Low, a monifeue Stare,
Or eke a hourting Temporizer, that Can't with thine eyes at once fee good and eull,
Indulging to them both: were my Wiues Liner
Infected (as her life) she would not live
The running of one Gaffe.
Cam. Who do's infet her?
Lee. Why he that wearest her like her Medall, hanging About his neck (Behemis) who, if
Had Servants true about me, that bare eyes
To feé like mine Honor, as their Profits,
(Their owne particulr Thrifts) they would doe that
Which should vnde more doing: I, and thou
His Cyp-Bearer, whom I from neater forme
Have Bench'd, and throw'd to Worship, who may't fe Plainly, as Heauen fees Earth, and Earth fees Heauen,
How I am gald', might't be-spice a Cup,
To give mine Enemy a lafting Wunke:
Which Draught to me, were cordiall,
Cam. Sir (my Lord)
I could doe this, and that with no rafh Potion,
But with a ftringing Dram, that should not worke Maliciously, like Boyfon. But I cannot Beate this Cracke to be in my dread Miftrefte
(Not incomparably being Honourable.)
I have lost the'd.
Lee. Make thy queftion, and goe not:
Do't think I am fo muddy, fo unferfed,
To appoint my felfe in this vexation?
Sully the purifie and whiteneffe of my Sheetes
(Which to preferre, is Sleepes, which being fpoiled Is Gnoades, Thoemes, Neetles, Tayles of Waptes)
Gave fuchall to the blood of the Prince, my Sonne,
(Who I doe thinkes is mine, and love as mine)
Without ripe mowing to? Would I doe this?
Cam. I must beleue you(Sir)
I doe, and will fetch off Behemis: for'
Provided, that when hee's remould, your Highneffe
Will take againe your Queenne, as yours at firft, Even for your Sonnes fake, and thereby for containing
The Injurie of Tongues, in Courts and Kindomes
Knowne, and aludy'd to yours.
Lee. Thou dost not advise me,
Even fo as I mine owne courfe haue fet downe:
He guef no blemiff to her Honor, none.
Cam. My Lord,
Goe then; and with a countenance as ele"fere
As Friendship weares at Seas, keep with Behemia,
And with your Queene: I am his Cup-Bearer,
If from me he haue wholesome Beveridge,
Account me not your Servant.
Lee. This is all:
Do't, and thou haft the one halfe of my heart;
Do't not, thou split't thine owne.
Cam. He do't, my Lord.
Lee. I will ferene friendly, as thou haft advis'd me, Exit
Cam. O miserable Lady. But for me,
What cafe fland I in? I must be the pooyoner
Of good Felxeneus, and my ground to do't,
Is the obedience to a Master; one
Who in Rebellion with him elfe, will have
All that are his, fo too. To doe this deed,
Promotion follows: If I could find example
Of thousand's that had stuck unapted Kings,
And flourifh'd after, I'd not do't: But since
Nor Brat, nor Stone, nor Patchem bears not one,
Let Villanie it felle forwar't. I maft
Forfake the Court: to do't, or no, is certaine
To me a breake-neck. Happy Starre raigne now, Here comes Behemia. Enter Felxeneus.
Pc. This is strange: Me thinks
My favor here begins to warepe. Not speake?
Good day Camus.
Cam. Haile moft Royall Sir.
Pc. What is the Newes th' Court?
Cam. None rare,(my Lord.)
Tes. The King hith on such a countenance,
As he had lof't Prouince, and a Region
Loud, as he loues himfelfe: even now I met him
With culhumate complemente, when hee
Wrafting his eyes to th' contrary, and falling
A Lippe of much contempt, speaks from me, and
So leaves me, to confider what is breeding,
That changes thus his Mannets.
Cam. I dare not know (my Lord.)
Pc. How dare not doe not doe you know, and dare not?
Be intelligent to me: 'tis thereabouts:
For to your felfe, what you doe know, you muft,
And cannot fay, you dare not. Good Camus,
You that yet are alfo, that have done
This, and fay you, that yet are well.
Cam. There is a ficknefe
Which puts some of vs in distemper, but I cannot name the Diseafe, and it is caught
Of you, that yet are well.
Pc. How caught of me?
Make me not fighted like the Bafnilique.
I hate
I have look'd on thousands who have sped the better
By my sagacity, but kill'd none to Comma.
As you are certainly a Gentleman, thereto
Clerke-like experience'd, which no lefe adores
Our Gentry, then our Parents Noble Names,
In whose success we are gen'le: I beseech you,
If you know ought which do's behove my knowledge,
That of, to inform'd, imprison't not
In ignornant concealment.

Camilla. I may not answer.

Pet. A Sickavell caught of me, and yet I well?
I must be answer'd. Do thou heare Comma,
I continue thee, by all the parts of man,
Which Honor do's acknowledge, whereof the least
Is not this Suit of mine, that thou declare
What incendence thou dost gheefe of harme
Is creeping toward me, how faire off, how nere,
Which way to be prevented, if to be
If not, how best to bear it.

Cam. Sir, I will tell you,
Since I am charg'd in Honor, and by him
That I heinke Honorablest therefore make my counsall,
Which must be cut as swiftly follow'd, as I mean't to utter it; or both your selfe, and me,
Cry loud, and so good hight.

Pet. On, good Comma.

Cam. I am appointed him to murth she.

Pet. By whom, Comma?

Cam. By the King.

Pet. For what?

Cam. He thinkes, may with all confidence he swears,
As he had seen't, or beene an instrument
To vice you to, that you haue toucht his Queene Forbiddenly.

Pet. Oh then, my best blood turned
To an infected Goly, and my Name
Be post'd with others, that did betray the best Turne them my frensh Reputation to
A favour, that may strike the dullest Norvilll
Where I arrive, and my approacht be smother'd,
Nay hasted too, worfe then the greatest Infection
That ere was heard, or read.

Cam. Swear his thought over
By each particular Starre in Heaven, and
By all their Inclinations you may as well
Forbid the Sea for to obey the Moone,
As (or by Oath) remove, or (Counsall) shake
The Fabrick of his Folly, whose foundaton
Is py'd upon his Faith, and will continue
The standing of his Body.

Pet. How should this grow?

Cam. I know not: but I am sure 'tis safer to Avoid what's gowem, then question how 'tis borne.
If therefore you doe truth in mine honest
That eyes enclosed in this Trunke, which you Shall bear long impawed, away to Night,
Your Followers I will whisper to the Befbrnifie,
And will by tways, and threes, at severall Poffortem, Clear them o'th Citie : For my selfe, I'll put My fortunes to your forseue, (which are here
By this diversitie) lost. Be not uncertaine,
For the honor of my Parents, I
Have sterr'd Truth, which if you seek to prove
I date not stand by; nor shall you be safer,
Then one condemn'd by the Kings owne mouth:
Threton his Execution sworn.

Pet. I doe believe thee:
I saw his heart in's face. Give me thy hand,
Be Pilot to me, and thy places shall Still neighbour mine. My Ships are ready, and My people did expect my hence departure.
Two days agoe. This Isolomie
Is for a precious Creature: as flees's rare,
Must it be great; and, as his Person's mightie,
Must it be violent: and, as he do's conceive,
He is difhonor'd by a man, which ever
Prefer'd to him, why his Reuenges muft
In that be made more bitter. Fear one shades me:
Good Expedition be my friend, and comfort
The gracious Queene part of his Theame, but nothing
Of his ill-then suspension. Come Camilla,
I will respect thee as a Father, if Thou bearst my life off, hence: Let vs astoud.

Cam. It is in mine authoritie to command
The Keys of all the Palfotem. Please your Highnesse
To take the urgent boare. Come Sir, away. Exeunt.

Actus Secundus. Scena Prima.

Enter Hermione, Mamillius, Ladies: Lovers,
Antique Lords.

Her. Take the Boy to you: he so troubles me,
Tis past enduring.

Lady. Come (my gracious Lord)
Shall I be your play-fellow?

Mam. No, I le none of you.

Lady. Why? (my sweet Lord?)

Mam. You'll kille me hard, and speake to me, as if I were a Baby still. I love you better.

2. Lady. And why so? (my Lord?)

Mam. Not for because
Your Browes are blacker (yet black-browes they say Become some Women best, so that there be not Too much hair there, but in a Cemicircle,
Or a halfe-Moone, made with a Pen.)

2. Lady. Who taught this?

Mam. I learn'd it out of Women's faces: pray now,
What colour are your eye-browes?

Lady. Blew (my Lord.)

Mam. Nay, that's a mock: I have seen a Ladies Nose
That he's beene blew, but not her eye-browes.

Lady. Harke ye,
The Queene (your Mother) rounds space: we shall Present our servitures to a fine new Prince
One of these dayes, and then you'll wanton with vs,
If we would have you.

2. Lady. She's spread of late
Into a goodly Bulke (good time encounter her.)

Her. What wildsome firs amongst you? Come Sir, now
I am for you again: 'Pray you fit by vs,
And tell's a Tale.

Mam. Merry, or sad, that'll be.

Her. As merry as you will,

Mam. A sad Tale's best for Winter:
I have one of Spritres, and Goblins.

Her. Let's have that (good Sir)

Come on, sit downe, come on, and doe your best.
To fright me with your Spritres, you're powerfull at it.

A 3.  Man. There
The Winter's Tale

Mam. There was a man.

Her. Nay, come sit down: then on.

Mam. Dwell by a Church-yard: I will tell it softly,
Yond Cricketers shall not hear it.

Her. Come on then, and giu't me in mine ear.

Mam. Was he met with? his Traine? Camillo with him?

Lord. Behind the tuft of Pines I met them, never Saw I men cower so on their way: I eyed them
Even to their Ships.

Leo. How blest am I

In my true Chearle? in my true Opinion?
Alack, for letter knowledge, how accurst?
In being so blest? There may be in the Cup
A Spider steep'd, and one may drink, depart;
And yet partake no venom: (for his knowledge
Is not infected) but if one present
Thabbard's Ingredient to his eye, make knowne
How he hath drunkke, he cracks his gorge, his sides
With violent Heels: I haue drunkke, and seen the Spider.

Camillo was his helpe in this, his Pandar:
There is a Plot against my Life, my Crowne;
All's true that is misrouted: that false Villaine,
Whom I employ'd, was pre-employ'd by him:
He ha's discouer'd my Designe, and I
Remaine a pinch'd Thing; yea, a very Trick
For them to play at will: how came the Patternes
So easily open?

Lord. By his great authoritie,
Which often hati no letter principle, then so,
On your command.

Leo. I know't too well.

Give me the Boy, I am glad you did not nurse him:
Though he do's bear some signs of me, yet you
Have too much blood in him.

Her. What is this? Sport?

Leo. Beare the Boy hence, he shall not come about her,
Away with him, and let her sport her selfe
With that thee's big- with, for 'tis Peroleses
Hath made thee dwell thus,

Her. But I'll say he had not;

And Ile be sworne you would beleeme my saying,
How e're you learn to th' Nayward.

Leo. You (my Lord)

Looke on her, marke her well: be but about
To say she is a godly Lady, and
The lufhice of your hearts will thereto adde
'Tis pity thee's not honest: Honorable,
Pray thee, hurt not this her without-dote-forme,
(Which on my faith defers this high speech) and Strait
The Shaggs, the Humor, Ha's, the Petry-brands
That Camullie doth vfe; Oul, I am out,
That Mercy do's, for Camullie will fear
Verse it selle: these Shrugs, these Hum's, and Ha's,
When you haue told thee's godly, come betwene,
Ere you can say thee's honest: But be't knowne
(From him that ha's most cause to griete it should be) She's an Adulteresse.

Her. Should a Villaine say so,
(The most repleant'st Villaine in the World)
He were as much more Villaine: you (my Lord)
Doe but mistake.

Leo. You haue mistooke (my Lady)

Peroleses for Perotes: O thou Thing, (Which Ile not call a Creature of thy place,
Leaf 't arb巴菲特e (making me the precedent)

Should a like Language vie to all degrees,
And mannerly distinguisht leave out,
Betwixt the Prince and Beggar: I hate said
She's an Adulteresse, I hate said with whom:
More; she's a Traitor, and Camillo is
A Treacher with her, and one that knowes
Wh. the should blame to know her felie,
But with her most vild Principal; that thee's
A Bed-fuwarer, even as bad as thine
That Vulgars gue boldeft Titles; and privy
To this their late escape.

Her. No (by my life)

Privy to none of this: how will this griete you,
When you shall come to clearer knowledge, that
You thus haue publish'd? me? Gentile my Lord,
You scarce can right me throughly, then, to say
You did mistoke.

Leo. No: if I mistake

In these Foundations which I build vpon
The Centre is not bigge enough to bear
A Schoole; Boyes Top. Away with her, to Prisfon:
He who shall speake for her, a farre off guiltie,
But that he speakes.

Her. There's some ill Planet raigned:
I must be patience, till the Heavens looke
With an aspect more favorable. Good my Lords,
I am not pioone to weeping (as our Sex Commonly are) the want of which vaine dew
Perchance shall dry your pitties: but I have
That honorable Griefe lodg'd here, which burnes
Warre this Teares downe: beleeve you all (my Lords)
With thought is too quiesced, as your Charitie
Shall left infrutue you, poor, and me, and so
The Kings will be performed.

Leo. Shall I be heard?

Her. Who is't that goes with me? before your Highness
My Women may be with me, for you see
My plight requites it. Doe not wepe (good Poole)
There is no cause: When you shall know your Milites
He's defent'd: Prisoner, then abour in Teares,
As I come out; this Action I now goe on,
Is for my better grace. Adieu (my Lord)
I never will'd to see you sorry now
I trust I shall my Woman come, you haue laisse.

Leo. O, doe our budding: hence,

Lord. Before your Highness call the Queene againe.

Antig. Be certaine what you do (Sir) lest your luffice
Prone violence, in the which three great ones suffer,
Your Selle, your Queene, your Name,
Lord. For her (my Lord)

I dare my life lay downe, and will doe't (Sir)
Please you accept it; thus the Queene is spotelle
I'he eyes of Heauen, and too you (I meane)
In this, which you accuse her.

Antig. If it proue

She's other wife, Ile keep her Stables where
I lodge my Wife, Ile goe in couples with her
Then when I feel, and see her, no farther truthere:
For every ynych of Woman in the World,
I, every dram of Women flesh is stale,
If the be.

Leo. Hold your peace.

Lord. Good my Lord,

Antig. It is for you we speake, not for our selves.
You are abus'd, and by some putter on,
That will be damn'd for't: would I knew the Villaine,
I would
The Winters Tale. 283

Scena Secunda.

Enter Pans, a Gentleman, Cqual, Emilia.

Paul. The Keeper of the prison, call to him:
Let him his knowledge who I am. Good Lady, No Court in Europe is too good for thee, What doth thou then in prison? Now good Sir, You know me, do you not?

Gen. For a worthy Lady, And one, who much I honour.

Pans. Pray you then, Conduct me to the Queen.

Gen. I may not (Madam) To the contrary I have express commandment, Here's a do, to locke you honestly & honour from These hee of gentle visitors. It's lawfull pray you To see her Women? Any of them? Emilia?

Gen. So please you (Madam) To put a part thereof, you attendants, I Shall bring Emilia forth.

Pans. Pray now call her: With draw your felues.

Gen. And Madam, I must be present at your Conference. Pans. Well: be't so: prethee. Here's such a doe, to make no blame, a blame, As pales colouring. Dear Gentlewoman, How fares our gracious Lady?

Emil. As well as one to great, and so forborne May hold together: On her tights, and greeves (Which never tender Lady hath borne greater) She is, something before her time, deliver'd.

Pans. A boy?

Emil. A daughter, and a goodly babe, I wish, and like to live: the Queene receiveth Much comfort in't: She's, my poor prisoner, I am innocent at you.

Pans. I dare be wisome; These dangerous, volatile Lunes' th' King, be theed them: He must be hold on, and he shall the office becomes a woman beft. He take's upon me, If I prove hony-mouth'd, let my tongue blister, And never to my red-lou'd Angier bee The Trumpet any more: pray you (Emilia) Command my best obedience to the Queene, If the dares trust me with her little babe, I'll shew't the King, and undertake to bee Her Advocate to th' Law'd, I do not know How he may sozen at the sight o' th' Child: She silence often of pure innocence Periwades, when speaking failles,

Emil. Most worthy Madam, your honor, and your goodnesse is so evident, That your face renders not his mistake, A thrilling yells: there is no Lady living So meete for this great errand: please your Ladiship To visit the next roome, Ile presently Acquaint the Queene of your most noble offer, Who, but to day hammer'd of this designe, But durst not tempt a minister of honour Least she should be deny'd, Enter Lords, Seruants, Paulina, Antigonus, and Lords.

Lea. Night nor day, nor rest: 'tis but weakness To bear the matter thus: mere weakness, if The cause were not in being; part of it, Cause, she, th'o'dul'tesse: for the harlot-King Is quite beyond mine Arme, out of the blanke And leuell of my braine: plot-proof: but thine, I can hooke to me: say that she were gone, Given to the fire, a moysty of my rest Might come to me againe. Whole there? Ser. My Lord. Leo. How do's the boy? Ser. He tooke good rest to night: 'tis hop'd. His fickle'st is discharge'd.

Leo. To see his Nobleness, Conceyuing the d honour of his Mother. He straight declin'd, droop'd, took it deeply, Faintly, and fix'd the shame on't in himselfe: Threw-off his spirit, his Appetite, his Sleep, And down-right languishing. Leave me alone: goe, See how he fares: Prithee, no thought of him, The very thought of my Revenge that way Receiv'd upon me: in himselfe too mightie, And in his partes, his Alliance: Let him be, Vntill a time may serue. For present vengeance Take it on her: Camilla, and Polixenes.

Laughter me: make their pastime at my sorrow: They should not laugh, if I could reach them, nor Shall she, within my powre.

Enter Paulina.

Lord. You must not enter.

Paul. Nay rather (good my Lords) be coud to me: Fear you his tyrannous passion more (als) Then the Queenes life? A gracious innocent soule, More free, then he is jealous.

Ante. That's enough.

Ser. Madam; he hath not slept to night, commanded None should come thim.

Paul. Not for her (good Sir) I come to bring him sleepe. 'Tis such as you That creeps like shadowes by him, and doth fight At each his needlesse heaving: such as you Nourish the cause of his awaking. I Do come with words, as medicinally, as true; (Honest, as others,) to purge him of that humor,] That presse him from sleepe.

Leo. How? With whom? Ant. With this audacious Lady, Antigonus, I charg'd thee that she should not come about me, I knew she would.

Ser. I told her to (my Lord) On your displeasures persill, and on mine. She should not visit you.

Leo. What can't not rule her? Paul. From all dishonestie he can: in this (Vatilefe he take the course that you have done) Commit me, for committing honer, truth, He shall not rule me.

Ant. Lay you now, you hear, When she will take the sake, I let her run, But fhee I not stumble.

Paul. Good my Lord, I come: And I beleach you hear me, who prufessles My felle you loyall Seruant; your Phisitian, Your moft obedient Counsellor: yet that dares Lefle appear to, in conforting you Emilies, Then fuch as moft i_FREE your. Say, I come From your good Queene.

Leo. Good Queene? Paul. Good Queene (my Lord) good Queene, I fay good Queene, And would by combate, make her good fo, were I A man, the world about you.

Leo. For her lence. Paul. Let him that makes but trifles of his eyes First hand me: an own accord, lie off, But first, fhe do my errand. The good Queene (For she is good) hath brought you with a daughter, Heere firs. Commends it to your bleafing.

Paul. No lo: I am as ignorat in that, as you, In entitling me: and no fette honest Then you are mad: which is enough, Ile warrant (As this world goes) to paffe for honeft.

Leo. Traitors: Will you not pull her out? Give her the Baffard, Thou dotard, thou art woman-ty: unrefolved By thy dame Pufh here. Take vp the Baffard, Take vp, I say: giue t' thy Croze.

Paul. For ever Unvenerable be thy hands, if thou Tak't up the Princefe, by that forced bafeneffe Which he has put vp't

Leo. He dreads his Wife.

Paul. So you would I did: then were pain all doubt You'd call your children, yours,

Leo. A nebl of Traitors.

Ant. I am come, by this good light,

Paul. Not I: nor any But one that's here: and that's himselfe for me;
The Winters Tale.

The sacred Honor of himselfe, his Queene,
His hopefull Sonnes, his Babes, bearayes to Stander,
Wherefore thing is sharper then the Swords, and will not (For as the cafe now stands, it is a Curse
He cannot be compell'd to't) once remove
The Root of his Opinion, which is rotten,
As ever Orke, or Stone was found.

Leo. A Callat
Of boundlesse tongue, who late hath beat her Husband,
And now bayes me: This Blat is none of mine,
It is the Ilice of Palamon.

Hence with it, and together with the Dam,
Commit them to the fire.

Paul. It is yours:
And might weely thold Proverb to thy charge,
So, like you, is the worse. Behold (my Lords)
Although the Print be little the whole Matter
And Copy of the Father: Eye, Nose, Lippe,
The trick of 3 Frowne, his Fore-head, arm, the Valley,
The pretty damps of his Chin, and Cheeker, his Smiles:
The very Mold, and name of Hand, Nasal, Finger,
And thou good Goddesse Nature, which haft made it
So like to him that got it, at thou haft
The ordering of the Mind too, mongall Colours
No Yellow in't, still the suspic, as he doth,
Her Children, not her Husband.

A groffe Hippge:
And Lozell, thou art worthy to be hang'd,
That will not slay her Tongue.

Antig. Hang all the Husband
That cannot doe that Fest, you'll issue your selfe, Hardly one Subject.

Leo. Once more take her heare.

Paul. A most vnworthy, and unnatural Lord
Can doe no more.

Leo. Ie ha'the burne, burnt,
Paul. I care not:

It is an Heretique that makes the fire,
Not the which burns in't. Ie not call you Tyrant:
But this most cruel vigule of your Queene
(Not able to produce more acculation
Then your owne weake-hand'd Fancy) somthing favour
Of Tyranny, and will ignoble make you,
Yes, scandalous to the World.

Leo. Or your Allegance,
Out of the Chamber with her. Were I a Tyrant,
Where were her life? the durft not call me so,
If the did know me one. Away with her.

Paul. I pray you do not puth me, I'll be gone.
Look to your Babe (my Lord) it is yours: fear her
A better guarding Spirit. What needs their hands?
You that are thus to tender o're his Follies,
Will never doe him good, not one of you,
So, Farewell, we are gone.

Leo. Thou (Trayto) last set on thy Wife to this.
My Child? away with't! even thou that hast
A heart to tender o're it, take it hence,
And ite it instantly confirm'd with fire.
Even thou, and none but thou. Take it vp straightly:
Within this houre bring me word 'tis done.
(And by good femeime) or Ie feize thy life,
With what thou art call'd thine: if thou refuse,
And wilt encounter with my Wrath, say fo;
The Ballard, braynes with thine my proper hands
Shall Idfn out, Grecce is it to the fire,
For thou fent it on thy Wife.

Antig. I did not, Sir:
Thefe Lords, my Noble Fellowes, if they please,
Can cleare me in's.

Lords. We can: my Royall Liege,
He is not guilty of her comming hither.

Leo. You're lyers all.

Lord. Befeech your Highness, give vs better credit,
We haue always truly ler'd you, and befeech'
So to esteeme of vs: and on our knees we begge,
(As recompence of our desire fruities Paff, and to come,) that you doe change this purpose,
Which being fo horible, so bloody, must
Lead on to some foule blisse. We all kneele.

Leo. I am a Feather for each Wind that blows:
Shall I live on, to see this Ballard kneele,
And call me Father? better burne it now,
Then curse it then. But be it: let it live.
It shall not neyther. You Sir, come you bither:
You that have beene so tenderly officious
With Lady (2 Laurer) your Mid. wife there,
To faue this Ballards life, for 'tis a Ballard,
So sure as this Beards grey, What will you aduenture,
To faue this Brats life?

Antig. Anything (my Lord)
That my abilitie may vsere,
And Noblenesse impofo: at least this much;
Ie pone the little blood which I have left,
To faue the Innocents: any thing possible.

Leo. It shall be possible: So ease by this Sword
You will performe my bidding.

Antig. I will (my Lord.)

Leo. Make, and performe it: feel those, for the faire
Of any point in's, shall not only be
Death to thy selfe, but to thy lwd-creag'd Wife, (Whom for this time we pardon) We enioy one thee,
As thou art Liege-man to vs, the thou carry
This female Ballard hence, and that thou bearst it
To some remote and defart place, quite out
Of our Dominions; and that there thou leave it (Without more mercy) it owne protection,
And favour of the Climate : as by strange fortune;
It came to vs, doe in justice charge thee,
On thy Soules perill, and thy Bodyes torture,
That thou commend it strangely to some place,
Where Chance may musr, or end it: take it vp.

Antig. I swear to doe this; though a prefent death
Had beene more mercifull. Come on (poore Babe)
Some powerful Spirit infruck the Kyres and Rausens
To be thy Nurces. Wolves and Bears, they say,
(Calling their husagennce alike) have done
Like offices of Pitty. Sir, be prosperous
In more then this deed do's require; and Blessing
Against this Crueltie, fight on thy fide (Poore Thing, condemn'd to loffe.)

Leo. No: Ie not reare

Antig. Enter a Servant.

Sera. Plesse your Highness, Poets
From thence you lent to th'Oracle, are come
An houre since: Cleomenes and Dido,
Being well arraiv'd from Delphos, are both landed,
Haling to th' Court.

Lord. So plesse you (Sir) ther speed
Hath beene beyond accomplis.

Leo. Twentie three days
They have beene abente 'tis good speed: fore-tells
The great Apolls suddenly will issue

The
The truth of this appear'd: Prepare you, Lords, Summon a Session, that we may arrange Our most disloyal Lady: for as the hand Been publicly accus'd, so shall the hau A suit and open Triall. While the leaves, My heart will be a burden to me. Leave me, And think and upon my bidding. Exeunt.

Enter Cleomenes and Dion.

Cle. The Cymar's delicate, the Ayre most sweet; Fertile the life, the Temple much surprising The common prayse it beares.

Dion. I shall report, For now it caus'd me, the Celestial Habits, (Me thinks I fo should term the) and the reverence Of the great Weares. O, the Sacrifice, How ceremonious, solemn, and vs. earthly It was i'th'Offering;

Cleo. But of all, the buft And the rare-dest'ning Voyce o'th'Oracle, Kin to Loius Thunders, so surpriz'd my Sense, That I was nothing.

Dio. If thou'rent o'th' Journey Proue as successefull to the Queene (O be't so) As it hath beene to vs, rare, pleasant, speedy, The time is worth the vie on.

Cleo. Great Apollo Turns all to th'best: these Proclamations, So forcing faults upon Hermione, I little like.

Dio. The violent carriage of it Will please, or end the Bufnette, when the Oracle (Thus by Apollo's great Divine seal'd vp) Shall the Content decree: something rare Even then will rush to knowledge. Go, forth Herse; And gracious be the shue. Exeunt.

Enter Leontes, Lords, Officers. : Hermione (as to her Trial) Ladies: Cleomenes, Dion.

Leo. This Seffions (to our great grieve we pronounce) Even puffs 'g'sull our heart. The partie try'd, The Daughter of a King, our Vite, and one Of vs too much belou'd. Let vs be clear'd Of being tyrannous, since we are openly Proceed in justice which shall have due course, Even to the God or the Purgation: Produce the呼声.

Officr. It is his Highnesse pleasure, that the Queene Appeare in person, here in Court. Silence.

Leo. Reade the Indictment.

Officr. Hermione, Queene is to the worthy Leontes, King of Sicile, thus art her accused and arraigned of High Treason, on committing Adultery with Polixenes King of Bohemia, and conspiring with Camillo to take away the Life of our Sovereign Lord the King. By Royal Indictment, the sentence whereof being by circumstances partly laid open, though Hermione con- trary to the Faith and Allegiance of a true Subject dost commit faile and oyle them, for their better safety, to be arraigned by Night.

Her. Since what I am to say, must be but that Which contradicts my Accusation, and The testimonie on my part, no other But what comes from my selfe, it shall scarce boot me To say, Not guiltie: mute Integritie Being counted Falsehood, shall as I express it) Be so receiv'd: But thus, if Powres Divine Behold our humane Actions (as they doe) I doubt not then, but innocence shall make False Accusation blufh, and Tyrannie Tremble at Patience. You (my Lord,) best know (Whom leafl will I come to doe so,) my past life Hath beene as continent, as chaste, as true, As I am now unhappy; which is more Then Historie can pattern, though deuils'd, And play'd, to take Spectators. For behold me, A Fellow of the Royal Bed, which owe A Motte of the Throne: a great King's Daughter, The Mother to a hopeful Prince, here standing To prove, and to take his Life, and Honor, for Who pleas'd to come, and hear. For Life, I prize it As I/weigh Grieifs (which I would spare:) For Honor, 'Tis a derogation from me to mine, And onely that I stand for. I appeale To your owne Conscience (Sir) before Polixenes Came to your Court, how I was in your grace, How merited to be so: Since he came, With what encounter to your Person, I have stray'd: it appearsthus: if one not beyond The bound of Honor, or in act, or will That way enchanting, hardened be the hearts Of all that hear me, and my heatr of Run Cry ite upon my Grace.

Leo. I am heard yet, That any of these bolder Visitors would Livel Impudence to game-fay what they did, Then to perform it full.

Her. That's true enough, Though 'tis a saying (Sir) not due to me.

Leo. You will not owne it.

Her. More then Mistrust of, Which comes to me in name of fault, I must not At all acknowledge. lea Polixenes (With whom I am accus'd) do confess I love him, as in Honor he require'd: With such a kind of Love, as might become A Lady like me; with a Love, reun fuch, So, and no other, as your selfe commanded: Which, not to have done, I think I been in both Disobedience, and Ingratitude To you, and toward your Friend, whose Love had spoke, Even since it could speake, from an Infant, freely, That it was yours. Now for Conspiracie, I know not how it tafteth, though it be diffil'd For me to try how: All I know of it, Is, that Camillo was an honor man; And why he left your Court, the Gods themselves (Writing no more then) are ignorant.

Leo. You knew of his departure, as you know What you have vnderde to doe in's absence.
The Winters Tale.

Her, Sir, you speake a Language that I understand not: My Life stands in the leuell of your dreames, Which I lay downe.

Lee. Your actions are my dreames, You had a Baffard by Polixenes, And I but dream'd it: As you were past all shame, (Those of your Fact are so) so past all truth;

Which to deny, concernes more then suaites: for as Thy Brat hath beene cast out, like to it selfe, No Father owning it (which is indeed More criminal in thee, then it shou'd) Shalt feel our Judgement, in whole easiest passage, Looke for no lesse then death.

Her, Sir, spare your threats: The Bugge which you would fright me with, I seek:

To me can Life be no commodity: The crowne and comfort of my life (your favor) I doe give loath, for I doe feel it gone, But know not how it went. My second joy, And first fruits of my body from his presence I am bar'd like one infectious, My third comfort (Star'd most vnluckily) is from my breast (The innocent milke in most innocent mouth)

Hal'd out to mutter. My feife on every post
Proclaim'd a Strumpet: With impudent hatred The Child-bed privilidge deny'd, which Lord's To women of all nation. Lately her'd Here, to this place, 'tis open ayre, before I have not strength of limit. Now (my Liege) Tell me what blessings I have here alue,

That I should fear to die? Therefore proceed:
But yeares this: mistake me not, no Life, (I prize it not a straw) but for mine Honor, Which I would free; if I shou'd be condemn'd Upon furriers (all proofes sleeping life, But what your Jealousies awake) I tell you This rigor, and not Law. Your honors all, I doe referre me to the Oracle:

Apolo be my judge.

Lee. This your request
Is altogether just: therefore bring forth (And in Apolo's name) his oracle.

Her. The Emperor of Ruffia was my Father, Oh that he were alive, and here beholding His Daughters Tryall: that he did but see The baneffe of my miferie yet with eyes Of Pity, not Reuenge.

Officer. You have here swears upon this sword of Justice, That ye (Clemens and Dix) have been both at Delphos, and from thence have brought this feal'd-yp Oracle by the hand deliuer'd Of great Apolo's Priest; and that since then, You have not daring to break the holy Seale, Nor read the Secrets in't.

Cleopatra. All this we sweare.

Lee. Steake up the Seales, and read.

Officer. Hernonoe is chief, Polixenes blamelle, Camillo a true Scylla, Leontes a false Tyrant, his innocent Bake unjustly iudge, and the King shall liue without an heir: if that which is left for be not found.

Lords. Now blest be the great Apolo.

Her. Pray'd.

Lee. Haft thou read truth?

Officer. I (my Lord) even so as it is here set downe.

Lee. There is no truth at all in the Oracle:

The Sessions shall proceed: this is meree falfhood.

Ser. My Lord the King? the King?

Lee. What is the purpose?

Ser. O Sir, I shall be bate to report it.

The Prince your Sonne, with more conceit, and ease Of the Queene speed, is gone.

Lee. How gone?

Ser. Is dead.

Lee. Apollo's angry, and the Feaumens themselves
Do not strike at my Insuffices. How now there? Paul. This neyves most call to the Queene: Look downe And see what Deatht is doing.

Lee. Take her hence.

Her. Her heart it but o're-charg'd: she will recover.

I have too much beleu'd mine owne suspicion, 'Befeech you tenderly apply to her Some remedies for life. Apollo pardon
My great prophaneesse gainst thine Oracle. Ilee reconcile me to Polixenes,
New woe my Queene, recall the good Camillo (Whom I proclaim a man of truth, of Mercy:)

For being transported by my Jealousies
To bloody thoughts, and to revenge, I chose Camillo for the minifter, to payton
My friend Polixenes: which had been done,
But that the good mind of Camillo tardied
My swift command: though I with Death, and with Reward, did threaten and encourage him,
Not doing it, and being done: he (most humane,
And fill'd with Honor) to my Kingly Grace
Vndesp'd my pracie, put his fortunes here (Which you know great) and to the hazard
Of all Incertainties, himselfe commended,
No richer then his Honor: How he gipsters
Through my Ruff, and how his Pietie
Do's my deeds make the blacker?

Paul. Woe the while;
O cut my Lace, slash my heart (cracking it)
Beseeche too.

Lee. What shat is this good Lady?

Paul. What studied torments (Tyrants) haft for me?

Muft I receive? whole every word deserues
To talest of thy mortal wooff. Thy Tyranny (Together working with thy Jealousies,
Pances too weeke for Boys, too green and idle
For Girlers of Nine) O think what they have done,
And then unmad indeed: flake-mad: for all
Thy by-gone fouleries were but spases of it.

That thou betrayedst Polixenes, it was nothing,
(That did but shew thee, of a Fool, inconstant, And damnable ingratitude;) Nor was't much,
Thou wouldst have pay'd not good Camillo's Honor
To have him kill a King? poor Trelpases,
More monstrous standing by: whereof I reckon
The calling forth to Creues, thy Baby-daughter,
To be or none or little: though a Deuell
Would have fced water out of fire, ere don'ts;
Nor is it dearly layd to thee, the death
Of the young Prince, whose honorable thoughts Thoughts high for one so tender) left the heart
That could conceit a groffe and foolish Sire
Blemish'd his gracious Dam; this is not, no
Lay'd to thine answer: but the left O Lord,
When I have said, cry woe: the Queene, the Queene,
The sweet fit, dier't creature's dead: & vengeance for't
Not drop'd donevye yet.
Lord. The higher powres forbid.

Pam. I say she's dead: Ile sweer t. If word, no oath Preserue nor, go and fee: if you can bring Tinture, or tincture in her lip, her eye
Haete outewardly, or breath within, Ile serene you
As I would do the Gods. But, O thou Tyrant,
Do not spend these things, for they are heavier
Then all thy woes can pierre: therefore betake thee
To nothing but dispise. A thousand yere,
Ten thousand yearts together, naked, falling,
Upon a barren Mountain, and till Winter
In fame perpetuall, could not move the Gods
To looke that way thou wert.

Lea. Goon, go on:
Thou canst not speake too much, I have defer'd
All tongues to talke to their bitts.

Lord. Say no more;
How ere the businesse goes, you haue made fault
I thold bollythelf of your speach.

Pam. I am forty for't;
All faults I make, when I shall come to know them,
I do repent; Als, I have thew'd too much
The rashnesse of a woman the is toucht
To th'Noble heart. What's gone, and what's past helpe
Should be past: greefe: Don not receive affliction
At my petition! beleevt you, rather
Let me be puni'th, that haue minded you
Of what you should repent. Now (good my Liege)
Sir, Royall Sir, for't goodlthy women:
Ile speake of her no more, nor of your Children:
Ile not remember you of my owne Lord,
(Who is left too) take your patience to you,
And Ile say nothing.

Leo. Thou didst speake but well,
When moost the truth: which I receave much better,
Then to be prided of thee. Prteche bring me
To the dead bodies of my Queen, and Sonne,
One graue shall be for both: Upon them shall
The caus'es of their death appeare (unto
Our shame perpetuall) once a day, Ille visit
The Cappell where they ly, and reare fixed there Shall be my recreacion, so long as Nature
Will beare up with this exercice, so long
I dayly vow to we ft. Come, and lead me
To these foreover.

I call upon thee.

Mar. Make your beft haffe, and go not Too-farre'th Land: its like to be lowd weather,
Besides this place is famous for the Creatures
Of prey, th't keep'e vpon't.

Ant. Go thither away,
Ile follow infantly.

Mar. I am glad at heart
To be ridde o'th businesse.

Exeunt.

Ant. Come, poore babe;
I haue heard (but not beleev'd) the Spirits o'th'dead
May walke againe: if such thing be, thy Mother
Appeard'to me the night yere: for ne're was dreame
So like a waking. To me comes a creature,
Sometimes her head on one fide, some other,
I neuer saw a vessell of like forrow
So fill'd, and so bconning: in pure white Robes
Like very fancie the did approach.
My Cabine where I lay: th'throw b'ow'd before me,
And (gaping to begin some speche) her eyes
Become two spoues; the fire frant, anon
Did this breake from her. Good Antigone,
Since Fate (against thy better disposition)
Hath made thy perfon for the Flower-out
Of my poore babe, according to thine oath,
Places remote enough are in Boboena,
There wpepe, and leaue it crying: and for the babe
Is counted loot for ever, Perdita
I prether call't: For this vngleth businesse
Put on thee, by my Lord, thou ne'ret thall fee.
Thy Wife Paulina more: and so, with shrieks
She melted into Ayre. Affrighted much,
I did in time collect my selfe, and thought
This was fo, and no flumber: Dreams, are toys,
Yet for this once, yea superflitiously,
I will be quire by this. I do beleevc
Hermione hath suffer'd death, and that Apella would (this being in leade the issue
Of King Pelagon) she should here be lade
(Either for life, or deathly) upon the earth
Of'ts right Father. Blefsore, speche well ther,
There lye, and there thy character: these thee,
Which may it Fortune please, both brend thee (pretty)
And till thine time. The thome beginnes poore wretch,
That for thy mothers fault, art thin expos'd
To loife, and what may follow. Woe ye cannot,
But my heart bleed's and melly perceiv't am I
To be by oath enioy'd to this. Farewell,
The day trownes more and more: thou'lt like to have
A lullable too good: I neuer saw
The heatens so dim'd, by day. A laughe clamon:
Well may I get a boord: This is th'Chace,
Iam gone for ever.

Exeunt anst and Boboena.

Shop. I would there were no age betwixt ten and thirt, nor twenty, or that youth would fleep out the rit:
for there is nothing (in the betweene) but getting wench's with childe, wronging the Accent, fleeing, fighting, haete you now: would any but theye boydblaines of nineteen, and two and twenty hunt this weather?
They have scdre'd away: two of my beft Sheeps, which I fear the Wolfe will sooner finde then the Mater: if any where I have them, 'tis by the fes-fue, housing of lay. Good-lucks (and be th'y will) what have we here? Mercy an's, a Barne? A very pretty barn? A boy. ora Childle I wonder? (A pretty one, a very prettie
one) fare some Scape; Though I am not bookish, yet I

Scena Tertia.

Enter Antigone, a Murtherer, Babe, Sheepesbrond, and Clowne.

Ant. This are perfect then, our ship hath toucht upon
The Detaicts of Boboena.

Mar. I (my Lord) and feare
We have Landed in ill time: the skies looke grimly,
And threaten preser f Uttarles. In my confidence
The heavens with that we have in hand, are angry,
And look to what we vpon's.

Art. Their faced will be done: go get a boord,
Looke to thy barte, ille not be long before

The Winters Tale.

Addus Quartus. Sceena Prima.

Enter Time, the Chorus.

Time. I that please home, try all: both joy and terror Of good, and bad: that makes, and unfolds error. Now take upon me (in the name of Time)
To vie my wings: Impute not it a crime To me, or my swift passage, that I slide O'er fourteen yeares, and leave the growth untrue Of that wide gap, since it is in my power To o'rethrow Law, and in one felloe-borne howse To plant, and ore-welke Cufome. Let me paffe The lane I am, ere ancient It Order was, Or what is now receiv'd. I wende to The times that brought them in, so shall I do To thre'felf things now reigning, and make stile The glistering of this presens, as my Tale Now see's to it: your patience this allowing, I turne my glasse, and give my scene such growing As you had slept betweene: Leucos leaving The effects of his fond souleslue, so greatening That he shus vp himselfe. Imagine me (Gentle Spectators) that I know may be In faire Bohemia, and remember well, I mentioned a fomite the Kings, which Floriss I know name to you: and with speed to pace To speake of Persius, now growne in grace Equall with word ring. What of her intuces I lift not prophete: but let Times newes Be knowne when tis brought forth. A shepheards daug. And what to her adheres, which follows after, (ter Is th'argument of Time: of this allow, If ever you have spent time worse, ere now: 'Tis true, yet that Time himselfe doth lay, He willis cennlessly, you never may.

Scene Secunda.

Enter Palixnes, and Camillo.

Pol. I pray thee (good Camillo) be no more importune: this is a sickness denying thee any thing: a death to grant this.

Camillo. It is fourteen yeares since I saw my Countrie: though I have (for the most part) bin ayerd abroad, I de tire to lay my bones there. Besides, the penitent King (my Master) hath fent for me, to whose feeling forrowes I might be forse aly, or I cowtene to thinke (to which is another fpire to my departure, Pol. As thou loue me (Camillo) wipe not out the teall of thy soules, by leaving me now: the neede I have of thee, thine owne goodnes hath made: better not to have hadd thee, then thus to want thee, thou hauing made me Businesse, (which none (without thee) can suffici tely manage)must either flay to execute them thry felse, or take away with thee the very soules thou hast done: which if I have not enough considerd (as too much I cannot) to bee more thanfull to thee, this will be my flue die, and my profite therein, the heaping friend shippe. Of that factall Countrie Sicilia, priceth itpeak no more, whole very naming, punnishes me with the remembrance

The Winters Tale.

Scene Tertia.

Enter Antiochus singing.

When Daffadis begin to pierce,
While high the Dye son the dale,
Why then comes the sweet after yeare.
For the cold ragus in my winters pale.

The white Swete sleeching on the hedges,
With her the sweet birds, O how they sing.
Dob let my poynting tooths an edge,
For a quart of Ale is as good for a King.

The Larks that tirr Lyra clamours
With might, the Thrushes and the Jay
Are Summer songs for me and my auntes.
While we lay tumbling in the bay.

I have eren'd Prince Florzell, and in my time wore three pile, but now I am out of fume.

But still I go mourning for that (my deere) the pale Morn flowes by night.
And when I wander here and there
I then do most go right.

If Timbers may have it use to line,
And beare the Sonne to Wouget.
Then my account I will make gues,
And in the Stocke anowbe it.

My Traficke is fleeters; when the Kite builds, looke to better Linnen.
My Father nant'd me Antiochus, who be-

(As I am) byter'd under Mercurie, was likewise a snapper-yer of unconsidered triffes: With Dye and drab,
I purchase this Caproner, and my Returne is the fullly Cheere, Gallowes, and Knocke, are too powerfull on the Highway, Bearinge and hanging are certes to mee:
For the life to come, I sleepe out the thoughts of it.
A prize, a prize.

Enter Cloten.

Clot. Let me see, every Leason-weather troder, every tod yeeldes pound and oddle fulling; fifteen hundred thorne, what comes the wood then?

Ant. If the prindge hould, the Cocke's mine.

Clot. I cannot do without Competers. Let me see:
what am I to buy for our Shepe-sherigar-Feast?
Three pound of Sugar, five pound of Currence. Rice:
What will this fitter of mine do with Rice? But my father hath made her Militis of the Feast, and the layout is on: She hath made me four and twenty Nofe-gaye for the sheare (threes-man longmen, all, and very good ones) but they are most of them Meanes and Dales; but one Purit amongst them, and he fings Psalmes to home-piper.
I must have Saffron to colour the Warden Bed, Music
Dates, none that's out of my note: Nutmegs, lences,
A race or two of Ginger, but that I may begge four pound of Prewys, and as many of Reytons ob Sun.

Ant. Oh, that euer I was borne.

Clot. I thinke of me.

Ant. Oh helpe me, helpe mee: plucke but off these rages: and then, death, death.

Clot. Alas poor man, thou hast need of more rest lay on thee, rather than loose thee off.

Ant. Oh Sir, the lostest sonett of them ower mee, more then the fripes I haue receiv'd, which are mighty ones and millions.

Clot. Als poore man, a million of bearing may come to a great matter.

Ant. I am rob'd Sir, and beaten my money, and, apparent tane from mee, and thefe detestable things put on mee.

Clot. What, by a booke-man, or a footman?

Ant. A footman (sweet Sir) a footman.

Clot. Indeed, he should be a footman, by the generous hebds left with these: if this bee a bartonman Cawre, it hath feene very her feene. Lend me thy hand, and helpe thee. Come, lend mee thy hand.

Ant. Oh good Sir, tenderly, oh.

Clot. Als poore foule.

Ant. Oh good Sir, softly, good Sir: I feare (my shoulder-blade is out.

Clot. How now? Canst finde

Ant. Softly, I desire Sir, softly, you ha ha me a charitable offic.

Clot. Doest lacke any money? I have a little mony for thee.

Ant. No, no, no, soft Sir, no, I beleeve you frighte a Kinnenman not past three quarters of an houre, into whome I was going: I shall these tane monny, or one thing I want: Offer mee no money I pray thee, that kills my heart.

Clot. What manner of Fellow was she that rebuke
you?

Ant. A fellow (Sir) that I have knowne to go about with Troll-my-dames: I knew him once a tenant of the Prince: I cannot tell good Sir, for which of his Ventures it was, but he was certes one to mee.

308
The Winters Tale

Hath not beene vs'd to feare) even now I tremble
To think of your Father, by some accident
Should passe this way, as you did: Oh the Fates,
How would he looke, to see his works, so noble, Vividly band vp? What would lie say? Or how Should I (in thefe my borrowed Chauntas) behold
The strenueffe of his preference?

Flo. Apprehend
Nothing but Iolity: the Goddes themselves
(Humbling their Dexters to lefte) have taken
The shapes of Beasts vpon them. Jupiter,
Became a Bull, and bellow'd: the greene Neptune
A Ram, and bleate'd: and the Fire-roard d'God
Golden Apollo, a poore humble Swaine,
As I feeme now. Their transformations,
Were neer for a pece of beauty, rarer,
Nor in a way to chaife: since my defires
Run not before mine honor: nor my Lufs
Burse hotter then my Faith.

Perd. O but Sir,
Your resolution cannot hold, when'tis
Oppos'd (as it must be) by the powre of the King:
One of these two must be necessitez,
Which then will speake, that you must change this purs.
Or I my life.

Flo. Thou darest Perdita?
With these forc'd thoughts, I prethee daren not
The Mirth o'th' Feaft: Or I'll be thine (my Faire)
Or not my Fathers. For I cannot be Mine owne, nor any thing to any, if
I be not thine. To this I am most confaine,
Though deftiny fay no. Be merry (Gentle)
Strange such thoughts as thefe, with any thing
That you behold the while. Your guests are comming:
Lift vp your countenance, as it was the day
Of celebration of that nuptiall, which
We two have sworne shall come.

Perd. O Lady Ffortune,
Stand you auspicious.

Flo. See, your Guests approach,
Adдресse your felte to entertaine them privightly;
And let's be red with mirth.

Stop. Fy (daughter) when my old wife liu'd: vpon
This day, she was both Pantler, Butler, Cooke,
Both Dame and Servant: Welcom'd all the day:
Would sing her song, and dance her tunes: now heere
At upper end o'th Table; now, t' th' midde:
On his shoulder, and his: her face of fire
With labour, and the thing theooke to quench it
She would to each one sip. You are retreyd,
As if you were a fated one: and not
The Hostellie of the meeting: Pray you bid
These unknowne friends to's welcome, for it is
A way to make vs better friends, more knowne.
Come, quench your blushtes, and present your felte
That which you are, Misfirs o'th'Feast. Come on,
And bid vs welcome to your fielte-shearing,
As your good flockes shall prosper.

Perd. Sir, welcome.
It is my Fathers will, I should take on mee
The Hostellship o'th day: you're welcome Sirs,
Gin me those flowers there (Dorcas): I recende Sirs,
For you, there's Rosemary, and Rue, thence keepe
Seeming, and fauour all the Winter long:
Grace, and Remembrance be to you both,
And welcome to our Shearing.

Scena Quarta.

Enter Florizell, Perdita, Lord, Shepherd, Clowne, Poesiowen, Camellis, Mayes, Dorcas, Servants, Auctoile.

Flo. These your unfalll weeds, to each part of you
Do's give a life: no Shepherdefe, but Flora
Peering in Aprils front. This your sheepe-shearing,
Was a meeting of the petty Gods,
And you the Queene on't.

Perd. Sirs my gracious Lord,
To chide at your extremities, itt not becomes me:
(Oh pardon, that I name them) your high elfe
The gracious marke o'th Land, you have obser'd
With a Swaines wearing: and me (poore lowly Maide)
Mof Goddeffe-like prank'd vp: But that our Feasts
In every Meffe, have foly: and the Feeders
Diget with a Cuffome, I should blush
To see you so stripp'd: fome one thinkes, I think,
To thow my selle a glasse.

Flo. I bleffe the time,
When my good Falcon, made her flight a-croffe
Thy Fathers ground.

Perd. Now lease afford you cause:
To me the difference forgets dread (your Grueanneff}

Song. Joy on, joy on, the fast path way,
And marry bin the Sile-a:
A merry heart goes all the day,
Your sad tires in a Mule-a.

Exeunt.

IV. ii. 97—IV. iii. 77

309
The Winters Tale.

Pol. Shepherdesse,
(Fare you are ye?) well you sit for your ages
With flowers of Winter.

Perd. Sir, the yeare growing ancient,
Not on Linters death, nor on the birth
Of trembling winter, the fairret flowers o’t h season
Are our Carnations, and steak’d Gilly-voss,
(Which some call Natures bards) of that kind
Our Rustick Gardens barren, and I care not
To get slips of them.

Pol. Wherefore (gentle Maiden)
Do you neglect them,
Perd. For I have heard it said,
There is an Art, which in their pudineffe flies
With great creatyng-Nature.

Pol. Say there be:
Yet Nuture is made better by no meane,
But Nature makes that Meanes: for outher that Art,
(Which you lay addresse to Nature) is an Art
That Nature makes: you fee (sweet Maid) we marry
A gentler Sten, to the wildill Stooke,
And make conceyue a backset of better kinde
By bud of Nobler race. This is an Art
Which doo’s mend Nature: change it rather, but
The Art is false, it Nature.

Perd. So it is.

Pol. Then make you Garden rich in Gilly’vors,
And do not call them baftards.

Perd. Hee ne’er put
The Dible in earth, to see one slip of them:
No more then were I painted, I would with
This youth should lay twower well: and onely therefore Dent to breede by me. Here’s flowers for you:
Hot Lauender, Mints, Savory, Maronorum,
The Mary-gold, that goes to bed with Sun,
And with him riseth, weeping: These are flowers
Of middle summer, and I think they are greene
To men of middle age. Yare very welcome.

Cam. I shold leave graving, were I of your flocke,
And onely hue by gazyn.

Perd. Our slat:
You’d be fo lean, that blast of January
(Would blow you through and through. Now (my faih)
I would I had some flowers o’t h Spring, that might Become your time of day: and yours, and yours,
That weare upon your Vigin-branches yet
Your Maidenheads growing: O Proserpina,
For the flowers now, that (frighted) shoulde’t fall
From Dryfle Wagpons: Daffords,
That come before the Swallow wares, and take
The Winder of March with beauty: Violents (dim,
But sweeter then the lids of Innes eyes,
Or Cythera’s breath) pale Prime-rofs,
That dye vanisht, ere they be holden
Bright Phoebus in his strength (a Malade)
Most incident to Mardis) bold Olyps, and
The Crowne Imperial: Ladies of all kinds,
(The Flora de Luskeing one.) O, then I lacke,
To make you Garlands of: and my sweeter friend,
To fire hee over, and are.

Flo. What like a Cossette?
Perd. Non, like a hankie, for Love to ley, and play on:
No like a Cossette: or if: not to be buried,
But quite, and in mine armes. Come, take your flowers,
Methink I play as I have love them do
In Whitton-Patronelle: Sure this Robe of mine

Do’s change my disposition:
Flo. What you do,
Still betters what is done. When you speake (Sweet)
I’d have you do it euer: When you sing,
I’d have you buy, and fell to: doe gine Alines,
Pray for: and for the ord’ring your Affayres,
To figne them too. When you do euer, I wish you
A waue o’t h Sea, that you might euer do Nothing but that: monefull, still to:
And owne no other Function. Each your doing,
(So singular, in each particular)
Crownes what you are doing, in the present deeds,
That all your Acts, are Queens.

Perd. O Daunces,
Your stairs are too large: but that you youth
And the truth blood which peeps fairly through’s,
Do plainly give you out an untain’d Shepheard,
With wisdome, I might feare (my Daunces)
You wou’d me the fallye way.

Flo. I think you hate
As little skill to feare, as I haue purpofe
To put you to. But come, our dance I prays,
Your hand (my Perdine) to Turtles partes
That you might mean to part.

Perd. He sweare for’tem.

Po. This is the prettiest Low-horne Laff, that euer
Ran on the greene-forde: Nothing do the do’s, or fecmes
But smakes of something greater then her selfe,
Too Noble for this place.

Cam. He tells her something
That makes her blood looke on’t: Good sooth she is the
The Queen of Cards and Creame.

Clo. Come on: strike vp.

Dorcie. Mosse must be your Misfris: marry Gartick to mend her kifing with.

Mtop. Now in good time.

Clo. Not a word, a word, we fland upon our manners,
Come, strike vp.

Here a Daunce of Shepherds and Shepherdesses.

Pol. Pray good Shepheard, what faire Swaine is this,
Which dances with your daughter? shopt.
They call him Dorcie, and bosht his life.
To haue a worthy Feeding; but I haue it
Upon his owne report, and I believe it;
He lookes like Southe: he fayes he loues my daughter,
I think he too; for neuer gae’d the Moore
Upon the water, as hee’s friend and reada
As ‘tware my daughters eyes: and to be plaine,
I think there is not half a kife to chose
Who leaves another better.

Pol. She dances freely.

Shopt. So she doo’s any thing, though I report it
That should be flient: if yong Dorcie
Do light upon her, the shall bring him that
Which he nor dreames of,

Enter Servant.

Sr. O Matter: if you did but heare the Pedder at the doore, you would never dance againe after a Tabor and Pipe: neuer the Bag pipe could not move you: hee fingers (fwarl) Tunes, taffer then you’ll tell money: hee wertes them as he had eaten ballads, and all mens ears grew to his Tunes.

Clo. He could never come better: hee shall come in:
I haue a ballad but euen too well, it be dolefull matter merely set downe: for a very pleafant thing indede, and flung lamentably.
The Winter's Tale.

Ser. He hath songs for man, or woman, of all sizes: No Milliner can so fit his customers with Clothes; he has the prettiest Long-Dresses and Songs for Maids, (without baudrie) with such delicate burthen of Dis-do's and Saddles: Jump'er, and thump'er; and where the froe-throst-mouth'd Rascall, would (as it were) make a twink, and breaks a fowle egg into the Matter, he makes the maid to antwcre, Whoop, dot me bravery good men: put his self off, flies himself, with whom dot me no harme good man.

Pet. This is a base fellow.

Clo. Beleeeue one, thou etalk of an admittable conceited fellow, has he any unbraid'd Wares?

Ser. Hee hath Ribbons of all the colours fith Rainebow: Points, more then all the Lawyers in Bohemis, can learnedly handle, though they come to him by th'groffe: Jackies, Caddisflyes, Cambrickes, Lawnes: where he flyings over, as they were Gods, or Goddeses: you would thincke a Smocke were a fiew-Angeill, hee chaunter to the fitter-hand, and the worke about the figure on't.

Clo. Pre'theee bring him in, and let him approach singing.

Pet. Forewarn him, that he vse no frivolous words in these.

Clo. You have of thefe Pedlers, that have more in them, then you'd thinke (Sister).

Pet. I good brother, or go about to thinke.

Enter Acrobats singing,

Lawne as white as driven Snow,
Cyperole blacke as ever was Crow,
Clothes as sweete as Damaskke Robes,
Makkes for faces, and P sonrasıes:
Bagle-bracket, Neck lace Amber,
Perfume for a Ladiest Chamber:
Golden Queues, and Stomacars
For my Ladi, to guane their dresses:
Flue, and compos'd Pickets of Steele.
What Moultis lackes from head to heele:
Come buy of me, come come buy, come buy,
Buy Ladies, or elf your Ladies cry, come buy.

Clo. If we were not in love with Cable, then should't take no money of me, but being enthral'd as I am, it will also be the bondage of certaine Ribbons and Cloaths. Clo. I was promis'd them against the Feast, but they come not too late now.

Dor. He hath promis'd you more then that, or else beares. Clo. He hath paid you all he promis'd you; May be he has paid you more, which will flame you to giue him againe.

Pet. Is there no manner left among maids? Will they wear their plackets, where they should best be their faces? Is there no walking-time? When are you going to bed? Or kill-hole? To whistlle of these secrets, but you must be little talking before all our guests? This well they are whispering en a forge your tongues, and not a word more.

Clo. I have done; Come you promis'd me a stay-way, and a pair of sweete Cloths.
Clo. Have I not told thee how I was covet'd by the way, and loft all my money.

Pet. And indeed Sir, there are Cozeners abroad, therfore it behoves men to be wary.

Clo. Fear not thou man, thou shalt lose nothing here.

Clo. I hope so, for I have about the many parcels of charge.

Clo. What haft heere? Ballads?

Map. Pray now buy some: I loue a ballad in print, a life, for then we are sure they are true.

Aue. Here's one, to a very dolfell tune, howe Vinters was brought to bed of twenty shes charg'd at a burthen, and how the long'd to eate Adders heads, and Toads carombado'd.

Map. Is it true, thinke you?

Aue. Very true, and but a moneth old.

Dor. Bliefe me from martying a Vinter.

Aue. Here's the Midimused name to't: One Mift.Tale-

Petur, and five of six honest Vinters, that were present. Why should I eay eyes abroad?

Map. Pray you now buy it.

Clo. Come on, lay it by: and let's first see more Ballads: We'll buy the other things anon.

Aue. Here's another ballad of a Pity, that appeared upon the coast, on Wednesday the four score of April, for thou find stadm about water, & sung this ballad against the hard hearts of maids: it was thought the wo. Woman, and was made in a cold fift, for the world not to change this within one that fould her: The Ballad is very pitifully, and as true.

Dor. Is it true too, thinke you?

Aue. Lay it by too another.

Aue. This is a merry ballad, but a very pretty one.

Map. Let's have for merry ones.

Aue. Why this is a passling merry one, and goes to the tune of two maids wooing a man: there's a sere Maiden wellward but she's his: 'tis in request, I can tell you.

Map. We can both sing it: if thou'st beares a part, thou shalbe hear, 'tis in three parts.

Dor. We had the tune on't, a month ago.

Pet. I can bear my part, you must know 'tis my occupation. Haue at it with you:

Song. Get you hence, for I must go.

Aue. Where it fits you not to know.

Dor. Whether?

Map. What whether?

Dor. Whether?

Map. It becomes thy path full well,
Thou to me thy secret tell.

Dor. - Map too, let me go thither?

Map. Or thou seem'ld as Grange, or still,

Dor. If to either thou dost il,

Aue. Neither.

Map. What whether?

Dor. That thou hast command my Love to be,

Map. Thou hast scarce or scarce so met.

Dor. Then whether good? Say weather?

Clo. We'll have this song our anent by our felus: My Father, and the Gent. are in sad tale, & we'll not trouble them: Come bring away thy pack after me, Wenches He buy you for both: Pedler let's have the first choice, follow me girls.

Aue. And you shall pay well for 'em.

Clo. My dainty Ducks, my dace at-

Any Silke, any Torder, any Tyme for your head.

Of the new't, and five, you're merr.

Come to the Pedler, Money is a mediator,

That doth enter all mens war.

Aue. Servant, Mayster, there is three Carters, three Shepheards, three Next-herds, three Swine-herds y have made

B b 3 them.

The Winters Tale.

The pray you I were Kin, but khantment, 1
That theefe theefe four-e-threees of Heartmen.

Ser. One of them, by their own report (Sir), has danc'd before the King: and not the worst of the three,
but ympe twelve foote and a halfe by th'fquire.

Sho. Leave your prating, since these good men are pleas'd, let them come in: but quickly now.

Ser. Why, they stay at doore Sir.
Here a Dance of twelve Satyres:

Pol. O Father, you'll know more of that hereafter:
Is it not too farre gone? 'Tis time to part them,
He's fimpel, and tells much. How now (faire fhepheard)
Your heart is full of somethings, that do's take Your minde from feeling. Sooth, when I was yong,
And hanned love, as you do; I was wont
To load my Shee with knackes: I would haue ranfackt
The Pedlars fllen Treasury, and haue pow'd it
To her acceptances: you have let him go,
And nothing marred with him. If your Laffe
Interpretation should abuse, and call this
Your lacke of love, or bounty, you were straied
For a reply at leaft, if you make a care
Of happie holding her.

Flo. Old Sir, I know
She prizes not fuch miles as thefe are:
The gifts thee lookest from me, are packt and lockt
In my heart, which I haue gien already,
But not declin'd. O haue me breach my life
Before this ancient Sir, whom (it foole fheme)
Hath sometime lou'd: I take thy hand, this hand,
As fof as Douces downe, and as white as it,
Or Ethyopian tooth, or the faul'd know, that's bolted
By th'Northernm blacks, twice o're.

Pol. What followes this?
How prettily th' yong Swaine fereemes to waft
The hand, was faire before I haue put you out,
But to your profutations: Let me hear
What you profuct.

Pol. Do, and be winneffe too.

Pol. And this thine neighbour too?

Flo. And he, and inne
Then be, and men: the earth, the heavens, and all;
That wold I crowne the most Imperial Monarch
These of moff worthy: were I the faireft youth
That ever made eye twane, had force and knowledge
More then was ever man, I would not priz them
Without her Loue; for her, employ them all.
Commend them, and commend me to her terture,
Or to thine owne perdition.

Pol. Fairly offer'd.

Cam. This theefe a found affection.

Serp. But my daughter,
Say you the like to him,

Per. I lea not speake
So well, (nothing so well) no, nor meane better
By th'parture of mine owne thoughts, I cut out
The picture of his.

Sho. Take hands, a bargaine:
And friends vnsnnowne, you shall heare witnessse to't:
I give my daughter to him, and will make
Her Portion, eual his.

Flo. O, that muft bee
I th'Verture of your daughter: One being dead,
I shall have more then you can dreame of yet,
Enough then for your wunders: but come-on,
Come vs vs vs vs three Witnesses.

Sho. Come, your hand:
And daughter, yours.

Pol. Soft Swaine a while, befteach you,
Have you a Father?

Flo. I haue: but what of him?

Pol. Knowes he of this?

Flo. He neither do's, nor shall.

Pol. Me-thinks a Father,
Is at the Nuptiall of his fonne, a guest
That beft becomes the Table: Pray you once more
Is not your Father grown ineapceable
Of reasonable affayres? Is he not fupid
With Age, and altering Rheumes? Can he speake I heare?
Know man, from man? Dispute his owne effayre?
Lies he not bed-rid? And againe, doe nothing
But what he did, being childifh?

Flo. No good Sir:
He has his health, and amplet strength indeepe
Then muult hauue of his age.

Flo. Me by my white heard,
You offer him (if this be) a wrong
Something wilfull: Reafon my fonne
Should choose himfelfe a wife, but at good reaon
The Father (all whofe ioy is nothing else
But faire pottency) shou'd hold fome counfaile
In fuch a bufinefe.

Flo. I yeeld all this;
But for fome other reafons (my greue Sir)
Which 'tis not fit you know, I not acquainting
My Father of this bufinefe.

Pol. Let him know't.

Flo. He fhill not.

Pol. Prethlee let him.

Flo. No, he muft not.

Sho. Let him (my fonne) he fhall not need to grEase
At knowing of thy choice.

Flo. Come, come, he muft not:
Mark out our Contraft.

Pol. Mark your distances (yong flu)
Whom fome I dare not call: Thou art too base
To be acknowledged. Thou a Scepterfe leire;
That thus affefts a fiepe-feaue-book: Thou, old Traiter,
I am fury, that by hanging thee, I can but thoffen thy life one weake. And thou, fresh piece
Of excellent Witchcraft, whom of force muft know
The royal Foleu thou coap fl with.

Sho. Oh my heart.

Pol. He haue thy beauty foratches with briers & made
More homely then thy flace. For thee (fond boy)
It I may ever know thon doft but fighe,
That thou no more fhalt never see this knacke (as neuer
I meane thou fhalt) wee I barre thee from succeifion,
Not hold thee of our blood, no out kin,
Fare the then Denuclion off: (mark thou my words)
Follow vs to the Court. Thou Chalfe, for this time (Though full of our diuipleasure) yet we ierve thee.
From the dead blow of it. And thou Enchantment.
The Winters Tale.

Worthy enough a Heardsman: yes him too,
That makes him selfe (but for our Honors therein)
Vvorthv thee. If ever henceforth, thou
These rurall Latches, to his entrance open,
Oor hope his body more, with thy embraccs,
I will doue a death, as cruell for thee
As thou art tenderer.

Exe. Even heere vn-done:
I was not much a-fear'd: for once, or twice
I was about to speake, and tell him plainly,
The felle. same Sun, that flanxes upon his Count,
Hides not his village from our Cottagc, but Looks on alike. Wilt please you (Sir) be gone?
I told you what would some of this. Beseech you
Of your owne free take care: This dreame of mine
Being now awake, He Queene is no Rich father,
But make I my Eyes, and weep.

Cam. Why how now Father,
Spoke ere thou dyed.

Stop. I cannot speake, nor thinke,
Nor dare to know, thus which I know: O Sir,
You have vndone a man of fowre-score three.
That thought to fill his grave in quiet: yes,
To dye upon the bed my father dy'd,
To yse close by his honest bones; but now,
Some Hungre must put on my throw'd, and lase me
Where no Prie? thinkes to data. Oh curled wretch,
That knew it this was the Prince, and wouldst adventure
To mingle faith with him. Vndone, vn-done.
If I might dye within this house, I have hu'd
To do when I shou'd.

Flo. Why look you so upon me?
I am but very, not afraied: delaid,
But nothing alst: What I was, I am:
Moreлистing on, for plucking backe; not following
My leas vvillingly.

Cam. Gracious my Lord,
You know my Fathers temper: at this time
He will allow no speech: (which I do grieve
You do not purpose to him:) and as hardly
Will he endur the ftrife, as you I fear;
Then till the fury of his, I highesett settle
Come not before him.

Flo. I not purpose it.
I think Camillus.

Cam. Euen he, my Lord.
Per. How often have I told you 'twould be thus?
How often faint my dignity would lift
But till your knowledge?
Flo. It cannot fall, but by
The violation of my faith, and then
Let Nature crush the fides of o'er earth together,
And marre the fedes within. Lift vp thy lookes:
From my succesion wipe me (Father)!
Am heayce to my affection.

Cam. Be assured.
Flo. I am: and by my fancie, if my Reason
Well there be oblecture: I hate reason:
If not, my trauels better pleas'd with madneffe,
Do but it welcome.

Cam. This is desperate (Sir.)
Flo. So call it: but it do's command my vow:
Needs must! thinken honestly. Camillus,
Not for Babylon, nor the pompe that may Be thereae gle meae: for all the Sun fees, or
The clofe earthe wombs, or the profound seas, hides
In unknowne fadomes, will I breake my oath
To this my faire belou'd: Therefore, I pray you,
As you haue eruer bin my Fathers honour'd friend,
When he shall mime me, as (in faith I meane
To see him any more) call your good counsellors
Vpon his passion: Let my selfe, and Fortune
Tug for the time to come. This you may know,
And so deluere, I am put to Sea
With her, who heere I cannot hold on shore:
And most opportunr to her needle, I haue
A Veffel rides faft by, but not prepar'd
For this deigne. What course I meane to hold Shall nothing benefit your knowledge, nor Concern me the reporting.

Cam. O my Lord,
I would your spirit were eaiser for advice,
Or stronger for your neede.

Flo. Heareke Perillus,
He heare you by and by.

Cam. Hee's irremovable.
Refold'd for flight: Now were I happy if
His going, I could frame to terme my turne,
Sane him from danger, do him love and honors,
Purdie the fight againe of sicilias,
And that unhappy King, my Master, whom
I so much thurst to see.

Flo. Now good Camillus,
I am to sught in curious businesse, that
I leave out ceremony.

Cam. Sir, I thinke
You have heard of my poore services, I'ch love
That I have borne your Father?

Flo. Very nobly
Have you defended': it is my Fathers Mufecle
To speake your deedes: not little of his care
To have them recompeased, as thought on.

Cam. Well (my Lord)
If you may please to thinke I love the King,
And through him, what's nearest to him, which is
Your gracious selfe; embrace but my direction.
If your more ponderous and setled proiect
May suffer alteration. On mine honor,
I point you where you shall have such receiuing
As shall become your Highnesse, where you may Enjoy your Miseries; from the whom, I fee
There's no disposition to be made, but by
(As heauen's foreordain'd) your ruine: Marry her,
And with my selfe endeavours, in your absence,
Your discontenting Father, praise to qualifie
And bring him vp to liking.

Flo. How Camillus
May this (almost a miracle) be done?
This I may call thee something more then man
And after that thruft to thee.

Cam. Have you thought on
A place whereunto you go?

Flo. Not any yet:
But as th'vnhought-on accident is guilty
To what we wildly do, to we proleffe
Our felues to be the flaves of chance, and flyes:
Of every wunde that blowes.

Cam. Then let me to:
This followes, if you will not change your purpose
But undergo this flight: make for Sicillia,
And there present yourself, and your fayre Prince, (End)
(For so I see the mufc be) rose Leonatus;

Shew

She shall be habited, as it becomes
The partner of your Bed. Me thinks I see Letter, opening his free arms, and weeping
Him. Weep, for there's yet there Sonne forgivennesse,
As 'twere the Father perform'd kisses the hands
Of your fresh Princess, 'ere and afore divides him,
'Twixt his vnkindness, and his Kindnesse: ch'one
He chides to Hell, and bids the other grow
Fatter then Thought, or Time.
Flo. Worthy Camilla,
What colour for my Visitation, shall I
Hold vp before him?
Cam. Sent by the King your Father
To greeve him, and to give him comforts. Sir,
The manner of your bearing towards him, with
What you (as from your Father) shall deliver,
Things knowne betwixt vs three, I write you downe,
The which shall point you forth at every fittig
What you must say, that he shall not perceive,
But that you have your Fathers Bosome there,
And speake his very Heart.
Flo. I am bound to you:
There is some hope in this.
Cam. A Course more promising,
Then a wild dedication of your felues
To vnpath'd Waters, and dream'd Shores: most certaine,
To Miseries enough: no hope to help you,
But as you shake off one, to take another:
Nothing so certaine, as your Anchors, who do their bett office, if they can but flay you,
Where you be least to be: beside you know,
Proper'ise the very bond of Love.
Whole freth complexion, and whole heart together,
Affilation alters,
Perd. One of these is true:
I think Affilation may subdue the Checke,
But not take-in the Mind.
Cam. Yes? say you so?
There shall not, as your Fathers Houfe, these feven yeares
Be borne another: Sibh.
Flo. My good Camilla,
She's as forward, of her Breeding, as
She is th'her'se' our Birth.
Cam. I cannot say, its pity
She lacks Instructions, for the femes a Miftrasse
To moft that teach.
Perd. Your pardon Sir, for this,
Ile blushe you Thanks.
Flo. My prettie Perdita,
But O the Thrones we band vpon: (Camilla)
Prefeurer of my Father, now of me,
The Medicine of our Houfe: how shall we doe?
We are not fathom'd like Behemus' Sonne,
Nor shall appear in Sicilia.
Cam. My Lord,
Fear none of this: I think you know my fortunes
Doe all lye there: it shall be to my care,
To have you royally appointed, at this
The Scene you play, were mine. For inffance Sirs,
That you may know you shall not want one word.

urtle Auctoritas.
Aux. Ha, ha, what a Feoffe Honeftie is? and Truthe (this sworne brother) a very simple Gentleman. I have told all my Troperies: not a counterfeit Stone, not a Ribbon, Giffe, Pomander, Drowch, Table-books, Ballad, Knife, Tape, Gloue, Shoos-eye, Bracelet, Horne-Ring, to kepe my Pack from falling: they throng who should buy first, as if my Trinkets had beene hallowed, and brought a benefitcion to the buyer: by which meanes, I jaw wholie Purse was left in Picture: and what I saw, to my good vie, I remembered. My Clowne (who wants but somethings to be a reasonable man) grew so in love with the Wenches Song, that he would not flire his Petty-toes, till he had both Tune and Words, which so drew the reft of the Heard to me, that all their other Sences flucke in Eares: you might have pinch'd a Placket, it was fienceleffe; 'twas nothing to guld a Cod-peece of a Purfe: I would have fill'd Keyes of that hung in Chaynes: no hearing, no feeling, but my Biss Song, and admiring the Nothing of it. So that in this time of Lecherity, I pickd and cut most of their Pefull!! Purfes: And had not the old-man come in with a Whoo-bub against his Daughter, and the Kings Sonne, and sean't my Chawthes from the Chaffe, I had not left a Purfe alyne in the whole Army.
Cam. Nay, but my Letters by this means, being there
So foomo as you arrive, shall declare that doubt.
Flo. And thate you yeI procure from King Leoneric
Cam. Shall satisfy our Father.
Perd. Happy be you:
All that you speake, fliewes faire.
Cam. Who hau'e we here?
We'll make an Infrumens of this: omit
Nothing may give vs aide.
Aux. If they have ouer-heard me new:why hangg.
Cam. Haw now (good Fellow)
Why fhal I throw to? Fears not (nay)
Here's no harme intended to thee.
Aux. I am a poore Fellow, Sir:
Cam. Why,be so still? here's no body will fleale that from thee: yet for the ouerside of thy potterie, we must make an exchange; therefore difcffe thee infantly (thou mullt think there's a trea fefcifie in') and change Garments with this Gentleman: Though the penny-worth (on his side) be the worft, yet hold thee, there'some boot.
Aux. I am a poore Fellow, Sir: (I know ye well enough)
Cam. Nay prettie dispatch: the Gentleman is halfe flled already.
Aux. Are you in earneft, Sir (I fintell the trick not')
Flo. D'arche, I prettie,
Aux. Indeed I have had Earneft, but I cannot with conference take it.
Cam. Valuable, valuable,
Fortunately Mr. Thistle (let my prophecy Come home to ye) you must reie your feife
Into some Courte; take your sweet-hearts Hat
And pluck it on your Browes, muffle your face,
Dif-mantle you, and (as you can) dilkken
The truth of your owne seemg, that you may
(For I do feare eyes outer) to Ship-board
Get vnfeafly'd.
Perd. I see the Play so lyes,
That I must bear a part.
Cam. No remitall
Have you done there?
Flo. Should I now meet my Father,
He would not call me Sonne.
Cam. Nay, you shall have no Hat:
Come Lady, come: Farewell (my friend.)
Aux. Alius, Sir,
Flo. O Perditas: what have we twaine forgot?

Pray

Clio. Your Worship had like to have given vs one, if you had not taken your selfe with the manner.
Ship. Are you a Courter, and't like you Sir?
Ant. Whether it like me, or no, I am a Courtier. Sceft thou not the ayr of the Court, in these enfoldings? Hath not my gate in it, the mesure of the Court? Receives not thy Noble Court-Ordour from me? Reflet I not on thy Bafinelle, Court-Contempt? Think it thou, for that I inimitate, at toaze from thee thy Bafinelle, I am therefore no Courtier; I am Courtier Cap-a-pie; and one that willeyer pulsifu-on, or pluck-back, thy Bafinelle there:
whereupon I command thee to open thy Affaire.
Ship. My Bafinelle, Sir, is to the, the.
Ant. What Advocate ha't thou to him?
Ship. I know not (and't like you).
Clio. Advocate the Court-word for Pheazant: say you have none.
Ship. None, Sir. I haue no Pheazant Cock, nor Hen.
Ant. How blefled are we, that are not simple men? Yea, Nature might have made us these are,
Therefore I will not difdain.
Clio. This cannot be but a great Courter.
Ship. His Garments are rich, but lie weares them not handsomely.
Clio. He seems to be the more Noble, in being fantas-ically: A great man, Ile warrant; I know by the picking of his Tell-tale.
Ant. The Fartell there? What's i'th' Fartell?
Wherefore that Box?
Ship. Sir, those Iyes such Secrets in this Fartell and Box, which none must know but the King, and which hee shall know within this hour, if I may come to th' speech
of him.
Ant. Age, thou haft loft thy labour.
Ship. Why Sir?
Ant. The King is not at the Palace, he is gone aboard a new Ship, to purge Melancholy, and ayr himselle: for if thou be'ft capable of things serious, thou must know the King is full of griefe.
Ship. So'tis said (Sir). about his Sonne, that should have married a Shepherds Daughter.
Ant. If that Shepherbe be not in hand-faft, let him flyes the Curles he shall haue, the Tortures he shall feele, will breake the back of man, the heart of Monifter.
Clio. Think you so, Sir?
Ant. Not hee alone shall suffer, what Wit can make heauti, and Vengeance bitter, but those that are ternarie unto him (though remou'd fiftie times) shall all come vnder the Hang-man: which, though it be great pity, yet it is neceffary. An old Sheepe-whiffling Rogue, a Ran-tender, to offer to have his Daughter, come into grace: Some fay hee shall be fliou'd, but that death is too fote for him (fay I). Draw our Throne into a Sheept-Coft: all deaths are too few, the harp is too eafe.
Clio. Ha's the old-man ere a Sonne Sir (doe you heare) and't like you, Sir?
Ant. Hee ha's a Sonne: who shall be flayed alive, then noyanted out, with Honey, set on the head of a Wafpes Neff, then fland till he be three quarters and a dram dead;
then recover'd againe with Aquavite, or some other hot Infuion; then, raw as he is (and in the hottest day Prognoftication proclaymes) shall he be set again a Brick-wall, the Sonne looking with a Southward eye vpon him;
where bee is to behold him, with flyes blown to death.)
But what talk we of thee Traitorie, Rasfeal, whose misieres are to be fmild at, their offences being fo capitall?
Tell me (for you seem to be honest plain men) what you have to the King: being something gently consider'd, Ile bring you where he is aboord, tender your person to his presence, whisper him in your behalfs; and if it be in man, befriend the King, to effect your Suits, here is man that can do it.

Cleo. He seems to be of great authoritie: cloe with him, give him Gold; and though Authoritie be a stubborn Bear, yet hee is oft led by the Nose with Gold: shew the in-side of your Purse to the out-side of his hand, and no more adoe. Remember for'd, and say'd alio.

Sho. And please you (Sir) to undertake the Bussineffe for vs, here is that Gold I have: Ile make it as much more, and leave this young man in pawn, till I bring it you.

Aut. After I have done what I promised?

Sho. I Sir.

Aut. Well, give me the Moetie: Are you a partie in this Bussineffe?

Cleo. In some sort, Sir: but though my cafe be a pitiful one, I hope I shall not be flayed out of it.

Aut. Oh, that's the cafe of the Shepherds Sonne: hang him,蜂ce be made an example.

Cleo. Comfort, good comfort: We must to the King, and shew our strange fights: he must know'ts none of your Daughter, nor my Sifer: wee are gone elfe. Sir, I will give you as much as this old man do's, when the Bussineffe is performed, and remaines(as he fay's) you pawned till it be brought you.

Aut. I will truft you. Walk before toward the Seafide, goe on the right hand, I will but looke upon the Hedge, and follow you.

Cleo. We be blefs'd, in this man: as I may fay, even blefs'd.

Sho. Let's before, as he bids vs: he was provided to doe vs good.

Aut. If I had a mind to be honeft, I fee Fortune would not suffer me: thee drops Booties in my mouth. I am courted now with a double occasion: (Gold, and a means to doe the Prince my Master good; which, who knows how that may turne backe to my advancemeng ?) I will bring these two Moales, thefe blind-ones, aboord him; if he think it fit to fioare them againe, and that the Complaint they have to the King, concerns him nothing, let him call me Rogue, for being fo farre officious, for I am proce against that Title, and what shame elfe belongs to't: To him will Iprefent them, there may be matter in it.

Enter Leontes, Cleominus, Dirn, Paulina, Servants:

Florizel, Perdite.

Cleo. Sir, you have done enough, and have perform'd A Saint-like Sorrow: No fault could you make, Which you have not redeem'd; indeed pay'd downe More penitence, then done trepans: At the last Doe, as the Heauens have done too; forget your sullen, With them, forgive your sels.

Len. Whilest I remember Her, and her Vertues, I cannot forget.
Paul. I should do:
Were 't the ghost that walk'd, I'd bid you mark
Her eye, and tell me for what dull part in't
You chose her: then 'twould surprise, that such a care
Should rive to hear me, and the words that follow'd,
Should be, Remember mine.

Leo. Stares, Stares,
And all eyes else, dead coals: fear thou no wife,
She have no wife, Paulina.
Paul. Will you swear?
"Ne'er to marry, but by my free lease?"
Leo. Ne'er (Paulina) to be blest'd my spirit.
Paul. Then good my lord, beare witness to his Oath.
Cleo. You tempt him out at once.
Paul. Vilest another,
As like Hermione, as is her picture,
Affront his eye.
Cleo. Good Madame, I have done.
Paul. Yet if my lord will marry: if you will, Sir;
No remedy but you will; give me the office
To slay a queen; she shall not be so young
As was your former, but she shall be such
As (walk'd your first queen's ghost) it should take joy
To see in your arms.
Leo. My true Paulina,
We shall not marry, till thou bidst vs.
Paul. That
Shall be when your first queen's again in breath.
Ne'er till then:
"Enter a servant."
Sir. One that glues out himselfe Prince Florizell, Sonne of Polonius, with his prince (the
The fairest I have yet beheld) desires accefe
To your high presence,
Sir. What with him? he comes not
Like to his fathers greatness, in his approch
(Season of circuſtance, and sudden piece) tells vs,
Tis not a visitation fram'd, but forc'd
By need, and accident. What Trayne?
Sir. But few,
And tho' but meanes,
Leo. His prince (say you) with him?
Sir. As the most peerleſſe piece of earth, I think,
That ere the sunne shone bright on.
Paul. Oh Hermione,
At every prefent time doth boast it felpe
Aboue a better, gone; so mutt thy Graue
Giv way to what's fene now. Sir, you your felpe
Haued faid, and writ fo; but your writing now
Could fit then that Theane: she had not beene,
Nor was not to be equal'd, thus your verfe
Flow'd with her beautie once; 'tis fhirley elly ebb'd,
To say you haue seene a better,
Sir. Pardon, Madame:
The one, I haue almoft forgot (your pardon:) The other, when he's obay'd your eye,
Will have your tongue too. This is a creature, Who begin a Seach, might quench the zeale
Of all professors else; make Proteleyse
Of who she but bid follow.
Paul. How? not women?
Sir. Women will love her, that she is a woman
More worth then any man; men, that she is
The rareft of all women.
Leo. Get Clemrines,
Your felpe (affh'd with your honor'd friends)

Bring them to our embracement. Still 'tis strange,
He thus should fleas upon vs
Paul. Had our prince
(rewrite of Children) come this hour, he had pay'd
Well with this lord; there was not full a moneth
Betwixt their births.
Leo. "Prethee no more; ceafe: thou know'st
He dyest to me againe, when talk'd of: sure
When I shall see this gentleman, thy speeches
Will bring me to consider that, which may Unframe me of reason. They are come,
Enter Florizell, Serleines, Cleomines, and others.
Your mother was most true to Wedlock, prince,
For she did print your royal father off,
Conceiving you. Were I but twenty one,
Your fathers image is so hit in you,
(He very ayre) that I should call you brother,
As I did him, and speake of something wildly
By perform'd before. Most dearly welcome,
And your faire prince (Goddefe) oh; alas,
I loft a couple, that twixt heauen and earth
Might thus have Iould, begetting wonder,
You (gracious Couple) doe: and then I loft
(All mine owne folly) the Societie,
Armitio too of your brave father, whom (Though bearing Misster) I define my life
Once more to looke on him.
Fla. By his command
Hau, I here touch'd: Scilla, and from him
Give you all greetings, that a king (at friend)
Can send his brother: but infirmity
(Which wait's upon wornen times) hath something fein'd
His wife's Abilitie, he had himfelfe
The lands and waters, twixt your throne and his,
Mazar'd, to looke upon you, whom he loues,
(He had me fay) more then all the scepters,
And tho' that bear them, living.
Leo. Oh my brother,
Good Gentleman the wrongs I have done thee, firre
Are fenth within me: and thence thys offices
(So rarely kind) are as interpreters
Of my behind-hand blacknelfe. Welcome hither,
As is the spring to the earth, and bath he too
Expos'd this Paragon to that fairefull vifage
(At leat vngentle) of the dreadful Neptune,
To greet a man, not worth her pains; much leffe,
Th' adornement of her perfon?
Fla. Good my lord,
She came from Lubiia.
Leo. Where the warlike Smalju,
That noble honor'd lord, is feared, and lou'd?
Fla. Most royall sir,
From thence: from him, whose daughter
His tears proclaim'd his parting with her: thence (A profound South-Wind friendly we have cros'd),
To execute the charge my father gave me,
For visiting your highnesse; my best traine
I haue from your Siciliano shores difin'd
Who for Bohemia, I end, to signifie
Not onely my facecfe (in Lubiia Sir)
But my arrival, and my wife, in latezze
Here, where we are.
Leo. The bleffed Gods
Purge all infection from our ayre, whileft you cloer Clymate here: you have a holy father,
A graceful Gentleman, against whose perfon
The Winters Tale.

Enter I and Tor.

Lord. Molt Noble Sir,

That which I shall report, will bear no credit.

Were not the proofs so strong. Plead ye great Sir

Bohemia greets you from himselfe, by me;

Defays you to attach his Sonne, who ha's

(His Dignity, and Dutie both cast off)

Pled from his Father, from his Hope, and with A Shepheard's Daughter.

Leo. Where's Bohemia? speake?

Lord. Here, in your Cotie: I now came from him.

I speake amazedly, and it becomes

My meruaile, and my Meffage, To your Court

While he was hafting (in the Chafe, it seemes,

Of this faire Couple) meetes he on the way

The Father of this seeming Lady, and

Her Brother, having both their Coutry quitted,

With this young Prince.

Flo. Camilla he's betrayd me;

Whose honor, and whose honetie till now,

Endur'd all Weathers.

Lord. Lay's to his charge:

He's with the King your Father.

Leo. Who & Camilla?

Lord. Camilla (Sir) I speake with him; who now

Ha's thole noble man in question. Never saw I

Wretches so quakes: they kneel, they kisse the Earth;

For Swears them selves as often as they speake:

Bohemia flops his eares, and threatens them

With divers deaths, in death.

Perc. Oh my poor Father:

The Heauen lets Spyes vpon vs, will not bave

Our Contract celebrated.

Leo. You are married?

Flo. We are not (Sir) nor are we like to be:

The Starres (I fee) will kiffe the Valleyes firt:

The oddes for high, and low's alike.

Leo. My Lord,

Is this the Daughter of a King?

Flo. She is,

When once ftre is my Wife.

Leo. That once (I fee) by your good Fathers speed,

Will come on very well.

I am lorry

(Most lorry) you haue broken from his liking,

Where you were ty'd in dutie: and as lorry,

Your Chaise is not fo rich in Worth, as Beautie,

That you might well enjoy her.

Flo. Dear, looke vp:

Though France,visible An Enemy,

Should chafe vs, with my Father: powre no ioe

I hath fire to change our Loues. Beleeche you (Sir)

Remember, since you owd no more to Tune

Then I doe now: with thought of such Affections,

Step forth mine Advocate: at your request,

My Father will grant you precious things, as Trifles.

Leo. Would he doe so, I'd beg your precious Miftris,

Which he counts but a Trifle.

Pant. Sir (my Liege)

Your eye hath too much youth in't: not a moneth

'Fore your Queene dy'd, he was more worth such gazes,

Then what you look on now.

Leo. I thought of her,

Even in these Looke I made, But your Petition

Is yet yn-anwer'd: I will to your Father:

Your Honor not o'th-throwne by your desires,

I am friend to them, and you: Vpon which Errand

I now goe toward him: therefore follow me.

And make what way I make: Come good my Lord.

Exeunt.

Scena Secunda.

Enter Amelius, and a Gentleman.

Ant. Beleeche you (Sir) were you present at this Relation?

Genl. 1. I was by at the opening of the Farthell, heard the old Shepheard deliver the manner how he found it:

Whereupon (after a little amaz'd ene) we were all commanded out of the Chamber: only this (me thought) I heard the Shepheard say, he found the Child.

Ant. I would moft gladly know the title of it.

Genl. 1. I make a broken delibritie of the Bufiness;

but the changes I perceived in the King and Camila, were very Notes of admiration: they seem'd almost with fla-

ting on one another, to tear the Cafes of Their Eyes.

There was speech in their dumbneffe, Language in their very gestures: they look'd as they had heard of a World random d, or one destroy'd: a notable passion of Wonder appeared in them: but the wiseft beholder, that knew no more but seeing, could not say, if in't importance were toy, or Sorrow; but in the extremity of the one, it mutt be.

Enter another Gentleman.

Here comes a Gentleman, that happy knowes more:

The Newes Rogers.

Genl. 2. Nothing but Bon-fires: the Oracle is full'd, the Kings Daughter is found: such a deale of wonder is broken out within this hour; that Bull-damas cannot be able to expressive it.

Enter another Gentleman.

Here comes the Lady Paulina's Steward, hee can deliver you more. How goes it now (Sir) This News (which is call'd true) is so like an old Tale, that the vertice of it is in strong fulpicion: He's the King found his Heire?

Genl. 3. Most true, if eter Truth were pregnant by Circumstance: That which you hear, you're wise to see you fee, there is such virtue in the proveces. The Mantle of Queen Hermione: her lawell about the Neck of it:

the Letters of Argu'men found with it, which they knew to be his Character: the Matriff of the Creature, in resemblance of the Mother: the Affection of Noblesse, which Nature finewes about her Breeding, and many other Evidences, proclayme her, with all certeume, to be the Kings Daughter. Did you see the meeting of the two Kings?

Genl. 2. No.

Genl. 3. Then have you left a Sight which was to be dene,cannot bee spoken of. There might you have beheld one Joy crose another, so and in such manner, that it seem'd sorrow wept to take leave of them: for that Joy wanted in terror. There was calling vp of Eyes, holding vp of Hands, with Countenance of such digitation, that they were to be knowne by Garment, not by favor.

Out.
Our King being ready to leave out of himselfe, for joy of his found Daughter: as if that joy were now become a Loose, eyes, Oh, thy Mother, thy Mother: then asks Bohemia forgiveness, and then embraces his Sonne-in-Law: then again worries he his Daughter, with clipping her. Now he thanks the old Shepheard (which stands by, like a Weather-bitten Conduit, of many Kings Reignes.) I never heard of such another Encouter; which shames Report to follow it, and vando's description to doe it.

Gent. 2, What, 'pray you, because of Antiquity, that carried hence the Child?

Gent. 3, Like an old Tale still, which will have matter to rehearse, though Credit be asleep, and not an eye open; he was borne to pieces with a Beare: This stouche the Shepheards Sonne; who has not only his Innocence (which feemes much) to inuflle him, but a Hand-kachteif and Kings of his, that Paulina knows.

Gent. 1, What became of his Barke, and his Followers?

Gent. 3, Wrackt the same infant of their Masters death, and in the view of the Shepheard: so that all the Instruments which ayd to expose the Child, were even then left, when it was found. But oh the Noble Combat, that twixt Joy and Sorrow was fought in Paulina. Shee had one Eye declin'd for the loss of her Husband, another eueristas, that the Oracle was full fill'd: Shee lifted the Prince from the Earth, and so locks her in embrasing, as if she would put her to her heart, that shee might no more he in danger of flooding.

Gent. 1, The Dignitie of this Act was worth the audience of Kings and Princes, for by such it was acted.

Gent. 3, One of the prettiest touches of all, and that which ang'd for mine Eyes (caught the Water, though not the Fith) was, when at the Relation of the Quenes death (with the manner how shee came to't, brassyely confess'd, and lamented by the King) how attentuenee wounded his Daughter, till (from one signe of dolour to another) shee did(with an Aha) I would fay, bleed tears: for I am sure, my heart wept blood. Who was molt Marble, there changed colour: some 2ounded, all sorrowed: if all the World could have seen't, the Woe had bene universe.

Gent. 1, Are they returned to the Court?

Gent. 3, No: The Princehee hearing of her Mothers Stcalce (which is in the keeping of Paulina) a Pece of many scenes to doing, and now newly perform'd, by that rare Italian Master, felio Romano, who (had he himselfe Emer- mined, and could put Breath into his Workes) would be- guile Nature of her Custome, to perfectly he is her Ages: He loo neere to Hermione, hath done Hermione, that they one would speake to her, and stand in hope of answer. Thither (with all greedinesse of affection) they goe, and there they intend to Sup.

Gent. 2, I thought the had some great matter there in hand. for she hath privily, twice or three a day, ever since the death of Hermione, visited that morned House, Shall wee thinke, and with our companie pecee the Replying?

Gent. 1, Who would be thence, that he's the benefit of Accesse? every winke of an Eye, some new Grace will beborne: our Abstinence makes vs vnfrivile to our Knowledge. Let's along.

Exit.

Act. 1. Now (had I not the darh of my former life in me) would Preffeminat drop on my head. I brought the old man and his Sonne aboard the Prince; told him, I heard them talke of a Fishetl, and I know not what: but be at that time over-fond of the Shepheards Daughter (to he then took her to be), who began to be much Sea-sick, and himselfe little better, extremite of Weather continuing, this Mysterie remained vndiscover'd. But's all one to me: for had I beene the finder-out of this Secret, I would not have relish'd among my other differend.

Enter Shepheard and Clowne.

Here come thole I have done good to against my will, and alreadie appearing in the blossomes of their Fortune.

Shop. Come Boy, I am past mee Children; but the Sonnes and Daughters will be all Gentlemen borne.

Clow. You are well met (Sir.) you deny'd to fight with mee this other day, because I was no Gentleman borne. See you these Clothes? say you fee them not, and thinke me still no Gentleman borne: You were beft fay these Robes are not Gentlemen borne. Give me the Lye: doe: and try whether I am not now a Gentleman borne.

Ask. I know you are now(Sir) a Gentleman borne.

Clow. I stand have been in any time these foure hours. Shop. And so haue I, Boy.

Clow. So you haue: but I was a Gentleman borne before my Father: for the Kings Sonne took mee by the hand, and called mee Brother: and then the Two Kings call'd my Father Brother: and then the Prince (my Brother) and the Princele (my Sister)call'd my Father, Father: and so wee wept: and there was the fift Gentleman-like teares that ever we fild.

Shop. We may huse (Sonnes) to fied many more.

Clow. 1: or else were hard-luck, being in fo prepositous eiate as we are.

Ask. I humbly beleeve you (Sir) to pardon mee all the faults I have committed to your Worship, and to give me your good report to the Prince my Master.

Shop. Prethee Sonne doe: for we must be gentle now we are Gentlemen.

Clow. Thou wilt amend thy life?

Ask. I, and it like your good Worship.

Clow. Give me thy hand: I will sware to the Prince, thou art as honest a true Fellow as any is in Bohemia.

Shop. You may sware it, but not sware it.

Clow. Not sware it, now I am a Gentleman? Let Boores and Franchises sware it, I sware it.

Shop. How it be fale (Sonnes)?

Clow. If it be not fale, a true Gentleman may sware it, in the behalfe of his Friend: And I sware to the Prince, thou art a tall Fellow of thy hands, and that thou wilt not be dranke; but I know thou art no tall Fellow, thou wilt be dranke: and that thou wilt be dranke: but, I sware it, and I would thou wilt not be a tall Fellow of thy hands.

Ask. I will prose so (Sir) to my power.

Clow. I, by any means prose a tall Fellow, if I do not wonder, how thou don't venture to be dranke, not being a tall Fellow, trust me not. Harke, the Kings and the Princes (our Kindred) are going to see the Quenes Picture. C'me, follow vs: we'll be thy good Masters.

Scena Tertia.

Enter Leontes, Polixenes, Florizell, Ferdinand, Camillo, Paulina. Hermione (like a Statue:) Lords &c.

Lee. O graue and good Paulina, the great comfort That I have had of thee.
The Winters Tale.

Paul. What (Souraigne Sir)
I did not well, I meant well: all my Services
You did not stay at home. But that you have taught me
(With your Crown'd Brother, and thee your contracd Heires of your KINGdomes) my poor House to visit;
It is a surplus of your Grace, which never
My life may laft to anfwere.

Les. Of Paulina,
We honor you with trouble: but we came
To fee the Statue of our Queene, Your Gallerie
Hau we pass'd through, not without much content
In many singularities; but we fau not
That which my Daughter came to looke upon,
The Statue of her Mother.

Paul. As the liu'd peculiar
So her dead likenesse I do well believe
Excell what euer yet you look'd vpon,
Or hand of Man hath done: therefore I keep it Lonely, apart. But here it is: prepare
To fee the Life as luvely mock'd, as euer
Still sleep'e mock'd Death: beheld, and fay'tis well,
I like your fience, it the more fhes-off
Your wonder: but yet fpeak, first you (my Liege)
Comes it not fomathing neere
Lea. Her natural Politue,
Chide me (deare Stone) that I may fay indeed
Though art Harmoune; or rather, thou art the
In thy not chiding: for the was a tender
As Infancy, and Grace. But yet (Paulina)

Harmoune was not fo much wrinkle'd, nothing
So aged as this feeme.

Paul. Oh, not by much.
Paul. So much the more our Carers excellence,
Which lets goe by some fixteene yeares, and makes her
As the liu'd now.

Lea. As now thee might have done, is So much to my good comfort, as it is Now piercing to my Soule. Oh, thus the flood,
Euen with such Life of Maiestie(ware Life),
As now it coldly (hands) when first I woold her,
I am afham'd: Do's not the Stone rebuke me,
For being more Stone then it? Oh Royall Peace
There's Magick in thy Maiestie, which has his My Euis coniur'd to remembrance: and
From thy admiring Daughter tooke the Spirits,
Standing like Stone with thee.

Perd. And give me leaue,
And do not fay'tis Superfition, that
I kneele, and then implore her Blessing, Lady,
Deere Queene, that ended when I but began,
Give me that hand of yours, to kiffe.

Paul. O, patience!
The Statue is but newly liad ; the Colour's
Not da\.

Caw. My Lord, your Sorrow was too foon lay'd-on,
Which fixteene Winters cannot blow away,
So many Summers dry: scarce any joy
Did euer fo long time; now Sorrow,
But kill'd it felle much sooner.

Paul. Deere my Brother,
Least that was the caufe of this, have powre
To take-off for much griefe from you: as he Will pecee wp in himselfe.

Paul. Indeed my Lord,
If I had thought the fight of my poore Image
Would thus haue wrought you (for the Stone is mine)

I'd not haue fhev'd it.

Les. Doe not draw the Curtaine,
Paul. No longer fhall you gaze on't, leaft your Fancy
May think'm anon, it moves.

Les. Lo be, let be:
Would I were dead, but that me thinkes already,
(What was he that did make it?) See (my Lord)
Would you not deeme it breath'd, and that thofe veines
Did verily bear blood?

Paul. Mafflyer done:
The very Life feemes warme vpon her Lippe.

Les. The figure of her Eye ha's motion in't,
As we are mock'd with Art.

Paul. Ile draw the Curtaine:
My Lord's almoft fo farre transport'd, that
He'le think it anon it lives.

Les. Oh fweet Paulina,
Make me to thinke fo twenty yeares together:
No fettled Sences of the World can match
The pleaure of that maffifie. Let't alone, Paul. I am forry (Sir) I haue thus farre fhit you: but I could affift you further.

Les. Doe Paulina:
For this Affiction ha's a taffe as fweet
As any Cordiall comfort. Still me thinkes
There is an ayre comes from her. What fine Chizzell
Could euer yet cut breath? Let no man mock me,
For will kiffe her,

Paul. Good my Lord, forbear:
The rudiflinefe vpon her Lippe, is wet:
You'll make it, if you kiffe it: then your owne
With Ouly Painting: fhall I draw the Curtaine,

Les. No: not fo late twenty yeares.

Perd. So long could I

Stand-by, a looker-on.

Paul. Either forbear,
Quickly enter Chappell, or resolute you
For more amezement: if you can behold it,
I'll make the Statue move indeed; defend,
And take you by the hand: but then you'll think (Which I proteft again!) I am affift
By wicked Powers.

Les. What you can make her doe,
I am content to looke on what to fpeak,
I am content to hear: for'tis as eafe
To make her speake, as moue.

Paul. It is requir'd
You doe awake your Faith; then, all hand flill:
On thofe that think it is vnauxfull bufinefe
I am about, let them depart.

Les. Proceed:

No foot fhall firre.

Paul. Mufick; awake her: Stroke:
'Tis time; defend; be Stone no more: approach:
Strike all that looke upon with meruelle:
Come: I'll fill your Graue wp: firrer: nay, come away:
Because to Death your nummefle; (for from him,
Dear Life redeemes you) you perceive the firrer:
Start not: her Actions fhall be holy, as
You hear my Spell is lawfull: doe not fhun her,
Virtue you fee her dyu againe; for then
You kill her double: Nay, prefent your Hand:
When she was young, you woold her: now, in age,
Is she the Suisor?

Les. Oh she's warme:
If this be Mufick, let it be an Art

Law-

V. iii. 2—110

The Winters Tale.

Lawfull as Eating.

Pol. She embraces him.

Cam. She hangs about his necke,

If she pertaine to life, let her speake too.

Pol. And make it manifeft where she ha's liu'd,

Or how done from the dead?

Paul. That she is living.

Were it but told you, should be hooted at

Like an old Tale: but it appears fhe lives,

Though yet fhe speake not. Marke a little while;

Pleafe you to interpole (faire Madam) kneele,

And pray your Mothers blesling: tune good Lady,

Our Perdita is found.

Her. You Gods looke downe,

And from your sacred Voils pourre your graces

Vpon my daughters head: Tell me (mine owne)

Where haft thou bin prefer'd? Where thou bin prefer'd

Thy Fathers Court? For thou (fares hearre that)

Knowing by Paulina, that the Oracle

Gave hope thou walt in being, haue prefer'd

My felfe, to fee the yssue.

Pol. There's time enough for that,

Leaft they desire (vpon this puesl) to trouble

Your loyces with like Relation. Go together

You precious winners all: your exaltation

Partake to every one: I (an old Turtle)

Will wing me to some wither'd bough, and there

My Mate (that's never to be found again)

Lament, till I am loft.

Lee. O peace Paulina:

Thou shouldest a husband take by my content,

As I by thine a Wife. This is a Match,

And made betwixt's by Vowes. Thou haft found mine,

But how, is to be question'd: for I law her

(As I thought) dead: and haue (in vaine) said many

A prayer upon her graue. Hee not fecke faire

(For him, I partly know his minde) to finde thee

An honourable husband. Come Camillo,

And take her by the hand: whose worth, and honestly

Is richly noted: and here iustified

By V5, a pairre of Kings. Let's from this place.

What looke upon my Brother: both your pardons,

That ere I put betwixt your holy looks,

My ill-suspition: This your Son-in-law,

And Sonne unto the King, whom heaven directing

Is troth-plight to your daughter. Good Paulina,

Lead vs from hence, where we may leyfully

Each one demand, and anfver to his part

Perform'd in this wide gap of Time, since first

We were diuerce'd: Haftily lead away.

Exeunt.

FINIS.
The life and death of King John.

Actus Primus, Scena Prima.

Enter King John, Queen Eleanor, Pembroke, Essex, and Salisbury, with the Chastilions of France.

King John, How now, Chastillon, what would France with us?
Chast. Thus (after greeting) speaks the King of France.

In my behaviour to the Maiestie,
The borrowed Maiestie of England here.

Elsa. A strange beginning: borrowed Maiestie?

K. John. Silence (good mother) hearst the Embassifie.

Chast. Peace of France, in rights due behalfe
Of thy deceased brother, Geoffrey sonne,
Arthur Plantaganet, leaves most lawful claim
To this faire land, and the Territories:
To Ireland, Poitiers, Audience, Trarague, Maine,
Defining thee to lay aside the sword:
Which favours wistfully the freecall titles,
And put the same into young Arthur's hand,
The Nephew, and right roially Souveraigne.

K. John. What follows if we disallow of this?

Chast. The proud contest of fierce and bloody warre,
To enforce their rights, so forcibly with-keid,

K. John. Here's war, war, and blood for blood,
Contreleme or controlemente: so answer France.

Chast. Then take my Kings defiance from my mouth,
The fairest limit of my Embassifie.

K. John. Bear mine to him, and so depart in peace,
Be thou as lightning in the skies of France;
For ere thou canst report, I will be there;
The chandar of my Cannon shall be heard.
So hence the loud the trumpet of our wrath,
And fullen preface of your owne decaye:
An honourable conduct let him have,
Pembroke looke to't: farewell Chastillon.

Exit Chast. and Pemb.

Es. What now my sonne, haue I not ever said
How that amissious Confidence would not eafe
Till she had kindled France and all the world,
Upon the right and parity of her sonne.
This might have beene prevented, and made whole
With very good argument of love,
Which now the marriage of two kingdomes must
With fearfull bloody issue arbitrate.

K. John. Our strong passion, and our right for vs.

Es. Your strong passion so much more then your right,
Or else it must goe wronge with you and me,
So much my conscience whispers in your ear,

Which none but heaven, and you, and I, shall heare.

Es. My Liege, here is the strangest controuersye
Come from the Country to be judg'd by you.
That ere I heard: shall I produce the men?

K. John. Let them approach:

Our Abbies and our Priorites shall pay
This expensious charge: what men are you?

Enter Robert Faulconbridge, and Philip.

Philip. Your faithful subject, a gentleman,
Borne in Northampton, and eldest sonne
As I suppose, to Robert Faulconbridge,
A Souderie by the Honor-guing-hand.

Of Cordial, Knighted in the field.

K. John. What art thou?

Robert. The fon and heir to that same Faulconbridge.

K. John. Is that the elder, and art thou the heyre?

You came not of one mother then it seems.

Philip. Most certain of one mother, mighty King,
That is well knowne, and as I think one father:
But for the clearne knowledge of that truth,
I put you here to heare, and to my mother,
Of that I doubt, as all mens children may.

Es. Out on thee rude man,
Doth he lay claim to thine inheritance?

Thib. I know not why, except to get the land;
But once he flandered me with battardly:
But where I be as true begote or no,
That shall I lay upon my mothers head,
But that I am as well begote my Liege
(Faire Iall the bones that tooke the pains for me):
Compare our faces, and be judge your selfe
If old Sir Robert did beget us both,
And were our father, and this sonne like him:
O old Sir Robert, Father, on my knee
I give heaven thanks I was not like to thee.

K. John. Why what a mad-care hath heaven lent us here?

Elen. He hath a trickke of Cordial's he.

The accent of his tongue affects him:

Doe you not read some tokens of my sonne
In the large composition of this man?

I. i. 1-88

323
The life and death of King John.

K. John. Mine eye hath well examined his parts,
And finds them perfect Richard; firs speake,
What doth move you to claim your brothers land?
Phil. Because he hath a half face like my father?
With whose face he would be hale in my lady's,
A half face's great, five hundred pounds my due.
Rob. My gracious Liege, when that my father ru'd,
Your brother did employ my father much.
Phil. Well say, by this you cannot get my land,
Your tale must be now he employ'd by any mother.
Rob. And once dispaith'd him in an Embassie
To Germany, there with the Emperer.
To treat of high affairs touching that time:
The advantage of his absence took the Kings,
And in the mean time founnd at my fathers
Where how he did preseale, I shame to speake:
But truth is truth, large lengths of feas and shores
Betweene my father, and my mother say,
As I have heard my father speake himselfe
When this false luydy gentleman was got:
Upon his death-beefie by well bequeathed
His lands to me, and took it on his death
That this my mother's issue was none of his;
And if he were, he came into the world
Full fourteen weeks before the course of time;
Then good my Lieutenante have what is mine,
My fathers land, as was my fathers will.
K. John. Sirra, your brother is Legitimate,
Your fathers wife did after wedlocke bear him:
And if she did play fafe, the tait was hers,
Which fault lyes on the hardships of all husbands
That marry wives; tell me, how if my brother
Who as you say, took impeachment to get this sonne,
Had of your father claim'd this sonne for his,
Insooth, good friend, your father might have kept.
This Calle, bred from his Cowe from all the world.
Insooth he might then; if he were my brothers,
My brother might not claim him, nor your father
Being none of his, refife him this concludes,
My mothers sonne did you: father beyne,
Your fathers beyne must have your fathers land.
Rob. Shall then my fathers Will be no force,
To dispose of that child which is not his.
Phil. Of no more force to dispose of me sir,
Then was his will to get me, as I think.
El. Whether hath thou them be a Fountenebridge,
And like thy brother to enjoy thy land:
Or the reputed fortune of Cordelot,
Lord of thy ente, or the lady be beside.
Haf. Madam, and many brother had his shape
And I had his, Sir Robert his like him,
And if my legs were two rich riding rods,
My atome, such eile skims that, my face to thin,
That in mine ear I shall not hit a roke.
Left men should fell, fooke where these eartings go,
And to the shape we were heere to all this land,
Would I might more neatly from off this plant,
I would give it empty foot to have this face:
It would not be inborn in any case.
Elon. I like thee well wait thou for fake thy fortune,
Bequests thy land to him, and follow me?
I am a Souldier, and now bound to France.
Haf. Brother, take you my land, Ite take my chances;
Your face hath got five hundred pounds a yeere,
Yet fell your face for fine pence and this decreet.
Maslam, Ile follow you into the death.

Elon. Nay, I would have you go before me thither.
Balf. Our Country manners give our better way.
K. John. What is thy name?
Balf. Philip my Liege, so is my name begyn,
Philip, good old Sir Robert was eldest sonne.
K. John. From henceforth bear his name
Whoe formes thou bearest?
Kneele thou downe Philip, but rise more great,
Arise Sir Richard, and Plantagenet.
Balf. Brother by thymother side, give me your hand,
My father gave me honor, yours gave land:
Now blest be the house by night or day
When I was got, Sir Robert was away,
Elr. The very spirit of Plantagenet:
I am thy grandame Richard, call me so.
Balf. Madam by chance, but not by truth, what tho:
Something about a little from the right,
In at the window, or else oer the hatch:
Who dares not play in stay, waile waile by night;
And haue a hue, how euer men doe catch:
Neece or faire off all womne is thill well shot,
And I am here, I was begot.
K. John. Con, Fountenebridge, now halfe thou thy desire,
A landleesse Knight, maketh thee a landed Squire?
Come Madam, and come Richard, we must sped
For France, for France, for it is more than need.
Balf. Brother adieu, good fortune come to thes,
For thou wilt go in way of honestly.

Exeunt all but boilard.

Balf. A foot of Honor better than we,
But many a many foot of Land the waife.
Well, now can I make any teane a lady.
Good den Sir Richard, Godamercy follow,
And if his name be George, Ile call him Peter;
For now made honor doth forget men names:
'Tis two refpeetive, and too fociable
For your confection, now your traveler,
Here and his tooke-pike at my worshipes meffe,
And when my knightly Iamacke is fufed,
Why then I scarce my teeth, and catherine
My picked must of Countries: my deere Sir,
Thus leaning on mine elbow I begin,
I shall beleев: that is question now,
And then comes anwerer like an Abley booker:
Ors, tayes anwer, at your left command,
At your employment, at your feme se:
No sir, ladies question, I tiewest at yours,
And if they know what question would,
Saying in Dialogue of Complement,
And talking of the Alpes and Appenines,
The Perencian and the river Poe,
It drawes towards fupper in conclusion fo.
But this is worthipfull lectery,
And this the mounting spirit like my felse;
For he is but a taught to the time
That doth not know a pleaece of obseruation,
And so am I whether I amacke or no
And not alone in habits and deuice,
Exterior forme, outward accourentem;
But from the inward motion to delier
Sweet, sweet, sweet posion for the ages tooth,
Which though I will not practice to deceiue,
Yet to sound deceit I meane to leare;
For it shall flrew the footsteps of my rising:
But who comes in such haste in rising robes?
Enter Lady Faulconbridge and James Cornoay.

_Lady._ Where is that flae thy brother? where is he?

_Exit James._

_Madam._ I was not old Sir Roberts, his brother; but he might have his part in me.

_Baft._ My brother Robert, old Sir Roberts sonne; Colbrand the Groat, that famous mighty man;
Is it Sir Roberts sonne that you seek to?

_Lady._ Sir Robert sonne, I know you are a noble boy,
Sir Roberts sonne? why scornst thou at Sir Robert?
He is Sir Roberts sonne, and so art thou.

_Baft._ James Gourrie, wilt thou giue vs leave a while?

_Guer._ Good leve, good Philip.

_Baft._ Philip, sparrow, James,
There's toyes abroad, anon I'll tell thee more.

_Exit James._

_Madam._ My brother, I am not Sir Roberts, Sir Roberts, sir Roberts might have his part in me.
Upon good Friday, and there broke his faith?
Sir Robert could doe well, marry to confesse
Could get me Sir Robert could not doe it.
We know his handy worke, therefore good mother
To whom am I beholding for these himmes?
Sir Robert ouer holpe to make this legge.

_Lady._ Haft thou confir'd with thy brother too,
That for thine owne game thouft defend mine honor?

_Baft._ My brother, I am not Sir Roberts, sir Roberts, sir Roberts might have his part in me.

_Her._ What, am I dubb'd, I haue it on my shoulder:
But mother, I am not Sir Roberts sonne,
I haue dissembl'd Sir Robert and my land,
Legitimation, name, and all is gone;
Then good my mother, let me know my father,
Some proper man I hope, who was it mother?
_Her._ Lady. Haft thou denied thy felte a Faulconbridge?

_Baft._ As faithfully as I denie the duiull.

_Lady._ King Richard Cordelton was thy father,
By long and vehement fiuit I was seduc'd
To make roome for him in my husbands bed:
Heauen lay not my transgression to my charge,
That art the ifue of my deere offence
Which was so strongly&Bd paift my defence.

_Baft._ Now by this light were I to get againe
Madam, I would not with the better father:
Some finnes doe beare their priuiledge on earth,
And doth yours: your faule, was not your folly
Needs must you lay your heart at his dispose,
Subiected tribute to commanding love,
Against whose furie and vnmatched force,
The awleffe Lion could not wage the fight,
Nor keepe his Priucely heart from Richards hand:
He that performe robs Lion of their hearts,
May easely winne a woman: aye my mother,
With all my heart I thanke thee for my father:
Who lines and dares but fay, thou didst not well
When I was got, lie fent his foule to hell.
Come Lady I will fhew thee to my kinne,
And they fhall fay, when Richard mine begote,
If thou had not fayd him nay, it had beene finne
Who fayes it was, he lyes, I fay vnnaue.

_Exit._

---

Enter before Angiers, Philip King of France, Lewis, Dandelphon, Austria, Confluen, Archier.

_Lewis._ Before Angiers well met braue Austria,
Archier that great fore-runner of thy bloud,
Richard that robd the Lion of his heart,
And fought the holy Wars in Palestyne,
By this braue Duke came early to his grave:
And for amends to his pofterity,
At our importance he is come,
To spread his colours boy, in thy behalfe,
And to enclude the visitation
Of thy unnatural Uncle, English John,
Embrace him, love him, give him welcome hether.
_Archi._ God shall forgive you Cordelton's death
The rather, that you gie his off-spring life,
Shadoeing their right under your wings of warre:
I giue you welcome with a powerlesse hand,
But with a heart full of vnflained loue,
Welcome before the gates of Angiers Duke.

_Lewis._ A noble boy, who would not doe thee right?

_Auft._ Upon thy cheeke lay I this zealous kisse,
As feale to this indenter of my louse:
That to my home I will no more returne
Till Angiers, and the right thou haft in France,
Together with that pale, that white-face'd shore,
Whose foot spurreth backe the Oceans roaring tides,
And coopes from other lands her handers,
Even till that England hedd'd in with the maine,
That Water-walled Bulwarke, fell secure
And confident from forereine purpofes,
Even till that vnmoit corner of the Welt
Salute thee for her King, till then faire boy,
Will I not thinke of home, but follow Armer.

_Coat._ O take his mothers thanks, a widdowes thanks,
Till your strong hand shall helpe to give him strength,
To make a more requital to your louse.

_Auft._ The peace of heauen is theirs I lift their swords
In such a iuft and charitable warre.

_King._ Well, then to worke our Cannon shall be bent
Against the browes of this refilling townes;
Call for our cheefest men of discipline,
To pull the plots of best advantages;
Woe will lay before this townie our Royal bones,
Wade to the market-place in French-men bloud,
But we will make it subject to this boy.

_Con._ Stay for an answer to your Embaiffe,
Dift vnnaus'd you faine their swords with bloud,
My Lord Chastilation may from England bring
That right in peace which heere we vrg in warre;
And then we will repent each drop of bloud,
That hot rash hate to indirectly shed.

_Enter Chastilation._

_King._ A wonder Ladylo upon thy with
Our Meflenget Chastilation is arriv'd,
What England lies, say brefely gentle Lord;
We coldly paffe for thee, Chastilion speake.

Chat._ Then turne your forces from this paltry fieghe,
And firre them vp against a mightier task:
England impatient of your iuft demands,
Hath put himselfe in Armes, the aduerie winnes

I. i. 218—II. i. 57
The life and death of King John.

Who's leisure I have said, have given him time
To land his Legions all as soon as I;
His march's are despatched to this town;
His forces strong, his Soldiers confident;
With him along is come the Mother Queen,
An Angel flaming to blood and strife,
With her her Niece, the Lady Blanch of Spain,
A Dauphine, a Bastard of the King's deceit,
And all her valiant heroes of the Land,
Rash, inconsiderate, fiery voluntary,
With Ladies fair, and fierce Dragons sable,
Have sold their fortunes, to their native homes;
Bearing their birth-right proudly on their backs,
To make a hazard of new fortunes here:
In brief, a bower choyse of daintie spirits
Then now the English houses base wattle, o'er,
Did never flow upon the bleeding tide
To do offence and feathe in Christendome;
The interruption of their churlish drums;
Cuts off more circumstance, they are at hand,

Enter K. of England, Balfard, Queen, Blanch, Pembroke, and others.

K. John. Peace be to France: If France in peace permit
Our luff and lineall entrance to our owne;
If not, blest be France, and peace Ascend to heaven.
While we Gods wrathfull agent doe correct
Their proud contempt that beats his peace to heaven.
France. Peace be to England, if that warre returne
From France to England, there to live in peace:
England we loue, and for that Englands sake,
With burden of our armor here we weare;
This cope of ours should be a work of thine;
But thou from Ionin and England art to fare,
That thou halt vnder-wooth his lawfull King,
Cutoff the sequence of posterity,
Out-saced Infant State, and done a rape
Upon the maiden virtue of the Crown;
Looke heare upon thy brother Geoffrey face,
These eyes, these browses, were moulded out of his;
This little abstraite doth contain that large,
Which did in Geoffrey and the hand of time,
Shall draw this breefe into as huge a volume:
That Geoffrey was thy elder brother borne,
And this his fonne, England was Geoffrey right,
And this is Geoffrey in the name of God.
How comest it then that thou art call'd a King,
When huing blood doth in these temples bear
Which owne the owne of others, that thou ownest not?
K. John. From whom haue thou this great commision
To draw my answer from thy Articles?

Fra. From that supernal Judge that fits good thoughts
In any beast of strong authority,
To lookes into the blots and stains of sight,
That judgement hath me guardian to this boy,
Vnder whose warrant I impeach thy wrong,
And by whose helpe I mean to chastifie it.

Fra. Exceeles it is to beat vvipting downe.
Queen. Who is it thou doest call vnipte France?
Conj. Let me make anwser: thy vnipting fonne.
Queen. Out infolent, thy bastard shall be King,
That thou maist bee a Queen, and check the world.
Con. My bed was ever to thy fonne as true
As he that was to call husband, and this boy
Liker in feature to his father Geoffrey
Then thou and John, in manner being as like,
As raine to water, or deuell to his damme;
My boy a bastard: by my soyle I think
His father neuer was so tru begeot,
It cannot bee, and if thou wert his mother.

Queen. There is a good mother boy, that blots thy ly-Conj. There's a good grandam boy

That would blot thee.

Aunf. Peace.
Balf. Hear the Cryer.
Aunf. What the deuill art thou?
Baff. One that will play the deuill for wish you,
And a may cayth your hide and you alone:
You are the bane of whom the Proverbe goes
Whose sullen puds laste Lyon by the beard;
He fumeke your skin-coat and I catch you right,
Sits roke too's, yfaith I will, yfaith.
Blais. O well he did become that I ons robe,
That did disrobe the Lion of that robe.
B afl. It lies as lightly on the backe of him
As great Alcest shooes upon an Affe;
Balf. Let take that burchen from your backe,
Or lay on that shall make your shoulders cracke.
Aunf. What cracker is this fame that desaies our cases
With this abundance of superfluous breath?
King Lewis, determine what we shall doe slait.

Low. Women & fool's, break off your conference.

King John, this is the very summe of all:
England and Ireland Angiers, Toronde, Maine,
In right of Arthur doe I claime of thee;
Wilt thou resigne them, and lay downe thy Armes?
John. My life as fonne; I doe defie thee France,
Arthur of Britaine, yeld thee to my hand,
And of my deere loue I lie give thee more,
Then er the coward hand of France can win;
Submit thee boy.

Queen. Come to thy grandame child.

Con. Doo childe, goe to yt grandame child.
Gise grandame kingdome, and it grandame will Give yt a plum, a cherry, and a figge,
That's a good grandame.

Arthur. Good my mother peace,
I would that we were lawd laid in my grave,
I am not worth this coyle that's made for me, (weepes.
Qu. Mo. His mother shames him so, poore boy hee
Con. NOW shame upon you where the doe do no,
His grandames wrongs, and not his mothers shame.
Drawes thofe heautn-mouing peartes for his poor eere,
Whose a good grandame.

Arthur. Good my mother peace,
I would that we were lowd laid in my grave,
I am not worth this coyle that's made for me, (weepes.
Qu. Mo. His mother shames him so, poore boy hee
Con. NOW shame upon you where the doe do no,
His grandames wrongs, and not his mothers shame.
Drawes thofe heautn-mouing peartes for his poor eere,
Whose a good grandame.

Qu. Thou monstrous flanderer of heaven and earth.

Con. Thou monstrous Insurer of heaven and earth,
Call not me flanderer, thou and thine viupe
The Dominations, Royalties, and rights
Of this oppressed boy; this is thy eldett fones fonne,
Infortunate in nothing but in thee:

Thy
The life and death of King John.

Thy fittes are visit'd in this poor child;
The Canon of the Laws is laid on him,
Being but the second generation
Removed from thy sinner-conceiving wombe.

Cow. I haue but this to say,
That he is not only plagued for his fin,
But God hath made her inne and her, the plague
On this removed ilie, piqued for her,
And with her plague her finnes his injury
Her iniurie the Beadle to her finne,
All punifh'd in the person of this child,
And all for her, a plague upon her due.
On this right hand, ye Cittizens, I can produce
A Will, that bars the title of thy sonne.

Cow. I who doubts that, a Will: a wicked will,
A womans will, a cankered Grandams will.

Fra. Peace Lady, pave, or be more temperate,
If he elseseeme this presence to crystme
To thefe ill tuned repetitions:
Some Trumpet fummon hither to the walls.
These men of Angiers, let vs hear them speake,
Whose title they admit, Arthurs or Iohns.

Trumpet sounds.

Enter a Citizen upon the walls.

Cit. Who is it that hath war'd vs to the walls?

Fra. This France, for England.

Iohn. England for it selfe:
You men of Angiers, and my loving Subiects,
Fra. You loving men of Angiers, Arthurs Subiects,
Our Trumpet call'd you to this gentle pare.

Iohn. For our advantage, therefore hear vs vs first:
These haggis of France that are advanced here
Before the coniection and prospect of your Towne,
Hau't hither march'd to your endengagement.
The Canons have their bowels full of wrath,
And ready mounted are they to spift forth
Their iron indigation gainst your walles:
All preparation for a bloody siege
And mericles proceeding, by these French.
Comfort yours Citties eies, your winking gates:
And but for our approach, thefe sleeping ftones,
That as a waife doth girdle you about
By the compulion of their Ordinances,
By this time from their fixed beds of lime
Had bin difhabitcd, and wide hauocke made
For bloody power to ruff vp your peace.
But on the right of vs your lawfull King,
Who painfully with much expedient march
Hau'c brought a counter-checke before your gates,
To fave vnrich'd your Citties threaten'd checkes:
 Behold the French amaz'd, you fhalde a pate:
And now indeed of bulleta, wrap'd in fire,
To make a flaming feare in your wallet,
They fstrike but calm words, foldcd vp in smoke,
To make a faithfle error in your ears,
Which fruit accordingly kinde Cittizens,
And let vs in. Your King, whose labour'd spirits
Peer-wearesd in this action of swift speede,
Craued harbouarge within your Cittie walles.

France. When I haue fadly, make anqwer to vs both,
Lay in this right hand, vpick your proportion
Is moft dumbly vproad upon the right.
Of him it holds, by fonde your fhawnting,
Some to the elder brother of this man,
And King or vs, and all thace he enioies:
For this downe-trodan equity, we tread
In warlike march, thefe gentlemen before your Towne,
Being no further enemy to you.
Then the confraint of hopitable zeale,
In the releafe of this oppreffed child,
Religiously provokes. Be pleade then.
To pay that dute which you truly owe,
To him that owes it, namely, this yong Prince,
And then our Armes, like to a muzzled Beare,
Safe in afechte, hath all offence feal'd vp:
Our Cannons malice vainly fhall be spent
Against th'inviolable clouds of heaven,
And with a bleffed and vn-vext reyse,
With wnaack'd swords, and Helmes all unbruis'd,
We will beare home that lyffe blood againe,
Which herc we came to pount againt your Towne,
And leave your children, wives, and you in peace.
But if you foonly paffe our proffer'd offer,
Tis not the rounder of your old-fac'd walles,
Can hide you from our meffengers of Warre,
Though all thefe English, and their discipline
Were harbour'd in their rude circumfence:
Then tell vs, Shall your Cittie call vs Lord.
In that behalfe which we haue challegg'd?
Or shall we give the signall to our rage,
And fllake in blood to our poftefion?

Cit. In breue, we are the King of Englands Subiects
For him, and in his right, we hold this Towne.

Iohn. Acknowledgen the then the King, and let me in.

Cit. That ear we not: but he that proues the King
To him will we proue loyall, till that time
Have we ranni'd vp our gates againft the world.

Iohn. Doth not the Crowne of England, proue the King?
And if not that, I bring you Witnesss
Twice fiftene thouand hearts of Englands breed.

Baft. Bairdards and eife.

Iohn. To verify our title with their lies.

Fra. As many and as well-borne bloods as thefe,

Baft. Some Bairdards too.

Fra. Stand in his face to contradicte his claime.

Cit. Till you compound whose right is worthifull,
We for the worthy hold the right from both.

Iohn. Then God forgive the time of all those foules,
That to their everlafting residence,
Before the dew of evening fall, fhall fethce
In dreadful triall of our kingdomes King.

Fra. Amen, Amen, mount Cheiftaiers to Armes

Baft. Saint George that fwindg'd the Dragon,

And ere finced's son's horfeback at mine Hostell e dor
Teach vs fome fence. Sirrah, were I at home
At your dea farah, with your Lionette,
I would let an Oxe-head to your Lyons hide
And make an anfwer of you.

Auff. Peace, no more.

Baft. On tremble for you hear the Lyon rote.

Iohn. Vp higher to the plains, where we'll let forth
In beft appointment all our Regiment.

Baft. Speed then to take advantage of the field.

Fra. It shall be fo, and at the other hill.

Command the reft to stand, God and right, Exennt
Here after excursions, Enter the Herald of France
With Trumpets to the gates.

F. Her. No men of Angiers open wide your gates,
And let yong Arthur Duke of Britaine in.
The life and death of King John.

Who by the hand of France, this day hath made Much warre for tears in many an English mother,
Whose womanly eye festered on the bleeding ground:
Many a widow wept a hissing sigh,
Coldly embracing the discoloured earth,
And victorie with little loffe doth play
Upon the dancing banners of the French,
Who are at hand triumphantly displayed
To the Conquerors, and to proclaime
Arthur of Britaine, Englands King, and yours.

Enter English Herald with Trumpets.

E.Har. Rejoyce you men of Angiers, ring your bells,
King John, your king and Englands, doth approach,
Commander of this hot malicious day,
Their Armours that march'd hence to soluble light,
Hither returne all gift with Frenchmens blood:
There blussc no plume in any English Creft,
That is remoyd by a gaffe of France
Our colours do returne in those same hands
That did display them when we first marched forth:
And like a sally troope of Huntmen come
Our lustie English, all with pulped hands,
Died in the dying slaugther of their foes,
Open your gates, and grace the Victors way.

Hindes. Herald, from off our townes we might behold
From first to last, the yoke and rename;
Of both your Armies, whole equality
By our best eyes cannot be confir'd:
Blows: Blood hath bought blood, and blowses have answered
Strength matchet with strength, and power confronted power.
Both are alike, and both alike we like:
One must prove greatest.
While they do favour one,
We hold our Towne for neither: yet for both,

Enter the two Kings with their power, at general doores.

John. France, haft thou yet more blood to call away?
Say, shall the currant of our right come on,
Whose paffage vext with thy impediment,
Shall leave his nature channell, and ere-fwell
With contes disturb'd even thy confining shores,
Vnleffe thou let his poynted bay be keppe
A peace full progression to the Ocean.

Fra. England shoult haft not sou'd one drop of blood
In this hot triall more then we of France,
Rather lost more. And by this hand I sweare
That sways the earth this Climate over-lookes,
Before we will lay downe our lift-borne Armes.
We'll put thee downe, against whom these Armes wee
Or add a royall number to the dead:
(bears)
Grating the scroule feetlesse of this warres loffe,
With slaugther coupled to the name of kings.

Raf. Ha Maiestie: now high thy glory crownes,
When the rich blood of kings is set on fire:
Oh now doth death line his dead chaps with fleete,
The swords of souldiers are his teeth, his phangs,
And now he feasts, mowing the fleete of men
In vndetermined directions of kings.
Why stand these royall fronts amazed thus?
Cry lay to kings, backes to the thinned field
You equal Paixons, fierce kindled spirits,
Then let confusion of our part confirm
The others peace: till then, blowes, blood, and death.

John. Whose party do the Townemen yet admite?
Fra. Speaketh Citizens for England, whose your king,
Hub. The king of England, when we knew the king,
Fra. Know him in vs, that here hold vp his right.
John. In vs, that are our owne great Depuie,
And beate possession of our Person here,
Lord of our preence Angiers, and of you.

Raf. A greater powre then We denies all this,
And till it be undeniable, we do locke:
Our former scruple in our strong hand's gates
Kings of our feare, untill our feares refault'd
Be by some certaine king, purg'd and depos'd.

Raf. By heauen, these scroyle of Angiers flaws you
And stand fearefully on their battellments, (kings,
As in a Theater, whence they gape and point
At your induftrious Scens and acts of death.
Your Royall preences be rule'd by mee,
Do like the Mutines of Jerusalem,
Be friends a while, and both conveniently bend
Your sharpest Deeds of malice on this Towne.
By East and West let France and England mount.
Their battering Canon charged to the mouthes,
Till their soule-tearing clamours have brans'd downe
The flintie ribbes of this contemptuous Citie,
I'de play incendiary upon their Iades,
Euen till vnfenced defolation
Leave them as naked as the vulgaraye:
That done, dissipate your visited strengths,
And part your mingled colours once againe,
Turne face to face, and bloody point to point:
Then in a moment Fortune shall call forth
Out of one side her happy Minion,
To whom in favour shee shall give the day,
And kiffe him with a glorious victory:
How like you this wildc counfей mighty States,
Smakes it not b'athing of the policie.

John. Now by the sky that hangs above our heads,
I like it well. France, shall we knit our powers,
And lay this Angiers even with the ground,
Then after fight what shall be king of it?

Raf. And if haft the mettle of a king,
Being wrong'd as we are by this pucuih Towne:
Turne thou the mouth of thy Artillerie,
As we will ours, against these favtie wallers,
And when that we haue destryed the ground,
Why then desie each other, and pitt-nells,
Make warke upon our felues, for heauen or hell.

Fra. Let it be so: say, where will you assault?

John. We from the West will send destruction
Into this Cites before.

Aff. I from the North.

Fra. Our Thunder from the South,
Shall raine their drift of bullets on this Towne.

Raf. O prudent discipline! From North to South:
Aurifia and France shoot in each others mouth,
Ilke threatenings to them: it Come, away, away.

Hub. Heare vs great kings, vouchsafe awhile to stay
And I shall shew you peace, and faire-fac'd league:
Win you this Citie without stroke, or wound,
Refecte those breathing lines to dye in beds,
That here come sacrifaces for the field.
Perfeuer not, but heare me mighty kings.

John. SPEAK on with favour, we are here to hear.

Hub. That daughter there of Spaine, the Lady Blanche
Is necere to England, looke vpon the yeares
Of Lewis the Dolphin, and that lonely maid.
If lustie loush shoulc go in quest of beautie,
The life and death of King John.

Where should he find it fairer, then in Blanche?
If zealous love should go in search of virtue,
Where should he find it purer then in Blanche?
I like ambitious, sought a match of birth,
Whole reigned bound richer blood then Lady Blanche?
Such she is, in beauty, virtue, birth,
Is the young Dolphin every way complete,
If not complete of, say he is not free,
And the agame wants nothing to name want,
If want it beon, that she is not hee.
He is the half part of a blessed man,
Left to be finish'd by such as hee,
And she faire Guided excellence,
Whose fulness of perfection lies in him.
O two such flour climates when they joyne
Do glorifie the bances that bound them in:
And two such shores, to two such freemans made one,
Two such controlling bounds shall you be, kings,
To the two Princes, if you marry them:
This Virgin shall do more then battery can
To our faile closed gates: for at this match,
With fairest spleenie then powder can enforce
The breath of passion shall pass from this side one,
And give you entrance: but without this match,
The enraged is not halfe so deafe,
Lion more confident, Mountains and rocks
More free from motion, nor death himselfe
In mortal fuse half so peremptorie,
As we to keep this Citte.

Baff. Here's a flaw,
That makes the rotten raffle of old death
Out of his rags. Here's a large mouth indeede,
That lips forth death, and mountains, rocks, and seas,
Talks as familiarly as roaring Lyons,
As maids of thirteene do of puppy-dogges,
What Cannoneere begot this halfe blood,
He speaks plain Cannon fire, and sooke, and bounce,
He gives the buffinado with his tongue:
Our eares are cudeg'd, not a word of his
But buffets better then a bill of France:
Zounds, I was never to be bumpt with words,
So I first call'd my broth, and my father Dad.
Old Laj. Son, lift to this continuance, make this match
Give with our Neece a dowrie large enough,
For by this knot, thou shalt so fully eie
The now unfur'd disaffiance to the Crowne,
The yon green boy shall haue no Sunne to ripe
The bloomes that promiseth a mightie fruit.
I see a yeilding in the looke of France:
Mark how they whisper, vrg by them while their foules
Are capable of this ambition,
Least zeal now melted by the windie breath.
Of soft petitions, pittie and remorse,
Coole and congesse againe to what it was.
Hub. Why answer not the double Maries,
This friendly treatise of our threatened Towne.

Fra. Speake England! fifth, that hath bin forward fifth.
To speakeunto this Cittie: what say you?
John. If that the Dolphin there thy Princely fonne,
Can in this bouke of beautie read, I loue:
Her Dowrie shall weigh equal with a Queene:
For Auger, and faire, and faire, and faire,
Peyhier, And all that are upon this side the Sea.
(Except this Cittie now by vs belied,d)
Faire lible to our Crowne and Dignitect,
Shall gift her bridall bed and make her rich
In titles, honors, and promotions,
As she in beautie, education, blood,
Holdes hand with any Prince off the world.

Fra. What saith thou boy? looke in the Ladies face,
Dol. I do say, and in her eie I find
A wonder, or a wondrous miracle,
The shadow of my isle form'd in her eye,
Which being but the shadow of your fonne,
Becomes a fonne and makes your fonne a shadow:
I do protest I neuer lou'd my isle
Till now, infixed I beheld my felle,
Drawne in the flattering table of her eie.

Baff. Drawne in the flattering table of her eie,
Hang'd in the frowning wrinkle of her brow,
And quarter'd in her heart, bee doth eie.
Himselfe loues traytor, this is pittie now;
That hang'd, and drawne, and quarter'd there should be
In such a love, folo est a out at he.

Elan. My wickes will in this respect is mine,
If hee sech outh in you that makes him like,
That any thing he sech's which moves his finge,
I can with eie truely vouchsafe that to my self.
Or if you will, to speake more properly,
I will enforce it estle to my love,
Further I will not flatter you, my Lord,
That all I see at you is worthie eie.
Then this, that nothing do I see in you,
Though eurchills thoughts themselves should bee your Judge,
That I can finde, should merit any hate.

John. What face thee fong-ones? What say you my Neece?
Elan. That she is bound in honor still to do
What you in wisecome still vouchsafe to say.

John. Speake then Prince Dolphin, can you love this Lady?

Dol. Nay make me if I can restrain from loue,
For I doe loue her most unfinadly.

John. Then do I give Doulgerfe, Tarraine, Steine,
Peakers and Anzoun, these five Provinces
With her to the, and this addition more,
Full thirty thousand Markes of English cyme
Philip of France, ih shoule be prised withall,
Command thy fonne, and bathet to joyne hands.

Fra. It likes vs well young Princes: close your hands
Anst. And your lipes too, for I am well affin'd,
That I did lo when I was first affin'd.

Fra. Now Citizens of Angiers ope your gates,
Let in that amitiue which you haue made,
For at Saint Marius Chappell pretintly,
The right of marriage shallbe solemnis'de.
Is not the Ladie Conte in this troope?
I know she is not for this match made vp,
Her presence would have interrupted much.
Where is she and her fonne, tell me, who knowes ?

Dol. She is sad and passionate at your highest Tent.

Fra. And by my faith, this league that we haue made
Will give her ladyness very little cuse :
Brother of England, how may we content
This widower Lady? in her right we came,
Which we God knowes, haue turn'd another way,
To our owne vantage.

John. We will heale vp all,
For we'll create young Arthur Duke of Britaine
And Earle of Richmond, and this rich faire Towne.
The life and death of King John.

Opprest with wrongs, and therefore full of tears,
A widow, husbandles, lubece to tears;
A woman naturally borne to tears;
And though thou now confesse thy fault but left
With in some measure (spite her fo,
That we shall stop her exclamation,
Go we as well as hurt will suffer,
To this vnlook'd for vicinaged pompe.

Exeunt.

Baff. Mad world, mad kings, mad composition:
John to stop Arthur's Title in the whole,
Hath willingly departed with a part,
And France, whose armes, Confidence buckled on,
Whom zeal and charity brought to the field,
As Gods owne fouldier, roudned in the care,
With that same purpose-changer, that flye duel,
That Brocket, that full breaks the name of faith,
That dayly breake-vow, he that winnes of all,
Of kings, of beggers, old men, yong men, maid's,
Whoe hauing no extraillum to loose,
But the word Maid, cheats the poore Maid of that.
That thousands-fac'd Gentleman, this Maid, commodity,
Commodity, the byas of the world,
The world, who of its felfe is pyefed well,
Made to run euen, upon eu en ground;
Till this advantage, this vile drawing byas,
This way of motion, this commodity,
Maketh it take head from all kind serency,
From all direction, purpose, course, intent.
And this fame byas, this commodity.
This Bawd, this Brocket, this all-changing-word,
Claped on the outward eye of fickle France,
Hath drawne him from his owne determin'd ayd,
From a refolu'd and honourable warre,
To a moit base and vile-concluded peace.
And why rayle I on this Commodity?
But for because he hath not wooked me yet:
Not that I have the power to clutch my hand,
When his faire Angells would faine my palmes,
But for my hand, as vnamempted yet,
Like a poore begger, raleth on the rich.
Well, whilst I am a begger, I will take,
And say there is no fin but to be rich:
And being rich, my vertue then shall be,
To say there is no vice, but beggerie:
Since Kings blake faith upon commodity,
Gainc be my Lord, for I will worship thee.

Exeunt.

Actus Secundus.

Enter Conference, Arthur, and Salisbury.

Con. Gone to be married? Gone to sweare a peace?
Fallest blood to fallest blood inoyd, Gone to be friends?
Shall we see the Blanche, and Blanche those Provinces?
I am no snow, thou haft mufle, mifheard,
Be well adiu'd, tell the next age againe.
It cannot be, thou do it but fay'5 fo.
I tryst I may not tryst thee, for thy word
Is but the third breath of a common man.
Believe me, I doe not believe thee man.
I have a Kings oath to the contrary,
Thou shalt be punish'd for this fghting me,
For I am fickle, and capable of feares.
The life and death of King John.

Enter King John, France, Dolphin, Blanch, Eleanor, Philip, Auffria, Confidence.

Fra. Tis true (faire daughter) and this blessed day,
Euer in France shall be kept festiall:
To solemnize this day the glorious funne
Stayes in his course, and playes the Alchymist,
Turning with splendor of his precious eye
The meager cloddy earth to glittering gold:
The yearly course that brings this day about,
Shall neuer fee it, but a holy day.
Con. A wicked day, and not a holy day,
What hath this day defend'd? what hath it done,
That it in golden letters be set
Among the high tides in the Kalender?
Nay, rather tinct this day out of the wecke,
This day of shame, opprobrium, perriety.
Or if it must stand still, let wisues with childe
Pray that their burthen may not fall this day,
Left that their hopes prodigiously be croft:
But (on this day) let Sea-men fear not the sea,
No barren seas breaketh that are not this day made;
This day all things begun, come to ill end,
Yea, fruitful of it to hollow falshood come.

Fra. By heauen Lady, you shall have no caufe
To curfe the faire proceedings of this day:
Have I not pown'd to you my Maitrely?
Con. You have begun'd me with a counterfeit
Reembling Maiftry, which being touch'd and trie'd,
Pours valueless: you are forsworne, forsworne,
You came in Armes to spil mine enemies blood,
But now in Armes, you strengthen it with yours.
The grasping vigor, and rough frowne of Warre
Is cold in amzie, and painted peace,
And our opprobrium hath made vp this league:
Arms, arms, you heauen, against these peri't Kings,
A widowe cries, be husband to me (heauens)
Let not the howres of this vragodly day
Warre out the dais in Peace; but ere Sun-set,
Set armed dide against these peri't Kings,
Hear me, Oh, heare me.

Aust. I say Confance, peace.
Con. War, war, no peace; peace is to me a warre:
O Lymoges, O Auffria, thou dost shame
That bloudy spoyle: thou flaue, thou wretch, y' coward,
Thou little vaunt, great in villainie,
Thou cuer strong vp the stronge fierde
Thou Fortunes Champion, that do'tt never fight
But when her humourous Lulidhip is by
To tetch thee safety: thou art peri't too,
And tooth it vp greatnesse.
What a scole art thou, a ramping foole, to brawl, and ftrump, and fwear,
Upon my partie: thou cold bloody flaue,
Haft thou not spoke like thunnder on my fide?
Beene frowne my Souldeir, bidding me defend
Upon thy fhares, thy fortune, and thy strength,
And dost thou now fall out to my foes?
Thou wreate a Lyons hide, doft it for fame,
And hang a Calues-skin on that recreat limbs.

Aust. Oh that a man should speake those words to me.
Phil. And hang a Calues-skin on those recreat limbs
Aust. Thou dar' not say to villainie for thy life.
The life and death of King John.

And by differing hands hell losethe soule.

Asth. King Philip, listen to the Cardinalis.

Bap. And hang a Calues-skin on his rezent limbis.

Asth. Well right, I meet pocket vp these wrongs,

Because,

Bap. Your breethes beft may carry them.

Deim. Philip, what faith thou to the Cardinalis?

Caa. What should he say, but as the Cardinalis?

Dolph. Bethink you father, for the difference

Is purchase of a heavy curse from Rome,

Or the right liofe of England, for a friend:

Forget the easer.

Bla. That is the curse of Rome.

Caa. O Lewis, stand fall, the devil tempt thee here

In like one of a new wartrimm'd Bride.

Bla. The Lady Constance speaks not from her faith,

But from her need.

Caa. Oh, if thou grant my need,

Which onely liues but by the death of faith,

That need, with mult needs prevails this principle,

That faith would live again by death of need:

O then take downe my need, and faith mounts vp,

Keep me my need vp, and faith is crost downe, I

Asth. The king is removed, and answers not to this.

Bla. O be removed from him, and answere well.

Asth. Doe su king Philip, hang no more in doubt.

Bla. Hang nothing but a Calues skin most sweeter loue.

Fra. I am perplexed, and know not what to say.

Fae. What canst thou say, but will pleases thee more?

If thou stand excommunicate, and cut

Fra. Good reverend father, make my perfom yours,

And tell me how you would bellow your felle?

This royall hand and mine are newly knit,

And the contoudion of our inward foules

Married in league, coupled, and link'd together

With all religions strength of sacred vowes,

The latest breath that gave the found of words

Was deepes-swoone faith, peace, amity, true loue

Betweene our kingsdomes and our royall chuses,

And even before this truce, but new before,

No longer then we well could wath our hands,

To clap this royall barraye vp of peace,

Heauen knowes they were belseas'd and ouer-flaind

With flaughters pencil, where reverence did paint

The fearfull difference of incensed kings:

And shall these hands to lately purged of blood?

So newly ioyn'd in loue? so strong in both,

Vnyoke this feasure, and this kinde regrete?

Play part and looue with faith? do with heaven,

May the wcondit children of our felues

As now againe to smutch our palme from palme:

Vn-swoone faith foweone, and on the marriage bed

Of smiling peace to march a bloody hoast,

And make a rout on the gentle brow

Of true sinceritie? O holy Sir

My reverend father, let it not be so;

Out of your grace, deasie, ordaine, impose

Some gentle order, and then we shall be blest

To doe your pleasoure, and continue friends.

Pand. All forme is formelesse, Order orderlesse,

Save what is opposite to Englands loue.

Therefore to Armes, be Champion of our Church,

Or let the Church our mother breathe her curfe,

A mothers curfe, on her revolted binne:

France, thou maist hold a serpant by the tongue,

A cafed Lion by the mortall paw,

A fasting Tyger later by the tooth,

Then keep in peace that hand which thou dost hold.

Fra. I am difloyne my hand, but not my faith.

Pand. So makeeft thou faith an enemy to faith,

And like a ciuill warre lefts oath to oath,

Thy tongue against thy tongue. O let thy vow

First made to heaven, first be to heaven perform'd,

That is, to be the Champion of our Church,

What since thou swarest, is fwoone against thy felle,

And may not be performed by thy felle,

For that which thou haft fwoone to doe amiffe,

Is not amiffe when it is truly done:

And being not done, where doing tends to ill,

The truth is then moft done not doing it.

The better Act of purposes miflike,

Is to mislike again, though indirecct,

Yet indirection thereby growes direcct,

And falshood, falshood cures, as fire cooles fire

Within the forerched veins of one new burn'd:

It is religion that doth make vowes kept,

But thou halft swnone against religion:

By what thou swarest against the thing thou swarest it,

And mak'st it an oath the sware for thy truth,

Against an oath the truth, thou art unfalse.

To swoone, swoose onely not to be forsworne,

Else what a mockery should it be to swoone?

But thou doft swoone onely to be forsworne,

And meft forsworne, to keep what thou dost swoone,

Therefore thy later vowes, against thy sself.

Is in thy felle rebellion to thy felle:

And better conquest never canst thou make,

Then arme thy conflant and thy nobler parts

Against the giddy loose suggotions:

Vpon which better part, our prays come in,

If thou wouldst be cleane. But if not, then know

The peril of our curves light on thee

So heauy, as thou shalt not shake them off

But in defpair, dyde under their black weight.

Asth. Rebellion, flat rebellion.

Bla. Whyt not be?

Will not a Calues-skin stop that mouth of thine?

Daul. Father, to Armes.

Blanch. Vpon thy weding day?

Against the blood that thou hast quarrel'd

What,shall our feast be kept with slaughtered men?

Shall braying trumpets, and loud churchdrums

Clamors of hell, be measures to our pomp?

O husband hear me: aye, alacke, how new

Is husband in my mouth? even for that name

Which till this time my tongue did dare pronounce;

Vpon my knee I begged, goe not to Armes

Against mine Vnle.

Conf. O, vpon my knee made hard with kneelings,

I doe pray thee, thou reverent Daunthum,

Alter not the doome fore-thought by heauen.

Blon. Now shall I fee thy loue, what motiue may

Be stronger with thee, then the name of wife?

Daul. That which vpholdeth him, that thee vpholds,

His Honor, his true honor, Lune, his honor.

Dolph. I mufe your Majestie doth feeme to cold,

When such profound respect doth pull you on?

Pand. I will denounce a curfe vpon his head.

Fra. Thou shalt not need, England, I will fall for thee.

Conf. O faire returne of banits of Maiestie.

Elec. O sole resolt of French inconfancy,

Eng. France, y shal heue this house within this houte,
The life and death of King John.

Exeunt.

Scene Secunda.

Alarums, Excursions : Enter Baffard with Austria's head.

Baff. Now by my life, this day grows wondrous hot.
Some very dennis houses in the side,
And soul's downe mischief. Austria head lyeth there,
Enter Iohn, Arthur, Hubert.

While Philip breathes.

Iohn. Hubert, keep this boy: Philip make vp, My Mother is afayed in our Taint,
And cause I fear.

Baff. My Lord I refuced her,
Her Highnesse is in safety, fear you not:
But on my Liege, for very little paines
Will bring this labor to an happy end.

Exit.

Alarums, Excursions, Retreat. Enter Iohn, Eleanor, Arthur Baffard, Hubert, Lord,

Iohn. So shall it be: your Grace shall stay behind
So strongly guarded: Colen Jonke not fail,
Thy Grandame loues thee, and thy Ynde will
As deere be to thee, as thy father was,
Arth. O this will make my mother die with grief.
Iohn. Colen away for England, haste before,
And ere our comming fee thou take the bags
Hooing Babbins, impiated angels
Set at liberty: the far rabs of peace
Muff by the hungry now be fed vp on:
Ioll the Commision in his armof force.

Baff. Bell, BOoke, & Candle, shall not drive me back,
When gold and fluer beckes me to come on,
I sue your highnesse: Grandame, I will pray,
(If ever remember to be holy)
For your faire safety: I will kiffe your hand.
Iohn. Farewell gentle Colen.
The life and death of King John.

Scena Tertia.

Enter France, Dolfin, Pandolph, Attendants.

Fra. So by a roaring Tempest on the flood,
A whole Army do of conquest fail
Is scatter'd and dis-lost from fellowship.

Pand. Courage and comfort, all shall yet go well.

Fra. What can goe well, when we have runne too ill?

Are we not beaten, is not Angier lost?

Arthur take prisoner? divers dear friends flaine?
And bloody England into England gone,

Ore-bearing interruption spight of France?

Dol. What he hath won, that hath he fortified:
So hot a speed, with such aduince dispor'd,
Such temperate order in so fierce a cause,
Doth want example: who hath read, or heard
Of any kindred-action like to this?

Fra. Well could I beare that England had this praise,
So we could find some pattern of our shame:

Enter Constance.

Look(ke who comes hence? a grace unto a soule,
Holding the external spirit against her will,
In the vilde prision of afflicted breath:
I prethee Lady goe away with me:

Con. Lady no: I will now see the issue of your peace.

Fra. Patience good Lady, comfort gentle Constance.

Con. No, I defie all Counsell, all redresse
But that which ends all counsell, rude Redresse:

Death, death, O amiable, lovely death,
Thou odorous feren: found rotteneffe,
Arie forth from the couch of lafting night,
Thou hate and terror to prosperite,
And it will kiffe thy detestible bones,
And put my eye-Balls in thy vauolte browses,
And ring thefle fingers with thy howl'd worms
And stop this gap of breath with fulltome dutt,
And be a Carrion Monster like thy felle;

Come, grin on me, and I will think thou smil'st it,
And buffle thee as thy wife: Milites Lour,
O come to me.

Ora. O faire affliction, peace.

Con. No, no, I will not, having breath to cry:
O that my tongue were in the thunders mouth,
Then with a psalme would I flake the world,
And rowze from sleepe that fell Anatomy
Which cannot bear a ladies feeble voyce,
Which forms a madame Invocation.

Pand. Lady, you weter madmene, and not sorrow

Con. Thou art holy to beleve me so,
I am not mad: this hair I teare is mine,
My name in Constance, I was Geoffrey wife,

Young. Arthur is my fonne, and he is lost:
I am not mad, I would to heauen I were,
For then'tis like I should forget my felle:
O, if I could, what griefe should I forget?
Preach some Philosophy to make me mad,
And thou shalt be Canoniz'd (Cardinal.)
For, being not mad, but tender of greene,
My reasonable pure produces reason.
How may I be deliver'd of these woes,
And reaches mee to kille or hang my felle:
If I were mad, I should forget my fonne,

Or madly think a babe of clownes were he;
I am not mad: too well, too well I feel
The different plague of each calamity.

Fra. Binde vp those teftes: 0 what loue I note
In these multitude of those珩 haires;
Where but by chance asluer drop hath faine,
Euen to that drop ten thousand weary friends
Doe glow themselues in sociable griefe,
Like true, inteparable, faithfull loues,
Sticking together in calamity.

Con. To England, if you will.

Fra. Binde vp your haires.

Con. Yes that I will rend and wherefore will I do it?
I tore them from their bonds, and cite aloud,
O, that these hands could fo redeeme my fonne,
As they have giv'n these hayres their libertie:
But now I enuie at their libertie,
And will againe commit them to their bonds,
Because my poor child is a prisoner.

And Father Cardinall, I haue heard you say
That we shall fee and know our friends in heauen:
If that be true, I shall fee my boy againe;
For since the birth of Caine, the first male-child
To him that did but yesterdaie fupire,
There was not such a gracious creature borne:
But now will Canker-trowe eat my bed,
And chafe the natiue beauty from his cheere,
And he will looke as hollow as a Ghoul,
Aim and meager as an Agues frail,
And so he'll dye: and rising fo again,
When I shall meet him in the Count of heauen
I shall not know him: therefore never, never Mull I behold my pretty Arthur more.

Pand. You hold too heynous a respect of greefe.

Con. He talke to me, that never had a fonne.

Fra. You are as fond of greefe, as of your childre.

Con. Greefe filts the roome vp of my absent childre:
Lies in his bed, walkes vp and downe with me,
Puts on his prettie lookes, repeats his words,
Remembret me of all his gracious parts,
Stufets up his vancat garments with his forme;
Then, have I reason to be fond of griefe?

Fareyou well: I bad you such a loffe as I,
I could give better comfort then you doe.
I will not heape this forme upon my head,
When there is foich disorder in my write:

O Lord, my boy, my Arthur, my faire fonne,
My life, my joy, my food, my all the world:
My widow-comfort, and my sorrowes cure.

Exit. Fra.

Fra. I feare some out-rage, and flee follow her. Exit. Dol.

There's nothing in this world can make me joy,
Life is as tedious as a twice-told tale,
Veing the dull ease of a drowze man;
And better shame hath spoild the sweet words taffe,
That if ye mediate but shame and bitterness.

Pand. Before the curing of a strong diseale,
Even in the inflant of repairs and health,
The fit is strongest: Eulls that take leave
On their departure, moff of all they eull:
What have you loft by lofing of this day?

Dol. All dates of glory, joy, and happinesse.

Pan. If you had won, certainly you had:
Not now: when Fortune means to turne most good,
Shee lookes upon them with a threatening eye:
Tis strange to thinke how much King John hath lof
In this which he accounts so clearely wonne.
Aulus Quattuor. Scena prima.

Enter Hubert and Executioner.

Hub. Hear me, thee iron hot, and looke thou stand
Within the Armes: when I take my foot
Upon the bottome of the ground, thus forth
And binde the boy, which thou shalt finde with me
Fall to the charge: be heedfull hence, and watch.

Exe. I hope your warrant will bear out the deed.

Hub. Vnecelently scruples fear not you: looke to't.

Yong Lad come forth; I have to say with you.

Enter Arthur.

Ar. Good morrow Hubert.

Hub. Good morrow, little Prince.

Ar. As little Prince, having to go great a Title
To be more Prince, as may be you are sad.

Hub. Indeed I have beene merrie.

Ar. Mericce on me:

Me thinks no body should be sad but I:
Yet I remember, when I was in France,
Yong Gentlemene would be sad as might
Onely for wantonne\ v. by my Christendome,
So I were out of prison, and kept sheepe.
I should be merry as the day is long:
And to I would be here, but that I doubt,
My Nuckle pegsities more barren to me:
He is afraid of me, and I of him:

Is it my fayls, that I was Goggridore sonne?

No in desire it not, and I would to heaven
I were your sonne, to you would love me:
Hubert. If I talk to him, with his innocente pratte
He will awake my mercie, which lies dead:
Therefore I will be fadisme, and dispatch.

Ar. Are you tickle Hubert, you looke pale to day;
Indeed I would you were a little fickes,
That I might fit all night and watch with you.
I warrant I love you more then you do me.

Hub. His words do take possession of my boarme.

Reade heere yong Arthur. How now foolish theame?
Turing dispasion too much out of doore?
I must be brest, let's resolution drop
Out at mine eyes, in tender womans heartes.
Can you not read it? Is it not faire writ?

Ar. Too farily Hubert, for to louete the?

Wit you with hot Irons, buone out both mine eyes?

Hub. Yong Boy, I must.

Art. And will you?

Hub. And I will.

Art. Have you the heart? When your head did but ake,

I knit my hand, kercher about your browses
(The bell I had, a Princessse wroght it me)
And I did never ask it you agane:
And with my hand, at midnight held your head;
And like the watchfull minutes, to the house,
Still and anon cheere'd vp the heavy time;
Saying, what lacke you? and where lies your greffe?
Or what good lour may I performe for you?
Many a poore mans sonne would have beene fill,
And nere have scopes a louing word to you;
But you, at your fickle seruice had a Prince;
Nay, you may thynke my louse was craftie lour,
And call it cunning. Do, and if you will,
The life and death of King John.

If heaven be pleas'd that you must vie me all
Why then you must. Will you put out mine eyes?
These eyes, that never did, nor never shall
So much as frown on you?

And with hot Irons must I burne them out.

Art. Ah, none but in this Iron Age, would do it:
The Iron of it felle, though heate red hot,
Approaching near the eyes, would drink my teares,
And quench this fierce indignation.
Even in the matter of mine innocence:

Nay, after that, conlude away in ruth,
But for containing fire to harme mine eye:
Are you more stubborn hard, than hammer'd Iron?
And if an Angell should have come to me,
And told me Hubert should put out mine eyes,
I would not have beleued him: no tongue but Huberts.

Art. O sake me Hubert, faue me: my eyes are out
Even with the fierce looks of thefe bloody men.

Hub. Gueue me the Iron I fay, and bide him here.

Art. Alas, what neede you be so hittous rough?
I will not struggle, I will fland fiose still:
For heauen fake Hubert let me not be bound:

Nay heare me Hubert, drive thefe men away,
And I will fit as quiet as a Lambe.

I will not flire, nor winch, nor speake a word,

Nor looke upon the Iron angrily:
Thrust but thefe men away, and Ie forgive you,
What euerr torment you do put me too.

Hub. Go fand within: let me alone with him.

Ever. I am bleft pleas'd to be from such a deede.

Art. Alas. I then hauue child away my friend,
He hath a feme looke, but a gentle heart:
Let him come backe, that his compанию may Give life to yours.

Hub. Come (Boy) prepare your felfe.

Art. Is there nowe no change?

Hub. None, but to folve your eyes.

Art. O heauen: that there were but a mohl in yours,
A graine, a dust, a gnat, a wandering hair,
Any annoyance in that precious fenfe:
Then efpecting what fmall things are boytiffle there,
Your wilde infent must needs feeme horrorible.

Hub. Is this your promife? Go too, hold your toong

Art. Hubert, the viciance of a brace of tongues,
Muff needs want pleading for a pair of eyes:

Let me not hold my tongue: let me not Hubert,
Or Hubert, if you will cut out my tongue,
So I may keepe mine eyes. O spare mine eyes,
Though to no vie, but fhit looke on you.

Loe, by my troth, the Instrument is cold,

And would not harme me.

Hub. I can heare it, Boy.

Art. No, in good footh: the fire is dead with griefe,
Being caufe for comfort, to be v'd
In withdefence extremities: See else your felte,
The e is no malice in this burning cole,
The breath of heaven, hath blowne his spirit out,
And flrew'd repentant ashes on his head.

Hub. But with my breath I can reume it Boy.

Art. And if you do, you will but make it blushe,
And grow with fame of your proceeding, Hubert:

May it perchance will fprinkle in your eyes:
And, like a dogge that is compell'd to fhit,
Snatch at his Mafter that doth tare him on.

All things that you fhould vfe to do me wrong
Deny their office: only you do lacke
That mericle, which fierce fire, and Iron extender,
Creatures of none for mercy, lacking vies.

Hub. Well, fee to it: I will not touch thine eye,
For all the Treasure that chaffe Vincelle owes,
Yet am I owne, and I did purpose, Boy,
With this fame very Iron, to burne them out.

Art. O now you looke like Hubert. All this while
You were difguis'd.

Hub. Peace: no more. Axieu,
Your Vincelle mutt not know but you are dead.
He ftille dogged Spies with false reports:
And, pretty childe, sleepe doubleiffe, and fecure,
That Hubert for the wealth of all the world,
Will not offend thee.

Art. O heauen! I thank you Hubert.

Hub. Silence, no more: go cloffely in with mee,
Much danger do I vndergo for thee.

Scena Secunda.

Enter John, Pembroke, Salisbury, and other Lords.

John. Heere once againe we fite: once against crown'd
And looke'd upon, I hope, with thine full eyes.

Pem. This once again (but that you Highnes pleade),
Was once superfluous: you were Crown'd before,
And that high Royalty was mere pluck'd off.

The faiths of men, were flaine with revals,
Fretfull expecfation troubled not the Land
With any long'd-for change, or better State,

Sal. Therefore, to be poftell'd with double pompes,
To guard a Title, that was rich before,
To glide refined Gold, to paint the Lilly,
To throw a perfume on the Violet,
To smooth the yce, or add a little new,
Into the Raine-bow, or with Titan-light
To fette the brefelce eye of Jefuc to gaffh
Is waftefull, and ridiculous exceffe.

Fen. But that your Royall pleafure muft be done.
This safe, is as an antient tale new tell'd,
And, in the fmall repeating, troublesome,
Being veged at a worke vnfeemable.

Sal. In this the Antick, and well noted face,
Of plaine old formes, is much defigur'd,
And like a fifted winde vnto a faile,
It makes the course of thoughts to fetch about,
Sartelles, and friguites confideration.

Makes found opinion ficke, and truth fufpended.
For putting on to new a fashion'd robe.

Fen. When Workemen fource to do better then well,
They doe confound their skill in couetousiffe,
And oftemtines excufing of a fault,
Doth make the fault the worfe by the excufe:
As patches fet upon a little break,
Differed more in midling of the fault,
Then did the fault before it was fet patch'd.

Sal. To this eféal, before you were new crown'd
We breath'd our Counsellor: but it pleas'd your Highnes,
To counterheare it, and we are all well pleas'd,
Since all, and ever part of what we would.
Doch make a fand, at what your Highnene will.

Iv. i. 55—Iv. ii. 39

336
No certaine life stiethd by others death:
A fairefull euy thou haft. Where is that blood;
That I haue seenes inhabiteth in those cheekes?
So soule a skye, clerest not without a thorne,
Poure done thy weather: how goes all in France?

Msf. From France to England, neuer such a powre
For any forraigne preparation,
Was feard in the body of a land.
The Copie of your spede is leard by them:
For when you should be told they do prepare,
The tydings comes, that they are all arriued.

Ioh. On where hathe our Intelligence bin drunke?
Where faith it slipt? Where is my Mothers care?
That such an Army could be drawne in France,
And the not heare of it?

(What. My Liege, her care
Is flopt with dust: the first of April di'de
Your noble mother; and as I heare, my Lord,
The Lady Constance in a frenzie di'de
Three dayes before: but this from Rumors tongue
I freely heard: if true, or false I know not.

John. With-hold thy speed, dreadedfull Occasion:
O make a league with me, till I have pleas'd
My discontented Peeres. What? Mother dead?
How wildeely then will I walk my Eflate in France?
Vnder whyle how muche came those powres of France,
That thou for truth must out our landed heare?

Msf. Waue the Halphest.

Entere Richard and Peter of Pomfret.

Ioh. Thou hast made me giddy
With these ill tydings: Now! What faies the world
To your proceeding? Do not feke to stuffe
My head with more ill newes: for it is full.

Ioh. But if you be a-feard to heare the worfe,
Then let the world vs-heard, fall on your head.

John. Beare with me Colen, for I was amaz'd
Vnder the rule: but now I breath againe
Aloft the faire, and can give audience
To any tongue, speake it of what it will.

Ioh. How I have spied among the Clergy men,
The summers I have collected shall expose!
But as I trau'led hither through the land,
I finde the people strangely fantasied,
Poss'd with rumors, full of idle dreames:
Not knowing what they feare, but full of care.
And here's a Prophecy that I brought with me
From forth the streets of Pomfret, whom I found
With many hardes treading on his head:
To whom he rung in rude harsh sounding times,
That ere the next Ascension day at noone,
Your Highnes should deliver vp your Crowne.

Ioh. Thou idle Dreamer, wherefore didst thou so?
Pet. Foresknowing that the truth will fall out so.

Ioh. Fulbert, away with him: imprision him,
And on that day at noone, whereon he sayes
I shal yield vp my Crowne, let him be hang'd,
Deliver him to safety, and returne,
For I must vie thee. O my gentle Colen,
Heat it thou the newes abroad, who are assitu'd?

Ioh. The French (my lord) mens mouths are full of it:
Besides I met Lord Biggs, and Lord Salisbury
With eyes aresd as new enkindled fire,
And others more, going to feke the graue
Of Arthur, whom they say is kill'd to night, on your

Ioh. Gentle knifeman, go (suggestion)
And thus thy selfe into these Companies,
The life and death of King John.

Enter Hubert.

Hub. My Lord, they say five Moones were seene to foure fixed, and the fift did whirle about. (night)

The other foure, in woundous motion.

John. Five Moones?

Hub. Old men, and Beldamès, in the streets

Do prophesie upon it dangerously:

Young Arber's death is common in their mouths,

And when they talk of him, they flake their heads,

And whisper one another in the eare.

And he that speaks, doth gripe the hearts with

Whilfe he that heares, makes fearfull action

With wrinkled browses, with looks, with rolling eyes.

I saw a Smith fland with his hammer (thus)

The whiff't his hand did on the Anoie coole,

With open mouth sullying a Taylors newes,

Who with his Sheere, and Measure in his hand,

Standing on flippers, whose nimble falfie

Had fafely fliff'd upon contrary feete,

Told of a many thousand warlike French,

That were embattasted, and rank'd in Kent.

Another leane, vnwaft'd Artificer,

Cuts off his tale, and talks of Arber's death.

Is. Why seekst thou to possesse me with these feares?

Why yeft thou to of young Arber's death?

Thy hand hath murdred him: I had a mighty cause

To witf'h him dead, but thou hadst none to kill him.

H. No had (my Lord) why did you not prouoke me?

John. It is the curfe of Kings, to be attented

By flues, that take their humors for a warrant,

To brake within the bloody houfe of life,

And on the winkings of Authoritie

To vnderfand a Law; to know the meaning

Of dangerous Maiesty, when perchance it fownes

More vnpo's humors, then aduis'd reftred.

Hub. Here is your hand and Scale for what I did.

Is. Oh, when the left acompt twist heaven & earth

Is to be made, then fill all this hand and Scale

Wittnes against vs to damnation.

How oft the sight of means to do ill deeds,

Make deeds ill done? Had it not thou beene by,

A fellow by the hand of Nature mark'd,

Quoted, and fing'd to do a deed of flame,

This mother had not come into my minde.

But taking note of thy abhor'd Alpef,

Finding thee in that bloody villaine:

Apt, like to be employ'd in danger,

I faintly broke with thee of Arber's death:

And thou, to be endeed to a King,

Made it no confidence to deffroy a Prince.

Hub. My Lord.

Is. Had't thou but sflooke thy head, or made a pause

When I spake darlly, what I purposed:

Or turn'd an eye of doubts upon my face;

As bid me tell my tale in express words:

Deepe flame had frackt me dumbe, made me break off,

And thro' thy fears, might have wrought fears in me.

But, thou didst vnderfand me by thy signes,

And didft in signes againe parley with shame,

Ye, without shop, didft let thy heart content,

And confequently, thy rude hand to arte.

The deed, which both our tongues held vilde to name.

Out of my sight, and never fee me more:

My Nobles leave me, and my State is brained,

Even at my gates, with ranks of forraigne powres;

Nay, in the body of this fleathly Land,

This kingdom, this Confine of blood, and breathe

Hearts and civill tumult reignes.

Betweene my confidence, and my Confi death.

Hub. Arme you against your other enemies:

Ile make a peace betweene your soule, and you.

Yong Arthur is alue: This hand of mine

Is yet a maiden, and an innocent hand.

Not painted with the Cordin spots of blood;

Within this bosome, never enter'd yet

The dreadful motion of a murderous thought,

And thou hast fnder'd Nature in my forms,

Which howsoever rude exteriorly,

Is yet the couer of a fayere minde,

Then to be butcher of an innocent child.

John. Both Arthur live? O haft thee to the Peeres,

Throw this report on their increaf'd rage,

And make them tame to their obedience.

Forguie the Comment that my paffion made

Upon thy feature, for my rage was blinde,

And foule imaginacue eyes of blood.

Prentended thee more hideous then thou art.

Oh, an yeer not; but to my Clofet bring.

The angry Lords, with all expedient haft,

I comune thee but floucly: run more falt.

Exeunt.

Scene Tertia.

Enter Arber on the waftes.

Ar. The Wall is high, and yet will I leape downe.

Great ground be pitiful, and hurt me not:

There's few or none do know me, if they did,

This Ship-bayes femeance hath difguis'd me quite,

I am all hide, and yet I venture it.

If I get downe, and do not breake my timbers,

He finde a thousand shifting to get away;

As good to dye, and go; as dye, and stay.

Oh me, my Yackles spirit is in thefe flones,

Heuen take my foule, and England keep my bones. Die.
The life and death of King John.

Big. To morrow morning let's meet him then.
Sol. Or rather together forward, for 'twill be
Two long days journey (Lord) or ere we meet,

Enter Baldard.

Bald. Once more to day well met, dis temper'd Lords,
The King by me requests your presence straight.

Sol. The king hath disposed himselfe of vs,
We will not lyne his thin-beftained cloke
With our pure Honors: nor attend the foure
That leaves the printe of blood where e't walke.
Returne, and tell him we know the word.

Big. What ere you thinke, good words I thinke were best.

Sol. Our greeves, and not our manners reason now.

Big. But there is little reason in your greefe.
Therefore t'were reason you had manners now.

Pem. Sir, sir, impatience hath his pickledudge

Big. 'Tis true, to hurt his mutter, no man else,

Sol. This is the prison: What is he lyes here?

P. Oh death, made proud with pure & princely beauty,
The earth had not a hole to hide this dedde.

Doth, as hating what himselfe hath done,
Dost lay it open to urge on reuenge.

Big. Or when he doen' this Beautie to a grave,
Found it too precious Princely, for a grave.

Sol. Sir Richard, what thinke you? you have beheld,
Or have you read, or heard, or could you thinke?
Or do you almost thinke, although you fee,
That you do see? Could thoghth, without this obiect
 Forbes such another? This is the very top
The heighness, the Creff: or Creff into the Creff
Of murders Arms: This is the bloodieft frame,
The wildeft Sauagery, the wildeft stroke
That cruel wall-e'ye'd wrath, or flaring rage
Presented to the tears of off't remorse.

Pem. All murders path, do stand excus'd in this:
And this fole, and fo unmatchable,
Shall give a helmet, a parricre,
To the yet vagabond finne of times;
And prove a deadly blood-shed, but a left,
Examples by this heynous specacle.

Big. It is damned, and bloody worke,
The gracelesse adion of a heavy hand,
If that it be the worke of any hand,

Sol. If that it be the worke of any hand? We had a kind of light, which would enuok
It is the flamefull worke of Huberts hand,
The practice, and the purpose of the king:
From whose obedience I forbid my soule,
Kneeling before this ruine of sweete life,
And breathing to his breathlesse Excellence
The Incence of a Vow, a holy Vow:
Neuer to tale the plesuries of the world,
Neuer to bainfetled with delight,
Neuer conuerfant with Greece, and Ilenenne,
Till I haveuer a glory to this hand,
By givin it the worship of Reuenge.

Pem. Big. Our foules religiously confirm thy words.

Enter Hubert.

Hub. Lords, I am hot with halfe, in seeking you,
Arise doth liue, the king hath sent for you.

Sol. Oh he is bold, and blushes not at death,

But thou hatefull villain, get thee gone: (the Law?

Sol. I am no villain.

Hub. Your sword is bright er, put is vp again.

Sol. Not till I seath it in a mutherers shin.
The life and death of King John.

How came thou that all England vp, From forth this morcell of dead Royalty? The life, the right, and truth of all this Realme Is fled to heaven: and England now is left To tug and struggle, and to part by sheer The worldly power of proud dwelling State: Now for the bare-pick bone of Malefice, Doh dogged warre brilte his angry crest, And snarleth in the gentle eyes of peace: Now Powers from home, and discontentes at home Meet in one line: and vait confusion wails As doth a Reuen on a sickle-faine beart, The imminent decay of wrestled pompe. Now happy he, whose cloke and center can Hold out this tempest. Bear away that child, And follow me with speed: Ite to the King: A thousand businesse are briefe in hand, And heauen it selfe doth frowne upon the Land. Exit.

Exit John, and Randolph, attendants.

The Circle of my glory. PAS. Take again From this my hand, as holding of the Pope Your Sovereigne greatness and authority. JOHN. Now keep your holy word, go meet the French, And from his holinesse vse all your power To stop their marches, 'till we are content With our discontented Countesse doe resolve: Our people quarrell with obedience, Swearing Allegiance, and the loue of soyle To strange-bloud, to forreyn Royalty; This inundation of mistempred humor, Refs by you only to be qualified, Then purge us for the present time's so sick, That presse medicine must be ministrd, Or otherwise incurable enfeeb.

PAS. It was my breath that blew this Tempest vp, Upon your Rubens' fage of the Pope: But since you are a gentle conversaire, My tongue shall thus against this flame of warre, And make faire weather in your bluffling land: On this Ascension day, remember well, Upon your oath of fervice to the Pope, Go I to make the French lay downe their Armes. Exit JOHN. Is this Ascension day did not the Prophet Say, that before Ascension day at noone, My Crowne I should give off? even so I have: I did purpose it should be on contraint, But (heain? be thank'd) it is but voluntary. Enter Bp. PAS. All Kent hath yecold: nothing there holds out But Dover Castle: London hath receiv'd I like a kinde Hoft, the Dolphin, and his powers. Your Nobles will not heare you, but are gone To offer fervice to your enemy: And wilde amazement hurry vp and downe The little number of your doubtfull friends. JOHN. Would not my Lords returne to me againe After they heard young Arthur was slue?

Bull. They found him dead, and cast into the streets, An empty Casket, where the Jewell of life By some damnd hand was rob'd, and tane away. JOHN. That villainous Hubert tell me he did itt. Bul. So on my soule he did, for ought he knew: But wherefore doe you droope? why looke you sad? Be great in aff, as you have beene in thought: Let not the world see scare and sad distrust Gouerne the motion of a kinglye eye: Be stirrings the time, be fire with fire, Threaten the threatenr, and out-face the brow Of bragging horror: So shall inferior eyes That burrow their behavioirs from the great, Grow great by your example, and put on The dauntleffe spiritt of refolution. Away, and glister like the god of warre When he intendeth to become the field: Shew boldneffe and aspiring confidence: What, shall they feekte the Lion in his denne, And fright him there? and make him tremble there? Oh let not be said: for rage, and rumne To meet displeasure farther from the dores; And grapple with him ere he come to nere.

JOHN. The Legat of the Pope hath beene with mee, And I haue made a happy peace with him, And he hath promis'd to dismisst the Powers Led by the Dolphin.

Bull. Oh inglorious league: Shall we upon the footing of our land, Send fayre-play-orders, and make comprimise, Infestation, parly, and base truce To Armes Insufficiante: Shall a basefille boy, A cocked-filen wanton brace our fieldes, And stifte his spirit in a warre-like foyle, Mocking the syre with colours idly spred, And finde no checke? Let vs my Liege to Armes: Perchance the Cardinal cannot make your peace; Or if he doe, let it be at least be fayd They saw we had a purpose of defence.

JOHN. Haue thou the ordering of this present time. Bull. Away then with good courage: yet I know Our Partie may well meet a prouder foe. Exeunt.

Scena Secunda.

Enter (in Armes) Dolphin, Salisbury, Melone, Pembroke, Bigge, Souldiers.

Dol. My Lord Alcxon, let this be coppied out, And keep it safe for our remembrance: Returne the pre_LCDent to these Lords againe, That hauing our faire order written downe, Both they and we, perusing ore these notes May know wherefore we took the Sacrament, And keepe our faithes firme and inviolable.

Sal. Upon our sides it never shall be broken, And Noble Dolphin, albeit we sweare A voluntary zeale, and an vn-surg'd Faith To your proceedings: ye beleue me Prince, I am not glad that such a force of Time Should seake a platter by commodi't reuolt, And heale the inueterate Canker of one wound.
The life and death of King John.

By making many: Oh it grieves my soul,
That I must draw this mettle from my side
To be a widow-maker: oh, and there
Where honourable refuge, and defence
Cries out upon the name of Salisbury,
But such is the infection of the time,
That for the health and physick of our right,
We cannot deal but with the very hand
Of terme immulti, and confuted wrongs:
And it's not my friends, oh my grievous friends
That we: the innocents and children of this life,
Was borne to see so sad an hour as this,
Wherein we leap after a stranger, march
Upon her gender before, and fill wp
Her Enemies rankes: I must withdraw, and weep
Upon the spot of this inforced caite,
To grace the Gentry of a land remote,
And follow vain acquainted colours here:
What beere? O Nation that thou couldst remove That Neptune Armies which clippeth thee about,
Would bear thee from the knowledge of thy selfe,
And cripple thee into a page shone,
Where those two Christian Armies might combine
The blood of males, in a vaine of league,
And not to spend it to vn-neighbourly,
Dolph: A noble temper doth thou shew in this,
And great affections wrestling in thy bosome
Doth make an earth-quake of Nobility:
Oh, what a noble combat hast fought
Between compulsion, and a brave respect:
Let me wipe off this honourable dewe,
That filiously doth progress on thy cheeks:
My heart hath melted at a Ladies teares,
Being an ordinary Indignation:
But this effusion of such manly drops,
This shovel, blowne vp by tempeft of the soul,
Startles mine eyes, and makes me more amazed,
Then had I seene the vauite top of heaven
Figur'd quite ore with burning Meteors,
Lift up thy brow (renowned Salut borie)
And with a great heart heave away this storme:
Command these waters to those baby-eyes
That never saw the giant-world engag'd,
Nor met with Fortune, as thou hast met:
Full warm of blood, of midst of golpiffling
Come, come; for thou shalt thrust thy hand as deep
Into the purse of rich prosperity
As Lewis himselfe: so (Nobles) shall you all,
That knit your finewes to the strength of mine.

Enter Pandulfus.

And even there, methinks an Angell spake,
Look where the holy Legase comes space,
To give vs warrant from the hand of heauen,
And on our actions set the name of right
With holy breath.

Pand. Haile noble Prince of France:
The next is this : King John hath recogniz'd Himselfe to Rome, his spirit is come in,
That to flood ours against the holy Church,
The great Monarchy, and Sea of Rome:
Therefore thy threatening Colours now winde vp,
And tame the savage spirit of wilde waere,
That like a Lion fofeterd vp the hand,
It may lie gently at the foot of peace,
And be no further harneft full shen in sheve.

Del. Your Grace shall pardon me, I will not backe:

I am too high-borne to be proportion'd
To be a secondary controller,
Or veffull furying-man, and Instrument
To any Soueraigne State throughout the world.
Your breath first kindled the dead coale of waere,
Betweene this chaftiz'd kingdome and my selfe,
And brought in matter that should feed this fire;
And now its farre too huge to be blowne out
With that fame wakde wilde, which enkindled it:
You taught me how to know the face of Right,
Acquainted me with interef by this Land,
Yes, thrust this enterprise into my heart,
And come ye now to tell me John hath made
His peace with Rome? is what that peace to met
I (by the honour of my marriage bed)
After yong, Arthur, claim this Land for mine,
And now it is halfe conquer'd, must I backe,
Because that John hath made his peace with Rome?
Am I Rome's Slave? What penny hath Rome borne?
What men prouided? What munition sent To vnder-prop this Action? Is't not I
That vnder-go this charge? Who clife but I,
And such as to my claim are liable,
Sweat in this businesse, and maintain this waere
Hawe I not heard thee Flanlanders shout out
Once le Roy, as I have bank'd their Townes?
Have I not heard the best Cards for the game
To winne this easie match, plaid for a Crown?
And shall I now give ore the yeilded Set?
No, no, on my soules it neuer shall be said.

Pand. You look but on the out-side of this worke.

Dol. Out-side or in-side, I will not returne
Till my attempt so much be glorified,
As to my ample hope was promis'd,
Before I drew this gallant head of waere,
And call'd thee fiery spirits from the world.

Enter Lookes Conquest, and to winne renowne
Even in the laws of danger, and of death;
What liftie Trumpet thus doth summon vs?

Enter Baftard.

Dol. According to the faire-play of the world,
Let me haue audience: I am sent to speake:
My holy Lord of Millanne, from the King
I come to learn how our just due returne for him:
And, as you answe're, I doe know the scope
And warranty limited into my tongue.

Pand. The Dolphins is too wilfull opposite
And will not temporize with my intrestes:
He flatly fies, hee ll not lay downe his Armes.

Dol. By all the blood that ever fury breath'd,
The youth fies well. Now hearse our Euclie King,
For thus his Royaltie doth speake in me:
He is prepar'd, and reason to he should,
This afpih and vnnameterly approach,
This haurnis d Maske, and vnsahufed Reuell,
This vn-heard favoynefflie and boyish Troopes,
The King doth smie at, and is well prepar'd
To whip this dwarfish waere, this Pigmy Armes
From out the circle of his Territorie.
That hand which had the strength, even at your doore,
To cudgel ye, and make you take the hatch
To diuell like Buckets in concealed Welles,
To crowch in litter of your fable planks,
To lye like pawnes, lock'd vp in chessts and truncks,
To hug with swine, to seek swee safety out
In vaults and prisongs, and to thrill and shake,

The life and death of King John.

For I do see the cruel pangs of death
Right in thine eye. Away, my friends, new flight,
And happy newness, that intends old rights.

Enter Dolphin, and his Train.

Dol. The Sun of heaven (me thought) was loth to set;
But hid, and made the Western Weikin blush,
When English meare backward their owne ground
In faint Retire: Oh brawely came we off,
When with a volley of our accelelelfe shot,
After such bloody toile, we bid good night,
And won'd our tost'sing colours clearly vp,
Lai in the field, and almoft Lords o'fist.

Enter a Messengers.

Mes. Where is my Prince, the Dolphin?

Mes. The Count Melion is slain: The English Lords
By his persuavions. are againe failed off,
And your supply, which you have wish'd so long,
Are cifl away, and funk in Coonemall fans.

Dol. Ah fowlie, fhwed'newes, Heffrew thy very
I did not thinke to be fo sad tonight
(hart: As this hath made me. Who was he that said
King John did flie an hour or two before
The tumbling night did part our weary powres?

Mes. Who euer spoke it, it is true my Lord.

Dol. Well: keepe good quarter, & good care to night,
The day shall not be vp fo loone as it,
To try the faire adventure of to morrow.

Enter Baffard and Hubert, generally.

Hub. Whose there? Speake ho! speake quickly, or I thiate.

Baff. A Friend, What art thou?

Hub. Of the part of England.

Baff. Whether dost thou go?

Hub. What's that to thee?

Why may not I demand of thine affairs,
As well as thou of mine?

Baff. Hubert, I thinke.

Hub. Thou haft a perfect thought:
I will upon all hazards well believe
Thou art my friend, that know'st my tongue so well
Who art thou?

Baff. Who thou wilt: and if thou please,
Thou must be friend me to much, as to thinke
I come one way of the Plantagenets.

Hub. Vakind reemembrace: thou, & endless night,
Have done me shame: Brute Soldier, pardon me,
That any accent breaking from thy tongue,
Should ape the true acquaintance of mine care.

Baff. Come, come: thin complcement, What news abroad?

Hub. Why here walk I, in the black brow of
To finde you out.

Baff. Briefest then: and what's the newes?

Hub. O my sweet fire, newes fitting to the night,
Blacke, fearfull, comforlable, and horrible.

Baff. Shew me the very wound of this ill newes,
I am no woman, Ile not frownd at it.

Hub. The King I feare is pow'd for by a Monke,
I left him almoft speechlile, and broke out
To acquaint you with this wull, that you might
The better arm you to the fodeaine time,
Then if you had at leasure knowne of this.

Baff. How did he take it? Who did taile to him?

Hub. A Monke I tell you, a relufed villain
Whose Bowels sodainly burft out: The King
Yet speaks, and peraduenture may recouer.

Baff. Who didst thou leave to send his Maiestye?

Hub. Why know you not? The Lords are all come backe,
And brought Prince Henry in their companie,
At whose requer the king hath pardon'd them,
And they are all about his Maiestie.

Baff. With-hold thine indignation, mighty heauen,
And tempt vs not to beare about our power.
Lie tell thee Hubert, haft my power this night
Passing these Flats, are taken by the Tide.
These Lincolne-Washe have design'd them,
My elfe, well mounted, hardly have espac'd.
Away before: Conduif me to the king,
I doubt he will be dead, or ere I come.

Enter Prince Henry, Salisbury, and Bages.

Hen. It is too late, the life of all his blood
Is touch'd, corruptibly: and his pure braise
(Whiche some suppost the soules frail dwellings house)
Doth by the idle Comments that it makes,
Fore-tell the ending of mortality.

Enter Pembroke.

Pem. His Highnes yet doth speak, & holds belefe,
That being brought into the open ayre,
It would alay the burning qualitie
Of that fell poison which asayleth him.

Hen. Let him be brought into the Orchard here
Doth he still rage?

Pem. He is more patient
Then when you left him; even now he floug.

Hen. Oh vauntie of sick geffe: fierce extreme
In their continuance, will not feele themselves,
Death hauing pride upon the outward parts
Leaves them insufiible, and his seige is now
Against the winde, the which he prickes and wounds
With many legions of strange fantifie,
Which in their thong, and preffe to that athold,
Countound them selves. "This strange death field fing:
I am the Symet to this pale faint Swan,
Who chauus a dolefull hymne to his owne death,
And from the organ-pipe of fraility fings
His foule and body to their lastih, eft.

Sal. Be of good comfort (Prince) for you are borne
To let a forme upon that indigfeft
Which he hath leff to fhapelefe, and forude.

John. I marrie, now my foule hath elbow roomes,
The life and death of King John.

It would not out at windowes, nor at doores,
There is so hot a summer in my boosome,
That all my bowels crumble vp to dust:
I am a stribled forme drawne with a pen
Upon a Parchment, and against this fire.
Do I think of vp.

Hen. How fares your Maiestie?

Sal. Poyson'd, ill fare: dead, forsooke, call off,
And none of you will bid the winter come
To thrust his icy fingers in my maw;
Nor let my kingdoms Rivers take their course.
Through my burn'd bosome: nor interest the North
To make my bleake windes kisse my parched lips,
And comfort me with cold. I do not ask you much,
I begge cold comfort: and you are so straight
And ingrateful, you deny me that.

Hen. Oh that there were some vertue in my tears,
That might receive you.

John. The tale in them is hot.

Within me is a hell, and there the poyson
Is, as a fiend, confined to tyrannize,
On unreprennable condemned blood.

Enter Suffolk.

Baff. Oh, I am scalded with my violent motion
And spleene of speede, to see your Maiestie.

John. Oh Cozen, thou art come to set mine eye:
The tackle of my heart, is crack'd and burn't,
All the thow'rs wherewith my life should fail,
Are turned to one thred, one little hair:
My heart hath one poore string to stay it by,
Which holds but till thy newes be vitered,
And then all this thou feelest, is but a clod,
And module of confounded royaltie.

Baff. The Dolphin is preparing hitler-ward,
Where heaven he knowes how we shall find him,
For in a night the beft part of my powre,
As I upon advauntage did remoue,
Were in the water all vnwarly,
Devoured by the unexpect-ed flood.

Sal. You breath these dead newes in as dead an ear
My Liege, my Lord: but now a King, now thus,
Hen. Even so, dull I run on, and even so stop.
What surety of the world, what hope, what flay,
When this was now a King, and now is clay?

Baff. Art thou gone so? I do but thy behinde,
To do the office for thee, of revenue,
And thynne soule shall waite on thee to heaven,

As it on earth hath bent by servante still,
Now, now you Starres, that move in your right spheres,
Where be your powres? Shew now your remedial faith,
And instantly returne with me againe,
To push destruction, and perpetuall flame.
Out of the weake doore of our faining Land:
Straight let vs seeke, or straight we shall be sought,
The Dolphine rages at our veree heelees.

Sal. It seemes you know not then so much as we,
The Cardinall Pandolph is within at rest,
Who halfe an houre since came from the Dolphin,
And brings from him such offers of our peace,
As we with honor and respect may take,
With purpose presently to leave this warre.

Baff. He will the rather do it, when he sees
Our issue well finewd to our defcence.

Sal. Nay, 'tis in a manner done already,
For many carriages he hath dispatch'd
To the sea side, and put his caufe and quarrell
To the disposing of the Cardinall,
With whom your selfe, my selfe, and other Lords,
If you think mee, this afternoone will poasht
To confonnamate this buffetefully happily.

Baff. Let it be so, and you my noble Prince,
With other Princes that may beft be fard
Shall waie vp your Fathers funerall.

Hen. At Worlifer must his bodie be inter'd,
For so he will'd it.

Baff. Thither shall it then,
And happily may your sweet felf be put on
The lineall flute, and glorie of the Land,
To whom with all submisson on my knee,
I do beseech my faithfull seruices
And true subjection everlastingl.

Sal. And the like tender of our loue we make
To rest without a spot for evermore.

Hen. I have a kinde foule, that would give thankes,
And knowes not how to do it, but with tears.

Baff. Oh let vs pay the time: but needfull woe,
Since it hath beene before hand with our griefes,
This England never did, nor never shal
Lye at the proud foote of a Conqueror,
But when it first did help; to wound it fell,
Now, these her Princes are come home againe,
Come the three corners of the world in Armes,
And we shall flayke them: Naught shall make vs rue,
If England do vs felse, do rest but true,
Enter King Richard, John of Gaunt, and other Nobles.

KING RICHARD.

What! A Duke of Norfolk, Thomas Mowbray?

Then, I haue my Liege.

At this time, the vglour seeme the cloudes that in it flye:
Once more, the more to aggravate the note,
With a foule Traitors name thufe I thy throate,
And with (to please my Soveraigne) are I moue;
What my tong speakes, my right drawn sworde may proue
Mow. Let not my cold words here accuse my zeale:
Tis not the trial of a Womans ware,
The biter clamour of two raging foes,
Cau arbitrate this cause betweene us twaine:
The blood is hot that muft be coole'd for this,
Yet can I not of such same patience boaue,
As to be hufht, and nought at all to say.
First the faire renounce of your Highnesse curues mee,
From giving reines and spurreys to my free speech,
Which elle would poift, vntill it had return'd
Thee tearsmes of treason, double downe his throat.
Setting aside his high bloods roylty,
And let him be no Kindman to my Liege,
I do defe his, and I spit at him,
Call him a hangerous Coward, and a Villaine:
Which to maintaine, I would allow him oddes,
And mecte him, were I tide to runne afoote,
Even to the frozen rides of the Alpes,
Or any other ground inhabitable,
Where euer Englifhman durft set his foote.
Meane time, let this defend my loyaltie,
By all my hopes most safely doth he lie.

BUL. Pale trembling Coward, there I throw my gage,
Difclaiming here the kindred of a King,
And lay aside my high bloods Royalty,
Which feare, not reuerence makes thee to except,
If guilty dread hath left thee so much strengthe,
As to take vp mine Honors pawne, then floope.
By that, and all the rites of Knight-hood elle,
Will I make good against thee armes to armes,
What I haue spoken, or thou canft defile.
Mow. I take it vp, and by that Iword I freaze,
Which gently laid my Knight-hood on my shoulder,
Ie anfwer thee in any faire degree,
Or Chivalrous defigne of knightly trial:
And when I monte, alue may I not light,
If I be Traitor, or villufly fight.

KING. What doth our Coftin lay to Mowbrayes charge?
It must be great that can inherit vs,
So much as of thought of ill in him.

BUL. Look what I faid, my life shal proue it true,
That Mowbray hath receiv'd eight thousand Nobles,
The life and death of Richard the Second.

In name of lendings for your Highness Soldiers,
The which he hath detain'd for low employments,
Like a false Traitor, and miserably Village.
Refuses 1 say, and will be barrable proud.
Or heere, or elsewhere to the utmost Verge.
That euer was survey'd by English eye.
That all the Treasons for these eighteen yeares
Complotted, and contrived in this Land,
Fetched from false Mapes of their first head and spring.
Further I say, and that traitors will maintain
Upon his bad life, to make all this good.
That he did plot the Duke of Gloucester death,
Suggest his base beluming adulteries,
And consequently, like a Traitor Coward.
Shed'd out his innocent blood through the streams of blood;
Which blood, like sacrificing.judicious crimes.
(Given from the rogue's cruelest of the earth)
To me for justice, and rough chafelement:
And by the glorious worth of my defcent,
This armes shall do it, or this life be spent.

KING. How high a pitch his execration soars:

Thomas of Norfolk, what sayest thou to this?

MOW. Oh let my Sovereigne turne away his face,
And bid his ears a little while be deaf.
Till haue told this slanderer of his blood,
How God, and good men, hate to soule a lyar.

KING. Sovereign,
Impartial our own, and ears,
Were he my brother, or my kinsmen's heyre,
As he is but my fathers brothers sonne;
Now by my Steppers awe, I make a vow,
Such neighbour-neereoxetine to our sacred blood,
Should nothing priuilege him, or pastialize
The ven-flouping firmeness of my youth's soule.
He is our sibiect (Mowbray) to hear thine,
Free speech, and Learlus, I do thee allow.

Then. Let us hear this as to thy heart,
Through the false pallage of thy throat; thou lyest:
Three parts of that receipt I had for Calice.
Disburth 1 to his Highness soldiers,
The other part refer'd I by content,
For that my Sovereigne Liege was in my debt,
Upon remainder of a deere Accompt,
Since left I went to France to fetch his Queene:
Now swallow downe that Lyre. For Glousters death,
I flie him not; but (to mine owne disgrace)
Neglected my owne duty in that case:

For you my noble Lord of Lancafter,
The honourable Father to my life,
Once I did lay an ambush for your life,
A trepasse that doch vex my greanced soule:
But ere I left receiv'd the Sacrament,
I did confesse it, and exactly begg'd
Your Grace's pardon, and I hope I had it,
This is my fault: as for the reft appeal'd,
It illu's from the parancl of a Villaine,
A rencant, and most degenerate Traitor,
Which in my felle 1 boldly will defend,
And interchangably hurtle downe my gage
Upon this over-weeing Treasons footes,
To prove my felle a loyal Giant, Gentleman,
Euen in the best blood chamber'd in his bosome.
In Old whereof, most heartily 1 pray
Your Highness to affigne our Trial day.

KING. Worthy-kindled Gentlemen be rul'd by me:
Let's purge this cheller without letting blood:
This we prescribe, though no Phylision,
Depee malice makes too deep incision.
Forgets, forgives, concludes, and begaves.
Our Doctors say, This is no time to bleed.
Good Vauke, let this end where it begin,
We'll calm the Duke of Norfolk's son, your fon.

GAUNT. To be a make peace shall become my age,
Throw downe (my sonne) the Duke of Norfolkes gage.

KING. And Norfolk, throw downneth,

GAUNT. Where is the Duke of Norfolk's gage,
Obedience bids I should not bid a gage.

KING. Norfolk, throw downe, we bidde; there is no boote.

MOW. My felte I throw (dread Sovereigne) at thy foot,
My life thou striat command, but not thy shame,
The one my dutie owes, but my faire name
Displeat of death, that lives upon my graue
To darke diffonours vie, thou shalt not hau.
I am disgrac'd, impeach'd, and baffe'd therre.
Pier'd to the soule with flanders fren'me'd iphere:
The which no balsem can cure, but his heart blood
Which breath'd this poysen.

KING. Rage must be with blood:
Give me his gage: Lyons make Leopards tame.

MOW. Yes, but not change his spot stake but my heart.
And I refuse my gage. My deere, deere Lord,
The purest treasure not all times afford
Is spotlesse reputation: that away,
Men are but gilded foame, or painted clay.
A Jewell in a ten times bare'd vp Cheek,
Is a bold spirit, in a loayl brest.
Mine Honor is my life; both grow in one:
Take Honor from me, and my life is done.
Then (deere my Liege) mine Honor let me trye,
In that I live; and for that I will die.

KING. Confin, throw downe your gage,
Do you begin.

But, Oh heaven defend my soule from such foule sin,
Shall I see my Creel-sin in my fathers sight,
Or with pale beggar face impeach my hight
Before this out-dad's at last? Ere my roome,
Shall I see mine honor with such feeble wrong,
Or found in base a parle of my teeth shall see
The flambo moture of reanting feare,
And spoile it bleeding in his high disgrace,
Where shame doth habbour, even in Membranes face:

Exit Gaunt.

KING. We were not borne to sue, but to command,
Which since we cannot do to make your friends,
Be ready, (as your lives shall anwer it)
At Couentrence, upon S. Lamberts day:
There shall your sword and Lance arbitrate
The dwellinge difference of your fetelde hate:
Since we cannot atone you, you shall see
Justice deigne the Victors Chiristie.
Lord Marshall, command our Officers at Armes,
Be ready to direct thes home Armes.

Enter Gaunt, and Dunsheffs of Gloucestere.

GAUNT. Alas, the part I had in Glouirsts blood,
Dost more folciere me then your exclaimes,
To strirres against the Butchers of his life.

Scene Seconda.

Enter Gaunt, and Dunsheoff of Gloucestere.
The life and death of Richard the second.

But since correction lyeth in those hands
Which made the fault that we cannot correct,
Put our quarrel to the will of heaven,
Who when they see the hours ripe on earth,
Will rainge hot vengeance on offenders heads.

Doth. Findes brotherhood in thee no sharper spurre?
Hath bone in thy old body no living fire?

Edward. Some fell (whereof thy self art one)
Were as feuen violles of his sacred blood,
Or feuenti branches springing from one roote:
Some of those feuen are draine by nature courte,
Some of those branches by the destinies cut:

But Thomas, my deere Lord, my life, my Glaoufer,
One Veal full of Edward's Sacred blood,
One Nourishing branch of his most Royall roote
Ferzak'd, and all the precious liquor spile,
Is hackt downe, and his fammer leaves all vaid
By Enemies hand, and Murder's bloody Axe.

Ah Gaunt! His blood was thine, that bed, that worme,
That mistle, that felle-mould that fashion'd thee,
Made him a man: and though thou liuft, and breath'st,
Yet art thou alone in him: thou dost confent
In some large measure to thy Fathers death,
In that thou feltst thy wretched brother dye,
Who was the model of thy Fathers life.
Call it not patience (Gaunt) it is chaire,
In feffing thus thy brother to be laughter'd,
Thou fhou'd the naked pathway to thy life,
Teaching thee to be like as it should be,
That which in mean men we mistake patience
Is pale cold, cowardice in noble brefts:
What fhall I say, to safegard thine owne life,
The belt way is to venge thy Glaoufers death.

Gaunt. Heauens is the quarrell: for heauens substitue
His Deputie appointed in his sight,
Hath caus'd his death, the which if wrongfully
Let heauen reuenge: for I may never lift
An angry arm against his Ministre.

Dua. Where then (as I may) I complaint my felle?

Gau. To heauen, the widowes Champion to defence

Dua. Why then I will: farewell old Gaunt,
Fruished of Courtrene, there to behold
Our Counsel perished, and fell Mowbray fight:
Of my husbands wrongs on Herfords speare,
That it may enter butcher Mowbrayes breft:
Obtain fortune mist the first carree,
To Mowbrayes finnes so heavy in his bosome,
That they may breake his bowinge Courtes backe,
And throw the Rider headlong in the Lifs,
A Caryatife reccant to my Colne Herfard:
Farewell old Gaunt, thy sometimes brothers wife
With her companion Greefe, muft end her life.

Gau. Sifter farewell! I muft to Courtrene,
As much good fhy with thee, as go with mee.

Dua. Yet one word more: Greefe boundeth where it
Not with the emptie hollower, but weight:
(fall, I take my leave, before I have begun.
For sorrow ends not, when it feemeth done.
Commend me to my brother Edmund Tyre.

Lee. This is all: nay, yet depart not so,
Though this he all, do not to quickly go,
I shall remember more. Bid him, Oh, what?
With all good speech at Plathie visit mee,
And see, and what shall good old York see:
Save empty lodgings, and unfurnished vailles,
Vn-people'd Offices, entrouden ftones?

And what heare there for welcome, but my granes?
Therefore commend me, let him not come there,
To seek out forrow, that dwells every where:
Defolate, defolate will I hence, and dye,
The last leave of thee, takes my weeping eye.

Enter Marfhall, and Aumerle.

Mar. My L. Aumerle, is Harry Herford am'd.
Aum. Year, at all points, and longs to enter.

Mar. The Duke of Norfolk, with all the comforts of the Appliances Trumpet,
Aum. Why then the Champions, are prepar'd, and lay
For nothing but his Maitelies approache.

Enter King, Gaunt, Blufhy, Bagot, Greene, & others: Then Mowbray in Armor, and Harrold.

The caine of his annual life here in Armes,
Ask he him name, and orderly proceed
To forreare him in the induce of his caufe.
Aum. In God's name, and of the Kings lay who parts,
And why thou com in thus knightly clad in Armes?
Against what man that com'st, or what's thy quarrell,
Speake truly on thy kingdome, and thine oath,
As to defend thee heauen, and thy valour.

Gau. My name is Tho. Mowbray, Duke of Norfolk,
Who hither comes engaged by my own
(Which heauen defend a knight should violate)
Both to defend my loyalty and truth,
To God, my King, and his succeeding issue,
Against the Duke of Herford, that appeales me:
And by the grace of God, and this mine arme,
To prooue him (in defending of my felie)
A Traitor to my God, my King, and me,
And as I truly fight, defend me heauen.

Tucket. Enter Hereford, and Harrold.

Rich. Marshall: Aske yonder Knight in Armes,
Both who he is, and why he commeth hither,
Thus placed in habitments of warre:
And formerly according to our Law
Denpote him in the induce of his caufe.

Mar. What is thy name? and wherefore com'st thou hither,
Before King Richard in his Royall Lifs?
Against whom com'st thou? and what's thy quarrell?
Scope like a true Knight, so defend thee heauen.

Bal. Harry of Herford, Lancaster, and Derby,
Am I: who ready here do stand in Armes,
To prooue by heauens grace, and my bodies valour,
In Lifes, on Thomas Mowbray Duke of Norfolk,
That he's a Traitor foule, and dangerous,
To God of heauen, King Richard, and me,
And as I truly fight, defend me heauen.

Mar. On paine of death, no person be so bold,
Or daring hardie as to touch the Lifes,
Except the Marshall, and such Officers
Appointed to direct the fate faire delignes.

Bal. Lord Marshall, let me kisse my Soueraigns hand,
And bow my knee before his Maitelie.
For Mowbray and my selfe are two men,
That vowe a long and weary pilgrimage,
The life and death of Richard the second.

Then let us take a ceremonious leave
And losinge farwell of our feuerall friends.
Mar. The Apellant in all duty greeteth your Highness,
And craves to kisse your hand, and take his leave.
Rich. We will defend, and fold him in our arms.
Cofin of Herford, as thy cause is wift,
So be thy fortune in this Royall fight:
Farewell, my blood, which to day thou sheddest,
Lament we may, but not reneume thee dead.
Bull. Oh let no noble eye prophane a teare
For me, I'll be gor'd with Mowbray's speare:
As confident, as is the Falcon's flight
Against a bird, do I with Mowbray fight.
My loving Lord, I take my leave of you,
Of you (my Noble Cofin) Lord Annerie;
Nor fecke, although I have to do with death,
But luffie, yong, and cheerly drawing breath.
Loc. as at English Feasts, so I reccegre.
The dauntlesse falt, to make the end most sweet.
Oh thou the earthy author of my blood,
Whose youthfull spirit in me regenerate,
Dost with a two-fold rigour lift mee vp
To reach at victory above my head,
Addo prooife vnto mine Armoure with thy praysers,
And with thy blessings flame my Lances point,
That it may enter Mowbray's waxen Coate,
And furnish new the name of John a Gaudit,
Euen in the lutfy hauiet of his fonne.
Gauer. Heauen in thy good caufe make thee profous
Be swift like lightning in the execution,
And let thy blowes doubly redoubled,
Fall like an amazing thunder on the male
Of thy smailes pernicious enemy.
Rouse vp thy youthfull blood, be valiant, and last.
Mon. How euer heaven or fortune call my lot,
There lues, or dies, true to Kings Richard Throne,
A loyall, luff, and vpright Gentleman:
Neuer did Captive with a freer heart,
Caft off his chains of bondage, and embrace
His golden vncontroll'd enanuchishment,
More then my dancing foule dost celebrate
This Feast of Sylvestre, with mine Aderfairie.
Moff mighty Lige, and my companion Peetes,
Take from my mouth, the with of happy yeares,
As gentle, and as incond, as to feel,
Go I to fight: Truth, hath a quiet breith.
Rich. Farewel, my Lord, securely I lep't
Vertue with Valour, encirc'd in thine eye
Order the tiall Marthall, and begin.
Mar. Haure of Herford, Lancafter, and Derby,
Receiue thy lance, and heaven defend thy right.
Bull. Strong as a towere in hope, I cry Amen.
Mar. Go bear this Lance to Thomas D. of Norfolke.
1. Haure of Herford, Lancafter, and Derby,
Stands heere for God, his Soueraigne, and himselfe,
On paine to be found false, and recreant,
To prove the Duke of Norfolke, Thomas Mowbray,
A Traitor to his God, his King, and him,
And dare he bring thee forwards to the fight.
2. Haure. Here fhand thine Mowbray Duke of Norfolke
On paine to be found false, and recreant,
Both to defend him selfe, and to appeare
Henry of Herford, Lancafter, and Derby,
To God, his Soueraigne, and to him diolly:\nCouragiously, and with a free defire Attending but the signall to begin.

A charge founded
Mar. Sound Trumpetes, and as forward Combattants.
Stay, the King hath throwne his Warder downe.
Rich. Let them lay by their Helmes, & their Speares,
And both returne backe to their Chaires againe:
Withdraw with vs, and let the Trumpetes sound,
While we returne thefe Duke's which we desire.
Adieu Edward.

Draw neere and lift
What with our Councell we haue done.
For that our kindeomes earth should not be fouled
With that deere blood which it hath suffered,
And for our eyes do hate the dire aspect
Of eniust wounds plough'd vp with neighbours swords,
Which so rou'd vp with boystfoud vntend'd drummes,
With hard reounding Trumpets dreadful bray,
And grating thocke of wrathfull yon Armes,
Might from our quiet Confines fright faire peace,
And make vs Wade euen in our kindred blood:
Therefore, we banish you our Territories.
You Cofin Herford, vpon paine of death,
Till twice five Summers have enriuch'd our fields,
Shall not enregret our faire dominions,
But creese the stranger papes of banishment.
But, You will be done: This mutt my comfort be,
That Sun that warmes you Lucifer, shall shine on me:
And thofe his golden beames to you here lent,
Shall point on me, and gild my banishment.
Rich. Norfolke: for thee remaines a heauder donce,
Which I with some vnwillningneffe pronounce,
The flye flowe hours shall not determinate
The dateleffe limet of thy deere exile,
The hopeleffe word, of Neuer to returne,
Breath I against thee, vpwn paine of life.
How. A late tem[e, my most Soueraigne Lige,
And all vlook'd for from your Highnesse mouthe:
A deere mearst, not so depee a maine,
As to be catt forth in the common sylve,
Hau I defended at your Highnesse hands.
The Language I have leart'd these foure yeares
(My native English) now I must forget,
And now my tongues ye is sayned no more,
Then an unfringled Vyll, or a Harpe,
Or like a cunning Instrument cas'd vp,
Or being open, put into his hands
That knowes no touch to tune the harmony
Within my mouth I have engaile'd my tongue,
Doubly perruccled with my teeth and lippes,
And dull, vnteeling, barren ignorance,
Is made my Goaler to attend on me:
I am too old to fawn upon a Nurfe,
Too farre in yeeres to be a pupil now:
War is thy sentene, then, but speechelesse death,
Which robs my tongue from breathing nature breath?
Rich. It boosts thee not to be compassionat,
After our sentene, palingen comes too late.
Stull. Then thus I turne me from my countreys light
To dwell in folemne shades of endlesse night.
Ret. Returne againe, and take an oath with thee,
Lay on our Royall word, your banisht handes;
Sware by the duty that you owe to heav'n
(Our part therin we banish with your relues)
To keepe the Oath that we administer:
Youuer snall (to helpe you Truth, and Heauen)
Embrace each others loose in banishment,
Nor euer looke vpon each other face.
The life and death of Richard the second.

Nor ever write, regrette, or reconcile—
This lowring temppest of your home-bred hate,
Nor ever by advised purpose meet,
To plot, contrive, or compleat any ill,
Gainst Vs, our State, our Subjects, or our Land.
But I swear,

Mom. And I, to keep all this,
Norselle, so farre, as to mine enemy,
By this time (had the King permitted vs)
One of our foules had wandered in the syre;
Banish'd this fraile spechule of our flesh,
As now our flesh is banish'd from this Land.
Confesse thy Treasons, thou flye this Realme,
Since thou hast fare to go, beare not along
The clogging burden of a guilty soule.

Mom. No Bullying: I hear I were Traitor,
My name be blotted from the booke of Life,
And I from heaven banish'd, as from hence:
But what thou art, heauen, thou, and I do know,
And all too foone (I fear) the King shall trae.
Farewell (my Liege) now no way can I fray,
Saue backe to England, all the world my way.

Exit. Rich. Vnle, even in the glasses of thine eyes
I see thy greeted heart: thy face appear'd
Hath from the number of his by eight yeares
Pluck'd foure away: Six frozen Winters spent,
Returne with welcome home, from banishment:

But how long a time lies in one little word:
Foure lagging Winters, and foure wanton springs
Find in a word, iuch is the breach of Kings:

Gaut. I thankke my Liege, that in regard of me
He shouls toke four yeares of my fomnes exile
But little vantage shal I reape thereby.
For ere the five yeares that he hath to spend
Can change their Moones, and bring their times about,
My eyle-ride Lampre, and time-bewisted light
Shall be extinct with age, and endleffe night:
My inch of Taper, will be burnt, and done,
And blindfold death, not leaue me see my fomne.

Rich. Why Vnle, thou hast many yeares to live.
Gaut. But not a minute (King) that thou canst giue;
Shed not thy days thou canst, nor heave thy tears,
And plucke kights from me, but not lend a morrow:
Thou canst not heipe time to furrow me with age,
But too much in my pilgrimage:
Thy words is currant with him, for my death,
But dead, thy kingdom can not buy my breath.

Ric. Thy somne is banish'd upon good advice,
Where my tongue a party-verb'd guile,
Why at our Justice seem't thou then to lose?

Gas. Things sweet to saue, preuie in digestion sovere Your'g'd me as a judge, but I had rather you would haue bid me argue like a Father.
Alas, I look'd, when some of you should say,
I was too strict to make mine owne away:
But you gaue leave to my unwilling tong,
Against my will, to do my part poor wrong.

Rich. Cofine farewell; and Vnle bid him so:
Six years we banish him, and he shall go.

Exit. Florish.

As. Cofine farewell: what preface must not know
From where you do remain, lest paper show;

Mar. My Lord, no leasttake I, for I will ride
As fast as I can to let me know your side.

Gaut. Oh to what purpoe was all this bold thy words,
That thou returnst no greeting to thy friends?

Bull. I have too few to take my lease of you,
When the tongues office should be prodigal,
To breath th'aibundant doour of the heart,

Gant. Thy greefe is but thy abfence for a time;

Bull. Thy absence greefe is preferre for that time,

Gant. What is faire Winters, they are quickly gone

Bull. To men in thy, but greefe makes one hour ten,

Gant. Call it a travaill that thou take'st for pleasure.

Bull. My heart will figh, when I miscall it so,
Which indues it an inforced Pilgrimage.

Gant. The fullens passage of thy wearsy steepe
Effeeeme a foyle, wherein thou art to fet
The precious Jewell of thys home returne;

Bull. Oh who can hold a fire in his hand
By thinking on the profite of Caufefate?
Or clay the hungry edge of appearre,
By bare imagination of a Feall?

Or Wallow naked in December snow,
By thinking on fantaflie keizers heart?
No no, the apprehension of the good

Gues but the greater feeling to the worst?
Fell forrowes tooth, doth euer rankle more
Then when it bites, but largethe not the fore.

Gant. Come, come (my fomne) let bring thee on thy way
Had I thy youth, and caufe, I would not flye.

But Then Englands ground farre well, sweet soil aduer,
My Mother, and my Nurse, which bears me yet:
Where eere I wander, boast of this I can,
Though banish'd, yet a true-borne Englishman.

Scene Quarta.

Enter King, Anmelle, Greene, and Bragot.

Rich. We did obferne, Cofine Anmelle,
How far brought you high Hereford on this way?

Anm. I brought hight Hereford (if you call him fo)
But to the next high way, and there I left him.

Rich. And fay, what frote of parting tears were shed?

Anm. Faith none for me, except the Northenest wond
Which then grew bittere against our face,
Awak'd the sleepie dreame, and by chance
Did grace our hollow parting with a teare.

Rich. What faid our Cofin when you parted with him?

As. Farewell: and for my hart DISCLAIMER my tongue
Should fo prophanne the word, that taughte me craft
To counterfeit oppreffion of such greate,
That word leam'd buried in my forrowe greate.
Marry, would the word Farewell, late lengthen'd hours,
And added yeeres to his short buanishment,
He should haue had a volume of Farewells,
But since it would not, he had none of me.

Rich. He is our Cofin (Cofin) but's doubt,
When time shall call him home from buanishment,
Whether our kinman come to fee his friends,
Our selfe, and Baptiffe; his brother Greene.
Obern't his Courtship to the common people:
How he did ferme to duee into their hearts,
With humble, and familie courteffe,
What reuerence he did to tow away on flames,
Wooing p'oes: trufel-men, with the craft of foules,
And patient under-bearing of his Fortune,
As were to banish their affections with him.
Off goes his buanish to an Oyler-wooth.
The life and death of Richard the second.

A brace of Dray-men bid God speed him well,
And had the tribute of his fullip knee,
With thanks to his Countrymen, my loving friends,
As were our England in refection his,
And his subjests next degree in hope.

Or. Well, he is gone, & with him go these thoughts:
Now for the Rebels, which stand out in Ireland,
Expedient manage must be made my Liege
Ere further levy, yield them further means
For their advantage, & your Highness's Lahore.

Rec. We will our felle in person to this warre,
And for our Coffers, with too great a Court,
And liberall Largefe, are grown somewhat light,
We are inc'd to serve our royal Realme,
The Reuennent whereof shall furnish vs
For our affayres in hand: if that come short
Our Subsittuates at home shall have Blanke-charters:
Whereas, when they shall know what men are rich,
They shall subfcrbe them for large summes of Gold,
And lend them after to supply our wants.

Rec. To serve the Ireland prefently.

Enter Bispy.

Bispy. What news?

Bu. Old John of Gaunt is very sick my Lord,
Sodainly taken, & hath fent post hafe
To entreat your Maitly to visit him.

Fie. Where lies he?

Bu. At Ely house.

Rec. Nor put it (hesues) in his Physicians minde,
To helpe him to his grave immediately:
The lining of his coffers will make Coates
To decke our fouldiers for these ith warres.
Come Gentleman, let's all go visit him:
Pray heauen we may make half, and come too late. Exit.

Abridged. Scena Prima.

Enter Gaunt, sickle with Tarks.

Gaunt. Will the King come, that I may breath my last
In wholome counsel to his worthy youth?

Tor. Ver not your felle, nor frame not with your brea,
For all in vaine comes counsel to his care.

Gaunt. Oh but (they say) the tongues of dying men
Inforce attention like deepie harmony;
Where words are scarce, they are feldom spent in vaine,
For they breath truth, that breath their words in paine.
He that no more must fay, is liu'd more
Then they whom youth and ease have taught to glose,
More are mens ends made, then their liues before,
The setting Sun, and Mufeke is the close
The last fable of sweetes, is sweetest last.
Write in memborance, more then things long past;
Though Richard my liues counsell would not heare,
My deathes sad tale, may yet vnde his care.

Tor. No, it is flopt with other flat'ting sounds
As praises of his flate: then there are found
Luscious Meters, to whose Scarmon found
The open care of youth doth always liuer.
Report of favours in proud Italy,
Whole manners fill our tardies spight Nation
Limpes after in base imitation.

Where doth the world thrust forth a vanity,
So it be new, there's no respect how vile,
That is not quickly buzz'd into his eates?
That all too late comes counsell to be heard,
Where will doth mutiny with wis regard:
Direct not him, whose way himselfe will choose,
His breath thou lackst, and that breath willeth loue.

Canst. Me thinkes I am a Prophet new inspired,
And thus excaping, do forsettell of him,
His rash fierce blaze of Ryot cannot laft,
For violent fires foame burne out themselfes,
Small showers last long, but sodain flames are short,
Hys tyres become, that flurs too fast betimes:
With eager feeding, food doth choke the feeder:

Light vanity, infaite corromant,
Consuming meanes soone preyes upon it felle.
This royall Throne of Kings, this stedfast life,
This earth of Maitly, this feste of Mars,
This other Edens, demy paradise.
This Fortrefle built by Nature for her felle,
Against infition, and the hand of warre:
This happy breed of men, this little world,
This precious Stone, set in the fluer sea,
Which ferves it in the office of a wall,
Or as a Moate defenfue to a house,
Against the envy of leffe happier Lands,
This bleffed plot, this earth, this Realme, this England,
This Nure, this reeming wombe of Royall Kings,
Fear'd by their breed, and famous for their birth,
Renowned for their deeds, as farre from home,
For Christian seruice, and true Chiuialrie,
As the fepulchre in flubborne Italy
Of the Worlds randome, bleffed Maurit Sonne.
This Land of such dere foules, this dere-dere Land,
Deere for her reputation through the world,
Is now Lea'd out (I dye pronouncing it)
Like to a Tenderer of pelting fame.
E-Gland bound in with the triumphant fea,
Whose rocky shore beates back the envious fledge
Of watery Neptune, is now bound in with shame,
With Inky blotes, and rotten Parchment bonds.
That England, that was wont to conquer others,
Hath made a shameful conquest of it felle.
Ail would the fandall vamish with my life,
How happy then were my engulfed death?

Enter King, Queene, Anornelle, Bispy, Greene,
Bogger, Roy, and Villaghecy.

Tor. The King is come, deale mildly with his youth,
For young hot Celibs, being rag'd do rage the more.

Canst. How fates our noble Vnkle Lancaster?

R. What comfort man? How it with sped Gaunt?

Gaunt. Oh how that name before my composition:
Old Gaunt indeed, and gaunt In being old:
Within me greeke hath kept a tedious falt,
And who allaynes from meate, that is not gaunt.
For sleeping England long time hause I waschi,
Watching breets Jeannesfe, Jeannesfe is all gaunt.
The pleasures that some Fathers feeke upon,
Is my fridt falt, I mean my Children looke,
And therein fastig, haft thou made me gaunt:
Gaunt am I for the graue, gaunt as a graue,
Whole hollow wombe inheriteth naught but bones.

Canst. Can fickle men play fo finely with their names?

Gaunt. No, raillery makes sport with their names:
Since the day, I feeke to kill my name in me,
I mocke my name (great King) to flatter thee.

Ric. Should dying men flatter those that live?

Gau. No, no, men liuing flatter those that dye.

Ric. Thou now a dying, say'st thou flatter if me.

Gau. Oh no, thou yeell, though I the ficker be.

Ric. I am in health, I breath, I see thee ill.

Gau. Now he that made me, knowes I fee thee ill:

I'll in my felle to see, and in thee, seeing ill,

Thy death-bed is no better then the Land,

Wherein thou lyest in reputation fickle,

And thou too care-lesse patience at thou art,

Committ's thy moufled body to the cure

Of thofe Phyficians, that fift wounded thee,

A thoufand flatterers fit within thy Crowne,

Whofe compaffe is no bigger then thy head,

And yet incaged in fo small a Venge.

The waife is no whift letter then thy Land.

Oh had thy Grandifine with a Prophet's eye,

Scene how his fonnes fomne, should deftroy his fonnes,

From forth thy reach he would have laid thy shame,

Depofing thee before thou wert poffef,

Which art poffef now to defpofe thy felle.

Why (Cofine) were thou Regent of the world,

It was a flame to let his Land by leafe:

But for thy would enjoying but this Land,

Is it not more then fhame, to blame it in?

Landlord of England art thou, and not King:

Thy fiate of Law, is abfolute to the law,

And

Ric. And thou, a lunaticke lanele-witted foole,

Prefuming on an Agens pruifledge,

Darft with thy frozen admiration

Make pale our cheekes, claffing the Royall blood

With fury, from his native residence?

Now by my States right Royal Maielfie,

Wert thou not Brother to great Edwards fomne,

This tongue that runs foroudly in thy head,

Should run thy head from thy vnrecurent shoulders.

Gau. Oh spare me not, my brothers Edwards fomne,

For that I was his Father Edwards fomne:

That blood alreadie (like the Pellican)

Thouffnt rap't out, and drunckingly carow'd.

My brother Gloucefter, plaime well meaning foule

(Whom faire befell in leauen 'mongt fappe doule)

May be a prefid, and winneffe good,

That thou requifite it not fpilling Edwards blood:

Joyne with the preffent ft. kneelle that I have,

And thy vnikindneffe be like crooked age,

To crop at once a too-long winther'd flowre.

Lute in thy thame, but dye not frame with thee,

Those words hereafter, thy tormentors bee.

Come ye to my bed, then to my grave,

Loue they to lie, that loue and honor hafe.

Ric. And let them dye, that age and fullers hafe,

For both haft houf, and both become the grave.

Tor. I do befeech your Maielfie impute his words

To wayward ficklineffe, and age in him:

He knows you on my life, and holds you deere

As Harry Duke of Herfard, were he aire.

Ric. Right, you fay true: as Herfard love, fo his,

As theirs, fo mine: and all be as it is.

Enter Northumberland.

Ner. My Liege, old Queene commendes him to your Maielfie.

Ric. What fayes he?

Ner. Nay nothing, all is faid:

His tongue is now a stringelife instrument,

Words, life, and all, old Lancafher hath spent.

Tor. Be Torke the next, that must be bankrupt fo,

Though death be poor, it ends a maffall wo.

Ric. The ripfe fruit fifts falls, and fo dodd he,

His time is fpent, our pilgrimage must be:

So much for that. Now for our {Irach waures,

We must fupplant thofe cough rug-headed Kernes,

Which line like venom, where no venom elfe

But only they, have priviledge to fue.

And for thefe great affayes do aske fome charge.

Towards our affiaance, we do feize to vs

The plate, coined, renewmes, and muebles;

Whereof our Uncle Queene did fland poffef.

Tor. How long shall I be patience? Oh how long

Shall tender duece make me fuffer wrong?

Not Glawfes death, nor Herfords banishment,

Nor Gauftes rebukes, nor Englands private wrongs,

Nor the preuention of poore Eclingbrooke,

About his marriage, nor my owne dilgrace

Have euer made me fowre my patent cheeks,

Or bend one wrinkle on my {oueraigne face:

I am the laft of noble Edwards fomne,

Of whom thy Father Prince of Wales was fift,

In waure was never Lynn rag'd more fierce:

In peace, was newer gentle Lambemore milde,

Then was that yong and Princely Gentleman,

His face thou haft, for euer fo look'd he

Accomplifh'd with the number of thy houres:

But when he frownd, it was a giftn the French,

And not againft his friends: his noble hand

Did win what he did spend: and fpent not that

Which his triumphat fathers hand had won:

His hands were guile of no kindreds blood,

But bloody with the enemies of his kneue.

Oh Richard, Turke is too faire gone with greefe,

Or else he neuer would compare betwene.

Ric. Why Yorke,

What's the matter?

Tor. Oh my Liege, pardon me if you pleafes it not

I pleas' not to be pardon'd, am content with all:

Seekke you to feere, and gripe into your hanues

The Royalties and Rightes of banf'd Herfard

Is not Queene dead? and doth not Herfard live?

Was not Queene iuft? and is not Harry true?

Did not the one defeue to have an heye?

Is not his heye a well-deferuing fomne?

Take Herfords rightes away, and take from time

His Charters, and his cufommarie rightes

Let not to morrow then infue to it

Be not thy felle. For how art thou a King

But by faire fquence and fucceffion?

Now afore God, God forbid I fay true,

If you do wrongfullie teize Herfords right,

Call in his Letters Patents that he hath

By his Atrunuymes generall, and fue

His Liuerie, and denne his offer'd homage,

You plaice a thoufand dangers on your head,

You loafe a thoufand well-difpofed hearts,

And pricke my tender patience to thofe thoughts

Which honor and allegance cannot thinke.

Re. Thinke what you will: we feite into our hands,

His plate, his goods, his money, and his lands.

Tor. Ie not be by the while: My Liege farewell,
The life and death of Richard the second.

What will enflue hereof, there's none can tell,
But by bad cause may be understood,
That their events can never fall out for good,
Exit.

Re-enter  Go Bumby to the Earl of Wiltshire, &c.
Bid him repair to vs to Fig house,
To see this buffoon to us now more.
We will for Ireland, and this time, I trov:
And we create in absence of our selfe
Our Uncle Yortse, Lord Governor of England:
For he is just, and always good and well.
Come on our Qunee, to morrow must we part,
Be merry, for our time of day is short.

Nor. Well Lords, the Duke of Lancaster is dead.
Rey. And living too, for now his sonne is Duke,
Wilt. Barely in title, in rest unnewen.
Nor. Richly in both, if fadness had her right.
Rey. My heart is great: but it muft break with silence,
Er't be disburden'd with a liberal tongue.
Nor. Nay speake thy mind: & let him ne'er speake more
That speakes thy words againe to do thee harme.
Wilt. Tends that thou'lt speake to th' Duke of Hereford,
If it be so, out with it boldly man,
Quince is mine care to heare of good towards him.
Rey. No good at all that I can do for him,
Vale you call it good to please him,
Beereft and gelded of his patrimonie,
Nor. Now ahere heauen, vs shame such wrongs are borne,
In him a royall Prince, and many mee
Of noble blood in this declining Land.
The King is not himselfe, but bareely led
By Flatterers, and what they will informe
Merryly in hate 'gainst any of vs all,
That will the King feuerely prosecute
'Gainst us, vs, our flues, our children, and our heires.
Rey. The Commons hath he ple'd with greuous taxes
And quite loft their hearts: the Nobles hath he finde
For ancient quarrels, and quite loft their hearts.
Wilt. And daily new exactions are dued't,
As blanke, benevolences, and I wont not what:
But what o'Gods name doth become of this?
Nor. Warts hath not wafted it, for war'd he bath not.
But bareely yeelded upon comprimize,
That which his Auncetors stetch'd with blowes:
More hath he spent in peace, then they in waflcs.
Rey. The Earl of Wiltshire hath the reatime in Farne.
Wilt. The Kings gowyn bankrupt, like a broken man.
Nor. Reproach, and diffolation hanghe over him.
Rey. He hath not monie for these liffe waflcs:
(Not bareness exactions notwithstanding)
But by the robbing of the banth'd Duke.
Nor. His noble Kinship, must degenerate King:
But Lords, we hear this searefull tenent ling,
Yet fecke no furer to amend the forme:
We fee the wind fix fore vs on our tales,
And yet we finde not, but feuerely perished
Rey. We fee the very wracke that we must suffer,
And many a deads is the danger now.
For suffering to the caufes of our wrake,
Nor. Not so: even through the hollow eyes of death,
I spie life peering, but I dare not lay
How neere the tindings of our comfort is,
Pit. Nay let us share thy thoughts, as thou dost ours,
Rey. Be confident to speake Northumberland,
We there, are but thy feele, and speaking so.

The life and death of Richard the second.

Enter Berkeley.

North. Is it my Lord of Barkley, as I glhefe.

Burk. My Lord of Hereford, my Message is to you.

Bull. My Lord, my Answer is to Lancaster,
And I am come to secke that Name in England,
And I must finde that Title in your Tongue,
Before I make reply to soute you say.

Bark. Mistake me not, my Lord, it’s not my meaning
To roze one Title of your Honour out,
To you, my Lord, I come (what Lord you will)
From the most glorious of this Land,
The Duke of York, to know what pricks you on
To take advantage of the absent time,
And fright our Native Peace with selfe-borne Armes.

Enter York.

Bull. I shall not need transport my words by you,
He comes his Grace in Perdon.
My Noble Vnckle,
York, Shewe me thy humble heart, and not thy knee,
Whose dutie is decentable, and false,

Bull. My gracious Vnckle.

York. Tis, tis, Grace me no Grace, nor Vnckle me,
I am no Traysors Vnckle; and that word Grace,
In an vngracious mouth, is but prophan.
Why hau e thee banis’d, and forbidden Legges,
Dare donce to touch a Dutif of Englands Ground;
But more then why, why hau e they dared to match
So many miles upon her peacefull Bofome,
Frighting her pale fae’d Villages with Warre,
And oftentation of despieted Armes?
Com’t thou because th’aneyted King is hence;
Why foolish Boy, the King is left behid,
And in my loyall Bofome lies his power.
Were I but now the King of such hot youth,
As when braue Gaunt, thy Father, and my selfe
Recu’d the Black Prince, that yong Clouns of men,
From forth the Ranks of many thouand French;
Oth then, how quickly should this Arme of mine,
Now Puisner to the P. licie, chastife thee,
And minifter correction to thy fault.

Bull. My gracious Vnckle, let me knowe my Faults,
On what Condition standst thou, and wherein?

York. Even in Condition of the world degree,
In gouttie Rebellion, and detested Reason:
Thou art a banis’d man, and here art come
Before the expiration of thy time, out.
In braving Armes against thy Soueraigne.

Bull. As I was banis’d, I was banis’d Hereford,
But as I come, I come for Lancaster.

And Noble Vnckle, I beseech your Grace
Looke on my Wrongs with an indifferent eye:
You are my Father, for me thinkes in you
I see old Gaunts awe.
Oh then my Father,
Will you permit, that I shal stand condemed
A wandring Vagabond, my Rights and Royalties
Pluckt from my Armes perficte, and given away
To vntake Vnckles Wherefore was I borne?
If that my Cousin King, be King of England,
It must be grunted, I am Duke of Lancaster.
You have a Sonne, Amurrolls, my Noble Kinman,
Had you first died, and he were trst trode downe,
He should have found his Vnckle Gaunt a Father,
To vrowse his Wrongs, and chafe them to the bay.
I am demyde to sue your Liciere here,
And yet my Letters patent give me leave:
My Fathers goods are all distrayd, and fold,
And thefe, and all, are all amife employd.

What
The life and death of Richard the second.

What would you have me do? I am a Subject,
And challenge Law: Attorneyes are deny'd me; 3
And therefore personally I lay my claim.

To my Inheritance of free Difent.
North. The Noble Duke hath been too much abus'd, Raff. It stands your Grace upon, to doe him right, wife. Safe men by his endowments are made great.

North. My Lords of England, let me tell you this,
I have had feeling of my Colens Wrongs,
And labour'd all I could to doe him right; 5
But in this kind, to come in brauing Armes,
Be his owne Careuer, and cut out his way,
To find out Right with Wrongs, it may not be;
And you that doe abett him in this kind,
Cherish Rebellion, and are Rebels all.

North. The Noble Duke hath sworn his comming is 6
But for his owne; and for the right of that,
We all have strongly sworn to give himyd,
And let him neer fee Joy, that breaks that Oath.
Tork. Well, well, I see the sicke of these Armes,
I cannot mend it, I must needs confesse,
Because my power is weake, and all ill:
But if it could, by him that gave me life,
I would strach you all, and make you fume
Vno the Soueraigne Mercy of the King.
But since I cannot, be it known to you,
It doe remaine at Neuter. So fare you well,
Vnlesse you please to enter in the Caff,
And there respole for this Night.

Bull. An offer Vncke, that wee will accept;
But wee must winne your Grace to see with vs
To Briflow Caffle, which they lay is hold
By Envy, Rages, and their Complices,
The Carpersitters of the Commonwealth,
Which I have towne to weed, and plucke away.

Tork, I may be I will go with your: but yet Ie paws
For I am loth to breake our Countries Lawes:
Nor Friends, nor Foes, to me welcome you are,
Things past redresse, are now with me past care. Extremet.

Scena Quarta.

Enter Salisbury, and a Captaine.
Cpr. My Lord of Salisbury, we have flayd ten dayes,
And hardily kept our Countrymen together;
And yet we heare no tidings from the King:
Therefore we will dispersue our forces, farewell.
E. Stay yet another day, thou traitour Welchman,
The King repoch't all his confidence in thee.
Cpr. 'Tis thought the King is dead, we will not stay;
The Bay-tree's in our Country all are wither'd,
And Meteor frithe the fixed Starres of Heauen;
The pale-faced Moone lookest bloody on the Earth,
And eae-couk'd Prophets whisper fearfull change;
Rich men looke sad, and Ruffians dance and leape,
The one in fear to looke what they enjoy,
The other to enjoy by Rage, and Warre:
These signes fore-run the death of Kings.
Farewell, our Countrymen are gone and fled;
As well affur'd Richard their King is dead. Exit.

Sal. Ah Richard, with eyes of hauncie mind,
I see thy glory, like a foosting Starre,
Fall to the base Earth, from the Firmament:
Thy Sunne sets weeping in the lowly Weft,
Winnowing Stormes to come, Wee, and Vareet:
Thy Friends are fled, to wait upon thy Foes,
And crostely to thy good, all fortune goes. Exit.

Actus Tertius. Scena Prima.

Enter Tork, Salisbury, and their Complices.
Bull. Bring forth these men:
Tooke and Crane. I will not vex your soules,
(Since presently your soules must part your bodies)
With too much urging your pernicious fries,
For twere no Charite: yet to wash your blood
From off my hands, here in the view of men,
I will vaild some cause of your deaths.
You have is led a Prince, a Royall King,
A happie Gentleman in Blood, and Lineaments,
By you unhappied, and disgrac'd cleane;
You have in manner with your insolent houres
Made a Diuorce between his Queene and him.
Broke the possession of a Royall Bed,
And Byad't the beautie of a faire Queens Cheekes,
With tears drawn from her eyes, with your soule wronged.
My selfe a Prince, by fortune of my birth,
Neere to the King in blood, and neere in lour.
Yf you did make him mis-interprete me,
Have flopt my neck under your injuries,
And figh'd my English breath in tornaine Clouds,
Eating the bitter bread of banishment;
While you have fed upon my Seignouries,
Dil-park'd my Parkes, and tell'd my Forrell Woods;
From mine owne Windows torne my Household Coat,
Raz'd out my Impreff, leaving me no signe,
Sawe mens opinions, and my living blood,
To shew the World I am a Gentleman.
This, and much more, much more then twice all this;
Condemnes you to the death, to see them deliuered over
To execution, and the hand of death.

Bull. More welcome is the froake of death to me,
Then Bulleynbrook to England.
Greene. My comfort is, that Heauen will take our soules,
And plague Injustice with the paines of Hell.
Bull. My Lord Northumberland, see them dispatch'd
Vncke, you say the Queene is at your Houfe.
For Heauens sake take fairly her head to empris,
Tell her I end to her my kind commendments,
Take special care my Greetings be deliuer'd.

Tork. A Gentleman of mine I have dispatch'd
With Letters of your due, to her at large.
Bull. Thanks gentle Vncke, I come Lords away,
To fight with Glendare, and his Complices
A while to worke, and after holidaies. Extremet.
The life and death of Richard the second.

Scena Secunda.

Drums: flourish, and Colours.

Enter Richard, Anne, Aureole, Carle, and Souriers.

Richard. Backsliding Castile call you this at hand?

Anne. Yes, my Lord; how brooks your Grace the ayre,
After your late toiling on the breaking Seas?

Richard. Needs must I like it well: I weep for my
To stand upon my Kingdom once again.
Deere Earth, I do desire thee with my hand,
Though Rebels wound thee with their Hories hooves:
As a long parted Mother with her Child,
Plays fondly with her tears, and smiles in meeting;
So weeping, smiling, greet I thee my Earth,
And doe thee favor with my Royall hands.
Feed not thy Sovereigns Foe, my gentle Earth,
Nor with thy Sweeters, comfort his raucous fence.
But let thy Spiders, that suck vp thy Venome,
And hasten the Balm from yon Posts away,
Doing annoyance to the trecherous feete,
Which with withering feeps doe trample thee.
Yield ringer Needles to mine Enemies;
And when they from thine Bosome pluck a Flower,
Guard it I prethee with a lurking Adder,
Whose double tongue may et with a mortall touch
Throw death upon thy Sovereigns Enemies.
Mock not my fencelle Convocation, Lords;
This Earth shall have a feeling, and these Stones
Proue armed Sourdiers, ere her Natue King
Shall falte under sole Rebellious Armes.

Car. Fear not my Lord, that Power that made you King
Hath power to keepe you King, in fipght of all.

Anne. He meanes, my Lord, that we are too remissful, Whillest Blossombrooke through our feuerite,
Grewet strong and great, in interwince and in friends.

Richard. Discomfortable Cousin, know well thou not,
That when the searching Eye of Heaven is hid
Behind the Globe, that lights the lower World,
Then Theeues and Robbers range abroad weuent,
In Murthers and in Oure rage bloody here:
But when from vnder this Terrestriall Ball
He fires the proud tops of the Easterne Pines,
And darts his Lightning through every guilte hole,
Then Murthers, Treausons, and deteiled stines
(The Clocke of Night being pluckt from off their backs)
Stand bare and naked, trembling at themselves.
So when this Thrice, this Traytor Blossombrooke,
Who all this while hath revell'd in the Night,
Shall see vs rising in our Throne, the East,
His Treausons will fit blushing in his face,
Not able to endure the fighte of Day;
But felle-affrighted, tremblng at his fonne.
Not all the Water in the roughe Sea
Can gull the Balme from an honest King;
The breath of worldly men cannot depoje
The Deputie elected by the Lord:
For every man that Blossombrooke hath prevet,
To lift thredad Steele against our Golden Crowne,
Heaven for his Richard hath in heauenly pay.

A glorious Angell: then if Angells fight,
Wseke men must fall, for Heauen full guards the right.

Enter Salwey.

Welcome my Lord, how faire off I sees your Power?
Salwey. Nor neere, nor farther off, my gracious Lord,
Then this weake armie; & discomfite guides my tongue,
And bids me speake of nothing but deliapre:
One day too late, I feare (my Noble Lord)
Hath clouded all thy happee days on Earth:
Oh call backe yesterday, bid Time returne,
And thou shalt haue twelve thousand fighting men:
To day, to day, vnappie day too late
Orethrowes thoy Joyce, Friends, Fortune, and thy State,
For all the Wellmen hearing thoy were dead,
Are gone to Blossombrooke, disperfit, and fled.

Anne. Comfort my Liege, why looks your Grace so pale?

Richard. But now the blood of twentie thousand men
Did triumph in my face, and they are fled,
And till so much blood thither come againe,
Hate I not reason to looke pale, and dead?
All Soules that will be safe, flye from my side,
For Time hath fet a blot upon my pride.

Anne. Comfort my Liege, remember who you are.

Richard. I had forgot my felle: I am not King?
Awake thou bugle! May the thoy keep thee deepet?
Is not the Kings Name fortie thousand Names?
Anne, among my Name: a prime facet strikes
At thy great glory, Looke not to the ground,
Yet auditories of a King: are wee not high?
High be our thoughts: I know my Vindle Terms.
Hath Power enough to terue our turne.
But who comes here?

Enter Scroop.

Scroop. More health and happyneffe beside my Liege,
Then can my ear-runng tongue deliuere him:

Richard. Mine ear is open, and my heart prepar'd:
The worthe is worldly losse, thou canst unfold:
Say, is my kingdom loit? why was my Care:
And what felle is it to red of Care?
Strives Blossombrooke to be great as wee are Greater he should not be: if thee terue God,
We'll terue thee last, and be his Fellow so.
Remit our Substrate: that we cannot mend,
They breake their Faith to God, as well as vs:
Cry Woe, Defallution, Ruine, Lofe, Decay,
The worthe is Desyn, and Death will haue his day.

Scroop. Glad am I, that your Highnesse is so amind
To bear the ridings of Calamite,
Like an unfeasonable longtime day,
Which make the Silver Knes, drwe the thoy Shores,
As in the World were all diftraight to tears:
So much, above his Limes, fee the Rage
Of Blossombrooke, counting wee are for all Land.
With hard bright Steele, and hearts harder then Steele:
White Beares haue amind their thin and histrelle Scauls.
Agains thy Musetie, and loyaxes with Waems Voyces,
Strikes Vtpros bigge, and clap their female joints
In fife wondrfulie Arms? against thy Crowne.
Thy very Beautifull men to bend their Bowes
Of noble vnsulend English, against thy Face.
Yes Drinck! Waems manage the furealls.
Against thy Seat both young and old rebell,
And all goes worst when I have power to sell.

Richard. Too well too well thou tellst it. Tale so ill.
Where is the face of Wiltshire? where is Bangor?
What is become of Cambrai, where is Greece?

III. ii. 1—123

356
The life and death of Richard the second. 35

To change Blowes with thee, for our day of Doome:
This ague fit of feare is ever-blowne,
An easie task is it to winne our owne,
Say Scroope, where lyes our Vnkle with his Power?
Speake sweetely man, although thy lookes be lowere,
Scroope, Men judge by the complection of the Skie
The face and inclination of the day;
So may you by my dull and base Eyne:
My Tongue hath but a heavier Tale to say:
I play the Torturer, by small and small
To lengthen out the woift, that must be spoken.
Your Vnkle Torke is joynd with Bullyngbrokes,
And all your Northen Cattles yeilded vp,
And all your Sothene Gentlemen in Arms
Vpon his Faition.

Reeb. Thou hast said enough,
Befirew thee Cousin, which did lead me forth
Of that sweet way I was in, to despair:
What say you now? What comfort have we now?
By Heaven I heale him evertallingly,
That biss me be of so fort any more,
Goe to Flint Castle, there Ile pine away,
A King, Woes flue, flill Kingly Woe obey;
That Power I haue, dicharge, and let em goe
To ease the Land, that hath some hope to grow,
For I have none, Let no man speake againe
To alter this, for consolatie is but vaine.
Ann. My Diege, one word.
Reeb. He doth me double wrong,
That wounds me with the fateries of his tongue,
Ditchcharge my followers: let them hence away,
From Richards Night, to Bullyngbrokes faire Day.
Exeunt.

Scena Tertia.

Enter with Drum and Colours, Bullyngbrokes,
Torke, Northumberland, Attendants.

Bull. So that by this intelligence we learne
The Welchmen are dispers'd, and Salisbury
Is gone to meet the King, who lately landed
With some few private friends, upon this Coast.

North. The mostrar is very faire and good, my Lord,
Richard, not forre from hence, hat hid his head.

Torke. It would beforme the Lord Northumberland,
To say King Richard: slack the beaute day,
When such a facred King should hide his head.
North. Your Grace mistakes: onely to be briefe, Left I this Title out.

Torke. The time hath beene,
Would you have beene to briefe with him, he would
Haue beene in briefe with you to shorten you,
For taking to the Head, your whole heads length.

Bull. Mistake not (Vnkle) farther then you should.

Torke. Take not (good Cousin) farther then you should.
Least you mistake the Heauens are ore your head.

Bull. I know it (Vnkle) and oppose not my selfe Against their will, but who comes here?

Enter Perse.
Welcome Harry: what, where in this Castle yeild?
Pers. The Castle royally is made, my Lord,
Against thy entrance.

Bull. Roy-
The life and death of Richard the second.

Bull. Royally? Why, it contains no King?
Per. Yes (my good Lord)
It doth contain a King: King Richard lies
Within the limits of yon Linn and Stone,
And with him, the Lord Amherst, Lord Salisbury,
Sir Stephen Scroop, besides a Clergie man
Of holy reverence; who, I cannot leaue.
North. Oh, belieke it is the Bishop of Carlisle.
Bull. Noble Lord,
Goe to the rude Ribes of that ancient Caftle,
Through Brazen Trumpets fend the breath of Parle
Into his vain'd Eares, and thus declare:

Henry Bullington brook upon his knees doth kiffe
King Richard's hand, and lends allegiance
And true faith of heart to his Royall Person; hither come Euen at his feet, to lay my Armes and Power,
Proued, that my Baniishment repeal'd,
And Lands returf'd againe, be freely granted:
If not, I'll use th'advantage of my Power,
And lay the Summers dull with flowers of blood,
Ray'd from the wounds of slaughter'd Englishmen;
The breath, how farre off from the mind of Bullington brooke
It is, such Cufnon Tentem shall bedrench
The fresh green Laps of faire King Richard's Land,
My floopying dutie tenderly flie well.
Goe signifie as much, while here we march upon the Grasfe Carpet of this Plains:
Let's march without the joyse of threatening Drum,
That from this Caftles rau'd Battlements.
Our faire Appointments may be well perus'd,
Methinks King Richard and my telle should meet
With no slighter terror then the Elements
Of Fire and Water, when their thundering fmoake
At meeting teares the cloudie Chekers of Heauen:
Be he the fire, I'll be the yeelding Water,
The Rage be his, while on the Earth I raine
My Waters on the Earth, and not on him.
March on, and marke King Richard how he lookes,
Parle without, and auffle with in: then a Flourife,
Enter on the Walls, Richard, Carlile, Amherst, Scroop, Salisbury.

See, (for) King Richard doth himself appeare
As doth the blushing incomernt Sume,
From out the fetic Portall of the East,
When he perceives the eminse Cloudes are bent
To dimme his glory, and to finte the tract
Of his bright paffage to the Occident.
Tonges, Yet looke he like a King: behould his Eye
(As bright as is the Eagles) lightens forth
Controlling Maffeife: a slack, slack, for woe,
That any finne should flaine to faire a fhow.
Rich. We are amaz'd, and thus long have we flood
To watch the carefull bending of thine knes,
Because we thought our feife thy lawfull King:
And if we be, how dare thy laws forren
To pay their awfull dutie to our prefence?
If we benot, fiue vs the Hand of God,
That hath difmis'd vs from our Stewardhip,
For well wee know, no Hand of Blood and Bone
Can ftriue the fered Hundle of our Specter.
Vilifie he doe prophefe, feale, or vifiate,
And though you think, that all, as you have done,
Have which, how farre off from the mind of Bullington brooke,
And we are barren, and bereft of Friends:
Yet know, my Maller, God omnipotent,
Is influting in his Clouds, on our behalfe,

Armies of Pefilence, and they fhall ftrike
Your Children yet vaborne, and vnbege,
That lift your Vaftall Hands againe my Head,
And burn the Glory of my precious Crowne,
Tell Bullington brooke, for yond I thinkes he is,
That every frilde he makes vpon my Land,
Is dangerous Trefon: He is come to ope
The purple Taftement of bleeding Warres.
But ere the Crowne he lookes for, flie in peace,
Ten thoufand bloody crownes of Mothers Sonnes
Shall ill become the flower of Englands face,
Change the complexfion of her Maid-pale Peace
To Scarlet Indignation, and befread
Her Paftors Grasfe with fainfull English Blood.

North. The King of Heauen forbid our Lord the King
Should fo with ciuill and vnauiil Armes
Be ruflf'd vpon: Thry thirce-noble Cousin,
Harry Bullington brooke, doth humble kiffe thy hand,
And by the Honorable Tombe he fwearres,
That thanks vpon thy Royall Grandies Bones,
And by the Royalties of both thy Bloods,
(Corrupts that fpring from one moft gracious Head)
And by the buried Hand of Washle Gaunts,
And by the Worth and Honor of himelfe,
Comprizing all that may be shrone, or fad,
His comming hither hath no further scope,
Then for his Lineall Royalties, and to begge
Infranchifement immediate on his knees:
Which on thy Royall partie grantt'd once,
His glittering Armes he will commend to Ruff,
His Barred Steedes to Stables, and his heart
To faiffull feruice of your Majesty
This fweares he, as he is a Prince, is bal,
And as I am a Gentleman, I credit him.

Rich. Northumberland lay thus: The King returnd
His Noble Cousin is right welcome hitter,
And all the number of his faire demands
Shall be accomplished without contradiction:
With all the gracious vterror thou haft,
Speake to his gentle hearing kind commends.
We doe debaue our felue(Cousin) lee we nor,
To looke to poorely, and to speake to laue:
Shall we call back Northumberland, and fend
Defiance to the Traytor, and to die?

Amm. No, good my Lord, hit's with gentile words,
Till time lend friends, and friends their helpful Swords.

Rich. Oh God, Oh God, that ere this tongue of mine,
That layd the Sentence of dread Baniishment
On yond proud man, should take it off againe
With words of founs: On that I were as great
As is my Griefe, or leiffer then my Name,
Or that I could forget what I have borne,
Or not remember what I must be now:
Swell it thou proud heart? Ile giue thee scope to beat,
Since foules have scope to beat both thee and me.

Amm. Northumberland, comes backe from Bullington brooke.

Rich. What muft the King doe now? muft he submit?
The King fhall doe it: Muft he he depo'd?
The King fhall be contented: Muft he lookee
The Name of King or Gods Name let it goe.
Let me giue my jewels for a fall of Beales,
My glorious Pallace,for a Hemitage,
My gay Apparell, for an Aines-mans Gowne,
My figurn'd Goblets, for a Difh of Wood,
My Scepter, for a Paimers walking Staffe,
The Life and Death of Richard the Second.

Scena Quarta.

Enter the Queen, and two Ladies.

Q. What sport shall we devise here in this Garden, To drive away the heaust thought of Care?

L. Madame, wee'le play at Bowles.

Q. Twill make me thinke the Worldis full of Rubs, And that my fortune runnes against the Byes.

L. Madame, wee'le Dance.

Q. My Legges can keepe no measure in Delight, When my poor Heart no measure keeps in Grief. Therefore no Dancing (Girls) some other sport.

L. Madame, wee'le tell Tales.

Q. Of Sorow, or of Grief?

L. Of eyther, Madame.

Q. Of neyther, Girls.

For if of Joy, being alotegeth wanting, It don't remember me the more of Sorow : Or if of Grief, being alotegeth had, It adds more Sorow to my want of Joy : For what I haue, I need not to repeat; And what I want, it booteth not to complaine.

L. Madame, Ile sing.

Q. Tis well that thou haft saufe : But thou shoul'le plaise me better, wouldst thou weepe.

L. I could weepe, Madame, would it doe you good.

Q. And I could sing, would weeping doe me good, And never borrow any Trye of thee.

Enter a Gardener, and two Servants.

But sty, here comes the Gardeners,
Let's flep into the shadow of their Trees.
My wretchedselfe, into a Rowe of Dines,
They're talkes of State: for every one doth fo,
Against a Change: Woe is fore-runne with Woe,
Gard. God binde thou vp yonder danging Apricocks,
Which like vntruly Children, make their Syne
Souppe with oppreßion of their prodigall weight:
Guie some soppornance to the bending twigges.
Goe thou, and like an Executioner
Cut off the heads of too tall growing sprays,
That looke too loftie in our Common-wealth:
All must be euen, in our Government.
You thus impol'd, you will goe root away
The noylike Weeds, that without profitt sucke
The Soyles fertillite from wholefome flowers.

Ser. Why should we, in the compasse of a Pale,
Keep Law and Forne, and due Proportion,
Shewing as in a Modell our irme Effure?
When our Sea-walled Garden, the whole Land,
Is full of Weeds, her fairest Flowers choak vp,
Her Fruit-trees all vnprouid, her Hedges ruin'd,
Her Knots disorder'd, and her wholefome Heartes
Swarming with Caterpillers.

Gard. Hold thy peace.
He that hath suffer'd this disorder'd Spring,
Hath now him selfe met with the Fall of Leaue.
The Weeds that his broad-spreaing Leaues did fuster,
That seem'd' in eating him, to hold him vp,
Are pull'd vp, Root and all, by Bulstrode.
I mean, the Earl of Wiltshire, Bulstrode, Greene.

Flourish. Exit.
Now bag, freely speake thy minde,
What thou dost knowe of Noble Glousters death:
Who wrought it with the King, and who perform'd
The bloody Office of his Tyrannicall end.

Bag. Then let before my face, the Lord Aumerle.
Bul. Cofin, stand forth, and looke upon that man.
Bag. My Lord Aumerle, I know your daring tongue
Scoons to vnsay, what it hath once deliver'd.
In that deadtime, when Glousters death was plotted,
I heard you say, Is not my name of length,
That reacheth from the restfull English Court.
As fast as Cullis, to your Vlykes head,
Amongst much other tales, that very time,
I heard you say, that you had rather refuse
The offer of an hundred thousand Crownes,
Then Bullogbrokes returne to England; adding withall,
How blest this Land would be in this your Cofins death.

Anm. Princes and Noble Lords:
What answer shall I make to this base man?
Shall I too much dis Honor my face Stares,
On equall terms to give him chaggiment?
Either I must, or have mine honor hoyl'd
To be betrayd, be it by such a sinister.

There is my Gage, the manfull Scale of death
That markes thee out for Hell. Thou lyest.
And will maintaine what thou hast said, is false,
I thy heart blood, though being all too base
To sans the temple of my Knightly Lord.

Bul. Bagges to beare, thou shalt not take it vp.

Anm. Excepting one, I would he the belt
In all this presence, that hath mould me too.
First, that thy valor that thy fame shew,
That is my Gige. Anuere, in Gage to shone:
By that bare Samne, that shewes me where thou stand'st,
I heard thee say (and wafting then speakest it)
That thou wert caitof Noble Glousters death.
If thou dene it, twenty times thou lyest,
And I will turne thy faithfull to thy hart,
Where it was forg'd with my Rapiers point.

Anm. Thou darst not (Courage) line to fee the day.
Fitz. Now by my booke. I would it were this hour.
Anm. I am water thou art damn'd to h. If for this.
Fitz. Anuere, thou lyest; this Honor is a true
In this Apelles, as thou art all enuio.
And that thou art so, there I throw my Gage
To praue it on thee, to th'extreme point
Of mortal breathing. Seize it, if thou darst.

Anm. And if I do not, may my hands rott off,
And never brandish more reueng'full Steele.
Oner the glittering Glimes of my Fue.
Surrey. My Lord Fitz-water.

I do renounce well, the very time
Anuere, and you did talk.
Fitz. My Lord,
'Tis very true: You were in presence then,
And you can winneffe with me, this is true.

Surrey. As true, by heauen,
As Heaven it selfe is true.
Fitz. Surrey, thou lyest.

Surrey. D honourable Brey.
That Lyce, shall lie to heauy on my Sword,
That it shall render Vengeance, and Reuenge,
Till thou the Lyce-guer, and that Lyce, doe lyce
In earth as quiet, as thy Fathers Sould.
In profe whereof, there is mine Honors powne,
Engage it to the Triall, if thou darst.
The Life and Death of Richard the Second.
The Life and Death of Richard the Second.

Richard. I pr'yse, no; for I wot nothing better.

Therefore no, for I entreat you to hear me.

Now, mark me how I wait under my seat.

I give this heretic Weight from off my head,
And this Violent Scepter from my hand;
The pride of Kingly sway from out my heart,
With mine own Teares with away my Balmes,
With mine own Hands to away my Crosses.
With mine own Tongue to deny my Sacrament,
With mine own Breath to refuse all daturas Oaths;
All Forfeiture and Malefice I do forswear:
My Manors, Rents, Revenues, I forgo;
My Acts, Decrees, and Statutes I denie.

God pardon all Oaths that are broke to me,
God keep all those voices unbreake to thee.
Make me, that nothing hurt, with nothing grieve'd,
And thou with all pleasure that hast all removed:
Long may I live in Richards State to sit,
And Doone Tyr Richard in an Earthise State.

God save King Henry, vni-King'd Richard, sayes,
And fent him many yeeres of Sunne-shine days.

What more remains?

North. No more: but that you read.

These Accusations, and these generous Oyntes,
Committ'd by your Person, and your followers,
Against the State, and Profite of this Land:
That by confounding them, the Soules of men may decease, that you are worthyly depos'd.

Richard. Must I doe so? and must I taunt out
My weard-up follyes? Gentle Northumberland
If thy Offences were upon Record,
Would it not shame thee, if to faire a troup
To read a Lecture of them? If thou wouldst,
There shouldst thou finde one heinous Article,
Contamyning the depoing of a King,
And cracking the strong Warrant of an Oath,
Mark'd with a Blot, damn'd in the Books of Health.

Nay, all of you, that hand and looke upon me,
Whilest that my wreathed feafe doth bare my felle,
Though some of you, with pilate, with your hands,
Shewing an outward pitty: yet you pilates
Hau'e here delin'd me to my owne Cradle,
All Water cannot wash away your foune.

North. My Lord dispatch, read o're these Articles.

Richard. More Eyes are fall of Teares, I cannot see,
And yet falt—Water blindez them not fo much,
But they can see a Fort of Traitors here.

Nay, if I turne mine Eyes upon my felle,
I finde my felle a Traitor with the rest.
For I have gien here my Soules content,
To deuide the pompous Body of a King;
Made Glorie bale, a Soereainglie, a Slaue;
Prowe Malefiek, a Subiect; Slaue, a Pefant.

North. My Lord.

Richard. No Lord of thine, thou haught-infurling man;
No, nor no mans Lord; I have no Name, no Title;
No, that Name was given me at the Font,
But its vliart: slack the heaut day,
That I have none to manie for my owne out,
And know not now, what Name to call my felle,
Oh, that I were a Mockerie, King of Snares,
Standing before the Sunne of Beuinebrookes,
To stelz my felle away in Water-drops.
Good King, great King, and yet not greatly good,
And if my word be Starling yet in England,
Let it command a Mirror thither bright.
The Life and Death of Richard the Second.

What ever I shall happen to deuise.
I see your Browes are full of Diſcentent,
Your Heart of Sorow, and your Eyes of Teares.
Come home with me to Supper, He lay a Plot
Shall they vs a merry day.

Exeunt.

Enter Queen, and Ladies.

Qu. This way the King will come: this is the way
To Lulian Cafar: ill-erected Tower:
To whose Wilt Boſome, my condemn'd Lord
Is doom'd a Prisoner, by proud Bullyingbrooke.
Here let vs relitate this rebellious Earth
But any relitius for her true Kings Queene.
Enter Richard, and Guard.

Rich. Joyne not with griefe, faire Woman, do not so,
To make my end too sudden: faire good Soule,
To thinke our former State a happy Dreame,
From which a walk'd, the truth of what we are,
Shewes vs but this. I am sworne Brothers (Sweet)
To grie Neceffite; and here and I
Will keepe a League till Death. High thee to France,
And Clofther thee in some Religious House:
Our holy liues must winne a new Worlds Crowne,
Which our prophane hours here have fricken done.

Qu. What, is my Richard both in shape and minde
Transform'd, and weaken'd? Harth Bullyingbrooke
Depot thine Intellè? hath he beene in thy Heart?
The Lyon dying,shrou'd forth his Paw,
And wounds the Earth,if nothing elfe, with rage
To be o're-pow'd: and wilt thou, Pupil-like,
Take thy Correction mildly, kiffe the Rodde,
And fave me on Rage with base Humilitie.
Which art a Lyon, and a King of Beasts?
Rich. A King of Beasts indeed: if aught but Beasts,
I had beene still a happy King of Men.

Good(thetime Queene) prepare thee hence for France:
Think of my death-bed, my laft living leue,
In Winters tealous Nights for the fire.
With good old folks, and let them tell thee Tales
Of woefull Ages, long agoe betide:
And ere thou bid good-night, to quit their griefe,
Tell thou the lamentable fall of me,
And tend the hearers weeping to their Beds:
For why? the fenceliefe fands will sympathize
The heauie accent of thy mourning Tongue,
And in compaffion, wepe the fire out:
And done will moue in after, some coale-black,
For the deposing of a rightfull King.

Enter Northumberland.

North. My Lord, the mind of Bullyingbrooke is chang'd.

You must to Pomfret, no into the Tower.
And Madame, there is order taie for you:
With all swift speed, you must a way to France,
Rich. Northumberland, thou Ladder wherewithall
The mounting Bullyingbrooke affends my Throne,
The time shall not be many hours of age,
More then it is, ere foule finne, gathering head,
Shall breake into corruption, thou fhall thinke,
Though he divide the Realeme, and glue thee halfe,
It is too little, helping him to all:
He fhall thinke, that thou which know'rt the way
To plant vertuefull Kings, wil know againe,
Being ne'er fo little wrapt another way,
To pluck him headlong from the vurped Throne,
The Loke of wicked friends converts to Fear;
That Fear, to Hate; and Hate turns one, or both,
To worthie Danger, and defended Death,
North. My guilt: be on my Head, and there an end:
Take leave, and part, for you must part forthwith.
Rich. Doubly diuorce'd? (bad men) ye violate
A two-fold Marriage: 'twixt my Crowne, and me,
And then betwixt me, and my married Wife.
Let me vn-kiffe the Oath 'twixt thee, and me;
And yet not fo, for with a Kiffe twas made.
Part vs, Northumberland: I towards the North,
Where flivering Cold, and Sickneffe plints the Clyne:
My Queene to France: from whence, let forth in pome,
She came adorned, like forcer May;
Sent back like Hollowmas, or short't of day.

Qu. And must we be diuided? must we part ?
Rich. I hand from hand (my Loue) and heart fro heart,
Qu. Banfifs vs both, and send the King with me.
North. That were some Loue, but little Policy,
Qu. Then whither he goes, thither let me goe.
Rich. So two together weeping make one Woe.
Wepe thou for me in France:我心里 are heere;
Better fare off, then nere be we the neter.
Goe, count thy Way with Sighes; I mine with Greyes.

Qu. So longeft Way shall have the longeft Moanes.
Rich. Twice for one flep I goe; they Way being short,
And pece the Way out with a heauie heart.
Come, come, in weeping Sorow let's be brieve,
Since wedding it, there is fuch length in Griefe:
One Kiffe shall hop our mouthes, and dumbely part;
Thus gue me mine, and thus take thy heart.
Qu. Give me mine owne againe, twere no good part,
To take on me to keep, and kill thy heart.
So, now I have mine owne again, be gone,
That I may trie to kill it with a groane.
Rich. We make Woe wanton with this fond delay:
Once more a dew; the reft, let Sorow lay.

Exeunt.

Scena Secunda.

Enter York, and his Duchefse.

Duch. My Lord, you told me you would tell the reft,
When weeping made you breake the flory off,
Of our two Cousins comming into London.
York. Where did I leue ?

Duch. At that fad Boppe, my Lord,
Where rude mif-gouern'd hands, from Windowes tops,
Threw durt and rubbifh on King Richards head.

York. Thou
The Life and Death of Richard the Second.

Tork. Then, as I said, the Duke, great Bullingbrooke, Mounted upon a horse and senior Steed, Which his aspiring Rider seem'd to know, With flow, but slaty pace, kept on his course: While all tongues cried, God save thee Bullingbrooke. You would have thought the very windowes ipake, So many greedy looks of young and old, Through Cafements darted their defining eyes Upon his vishage: and that all the walls, With painted Imagery had stain at once, Iles & prefere thee, welcom Bullingbrooke. Whil't he, from one fide to the other turning, Bare-headed, lower then his proud Steeds necke, Befpake them thus: I thank you Countrimen: And heus still doing, thus he paft along.

Dutch. Alas poor Richard, where rides he the whilfe? Tork. As in a Theater, the eyes of men After a well grace'd After leaves the Stage, Are idly bent on him that enters next, Thinking his prattice to be tedious: Even fo, or with much more contempt, mens eyes Did fcoole on Richard: no man cries, God faue him: No joyfull tongue gauz him his welcome home, But durt was thowne upon his Sacred head, Which with fuch gentle farrow he fhouke off, His face full combating with tears and fmites (The badges of his griefe and patience) That had not God (for fome strong purpofe) fhewed The hearts of men, they muff perfoure haue melted, And Barbarifme it felle paitned him. But heauen hath a hand in thole events, To whose high will we bound our cafe contents. To Bullingbrooke, are we fwarne Subiects now, Whole State, and Honor, I for aye allow. Enter Aumerle.

Dut. Heere comes my Sonne Aumerle. Tor. Aumerle that was, But that is loft, for being Richards Friend, And Madam, you mutt call him Rutland now: I am in Parliament pledge for his truth, And letting fealeis to the new-made King. Dut. Weleome my Sonne: who are the Violets now, That threw the green lap of the new come Spring? Aumer. Madam, I know not. pray do not greatly care not, God knowes, I had as lief be none, a one. Tork. Well, beare you well in this new-spring of time Left you be cropt before you come to prime. What newes from Oxford? Hold thofe lufts & Triumphs? Aumer. For ought I know my Lord, they do. Tork. You will be there I know. Aumer. If God preuent not, I purpofe fo. Tor. What Seale is that that hangs without thy bosome? Yes, look'd thou pale? Let me fee the Writing. Aumer. My Lord, 'tis nothing. Tork. No manner then who sees it, I will be fatisfied, let me fee the Writing. Aumer. I do befeech your Grace to pardon me, It is a matter of small conuenience, Which for fome reafons I would not haue seene. Tork. Which for fome reafons firs, I mean to fee: I feare, I feare. Dut. What? Whofe you feare? 'Tis nothing but fome bond, that he is enter'd into For gay apparell againft the Triumph. Tork. Bound to himselfe? What doth he with a Bond That he is bound to? Wife, thou art a fool.

Boy, let me fee the Writing.

Tor. Bring me my Boots, I will into the King. Dut. Strike him Aumerle. Poor boy, what amaz'd.' Hence Villaine, neuer more come in my right. Tor. Gie my Boots, I say. Dut. Why Yorker, what wilt thou do? Wilt thou not hide the Trefpafe of thine owne? Have we more Sonne? Or are we like to haine? Is not my teening date drunke vp with time? And wilt thou now make my faire Sonne from mine Age, And to me of a happy Mothers name? Is he not like thee? Is he not shine owne? Tor. Thou fond mad woman: Wilt thou conceale this dark Conspairy? A dozen of them here haue tane the Sacrament, And interchangeably set downe their hands To kill the King at Oxford. Dut. He shall be none:

Weel keep him here: then what is that to him? Tor. Away fond woman: were bee twenty times my Son, I would appeach him. Dut. Hadst thou grow'd for him as I haue done, Thou wouldeft be more phiftfall: But now I know thy minde, thou doft fulifle That I haue bene dillydall to thy bed, And that he is a Bailard, not thy Sonne? Sweet Yorker, sweet husband, be not of that minde: He is as like thee, as a man may bee, Not like to me, nor any of my Kin, And yet I love him.

Tork. Make way, vndly Woman. Exit Dut. After Aumerle. Mount thee upon his horror, Spreue poft, and get before him to the King, And begge thy pardon, ere he do accufe thee, Ile not be long behind: though I be old, I doubt not but to ride as fast as Yorker: And never will I rate vp from the ground, Till Bullingbrooke haue pardon'd thee: Away be gone. Exit

Scena Tertia.

Enter Bullingbrooke, Perse, and other Lords.

Edw. Can no man tell of my vnfruite Sonne? 'Tis full three months once, I did fee him laft. If any plague hang out vs, 'tis he, I would to heaven (my Lords) he might be found: Enquire at London, amongst the Taurernes: For
The Life and Death of Richard the Second.

For thee (the)v be daily doth frequent,
With unexercised bank Companions,
Even such (they say) as stand in narrow lanes,
And rob our Watch, and beate our passengers,
Which he, young wanton, and effeminate Boy
Sits on the point of Honour, to support
So dissolute a crew.

Per. My Lord, some two days since I saw the Prince,
And told him of these Triumphs held at Oxford.
Bul. And what said the Gallant?
Per. His answere was: he would unto the States,
And from the common creature pluck a Gloue
And wear it as a favour, and with that
He would vanquish the rebell Challenge
But, as dissemble at a deep rate, yet through both,
I see some sparkes of better hope; which elder dayes
May happily bring forth. But who comes here?
Enter Anon. Israel,
Anon. Where is the King?
Bul. What means our Cofin, that hee goes
And looks so wildly?

Anon. God save your Grace, I do before your Maiestie
To have some conference with your Grace alone.
Bul. Withdraw your feltes, and leave us here alone:
What is the matter with our Cofin now?

Anon. For ever may my kneeis grow to the earth,
My tongue clese to my rooke within my mouth,
Vnlefle a Pardon, ere I rise, or speake.
Bul. Intended, or committed was this fault?
If on the first, how heennent ere it bee,
To win thy after love, I pardon thee.

Anon. Then give me leave, that I may turne the key,
That no man enter, till my tale me done.
Bul. Have thine desire. Turk within.
Tor. My Liege beware, looke to thy selfe,
Thou haft a Traitor in thy presence there.
Bul. Villaine, Ile make thee fast.

Anon. Stay thy reuengefull hand, thou haist no caufe to fear.

Tok. Open the doore, secure foole-hardy King:
Shall I for loue speake treason to thy face?
Open the doore, or I will breake it open.
Enter Turk.

Bul. What is the matter (Vnkle) speak, recover breath,
Tell us how neere is danger,
That we may arme vs to encounter it.

Tor. Peruse this writing heere, and thou shalt know
The reason that my hafts forbids me from.

Anon. Remember as thou read it, thy promise past:
I do repent me, methinks not my name there,
My heart is not confederate with my hand.

Tor. It was (Villaine) ere thine hand did let it downe.
I tore it from the Traitors bosome, King.
Fear, and not loue, begers his penitence;
Forget to pity him, lest thy pity prowe
A Serfent, that will flinge thee to the heart.

Bul. Oh heinous, strong, and bold Conspiracie,
O loyal Father of a treacherous Sonne:
Thus should we frame, through muddie passages
Hath had his current, and defied himselfe.
Thy overflow of good, convertes to bad,
And thy abundant goodnesse shall excute
This deadly blot, in thy digreffing sonne.

Torke. So shall my Vertue be his Vices bawd,
And he shall spend mine Honour, with his Shame;

As shrill, shrill, Soones, their scrapings Fathers Gold,
Mines honor lustes, when his diffhonor dies,
Or my shand in his life, in his diffhonor lies:
Thou killst me in his life, giving him breath,
The Traitor lustes, the true man's part to death.

Dut. What has (my Liege) for heavens sake let me in,
But, What shrill, voice'd Suppliant, makes this eager cry?

Bul. A woman, and thine Aunt (great King) tis I.
Speake with rite, pitty me, open the doore,
A Begger begs, that neuer begg'd before.
Bul. Our Scene is alter'd from a serious thing,
And now change's to the Begger, and the King.
My dangerous Cofin, let your Mother in,
I know he's come, to pray for your foule.

Torke. If thou do pardon, who soever pray,
More names for this forgueneffe, prosper may.
This felter'd loynes cut off, the refl rests found,
This let alone, will all the rest confound.
Enter Dutcheffe.

Dut. O King, beleue not this hard-hearted man,
Loure, louing not it selfe, none other can.
Tor. Thou frantick woman, how dost thou make here,
Shall say old duggers, once more a Traitor rage?
Bul. Sweet Yorke be patient, hear me gentle Liege.
Dut. Rife vp good Aunt.

Dut. Not yet, I thee beleech.
For ever will I kneele upon my knees,
And never fee day, that the happy sees,
Till thou guls joy: until thou bid me joy.
By pardoning Rutland, my trauagling Boy.

Anon. Vnto my mother prayers, I send my knee.

Torke. A gaing them both, my true joyes bended be.

Dut. Pledges he in earnest? Looke upon his Face,
His eyes do drop no teares: his prayers are left:
His words come from his mouth, ours from our brei.
He prayes but faintly, and would be done.
We pray with heart, and tongue, and all beside:
His weary joyes would gladly rife, I know.
Our knees shall kneele, till to the ground they grow:
His prayers are full of false hypocrisie,
Our prayers of true zeal, and deeps integritie:
Our prayers do out-pray his, then let them haue
That mercy, which true prayers ought to haue:

Bul. Good Aunt stand vp.

Dut. Nay, do not say stand vp.
But Pardon me, and afterwar'd stand vp.
And if I were thy Nurse, thy tongue to teach,
Pardon should be the first word of thy speach.
I never long'd to haue a word till now.
Say Pardon (King), let pity teach thee how.
The word is there: but soe short as sweet
No word like Pardon, for Kings mouth's to meet.

Torke. Speake it in French (King) say: Pardon me say.
Dut. Doft thou teach pardon, Pardon to deffrey?
Ah my fower husband, my hard-hearted Lord,
That let's the word is false, against the word.
Speak Pardons as the current in our Land,
The changing Frenchmen, we do not understand:
Thine eye's begin to speake, let thy tongue speech,
Or in thy pittious heart, plant thou chine care,
That hearing how our plaines and prayers do please.
Pity may move thee, Pardon to releafe.

Bul. Good Aunt stand vp.

Dut. I do not sue to stand.
Pardon is all the fuite I have in hand.

V. iii. 6—130

365
The Life and Death of Richard the Second.

Bul. I pardon him, as heaven shall pardon me.

Dor. O happy vantage of a kneeling knee!
Yet am I sick for fear: Speake it againe,
Twice sayeing Pardon, doth not pardon suaine,
But makes one pardon strong.

Bul. I pardon him with all my hart.

Dor. A God on earth thou art.

Bul. But for our truely brother-in-Law, the Abbot,
With all the rest of that conforted crew,
Destruction straights shall dogge them at the heles:
Good Vnckle helpe to order general powers.

To Oxford, or where ere these Traitors are:
They shall not live within this world I sweare,
But I will have them, if I once know where.
Vnckle farewell, and Cosin adieu:
Your mother well hath praid, and proye you true.

Dor. Come my old fien, I pray heauen make thee new.

Enter Exton and Servants.

Exeunt.

Scena Quarta.

Enter Richard.

Rich. I have bin studding, how to compare
This Prision where I lie, into the World:
And for because the world is populous,
And heere is not a Creature, but my felfe,
I cannot do it: yet I am hammer' out.
My Braine, He proue the Female to my Soule,
My Soule, the Father: and these two begot
A generation of still breeding Thoughts:
And these same Thoughts, people this Little World
In humors, like the people of this world,
For no thought is contented. The better fort,
As thoughts of things Divine, are intermixt
With frivules, and do set the Faith it selfe
Against the Faith; thus Come little ones: & then again,
It is as hard to come, as for a Camell
To thrad the pollerne of a Needles eye:
Thoughts tending to Ambition, they do plot
Vulke wonders: how these vaine weakes make.
May seare a passage through the Flinty ribbes
Of this hard world, my ragged prision walls:
And for they cannot, dye in their owne pride.
Thoughts tending to Content, flatter themselves,
That they are not the fift of Fortunes slaves,
Nor shall not be the fift. Like filly Beggars,
Who sitting in the Stockes, refuse their shame
That many hate, and others must fit there;
And in this Thought, they finde a kind of ease,

Bearing their owne misfortune on the backe
Of this bare house before indur'd the like,
Thus play I in one Prision, many people,
And none contented, Sometimes am I King;
Then Treafor makes me with my felse a ligget,
And so I am. Then crushing penurie,
Perfwades me, I was better when a King:
Then am I king'd againe: and by and by,
Thynke that I am vntake by Bullingbrokes,
And stright am nothing. But what e re I am,
Mufick
Nor I am any man, but that man is
With nothing shall be pleas'd, till be be eadi
With being nothing. Muficke do I heare?

Ha, ha, keep tnme: How softe sweet Mufick e is,
When Time is broke, and no Proportion kepe?
So is it in the Muficke of mens liues:
And heere have I the daintiness of ear:
To heare time broke in a disorder'd string:
But for the Concord of my State and Time,
Had nor an eare to heare my true Time broke.
I waited Time, and now doth Time waffe me:

For now hast Time made me his numbering clocke;
My Thoughts, are minutes: and with Sighes they irre:
Their watches on intto mine eyes, the outward Watch;
Whereunto my finger, like a Dialls point,
Exerting full, in cleansing them from tears.
Now sit, the found that tels what house it is,
Are clamorous groanes, that strike upon my heart,
Which is the bell: to Sighes, and Tears, and Groanes,

Shew Minutes, Hours, and Times: that my Time
Runa postling on, in Bullingbrokes proud toy.
While I stand foolling heere, his ticke o'th Clocke,
This Muficke makes me, let it found no more,
For though it have holpe madmen to their wits,
If me it seeme, it will make wife-men mad:
Yet blicking on his heart that givest it me;
For its a signe of Love, and love to Richard,
Is a strange Brooch, in this all-hating world,

Enter Grome.

Gro. Haile Royall Prince.

Rich. Thanke: Noble Peer,
The cheesepoft of vs, is ten goasses too deere.
What art thou? And how com'st thou lither?
Where no man ever comes, but that dogge
That brings me food, to make misfortune live?

Gro. I was a proud Grome of thy Stable (King)
When thou were King whose travelling towards Yorke,
With much ado, at length have gerrten leave
To looke upon my (somtimes Royall) matters face.
O how it yerd't my heart, when I beheld
In London streets, that Coronation day,
When Bullingbrokes rode on Roane Barbary,
That horse, that thou so often haft befird,
That horse, that I so carefully haue dreft.

Rich. Rode he on Barbary? Tell me gentle Friend,
How went he under him?

Gro. So proudly, as if he had disdain'd the ground.

Rich. So proud, that Bullingbroke was on his backe;
That Iade hath ease bread from my Royall hand.
This bane hath made him proud with clapping him.
Would he not flumble? Would he not fall downe
(Since Pride must have a fall) and break the necke
Of that proud man, that did vurpe his backe?
For givennesse horse: Why do I raise on thee,
Since thou creasted to be aw'd by man
Was't borne to bear? I was not made a horse,
The Life and Death of Richard the Second.

And yet I see a burthen like an Afe, Spur-gall'd, and ty'd by learning Balleflence. Enter Keeper with a Dift. Keep. Follow, gentleman, hence we are no longer stay. Rich. If thou lose me, thy time thou lost away. Good. Whate my tongue doth, fear thy heart doth say. Exit.

Enter Exton with Servants.

Ex. How now, what means Death in this rude affair? Villaine, thine owne hand yeelds thy death's instrument, Go thou and fill another room in hell. Exton strikes him downe. That hand shall burst in, quenching fire, That stagger sicke my perishe. Exton, thy fierce hand, Hath with the Kings blood, lain'd the Kings own land. Mount, mount my fowle, thy fiate is vp on high, Whil'st my groafe flesh sinks downward, there to dye. Exton. As full of Valor, as of Royal blood, Both haue I split: Oh would the deed were good. For now the duell, that told me I did well, Sayes, that this deede is cencilled in hell. This dead King to the living King he beare, Take hence the rest, and give them buriall here. Exit.

Scena Quinta.

Flourish. Enter Bulingbrooke, Tork, with other Lords & attendants.

Bul. Kind Voule Yorke, the last newes we heare, Is that the Rebels haue confin'd with fire Our Towne of Cieeter in Gloucefter shire, But whether they be tame or faine, we heare not. Enter Northumberland.

Welcome my Lord: What is the newes? Nor. First to thy Sacred State, with all happinesse: The next newes is, I haue to London sent The heads of Salisbury, Spencer, Baines, and Kenne.

The manner of their accident may appeare At large discourses in this paper here.

But. We thank thee gentle Percy for thy pains, And to thy worth will add right worthy gaines. Enter Fitmers.

Per. Two of the greatest confeences, Two of the dangers confeined, That took at Oxford, thy dire overthrow. But. Thy pains in these matters shall not be forgot, Right Noble is thy merit, well I wot. Enter Percy and Carlile.

Per. The grand Conspirator, Abo of Westminister, With cloy of Confeience, and Cowre Melancholy, Hath yeelded vp his body to the grave: But here is Carlile, living to abide Thy Knawy doome, and tendency of his pride. But. Carlile, this is thy doome: Choose out some secret place, some secret room: More then thoy halt, and with it joy thy life: So as thou dost't in peace, dye free from guilt. For though my enemy, thou haist ever bene, High ipalke of Honor in thy haue I fteen. Enter Exton with a Coffin.

Exton. Great King, within this Coffin I present Thy buried leare. Herein all breathlesse lies The mightitf of thry greatest enemies Richard of Buredeaux, by me hither brought. But. Exton, I thank thee not, for thou haist wrought Adecide of Slaughter, with thy fathall hand, Vpon my head, and all this famous land. Ex. From your owne mouth my Lord, did I this deed. But. They love not poynson, that do poynson neede, Nor do I thee: though I did with him dead, I hate the Murthurers, love him mother ed. The guilt of confience take thou for thy labour, But neither my good word, nor Princely favoure. With Cause go wander through the shade of night, And never shew thy head by day, nor light. Lords, I proffeth my soule is full of woe, That blood should sprinkle me, to make me grow, Come mounte with me, for that I do lament, And put on fallen Blacke incontinency: He maketh a voyage to the Holy-land, To waft this blood off from my guilty hand. March sadlie after, grace my mourning here, In weeping after this untimely Beere.

with the Life and Death of HENRY Surnamed HOT-SPVRRE.

Actus Primus. Scena Prima.

Enter the King, Lord John of Lancaster, Earle of Pemberton, with others.

King.

Of shaken as we are, to want with care,
Yea, and yea, and yea, and yea.
And leading over when the time is come,
No more the thorny entrance of this soul,
Shall daub her lips with her own children blood;
No more shall trenching Warre channel her fields,
Nor bruise her flowers with the armed hooves
Of hostile paces. Tho' e fired eyes,
Which like the meteors of a troubled Heauen,
All of one Nature, of one substance breed,
D. lately meet, in the intestine shockes,
And furious cloze of civil Bache, any Shall now in mortal well-bearing ranks
March all one way, and be no more oppos'd
Against Acquaintance, Kindred, and Allies.
The edge of Warre, like an ill-shod'd knife,
No more shall cut his matter. Therefore friends,
As far as to the Sepulcher of Christ,
Where Souldier now yield'st whole bleed Crofle.
We are imprifon'd and ingag'd to fight,
For what a power of English shall we leav,
Whole arms were moulded in their Mothers wombe,
To chase the Pagans in these holy fields,
Our whole Acres walk'd tho' bleed'd fierce
Which four and twenty hundred years ago were nail'd
For our advantage on the better Crofle,
But this our purpose is a trench's month old,
And bootleth his to tell you we will go:
Therefore we meete not now. Then let me heart
Of your my gentle Cousin Westminster,
What yeal'se this with our Councell did decre,
Jo forwarding this steepe expedit.

King. My Lord: This houre was hot in question,
And many limbus of the charge set downe
But yearesth: when all at harte there came
A Post from Wales, laded with heavy News;
Whole word was, that the Noble Mortimer,
Leading the men of Herefordshire to fight,
Against the regular and wilde Gildarwav,
Was by the rude hands of that Woffown taken,
And a thousand of his people butchered.

Upon whose dead corpes there was such misrule,
Such beastly, shameless, transformation,
By tho' the Welshmen done, as may not be (Without much shame) re-told or spoken of.
King. It seems then, that the tidings of this broyle,
Brake off our business for the Holy land.

This match't with other like my gracious Lord,
Farre more serious and unwelcome News.

Come from the North, and that it did report.

On Holy-roode day, the gallant Hufluerst there,
Young Harry Percy, and braves beArchibald,
That euer-valiant and approved Scot,
At Holmeden met, where they did spend
A sad and bloody houre.
As by discharge of their Artillerie,
And shape of likely-hood the news was told;
For he that brought them, in the very houre
And pride of their contention, did take hofs;
Veseyran of the issue any way.

King. There is a deere and true industrious friend,
Sir Walter Blunt, new lighted from his Horfe,
Strain'd with the variation of each foyle,
Betwixt that Holmeden, and this Seat of ours;
And he hath brought vs smooth and welcome news,
The Earl of Douglas is disinfect,
Ten thousand bold Scots, tree and many Knights
Balk'd in their own blood did Sir Walter ice
On Holmeden Plaines. Of Prisoners, HaCbrttook
Mordake Earl of Fife, and eldeft sonne
To beat the Douglas, and the Earl of Athol,
Of Murray, Angus, and Monteh.
And is it not an honourable joye?
A gallant prize? Ha Cofin, is it not? Infaith it is.

King. A Conquest for a Prince to boast of.

King. Yes, there shall mak't me sad: & mak'me sin.

In eny, that my Lord Northumberland
Should be the Father to be blast a Sonne:
A Sonne, who is the Thence of Honours tongue;
Amongst a Groue, the very straightest Plant,
Who is sweet Fortunes Minion, and her Pride:
Whil't by looking on the praise of him,
See Royd and Difhonour stain the brow
Of my young Harry. O that it could be proud,
That stousk Night-tripping Paery, had exchang'd
In Crofle clothe, our Children where they lay,
And call'd mine Percy, his Plantagew.
Enter Henry Prince of Wales, Sir John Falstaff, and Punctuates.

Fal. Now Hal, what time of day is it, Lad? Prince. Thou art to rat-witted with drinking of old Sacke, and unbuttoning thee after Supper, and sleeping upon Benches in the afternoon, that thou hast forgotten to demand that truly, which thou wouldst truly know. What a duell hast thou to do with the time of the day? unстве hours were cups of Sacke, and minutes Capons, and clockes the tongues of Bwodes, and dialls the Insignes of Leaping-houses, and the bleffed Sunne himselfe a faire hot Wench in Flame-colourd Tartaffa; I fea no reafon, why thou shouldest bee so frivolous, to demand the time of the day.

Fal. Indeed ye come neere me now Hal, for we that take Purdes go by the Moone and Tenent Stares, and not by Placethere, that wanting Knight to faire. And I prythee sweet Wagge, when thou art King, as God faue thy Grace, Maiely I shoulde say, for Grace thou wilt have none.

Prim. What none?

Fal. No, not so much as will serue to be Prologue to an Eggge and Butter.

Prim. Well, how then? Come roundly, roundly.

Fal. Marry, then sweet Wagge, when thou art King, let not vs that are Squares of the Nightes bodie, bee call’d Theeues of the Diues beautie. Let vs be Diuines Forrefters, Gentlemen of the Shade, Minions of the Moone; and let men say, we be men of good Government, being governed as the Sea is, by our noble and chaffy Mistres the Moone, under whose countenance we feate.

Prim. Thou sayst well, and it holds weltoo for the fortune of vs that are the Moones men, doeth ebebe and fluf the like the Sea, being governed as the Sea is, by the Moone: as for proofe. Now a Purde of Gold most absolutely snarch’d on Monday night, and most diſfolutely spent on Tuesday morning; got with sweate, Lay by: and spent with crying, Bring in now, in low an ebebe as the foot of the Ladder, and by and by as high a frow as the rudge of the Sallows.

Ed. Thoufay’t true Lad: and is not my Hauflfe of the Tauerne a moff sweet Wench?

Prim. As is the hony, my old Lad of the Coble: and is not a Buffe leark a moff sweet rote of the morn?

Ed. How now, how now mad Wagge? What in thy quips and thy quiddities? What a plague have I to doe with a Buffe le Kun?

Prim. Why, what a peaxe have I to doe with my Hofteffe of the Tauerne?

Ed. Well, thou haft call’d her to a reckning many a time and oft.

Prim. Did I ever call for thee to pay thy part?

Ed. No, he giue thee thy due, thou haft paid all there.

Prim. Yes and elsewhere, I lare as my Come would ftrech, and where it would not, I haue vs’d my credt.

Ed. Yes, and vs’d it, that were it there apparent, that thou art Heere apparent. But I prythee sweet Wag, shall there be Gallowes standing in England when thou art King? and resolution thus fobbed as it is, with the ruſtile burbe of old Father Antecke the Law? Doe not thou when thou art a King hang a Theefe.

Prim. No, thou shalt.

Fal. Shall I? O rater Ibe a brave Judge.

Prim. Thou ingrett talls already. I mean, thou shalt haue the hanging of the Iheues, and so become a rare Hangman.

Ed. Well Hal, well: and in some fort it jumps with my humour, as well as waiting in the Court, I can tell you.

Prim. For obtaining of luftes?

Ed. Yea, for obtaining of luftes, whereof the Hangman hath no lean Warbodre. I am as Melancholly as a Gyb-Cat or a lugg’d Beare.

Prim. Or an old Lyon, or a Louers Lute.

Ed. Yea, or the Drone of a Lincolnshire Bagpipe.

Prim. What sayst thou to a Hare, or the Melancholly of Moore Ditch?

Ed. Thou haft the moft vanitye vrayes, and art indeed the moft comparatise rascallef sweet young Prince. But Hal, I prythee trouble me no more with vany, I vould thou and I knew, where a Commodity of good names were to be bought, an old Lord of the Counsellor rate the other day in the street about you for, but I mark’d him not, and yet he talk’d very wisely, but I regarded him not, and yet he talk’d very wisely, in the street too.

Prim. Thou didst well: for no man regards it.

Fal. O, thou hast damnable iteration, and are indeeable to corrupt a Saint. Thon haft done much harme vnto me Hal, God forgive thee for it. Before I knew thee Hal, I knew nothing: and now I am (if a man had of prate truly) told better then one of the wicked. I must give ovs, this life, and I will give it ouer: and I do not. I am a Villaine, He be damned for ever a Kings Sonne in Christendome.

Prim. Where shall we take a purse to morrow, lacke?

Fal. Where thou wilt Lad, be make one: and I do not, call me Villaine, and beffe me.

Prim. I fee a good amendement of life in thee: From Praying, to Purde-taking.

Fal. Why, hal, is my Vocation Hal: 'Tis no fln for a man to labour in his Vocation.

Purde. Now shal we wee know if Gads hill haue bese for a Watch. O, if men were to be faued by merit, what hole in Hell were hot enough for him? This is the most omni-potent Villaine, that ever dyed, Stand, to a true man.

Ed. Good morrow Ned.
Prim. Sir John stands to his word, the deal shall have his bargain, for he was never yet a Breach of Promises:
He will give the deal his due.
Pye. Then art thou damn’d for keeping thy word with the dell.
Prim. Else he had damn’d for counteracting the dell.
Pye. But my Lord, my Lord, to morrow morning, by four a clocke, there will be Pilgrimes going to Canterbury with rich Offerings, and Traders riding to London with fat Purces. I have wizards for you all; you have bouses for your selues: Gods-hill lies to night in Rochester, I have bespake Supper to morrow in Eastcheape; we may doct it as weather asleep: if you will go, I will thuffe your Purces full of Crownes: if you will not, tarry at home and be hang’d.
Fal. Heare ye Yedward, I tarry at home and go not, I hang you for going.
Pye. You will chop, Fal. Ed. wilt thou make one?
Ed. There’s neither honestye, manhood, nor good fel-lowhip in thee, nor thou canst not of the blood-royall, if thou darst not stand for ten shillings.
Prim. Well then, once in my dayes Ibe a mad-cap.
Ed. Why, that’s well said.
Prim. Well, come what will, I tarry at home.
Fal. Ile be a Trainer then, when thou art King.
Prim. I care not.
Pye. Sir John, I pray thee leave the Prince & me alone, I will lay him downe such reason for this adventure, that he shall go.
Fal. Well, methinkes thou hast the Spirit of persuasion; and he the eares of provoking, that thou speakest, may move; and what he heares may be beleaued, that the true Prince,may for recreation sake, preue a falsie thee; for the poore absaives of the time, want countenance. Farewel, you shall finde me in Eastcheape.

Scena Tertia.

Enter the King, Northumberland, Worscester, Humberre, Sir Walter Blount, and others.

King. My blood hath beene too cold and temperate, Vnap to thire at thee indignities, And you have found me; for accordingly, You tread upon my patience: But be sure, I will from henceforth rather be my Selfe, Mighty, and to be feared, than my condition Which hath beene smooth as Oyle, soft as yong Downe, And therefore loth that Tittle of respect, Which the proud foulne seene, but to the proud, How! Our house (my Soveraigne Liege) little defences The scourge of greatnesse to be vended on, And that same greatnesse too, which our owne hands Have helped to make so portly.

Nor. My Lord.

King. Worscester gethe thee gone: for I do see Danger and disobedience in thine eye.

Off. your presence is too bold and peremptory, And Majestie might never yet endure The moody Frontier of a furious brow,
You have good leave to leave vs, When we need Your wee and counsell, we shall fend for you,
You were abowt to speake.

Nor. Yes, my good Lord.

Those Prisoners in your Highness's demand,
Which Harry Percy here at Holmedon tooke,
Were (as he saies) not with such strength denied
As was delivered to your Maiesty:
Who either through envy, or prisifion,
Was guilty of this crime, and not my Sonne.

Hot. My Liege, I did deny no Prisoners.
But, remember when the fight was done,
When I was dry with Rage, and extreme Toyle,
Bazarethle, and Fear, leaning upon my Sword.
Came thence a certain Lord, near and trimly drest.
Fresh as a Brave-groom, and his Chin new reipt, Shaw'd like a fullblooded Lyke at Harret's home.
He was perfumed to a Mulliner,
And twixt his finger and his Thumbe, he held
A Pousette box, which euer and anon
He gately his Nose, and took't away againe:
Who thereon with angry, where she came there,
Tooke it in Sneeze. And still he stood and talk'd.
And as the Soildiers bore dead bodies by,
He call'd them stooke knowes, Vanmanely,
To bringing a fluently unhandsome Coarfe
Bestows the Wind, and his Nobility.
With many Holiday and Lady travisse.

He questioned me: Among the rest, demanded
My Prisoners, in your Maiesties behalf.
I then, all smiling, with my wounds being cold,
(Tobe so prisseted with a Poppingay)
Out of my Grecie, and my Impatiencie, Answer'd (negligently) I know not what,
He should, or should not: For he made me mad,
To see thfe franticke to briske, and finelio sweet,
And talk so like a Dancing-Wenchwoman.
Of Guns & Drums, and Wounds: God save the mark;
And telling me, the Sovereign thing on earth
Was Parnassick, for an onward bruise:
And that it was great pitty, so it was,
That villainous Salt-peter should be digg'd.
Out of the Bowels of the hordus Earth,
Which many a good Tall fellow had destroy'd
So Cordially. And but for these vile Gunnes,
He would himselue have bene a Soildier,
The bold, unspoyled, and Not a Lord)
Made me to answer indirecly (as I said).
And I beseech you, let not this report
Come currant for an Accusation,
Betwixt my Love, and your high Maiestie.

Blunt. The circumstance considered, good my Lord,
What ever Harry Percy then had saie,
To such a person, and in such a place,
At such a time, with all the ret retold,
May reasonably dye, and never rife.
To do him wrong, or any way impeach
What then he said, to be vaine it now.
King. Why yet doth deny his Prisoners,
But with Profumo and Exception,
That we at our owne charge, shall ransom straight
His Brother-in-law, the foolish Martimer,
Who in my soule hath wilfully betray
The lives of thofe, that he did ende to right,
Against the great Magicians, dam'd & Glendower:
Whose daughter (as we hear) the Earle of March
Hath lately married. Shall we Coffer them,
Emptied, to redeem a Traitor home?
Shall we buy Treacon, and indend with Feares,
When they have loit and torcetct themselves.

No: on the barren Mountain let him stexe.
For I shall never hold that man my Friend;
Whole tongue shall aske me for one petty coil.
Torransome home resolved Martimer.

Hot. Resulted (Left)?:
He never did fall off, my Sovereigne Liege,
But by the chance of Warre to prove that true.
Needs no more but one tongue. For all those Wounds,
Those mouthed Wounds, which violently he tooke,
When on the gentle Severnes fidege banke,
In Singe Opposition hand to hand,
He did confound the best part of his house.
In changing hardiment with great Glendower:
Three times they breathed, and three times did they drink.
Upon agreement, of twelft Seuernes blood;
Who then affrighted with their bloody lookes,
Ran fearfullly among the trembling Reeds,
And hid his visage-head in the hollow banke,
Blood-drimned with these Valiant Combattants.
Never did base and rotten Policy
Colour her working, with such deadly wounds;
Nor never could the noble Martimer
Receive so many, and all willing-
Then let him not be flamin'd with Reolu,
King. Thou dost bely him Percy, thou dost bely him.
He never did encounter with Glendower:
Tell thee, he durst as well haste met the diuell alone,
As Owen Glendower for an enemy.
As thou not abash'd but Surrah, henceforth
Let me not hear you speake of Martimer,
Send me your Prisoners with the speedest means,
Or you shall hear in such a kinde from me
As will displease thee. My Lord Northumberland,
We Licence your departure with your lonne.
Send us your Prisoners, or you'll hear of it.

Exe King.
Hot. And if the dull come and roste for them
I will not fend them. I will offer straight
And tell him so: for I will eafe my heart,
Although it be with hazard of my head.
Nor what drunk with clohler stay & pause awhile,
Here comes your Vnkle.

Enter Worcester.

Hot. Speake of Martimer.?
Yes, I will speake of it. and let my soule
Want mercy, if I do not toyne with him,
In his behalf, I euey all these Vtines,
And fixed my deere blood drop by drop I' th dust,
But I will lift the downfall Martimer.
As high by Ayre, as this Vnthankfull King,
As this Ingrate and Cankred Bellifingbrooke.
Nor. Brother, the King hath made your Nephew mad.
War. Who stroke this heate vp after I was gone?
Hot. He will (fortoth) have all your Prisoners.
And when I urg'd the ransom once again
Of my Wifes Brother, then his cheque look'd pale,
And on my face he turn'd a snee of death,
Trembling eten at the name of Martimer.
War. I cannot blame him: was he not proclaim'd
By Rerward that dead in the next of blood?
Nor. He was: I heare the Proclamation,
And then it was, when the unhappy King
(Whose wrongs in vs God pardon) did set forth
Upon his Irish Expedition.
From whence he intercepted, did returne
To be depos'd, and shortly murthered.
War. And for whose death, we in the worlds wide mouth
Liuie scandaliz'd, and fouly spoken of.

Hot.
The First Part of King Henry the Fourth.

Hot. But soft! I pray you, did King Richard then Proclaime my brother Mortimer,
Heyre to the Crowne?
Nor. He did, my selfe did heare it.
Hot. Nay then I cannot blame his Cousin King,
That stepp'd him on the barren Mountains hard.
But shall it be, that you that let the Crowne
Vpon the head of this forgetfull man,
And for his sake, wore the detestfull blot
Of murthrous subornation? Shall it be,
That you a world of curses vndergo,
Being the Agents, or base second meanes,
The Ceeds, the Lackier, or the Hangman rather?
O pardon, if that I defend so low,
To draw the Line, and the Predicament
Wherein you range vnder this fiend King.
Shall it for shame, be spoken in these dyes,
Or fill vp Chronicles in time to come,
That men of your Nobility and Power,
Did gage them both in an vnuit behalfe
(As Both of you, God pardon it, haue done)
To put downe Richard, that foret loneely Rose,
And plant this Thorne, this Canker Bullingbrooke?
And shall in more shame be further spoken,
That you are foole, disordered, and shame'd off
By him, for whom these Shames ye vndergoe?
No: yet time serues, wherein you may redeeme
Your banish'd Honors, and restore your selves
Into the good Thoughts of the world againe.
Reuenge the getting and disdain'd contempt
Of this proud King, who foundations day and nght
To answer all the Debt he owes us to you,
Even with the bloody Payment of your deaths:
Therefore I say—

War. Peace Cousin, say no more.
And now I will vaclaspe Secret booke,
And to your quicke conceyng Diuisionets,
Ile reade you Matter, deep and dangerous,
As full of peril and dangerous Spirit,
As to o're-walk a Current, roaring loud
On the vnclift footing of a speare.

Hot. Nay, if in good night, or sinnen or swinnen:
Send danger from the East unto the West,
So Honor croffe it from the North to South,
And let them grapple: The blood more flurres
To rowse a Lyon, then to flat a Hare.
Nor. Imagination of some great exploit,
Drives him beyond the bounds of Patience.
Hot. By heauen, me thinks it were an ease leap,
To plucke bright Honor from the pale-fac'd Moone,
Or Drug into the bottom of the deep,
Where Falcondine line never touch the ground,
And plucke vp downright Honor by the Lockes:
So he that doth redeeme her thence, might weare
Without Co-russia, all her Dignities.
But out upon this half-fac'd Fellowship,
War. He apprehends a World of figures here,
But not the forme of what he should attend:
Good Cousin, he gue me audience for a while,
And let to me.
Hot. I try you mercy.
War. Thos sfame Noble Scottes
That are your Prisoners.
Hot. Ile keepe them all.
By heauen, he shall not have a Scot of them:
No, if a Scot would face his Soule, he shall not.
Enter a Carrier with a Lantern in his hand.

1. Car. Heigh-ho, an't be not foure by the day, Ibe hand'g. Charles masai is over the new Chimny, and yet our horse not packt. What Offler?

Of. Anon, anon.

1. Car. I prethee Tom, beste. Cuts Saddle, put a few Flockes in the point: the poore Jade is wrong in the withers, out of all cesse.

Enter another Carrier.

2. Car. Pease and Beanes are as danke here as a Dog, and this is the next way to seize poor Ladies the Botes: This horse is turned aside downe since Robin the Offler dyed.

1. Car. Poore fellow neyer joy'd since the price of oats rife, it was the death of him.

2. Car. I think this is the most villanous house in London rode for Fles: I am flung like a Tench.

1. Car. Like a Tench! There is ne the King in Christendome, could be better bit, I then have beene since the first Cocke.

2. Car. Why, you will allow vs ne're a Jourden, and then we take in your Chimny: and your Chamber-lie breeds Flesa like a Loach.

2. Car. I haue a Gammon of Bacon, and two rates of Ginger, to be delivered as far as Charing-crofe.

1. Car. The Turckies in my Panter are quite starved. What Offler? A plague on thee, hal' thou neuer an eye in thy head? Canst not heare? And were not as good a deed as drinke, to break the pate of thee, I am a very Villaine. Come and be hand'd, haft no faith in thee?

Enter Gods Hill.

The First Part of King Henry the Fourth.

And then the power of Scotland, and of Yorke
To joyn with Mortimer, Ha.

War. And fo they shall.

Hst. Infight it is excessively well aym'd.

War. And'tis no little reason bid vs speed,
To sue our heads, by raising of a Head:
For, bease our felues, as even as we can,
The King will alwayes thinke him in our debts,
And thynke, we thinke our felues unsatisfied,
Till he hath found a time to pay vs home.
And fee already, how he doth beginne
To make vs strangers to his looks of love.

Hst. He does, he does; we'll be reueng'd on him.

War. Cousin, farewell. No further go in this,
Then I by Letters shall direct your course
When time is ripe, which will be sofetainly:
Ile steele to Glendower, and-loe, Mortimer,
Where you, and Dowlas, and our powers at once,
As I will fhalion it, shall happily meece,
To bear our fortunes in our owne strong armes,
Which now we hold at much uncertainty.

Nor. Firewell good Brother, we shall thinke, I truff.

Hst. No, let the houses be flors,
Till fields, and blowes, and grones, applaud our sport.

Gad. What ho, Chamberlain?

Cham. At hand quoth Pick-purse.

Gad. That's even as faire, as at hand quoth the Chamberlain: For thou variest no more from picking of Pur-

Fees, then gluing direction, doth from labouring. Thou lay'ft the plot, how?

Cham. Good morrow Master Gads-Hill, it holds currtant that I told you yesterday. There's a Franklin in the wilde of Kent, hath brought three hundred Marke with him in Goud; I heard him tell it, is of this company last night at Supper; a kine of Auditor, one that hath abundance of charge too (God knows what) they are vp already, and call for Eggs and Butter. They will away presently.

Gad. Sirrs, if they meet not with S.Nicholas Clarks, I'll give thee this neck.

Cham. No, he none of it: I pritty keep that for the Hangman, for I know thou worshipst S.Nicholas as truly as a man of falsity may.

Gad. What call'st thou to me of the Hangman? If I hang, Ile make a fat payce of Gallowes. For, if I hang, old Sir John hangs with mee, and thou know'lt he's no Starving. Tut, there are other Troians that y' dream't not of, the which (for sport fake) are content to doe the Profession some grace that would (if matters should bee look'd into) for their own Credit fake, make all Wholes.

I am injoyed with no Foot-land-Rakers, no Long-flaite six-penny strikers, none of their mad Mustachio-purple-

Scena Secunda.

Enter Prince, Poynes, and Petr.

Poynes. Come shelter, shelter, I have remoied Falseft Horse, and he flees like a gund Vulture.

Prin. Stand close.

Enter Falseft.

Fal. Poynes, Poynes, and be hang'd Poynes.

Fal. What Poynes. Hal

Prin. He is walk'd vp to the top of the hill, He go seek him.

Fal. I am about to rob in that Theeucs company: that Falseft hath remoied my Horse, and tied him I know not where. If I tranell but four foot by the squire further a foote, I shall brake my winde. Well, I doubt not but to dye a faire death for all this; if I escape hanging for killing that Rogue, Those forworne his company hourly any time this two and twenty yere, & yet I am bewitched with the Rogues company. If the Falseft haue not given me medicines to make me losse him, He hang'd nought could not be effe: I haue drunke Medicines, Poynes, Hal, a Plague upon you both. Bardolph, Poines: he sware ere I rob a foote further. And 'were not a good a deede as to drinke, to turne True-man, and to leave thee Rogues, I am the verieft Villainet that ever chewed with a Tooth. Eight yards of unneat ground, is three foot & ten miles afoot with me: and the foxy-hearted Villaines know it well enough. A plague vpon't, when Theeucs cannot be true one to another. They Whistle. Where a plague light upon you all, Give my Horse you Rogues: give me my Horse, and be hang'd.

Prin. Peace ye fat gutters, ye eawne down, lay thine eare close to the ground, and list if thou can hear the talk of Travellers.

Fal. Have you say Leoners to lift me vp again being downe? He not beare mine owne flesh so far afoot again, for all the coine in thy Fathers Exchecuer. What a plagued meane ye to cotl me thus?

Prin. Thou lyft thou not colted, thou art uncotted.

Fal. I prehace good Prince Hal, help me to my horse, good Kings loose.

Prin. Out you Rogue, shall I be your Offere?

Fal. Go hang thy felte in thine owne heire-apparent Garnets: If I be caste, I eacch for this: and I haue not Ballads made on all, and sung to filthy tunes, let a Cup of Sacke be my poyon: when a siff is so forward, & a foote too, I hate it.

Enter Gods hill.

Gad. Stand.

Fal. So I do against my will.

Pain. O'tis our petition, I know his voyce:

Bardolfe, what neves?

Bar. Caze ye, caze ye; on with your Wizards, there's many of the Kings comming downe the hill, 'tis going to the Kings Exchecuer.

Fal. You le ye rogue, his going to the Kings Tavern.

Gad. There's enoughe to make us all.

Fal. To be hang'd.

Scena Tertia.

Prin. You are the shall front them in the narrow Lane: Ned and I, will walke lovvver, if they scape from your encounter, then they light on vs.

Peto. But how many be of them?

Gad. Some eight or ten.

Fal. Will they not rob vs?

Prin. What, a Coward Sir John Paunch?

Fal. Indeed I am not John of Gants your Grandfather, but yet no Coward, Hal.

Prin. We'll leave that to the poore.

Pau. Sirra Iacke, thy horse standes behinde the hedges, when thou need'st him, there thou shalt finde him. Farewell, and stand fast.

Fal. Noow cannot I strike him, if I should be hang'd.

Prin. Ned, where are our discourses?

Pain. Here hard by: Stand close.

Fal. Now my Master, happy man be his dose, say I: every man to his butinice.

Enter Travellers,

Trav. Come Neighbours, the boy shall lead our Horses downe the hill: We'll walke a foot a while, and eave our Legges.

Theeu. Stay.

Trav. Ielu blewes vs.

Fal. Still e with them, cut the villains throats; a wheron Caterpillars: Bacon-fed Knaves, they hate vs yours; downe with them, flecte them.

Trav. O, we are undone, both we and oues for ever.

Fal. Hang ye gret bellowed Knaves, are you undone? No ye Fat Chuffets, I would your (tice were heeze. On Bacoons on, what ye knaves? Young men must live, you are Grand lurers, are ye? We'll have vs in slaine. Here they rob them, and binde them. Enter the Prince and Poynes.

Prin. The Theeucs have bound the True-men: Now could thou and I rob the Theeucs, and gome to London, it would be argument for a Weke, Laughter for a Moneth, and a good leff for euer.

Poynes. Stand close, I hear them comming.

Enter Theeucs again.

Fal. Come my Masters, let vs share, and then to hostile before day: and the Prince and Poynes bee not two orand Cowards, there's no equity fibring. There's no more valour in that Poynezahan in a wild Ducke.

Prin. Your money.

Pain. Villaines.

As they are bearing the Prince and Poynes for upon thorns. They all run away leaving the boats behind them.

Prince. Got with much ease. Now merrily to Horse: The Theeucs are fearted, and poifled with fear so strongly, that they dare not meet each other: each takes his fellow for an Officer. Away good Ned, Falseft sweates to death, and Lords the lane earth as he walke along wont not for laughing, I should pitty him.

Enter Hooffwarre solme reading a Letter.

But for none ownes part, my Lord, I could be well contented; be there, in behalf of the love I bear your honie.
The First Part of King Henry the Fourth.

He could be contented: why is not the desert loft of the loue he bears out house. He flowes in this, he loves his owne Barre better than he loves our house. I fee some more. The purpoze you undertake is dangerous. Why that's certaine: this dangerous to take a Coiide, to sleepe, to drinke: but I tell you (my Lord foole) out of this Nestle, Danger, we plucke this Flower, Safety. The purpoze you undertake is dangerous, the friends you have naught entertaine, the time it raffed on, and your whole plot too: for the counterfeit of so great an Opponition.

Say you, say you so: I lay to you againe, you are a fillowe cowardly Hinde, and you Lye. What a lacke-braine is this? I protest, our plot is so good a plot as euer was laid; our Friend true and constant: A good Plote, good Friends, and full of expectation: An excellent plot, very good Friends. What a Trothy-lifed rogue is this? Why, my Lord of Yorke commends the plot, and the general course of the action. By this hand, if I were now by this Actall, I could braine him with his Ladies Fan. Is there not my Father, my Vockle, and my Sife, Lord Edmund Mortimer, my Lord of Torke, and Owen Glendower? Is there not butles, the Dorothy? Have I not all their letters, to meet me in Armes by the ninth of the next Month? and are they not some of them set forward already? What a Pagan it faileth is this? An Infidell. Ha, you shall see now in very sinceritie of Fear and Cold heart, will he to the King, and lay open all our proceedings. O, I could dunde my letters, and go to battle, for nothing such a drift of Cash'd Milk with to honourable in Action. Hang him, let him tell the King we are prepared. I will set towards to night.

Enter the Lady.

How now Kate, I must leve you within these two hours. La. O my good Lord, why are you thus alone? For what offence have I this fortunat woman A banished woman from my Harrat bed? Tell me (sweet Lord) what it that takes from thee Thy flowers, pleasur, and thy golden slepe? Why doth thou bend thine eyes upon the earth? And Steel so often when thou first it alone? Why haft thou lost the freth blood in thy cheeks? And given my Troubles and my rights of thee, To thine-e-y'nd gomming, and evert melancholy? To my Saint-Numbers, I by thee have wacht, And heard thee many tales of Iron Warers: Speake tewmres of manage to thy bounding Steed, Cry courage to the field. And thou haft tak'd Of Salvies and Retires; Trenches, Tents, Of Palizadoes, Frontiers, Parapets, Of Basonske, of Canon, Culterie, Of Prisoners ranforme, and of Soldiers slaine, And all the emponse of a headly fight. Thy spirit within thee hast bence so at Warre, And thus haft so bertheed thee in the sleepe, Thas beds of sweete hast flood upon thy Brow, Like bubbles in a last-difurbed Streame; And in thy face strange motions have appear'd, Such as we see when men refraine their breath On some great dissolve half. O what portent are these? Some heaine butcher hath my Lord in hand, And I must know it: else he loves me not.

Hon. What ha'sc, is Colnesse with the Packet gone? Ser. He is my Lord, an houre agoe.

Hon. Hath Butler brought those horses for the Sheriffe?
they cry hem, and bid you play it off. To conclude, I am to good a proficient in one quarter of an hour, that I can drink with any Tinker in his own Language during my life. I tell thee Ned, thou hast lost much honor, that thou wert not with me in this action; but sweet Ned, to twenten which name of Ned, I glie thee this pennyworth of Sugar, clap even now into my hand by an under Skinker, one that never spake other English in his life, theo Eight Bollings and six pence, and, thou art welcome: with this thril addition, Anon, Anon for, Score a Part of Baffard in the Hele Moon, or so. But Ned, to drive away time till Falstaff come, I prithee doe thou stand in some by-room, while I question my puny Drawer, to what end thee gave me the Sugar, and do never loose calling Francis, that his Tale to me may be nothing but, Anon: Rep aside, and he flew thee a President.

Poin. Francis.

Poin. Thou art perfect.

Poin. Francis.

Enter Drawer.

Fran. Anon, anon Sir, looke downe into the Pomgranet, Kaff.

Francis. Come hither Francis.

Fran. My Lord.

Poin. How long hast thou to serve, Francis?

Fran. Forsooth five years, and as much as to.

Poin. Francis.

Fran. Anon, anon Sir.

Poin. Five yeares: Be laddy a long Leave for the clinking of Pewter. But Francis, dareft thou be so valiant, to play the coward with thy Indenture, & shew in a faire pair of heele, and run from it?

Fran. O Lord Sir, I be sworn upon all the Books in England, it could finde in my heart.

Poin. Francis.

Fran. Anon, anon Sir.

Poin. Let me see, about Michaelmas next I shallbe.

Poin. Francis.

Fran. Anon sir, pray thou play a little, my Lord.

Poin. Nay but harke you Francis, for the Sugar thou gauest me, ’twas a penyworth, was it not?

Fran. O Lord Sir, I would it had bene two.

Poin. I will giue thee for it a thousand pound: Ask me when thou wilt, and thou shalt have it.

Poin. Francis.

Fran. Anon, anon.

Poin. Anon Francis? No Francis, but to Morrow Francis: or Francis, on Thursday: or indeed Francis when thou wilt. But Francis.

Fran. My Lord.

Fran. O Lord Sir, who do you mean?

Poin. Why then your browne Baffard is your only drinker: for booke you Francis, your white Canusa doublet will frely. In Burbasy Sir, it cannot come to so much.

Fran. What Sir?

Poin. Francis.

Poin. Away you Rogue, doth thou heare them call?

Here they both call haust, the Drawer stands amazed, not knowing which way to go.

Enter Winter.

Vis. What standst thou still, and hear’st such a calling? Lookke to the Guests within: My Lord, old Sir John with halfe a dozen more, are at the doore: shall I let them in?

Poin. Let them alone awhile, and then open the doore.

Poin. Enter Poin.

Poin. Anon, anon Sir.

Poin. Sirra, Falstaff and the rest of the Theeure, are at the doore, shall we be merry?

Poin. As merrie as Crickets my Lad. But harke yee, What cunning match haste you made with this teff of the Drawer? Come what’s the issue?

Poin. I am now of all hurnors, that bace fiswed them, felues hurnors, since the old dayses of goodman Adam, to the pupil age of this present twelue a clock at midnight, What’s a clocke Francis?

Fran. Anon, anon Sir.

Poin. That ever this Fellow should have fewer words than a Parret, and yet the fonne of a Woman, His industry is vy-fissors and downy-fissors, his eloquence the parcel of a reckoning. I am not yet of Incarctis mind, the Hotspur of the North, he that kills me some fire or seauen dozen of Scots at a Breakfast, waffles his hands, and faires to his wife; Fie upon this quiet life, I want worke. O my sweet Harry says he, how many hast thou kill’d to day? Give my Roane hous a drench (fayes bee) and anweres, some foure teen, an hour after: a triffe, a triffe. I presume call in Falstaff, I ple play Perey, and that damned Brawme shall play Dams Morton his wife, Rine, sayes the drunkeard. Call in Ribc, call in Tallow.

Enter Falstaff.

Poin. Welcome Jacke, Where halft thou beeene?

Fal. A plague of all Cowards I say, and a Vencence too, marry and Amen. Give me a cup of Sacke Boy. Ere I leade this life long, I leve fowt flockes, and trend them too. A plague of all cowards. Give me a Cup of Sacke, Roge. Is thereno Vertue extant?

Poin. Didst thou never see Titian kiffe a duff of Butter, pitifull hearted Titian that melted at the sweete Tale of the Sunne? If thou didst, then behold that compound.

Fal. You Roge, here’s a Lim in this Sacke toothere is nothing but Rogeury to be found in Villanous manyest, but a Coward is worse then a Cup of Sacke with int. A villanous Coward, go thy wayes old Jacke, die when thou wilt, if manhood, good manhood be not forgett upon the face of the eart, then am I a shotten Herring; there lies not three good men unhang’d in England, & one of them is fat, and groves old, God helpe the while, a bad word I say. I would I were a Weaver, I could fing all manner of songs. A plague of all Cowards, I say full.

Poin. How now Woelfack, what manner you?

Fal. A Kings Sonnet Iff do not beatre thee out of thy Kingdome with a dagger of Lath, and drive all thy Subiects afore thee a like of Wickle-Widde-geefe. I leve no wearis hare on my face more. You Prince of Wales?

Poin. Why you horfon round many what’s the matter?

Fal. Are you not a Coward? Anfwer me to that, and Poinet there?

Poin. Ye fatch paunch, and yee call mee Coward, Ile flab thee.

Fal. I calle thee Coward? He fice thee damned ere I call the Coward: but I would give a thousand pound I could run as fast as thou canst. You are straight enough in the shoulders, you care not who fees thy backe: Call you that that backing of your friends? a plague upon such backing: give me them that will face me. Give me a Cup of Sack, I am a Rogue if I drank to day.
The First Part of Henry the Fourth.

Prine. O Villaine, thy Lippes are scarce wis'd, since thou drinkest it falf.

A plague of all Cowards till they fay L.

Prine. What's the matter? He drinks.

Falf. What's the matter? here be four of vs, have taken a thound round this Morning.

Prine. Where is it, Jack? where is it?

Falf. Where is it? taken from vs, it is: a hundred upon poore foure of vs.

Prine. What, a hundred, man?

Falf. I am a Rogue, if I were not at halfe Sword with a dozen of them two hours together. I have scape by miracle, I am eight times thruf through the Double, foute through the Hole, my Buckler cut through and through, my Sword hack like a Hand-faw, ece! sigann. I never dealt better for once I was a man: all would not doe. A plague of all Cowards: let them fpeak; if they fpeak more or leffe then truth, they are villaines, and the fonn of darkine.

Prine. Speak for how was it?

Gad. We foure fett upon foune dozen.

Falf. Sixteene, at leaft, my Lord.

Gad. And bound them.

Pete. No, no, they were not bound.

Falf. You Rogue, they were bound, every man of them, or I am a lew elf, an Ebrew lew.

Gad. As we were fhares, fome fize or feuen freh men fett upon vs.

Falf. An unbound the reftr, and then come in the other.

Prine. What, fough't you with them all?

Falf. All? I know not what yee call all: but if I fought not with fifie of them, I am a bunch of Radifh: if there were not two or three and fitty upon poore olde Jack, then am I no two-leggd Creature.

Pon. Pray Heaven, you have not murder'd fome of them.

Falf. Nay, that's past praying for. I have pepper'd two of them: Two I am sure I have pay'd, two Rogues in Buckrom Sutes. I tell thee what, Hal, if I tell thee a Lye, fpit in my face, call me Horfe: thou knoweft my olde word: here I lay, and thus I bore my points; foure Rogues in Buckrom let drive at me.

Prine. What foure? thou fay'd it but two, even now.

Falf. Foure Hal, I told thee foure.

Pon. He fay'd foure.

Falf. Thafe foure came all at once, and mainly thruf at me: I made no more adoe, but tooke all their feven points in my Targuet, thus.

Prine. Seuen? why there were but foure, even now.

Falf. In Buckrom.

Pon. I foure, in Buckrom Sutes.

Falf. Seuen, by thefe Hills, or I am a Villaine elfe.

Prin. Preserve him, what if thee fhall have more anon.

Falf. Do not thou hear me, Hal?

Pon. I amke thee too, Jack.

Falf. Doe fo, for it is worth the lifting too: thefe nine in Buckrom, that I told thee of.

Pon. So, two more already.

Falf. Their Points being broken.

Pon. Downe fell his Horfe.

Falf. Began to give me ground: but I followed me
Prin. How now, my Lord, the Hoolette, what sayst thou to me?

Hoolette. Marry, my Lord; there is a Nobleman of the Court at door would speake with you: hee fayes, hee comes from your Father.

Prin. Give him as much as will make him a Royall man, and send him backe againe to my Mother.

Hoolette. What manner of man is hee?

Prin. An old man.

Hoolette. What doth Graiutus out of his Bed at Midnight?

Shall I give him his answer?

Prin. Prethee doe lacke.

Hoolette. Faith, and hee send him packing.

Exit.

Prince. Now Sirs: you fought fare: so did you Peto, to did you Bardol: you are Lyons too, you ramme away vs instantly: you will not touch the true Prince; no, he.

Bard. Faith, I taine when I saw others runne.

Prin. Tell mee now in earnest, how came Falstaff Sword so hacked t

Peto. Why, he hackes it with his Dagger, and said, hee would sweate truth out of England, but hee would make you beleue it was done in fight, and perfwsed vs to doe the like.

Bard. Yes and to tickle our Noses with Spear-graffe, to make them bleed, and then to belabour our garments with it, and tewe it was the blood of true men. I did that I did not that euen yeeres before, I blusht to brase his monstros devces.

Prin. O Villaine, thou stolst a Cup of Sacke eighteene yeeres agoe, and went taken with the manner, and euer since thou hast blusht extempore: thou hadst fire and sword on thy side, and yet thou ranst away: what instant hadst thou for it?

Bard. My Lord, do you fece thefe Methoes? doe you behold these Exhalations?

Prin. I do.

Bard. What thinkes you they portend?

Prin. Hot Luers, and cold Purfes.

Bard. Choler, my Lord, it rightly taken.

Enter Falstaff.

Here comes leane Lacky, here comes bare-bone. How now my sweet Creature of Joniball, how long is't agoe, Lacky, since thou faw'th thine owne Knee?

Falstaff. My owne Knee? When I was about yeerees (Hol) I was not an Exiles Talents in the Wafe, I could haue crept into any Aldermans Thume-Ring: a plague of fighing and griefe, it blowes a man vp like a Bladder. There's villainous News abroad: here was Sir John Braby from your Father: you must goe to the Court in the Mornig. The faine mad fellow of the North, Percy: and hee of Wales, that gave Amanu the Ballispado, and made Lycifer Cuckold, and swore the Deuil his true Liege-man upon the Croffe of a Welsh-hooke: what a plague call you him?

Poyn. O, Chandeler.

Falstaff. Owen, Owen; the fame, and his Sonne in Law Merfinger, and old Northumberland, and the spightfully Scott of Scotts, Douglafe, that runnes a Horfe-backe vp a Hill pendicular.

Prin. Hee that rides as high speedy, and with a Piftoll kilt: a Sparrow flying.

Iff. You have hit it.

Prin. So did he neuer the Sparrow.

Falstaff. Well, that Raffell hath good mettall in him, hee will not runne.

Prin. Why, what a Raffell art thou then, to praysifie him so for running?

Falstaff. A Horfe-backe (ye Buckner) but a foote hee will not pugge a foot.

Prin. Yes Lacks, upon intinct.

Falstaff. I grant ye, upon intinct. Well, hee is the goe, and the Morland, and a thousand bloome-Cappes more, Perusal is Borne away by Night: thy Fatheres Beard is tuned white with the Nerves; you may buy Land now as cheape as flinking Mackrel.

Prin. Then'tis like, if there come a hot Sunne, and this chilli buffeting hewe, wee shall buy Maiden-heads as they buy Hob-Suylers by the Hundredes.

Falstaff. By the Maffe Lad, thou sayst true. it is like wee shall have good trading that way. But tell me Hal, art thou not very afraid? thou being Heire apparent, could the World pick thee out three such Enemies again, as that Friend Doughties, that Spirit Pery, and that Deuell gledome? Art thou not very afraid? Dost not thy blood thrill at it?

Prin. Not a whit: I lacke some of thy intinct.

Falstaff. Well, thou wilt be horrible childe to morrow, when thou committ to thy Father: if thou doe loue me, practise as wee are.

Prin. Doe thou stand for my Father, and examine me upon the particular of my Life.

Falstaff. Shall it? content: This Chayre shall bee my State, this Dagger my Scepter, and this Cushion my Crowne.

Prin. Thy State is taken for a Loynd-Stool, thy Golden Scepter for a Leaund Dagger, and thy precious rich Crowne for a pitfull bald Crowne.

Falstaff. Well, and the fire of Grace be not quite out of thee now, that thou be moued. Give me a Cup of Sacke to make some eyes looke rede, that it may be thought I have wept, for I must speake in passion, and I will doe it in King Cambyses vaine.

Prin. Well, here is my Legge.

Falstaff. And here is my speche: fland side Nobilitie, Falstaff. This is excellent sport, ye faith.

Falstaff. Weepe not, sweet Queensie, for trickling tears are value.

Huff. O the Father, how bee he holdest his countenance?

Falstaff. For Gods sake Lords, consiy my truthfull Queen, for teares doe flop the fload-gates of her eyes.

Huffe. O Rare, he doth as like as one of thee harlotry Players, as euery I fe.

Harry. I do not unely manuall where thou spendest thyme: but also, how thou art accompanied: For though the Camomile, the more it is taken, the fatter it grows: yet Youth, the more it is wasned, the foner it weares.

Thou art my Sonne: I have partly thy Mothers Word, partly my Opinion; but chieflie, a villainous tricke of thine Ese, and a foolish hanging of thy nether Lippe, that doth warrant me. If then thou bee Sonne to mee, heere lyeth the point: why, being Sonne to mee, art thou so pointed at? Shall the blessed Sonne of Heauen proue a Miacher, and eate Black-berryes? a question not to bee askte. Shall the Sonne of England proue a Theefe, and take the onees? a question to be askte. There is a thung, Harry, which thou haft often heard of, and it is knowne to me.

many in our Land, by the Name of Pitch: this Pitch (as Ancient Writers do report) doth defile; so doth the company thou keepest: for Harry, now I do not speake to thee in Drink; nor in Teares; nor in Pleasure, but in Pasfion; nor in Words only, but in \textit{Woes} also: and yet there is a vertuous man, whom I have often noted in this company, but I know not his Name.

\textbf{Prince.} What manner of man, and it like your Matiffc?

\textbf{Falst.} A goodly portly man yafith, and a corulent, of a cheerefull Looke, a pleasing Eye, and a mott noble Carriage, and as I thinkke, his age some fiftie, or by my Vtile inclining to three-score; and now I remember well his Name is Falstaff: if that man should be truly guen, hee deceueth mee; for Harry, I see Vrune in his Looke.
If then the Tree may be knowne by the Fruit, as the Fruit by the Tree, then peremptorily I speake it, there is Vrune in that Falstaff: hee keepe with the reft banished. And tell mee now, thou naughtie Varie, tell mee, where haft
thou beene this month?

\textbf{Prince.} Do't thou speake like a King? doe thou fland forme, and Ile play my Father.

\textbf{Falst.} Depart me: if thou do'tt it halfe so gravely, so fateileth, both in word and manner, hang me vp by the heels for a Rabbeister, or a Poulers Hare.

\textbf{Prince.} Well, here I am fet.

\textbf{Falst.} And here I fland: judge my Masters.

\textbf{Prince.} Now Harry, whence come you?

\textbf{Falst.} My Noble Lord, from Falstaffe.

\textbf{Prince.} The complaints I here of thee, are grievous.

\textbf{Falst.} Yafith, my Lord, they are faltie: Nay, hee tickle ye for a young Prince.

\textbf{Prince.} Swereft thou, vngracious Boy! henceforth we're looke on thee: thou art violently carried away from Grace: there is a Deuill haunts thee, in the likenesse of a tat old Man; a Tunnie of Man is thy Companion: Why do'tt thou contrefte with that Trinke of Humors, that Bourling-Hutch of Befillifie, that twenty Portell of Dropetis, that huge Bombardr of Sacke, that haute Cloake-bagge of Guts, that roffed Manning, Tree Oxe with the Pudding in his Belly, that reuerend Vice, that grey Inquity, that father Ruffian, that Vanite in yeeres? wherein is he good, but to faile Sacke, and drinke it? wherein newt and cleanly, but to carue a Capon, and eat it? where in Cunning, but in Craft? wherein Craftie, but in Villa-nie? wherein Villanous, but in all things? wherein worthy, but in nothing?

\textbf{Falst.} I would your Grace would take me with you:
which methinks your Grace?

\textbf{Prince.} That villous abominable mis-leader of Youth, Falstaffe, that old white-bearded Sathan.

\textbf{Falst.} My Lord, the man I know.

\textbf{Prince.} I know thou do'ft.

\textbf{Falst.} But to fay, I know more harme in him then in my felle, were to fay more then I know. That hee is olde (he the more pistie) his white hayres doe winneffe it:
but that hee is (lauguing your reverence) a Whore-mater, that I drecey deny. If Sacke and Sugar bee a fauit, Heuen helpe the Wicked; if to be olde and merry, be a faine, then many an olde Holfte that I know, is damned:
if to be fat, be to be hated, then \textit{Phaenox} leaue Kine are to be loue: No, my good Lord, banish Petru, banish Bardolph, banish Poynets: but for sweete Sacke Falstaffe, kinde lucke Falstaffe, true lucke Falstaffe, valiant lucke
Falstaffe, and therefore more valiant, being as hee is olde Falstaffe, banish not him thy Harrys companies, banish not him thy Harrys companies banish plumes Sacke, and banish all the World.

\textbf{Prince.} I doe, I will.

\textbf{Enter Bardolph running.}

\textbf{Bard.} O, my Lord, my Lord, the Sheriffo, with a most mott monitory Watch, is at the doore.

\textbf{Falst.} Out you Rogue, play out the Play! I have much to say in the behaffe of that Falstaffe.

\textbf{Enter the Holfes.}

\textbf{Holfes.} O, my Lord, my Lord,

\textbf{Falst.} Heigh, heigh, the Deuill rides upon a Fiddle-flkce: what's the matter?

\textbf{Holfes.} The Sheriffo and all the Watch are at the doore: they are to search the House, shall I let them in?

\textbf{Falst.} Do'tt thou heare Hal, neuer call a true preece of Gold a Counterfeiter: thou art essentially made, without seeming so.

\textbf{Prince.} And thou a natural Coward, without infin-fet.

\textbf{Falst.} I deny your Major: if you will deny the Sheriffo, so: if not, let him enter. If I become not a Cart as well as another man, a plague on my bringing vp: I hope I shall be foose be strangled with a Halter, as another.

\textbf{Prince.} Go'ee hide thee behind the Arras, the reft walk vp aboue. Now my Masters, for a true Face and good Conscience.

\textbf{Falst.} Both which I have had: but their date is out, and therefore Ile hide me.

\textbf{Exit.}

\textbf{Prince.} Call in the Sheriffo.

\textbf{Enter Sheriffo and his Carrier.}

\textbf{Prince.} Now Master Sheriffo, what is you will with me?

\textbf{She.} First pardon me, my Lord. A Hue and Cry hath followed certaine men unto this house.

\textbf{Prince.} What men?

\textbf{She.} One of them is well knowne, my gracious Lord, a groffe fat man.

\textbf{Car.} As fat as Butter.

\textbf{Prince.} The man, I doe affure you, is not heere.
For I my felle at this time haue employd him:
And Sheriffo, I will engage my word to thee,
That I will by to morrow Dinner time,
Send him to anfwer wee thee, or any man,
For any thing he shall be charg'd withall:
And fo let me entreat you, leave the house.

\textbf{She.} I will, my Lord: there are two Gentlemen
Hauie in this Robererie loft three hundred Markes.

\textbf{Prince.} It may be so: if he haue robb'd thes men,
He shall be anfwerable: and so farewell.

\textbf{She.} Good Night, my Noble Lord.

\textbf{Prince.} I think it is good Morrow, is it not?

\textbf{She.} Undede, my Lord, I think it be two a Clocke.

\textbf{Exit.}

\textbf{Prince.} This oylly Rascall is knowne as well as Poules, go'ee call him forth.

\textbf{Peto.} Falstaffe? felt alleape behind the Arras, and nothing like a Horle.

\textbf{Prince.} Harke, how hard he fetches breath: search his Pocktes.
The First Part of King Henry the Fourth.

The searcheth his Pockets, and findeth certain Papers.

Prince. What hast thou found?

Petr. Nothing but Papers, my Lord.

Prince. Let's see, what be they? read them.

Item, a Capon. iii. s. ii. d.

Item, Sack, two Gallions. v. s. viii. d.

Item, Antiques and Sacke after Supper. ii. s. vi. d.

Petr, Bread. ob.

Prince. O monitory, but one halfe penny-worth of Bread to this intolerable deal of Sack! What there is else, keepe it, we'll reade it at more advanced than let him sleep till day. Ile to the Court in the Morning: Were muffs all to the Waters, and thy place shall be honorable. Ile procure this fat Rogue a Charge of Foot, and I know his death will be a Match of Thwelve-score. The Money shall be pay'd backe againe with advantage. Be with me betimes in the Morning: and so good morrow Petr.

Petr. Good morrow, good my Lord.

Actus Tertius. Scena Prima.

Enter Hotspur, Wexcester, Lord Mortimer, Owen Glendower.

Mort. These promises are fair, the parties sure, and our inducition full of prosperous hope.

Hot. Lord Mortimer, and Cousin Glendower, will you sit downe? And Vnckle Wexcester: a plague upon it, I have forgot the Mappe.

Glend. No, here it is:

Sit Cousin Percy, sit good Cousin Hotspur:
For by that Name, as oft as Lucacber doth speake of you, His Cheekes both pale, and with a rising figh,
He witheth you in Heauen.

Hot. And you in Hell, as oft as he heares Owen Glendower speak of.

Glend. I cannot blame him: At my Nativitie,
I was a Prince, and in our Power,
And downe at my Birth,
Shall I doe shew the same,
If your Mother, when she was in her prime,

Glend. I say the Earth did shake when I was born.

Hot. And I say the Earth was not of my minde,
If you suppose, as fearing you, it shooke.

Glend. The Heavens were all on fire, the Earth did tremble.

Hot. Oh, then the Earth shooke
To see the Heavens on fire,
And not in fear of your Nativitie.

Died fit Nature oftentimes breakes forth
In strange eruptions; and the teeming Earth
Is with a kind of Collick pinches and vexes,
By the imprisonment of varyly Winde,
Within her Womb: which for enlargement thriving,
Shakes the old Beddane Earth, and rumbles downe

Steeple, and mossie-grownie Towers. At your Sirth,
Our Grandam Earth, having this distemperance,
In passion shooke,

Glend. Cousin of many men,
I do not bear their Crossings: Give me leave
To tell you once againe, that at my Birth,
The front of Heauen was full of fife shapes,
The Goaters came from the Mountains, and the Harts
Were strangely clamorous to the frighted fields:
These figures haue markt me extraordinary,
And all the courtes of my Life doe shew,
I am not in the Roll of common men.
Where is the Lining, clipe in with the Sea,
That chides the Bankes of England, Scotland, and Wales,
Which calls me Pupillor hath read to me?
And bring him out, that is but Womans Soune,
Can trace me in the tedious wayes of Arts,

Hot. I thinke there's no man speaks better Welsh
Ile to Dinner.

Mort. Peace Cousin Percy, you will make him mad.

Glend. I can call Spirits from the wide Depe.

Hot. Why so I can, I or so can any man:
But will they come, when you doe call for them?

Glend. Why, I can teach thee, Cousin, to command the Deuil.

Hot. And I can teach thee, Cousin, to frame the Deuil,
By telling truth, Tell truty, and frame the Deuil.
It then have power to rytie him, bring him hither,
And let be fonder, I have power to frame him herefore.
Oh, where is your line, tell truth, and frame the Deuil.

Chser. Come, come, no more of this unprofitable Chat.

Glend. Three times hath Henry Redimake made head Against my Power: three from the Banks of Wye,
And fandy-bottom'd Seuerne, haue I hent him
Bootefull home, and Weather-beaten backe.

Hot. Home without Booter, and hopeful Weather too.

How scapes he Agues in the Deuil's name?

Glend. Come, heres the Mappe:

Shall wee diuide our Right,
Accoruding to our three-fold ordre there.

Mort. The Arch-Deacon hath diuided it
Into three Limits,very equally:
England, from Trent, and Seuerne bitherto,
By South and East, is to your part assignd,
All Wexcester, Wales, beyond the Seuerne shore,
And all the forense Land within that bound.

Glend. To Owen Glendower: and dear Cousin, to you
The remnant Northward, laying off from Trent,
And our indentures Tripartite are drawne:
Which being seal'd enterchangeably,

(A Businnesse that this night may execute)
To morrow, Cunin Percy, you and I,
And my good Lord of Wexcester, will set forth,
To see our Father, and the Scotland Power,
As is appointed vs at Shrewsbury.

My Father Glendower is not ready yet,
Nor shall wee neede his helpe these fourteen dayes:
Within that space, you may haue drawn togetherto
Your Tenants, Friends and neigbouring Gentlenese.

Glend. A shorter time shall tend me to you, Lords:
And in my Conduct shall your Ladies come,
From whom you now must ferales, and take no lese,
For there will be a Worp of Water find.

Vpon
The First Part of King Henry the Fourth.

Upon the meeting of your Wives and you,

Halp. Me thinks my Moity, North from Burton here,

In quantite equals not one of yours.

See how this Riter comes to cracking in,
And curse to the thing of all my Land.

A huge half Moon, a monstrous Candle,

He has the Currant in this lane dam'd vp,

And there the slug and Silver Trest shall run,

In a new Channel, fared and evenly.

It shall not wind with such a deep indent,

To rob me of so rich a Bottom here.

Glend. Not wind it is all, it must, you see it doth.

Mort. Yes, but mark how he bears his course,

And runners me up, with like advantage on the other side,

Gelding the opposed Continent as much,

As on the other side it takes from you.

Worc. Yes, but a little Charge will trench him here,

And on this North side winne this Cape of Land,

And then he runs straight and even.

Halp. I lie hue it is, a little Charge will doe it,

Glend. He now hate it alter'd.

Halp. Will not you?

Glend. No, nor you shall not.

Mort. Why shall any nay?

Glend. Why, this will not.

Halp. Let me not understand you then, speak it in Welsh.

Glend. I can speake English, Lord, as well as you:

For I was train'd vp in the English Court;

Where, being but young, I framed to the Harpe

Many an English Distir, louely well,

And gaue the Tongue a helpefull Ornament;

A Verset that was never knewe in you.

Halp. Marry, and I am glad of it with all my heart,

I had rather be an Elfin, and crie now.

Then one of these same Mister Ballad-mongers:

I had rather hear a Brazen Candelstick turn'd,

Or a dry Wheel grace on the Axle-trees,

And that would set my teeth nothing an edge,

Nothing so much, as mincing Poetry;

'Tis like the force's gate of a Stilling Nage.

Glend. Come, you shall have Trent turn'd,

Halp. I don't care, I am more please to so much Land.

Te you all well-defering friends;

But in the way of Bargain, make ye me,

Are the Indentures drawne? shall we be gone?

Glend. The Moone shines faire,

You may away by Night.

Halp. I hate the Writer; and what

Break with your Wives of your deponent hence,

I am afraid my Daughter will runne madde,

So much file doted on by Martiners.

Mort. Fie, Cauis Percey, how you crooke my Fa-ther.

Halp. I cannot chuse; sometime beangers are,

With telling me of the Moldwarpe and the Ani,

Of the Dreamer Merlin, and his Prophesies,

And of a Dragon, and a feene-leaf Fish,

A clip-wing'd Griffin, and a mounten Rauen,

A touching Lyon, and a ramping Cat,

And such a deal of skimmable stuffe.

As puts me from my Faith. I tell you what,

He held me left Night, at last, nine howers,

In reckoning vp the general Devils Names,

That went his Lancieys;

I cry'd hum, and well, goe too,

But mark'd him not a word. O he is as tedious

As a tyred Horse, a raying Wife,

Worse then a smocke House. I had rather liee

With Cheefe and Gantick in a Windmill farre,

Then feede on Cases, and have him take to me,

In any Summer House in Christendome.

Mort. In faith he was a worthy Gentleman,

Exceeding well read, and profited,

In strange Concealements:

Vahant as a Lyon, and wondrous affable,

And as bountifull, as Myynes of India.

Shall I tell you, Cauin,

He holds your temper in a high respe:

And econs him self, even of his natural scope,

When you doe crooke his humor, faith he doce,

I warrant you, that man is not alive,

Might as have temptt him, as you have done,

Without the safe of danger, and reproofs:

But doe not vie it off, let me entreat you,

Wor. In faith, my Lord, you are too willfull blame,

And since your comming hither, have done enough,

To put him quite besides his patience.

You must needs learn, Lord, to amend this fault:

Though sometimes is them Greatmane, Courage, Blood,

And that's the dearest grace it renders you;

Yet oftentimes is doth present harsh Rage,

Defect of Manners, want of Government,

Pride, Haughtiness, Opinion, and Distain:

The least of which, haunting a Noble man,

Loseth mans hearts, and leaves behind a flayne

Upon the beautie of all parts besides,

Beguiling them of commendation.

Halp. Well, I am school'd:

Good-manners be your speeche:

Heere come your Wyes, and let vs take our leave.

Enter Glendover, with the Ladies.

Mort. This is the deadly spight, that angels me,

My Wife can speake no English, I no Welsh.

Glend. My Daughter weeps, shee's not part with you,

Shee's a Soul desire. Ile sleele, I sleele, to the Wares.

Mort. Good Father tell her, that shee, and my Aunt Percey

Shall follow in your Conduite speedily.

Glendover spake to her in Welsh, and she answers him in the same.

Glend. Shee is despetate here:

A peaculer self-will'd Halperty,

One that no perfwation can doe good upon.

The Lady speake in Welsh.

Mort. I understand thy Lookes: that pretty Welsh

Which thou pow'rs'd down from these swelling Heauens,

I am too perfect in: and but for shame,

In such a parlour I susved thee.

The Lady cryes in Welch.

Mort. I understand thy Kisses, and thou mine,

And that's a feeling disposition:

But I will never be a Traunt, Loue,

Till I have learned thy Language for thy tongue.

The first Part of King Henry the Fourth.

The Firft Exeunt

Sung by a faire Queene in a Summers Bowre, With rauffing Diuision to her Lute.

Glend. Nay, her death, then will the runne madde. 320

The Lady fleakes againe in Welfh.

Gled. Why, shee speakes not a word.

Mort. O, I am Ignorante it selfe in this, Gled. She bids you,

On the wanton Rufhes lay you downe, And reft your gentle Head upn her Lappe, And she will sing the Song that pleafeth you, And on your Eye-lids Crowne the God of Sleepe, Charring your blood with pleafing heauineffe; Making fuch difference betwixt Wake and Sleepe, As is the difference betwixt Day and Night, The houre before the Heavently Harnef'd Teeme Begins his Golden Progress in the East.

Mort. With all my heart I fay, and heare her fing:
By that time will our Booke, I thinke, be drawnne.

Glend. Doe fo:
And those Musitian that shall play to you,
Hang in the Air a thousand Leagues from thence; And straight they fhall be here: hit, and attend.

Hoifie. Come Kate, thou art perfect in lying downe:
Come, quicke, quicke, that I may lay my Head in thy Lappe.

Lady. Goe, ye giddy-Gosse.

The Musick plays.

Hoifie. Now I perceufe the Deuill underfaunds Welfh,
And 'tis no maruell he is fo humorous:
Byrlady ball's a good Musitian.

Lady. Then would you be nothing but Musicall,
For you are altogether governed by humors:
Lye still ye Theefe, and heare the Lady fing in Welfh.

Hoifie. I had rather heare (Lady) my Brach howle in Irill.

Lady. Would it haue thy Head broken?

Hoifie. No.

Lady. Then be still.

Hoiffe. Nehyther, it is a Woman's fault.

Lady. Now God helpe thee,

Hoifie. To the Welfh Ladies Bed.

Lady. What's that?

Hoifie. Peace, three fings.

Here the Lady fings a Welfh Song.

Hoifie. Come, Ile haue your Song too.

Lady. Not mine, in good ftoth.

Hoifie. Not yours, in good ftoth?

You swears as a Comit-makers Wife:
Not you, in good ftoth; and, as true as I live;
And, as God fhall mende me; and, as sure as day:
And giuent fuch Sarcenc freute for thy Oathes,
As if thou never walk'd futher then Finbury.
Swears me, Kate, like a Lady, as thou art,
A good mouth-filling Oath: and leaue in ftoth,
And fuch profett of Pepper Ginger-breadd,
To Veluet-Guards, and Sunday-Citizens.

Come, fing,

Lady. I will not finge.

Hoifie. 'Tis the next way to turne Taylor, or be Red-breast reafer: and the Indentures be drawnne, I'c away within these two bowres: and so come in, when ye will.

Exit

Gled. Come, come, Lord Mortimer, you are as low, As hot Lord Percy is on fire to goe.

By this our Booke is drawnne: wele but fcarce,
And then to Harf immediately.

Mort. With all my heart.

Scene Secundae.

Enter the King, Prince of Wales, and others.

King. Lords, giue vs leaue:
The Prince of Wales, and I,
Must haue some private conference:
But beere at hand.

For wee hall presently haue neede of you,

Lords.

I know not whether Heauen will haue it fo,
For some difpleasing feruice I have done;
That in his fecret Doome, out of my Blood,
Hee'tr breede Reuengement, and a Scourge for me:
But thou doft in thy paffages of Life,
Make me beleefe, thou art oneely mark'd
For the lenfe vengeaunce, and the Rod of Heauen
To punife my Mifreadings. Tell me elfe,
Could fuch inordinat and low defiues,
Sich poore, fuch bare, fuch lewd, fuch meane attempts,
Such basen pleasures, rude foeitie,
As thou art matcht withall, and graffed too,
Accompanie the greatneffe of thy blood,
And hold their lenfe with thy Princey heart?

Prince. So pleafe your Maietie, I would I could Quit all offences with as cleare conuerf,
As well as I am doubleffe I can purge
My felfe of many I am charg'd withall:
Yet fuch extenuation let me begge,
As in reproufe of many Tales deceiv'd,
Which oft the Ear of Greatneffe needs: make heare,
By fming Plick-thankes, and bafe Newes-mongeth;
I may for some things true, wherein my youth
Had faultie wandred, and irregular,
Finde pardon on my true fulmination.

King. Heauen pardon thee:
Yet let me wonder, Harry,
At thy affections, which doe hold a Wing
Quite from the flight of all thy affeotions.
Thy place in Counsell thou haft rudely left,
Which by thy younger Brother is supply'd:
And art almost an alien to the hearts
Of all the Court and Princes of my blood.
The hope and expetation of thy time
Is ruin'd, and the Soule of every man
Prophecically doe fore-thinke thy fall.
Had I fo lauifh of my prefence beene,
So common hackney'd in the eyes of men,
So ifate and cheape to vulgar Company;
Opinion, that did helpe me to the Crowne,
Had till kept loyalty to profition,
And let me in reputeffe banishment,
A fellow of no marke, nor likelyhood.
By being feldome feene, I could not feare,
But like a Comet, I was wonder'd at.
The First Part of King Henry the Fourth.

...That men would tell their Children, This is hee: Others would say: Where, Which is Bullingbrooke. And then I hole all Courtierse from Heauen, And drest my selfe in such Humilitie, That I did plucke Allegiance from mens hearts, Lowd Shows and Salutations from their mouths, Even in the presence of the Crowened King. Thus I did keepe my Person freth and new, My Presence like a Robe Pomficient, Not seen, but wonder at: And by my State, Seldom but fumpuous, shewed like a Feast, And wonne by raresness such Solennitie. The skipping King bee ambled vp and downe, With shalow letters, and raff Basin Wits, Soon kindled, and soone burnt, carded his State, Mingled his Royaltie with Carping Poole. Had his great Name prophaned with their Scones, And gaine his Comemence, against his Name, To laugh at gybing Boys, and hold the puffs Of every Britifh vaine Comparature; Grew a Comparent to the common Streetes, Enfeoff'd himselfe to Popularetie: That being dayly swallowed by mens Eyes, They suffered with Honey, and began to lose The taste of Sweetmeat, whereof a little More then a little, is by much too much. So when he had occasion to bee seen, He was, but as the Cockow is in June, Heard, not regarded: seen but with such Eyes, As fike and blunted with Commonie, Afford no extraordinary Grace, Such as is bent on Sunne-like MAVESTIE, When it thinke, and feldom in admiring Eyes: But rather drownd, and hang their eye-lids downe, Slept in his face, and render'd inch-spect As Cloudie men vie to doe to their subalterns, Being with his prefence, glued, gored, and ful. And in that very Line, Harry, hande thou: For thou haft left thy Princely Priudelowe, With vittie participation. Not an Eye, But is awearie of thy common fight, Save mine, which hath defert to fee thee more: Which now doth that I would not haue it doe, Make blindde it fellee with foolish tendernesse.

Price. I shall hereafter, my thrice gracious Lord, Be more my selfe.

King. For all the World, As thou art to this houre, was Richard then, When I from France fet foot at Rouenburgh; And even as I was then, is Percy now: Now by my Scepter, and my Soule to boot, He hath more worthy interest to the State Then thou, the fadnow of Succession; For of no Right, nor colour like to Right. Had eth full fielde with Hameis in the Realme, Turnes head against the Lyons armed Iwes; And being no more in debt to yeeres, then thou, Leades ancient Lords, and reuerent Bishops on To bloody Battales, and to bruishing Armes: What never-dying Honor hath he got, Against renowned Douglas? whoe high Deedes, Whole hot IncurIONS, and great Name in Armes, Holds from all Souldiers chiefe Maioritiie, And Militarie Title Captall. Through all the Kingdomes that acknowledge Christ, Thrice hath the Heifer Mars, in swathing Clothes, This Infant Warrior, in his Enterprizes, Diseomfit great Douglas, sae him once, Enlarged him, and made a friend of him, To fill the mouth of deep Defiance vp, And shake the peace and fafetie of our Throne. And what fay you to this? Percy, Northumberland, The Arch-bishops Grace of York, Douglas, Mortimer, Capitulate against vs, and are vp. But wherefore doe I tell thee these Newes to thee? Why, Harry, doe I tell thee of say Poes, Which art my near fit and dearfit Enemye? Thou art as like enough, through vaflall Fear, Safe Inclination, and the fars of Splicene, To fight againft me under Percy pay, To dogge his heels, and curfie at his frowns, To shew how much thou art degenerate.

France. Do not thanke fo, you shall not finde it fo: And Heauen forgive them, that so much haue fway'd Your MAVESTIES good thoughts away from me: I will redeem all this on Perces head, And in the clofeing of some glorieous day, Be bold to tey you that I am your Sonne, When I will weare a Garment all of Blood, And flaine my fauours in a bloody Maske: Which wafith away, shall feowe my name with it, And that shall be the day, when er it lightes, That this fame Child of Honor and Renowne, This gallant Harry, this ill-prayed Knight, And your wothought of Harry chance to meet: For every Honor fitting on his Helme, Would they were multitudes, and on my head My fames redoubled. For the time will come, That I shall make this Northerne Youth exchange His glorious Deedes for my Indignities: Percy is but my Father, good my Lord, To engroffe vp glorious Deedes on my behalfe: And I will call him to his fit account, That he shall render every Glory vp, Yea, even the heightest worship of his time, Or I will tear the Reckoning from his Heart. This, in the Name of Heauen, I promise here: The which, if I performe, and doe lurtuie, I doe befeech my MAVESTIE, may falue The long-growne Wounds of my intemperature: If not, the end of Life cancels all Bands, And I will dye a hundred thousand Deaths, Ere breake the smallest parcel of this Vow.

King. A hundred thousand Rebels dye in this: Thou shalt haue Charge, and foueraigne truth herein.

Enter Blain. How now good Blain? thy Lookes are full of speed,

Blain. So hath the Bufinesse that I come to speake of. Lord Mortimer of Scotland hath fent word, That Douglas and the English Rebels met The eleuen of this moneth, at Shrewsburie: A mightie and a farrefull Head they are, (If Promises be kept on every hand) As ever offered foule play in a State.

King. The Earl of Westmeiland fet forth to day: With him my fonne, Lord John of Lancafter, For this adueritement is five dayes old. On Wednesday next, Harry thou shalt fet forward: On Thursday, wee our felues will march, Our meeting is Bridgenorth: and Harry, you shall march f

Through
Enter Falstaff and Bardolph.

Falstaff. Bardolph, am I not faint away vilely, since this last acton? doe I not bate? doe I not dwindle? why my skime hangs about me like an olde Ladies loose Gowne: I am wittered as an olde Apple John. Well, Il repent, and that suddenly, while I am in some liking: I shall be out of heart shortly, and then I shall be out of strength to repent. And I have not forgotten what the in-side of a Church is made of. I am a Pepper-Comme, a Brewers Horse, the in-side of a Church. Company, vili-

Enter Sir John.

Bardolph. Why you are so firtfull, you cannot live long.

Falstaff. Why there is it: Come, finge me a bawdy Song, make me merry: I was as vertuously gonne, as a Gentleman need to be; vertuous enough, I wore little, did not about seven times a week, went to a bawdy-house not about once in a quarter of an hour; paid Money that I borrowed, three or four times: figned well, and in good compasse: and now I live out of all order, out of com-

Bardolph. Why, you are so fat, Sir John, that you must needs be out of all compasse; out of all reasonable compasse. Sir John.

Falstaff. Doe thou amend thy Face, and Ie amend thy Life: Thou art out, Admiral, thou bearest the Lanterne in the Poole, but tis in the Nose of thee; thou art the Knight of the burning Lampes.

Bardolph. Why, Sir John, my Face does you no harme.

Falstaff. No, Ie be in one: I make as good voice of it, as many a man doth of a Death. Heed myt Memenio dies. I never see thy Face, but I thinkke upon Hell-fire, and Dantes that liued in Purple; for there he is in his Robes burning, burning. If thou were any way gonne to vertue, I would swerde by thy Face: my Oath should bee, By this Fire: But thou art altogether gonne out; and were indeede, but for the Light in thy Face, the Sunne of with Darke-

Bardolph. When thou ranst vp Gates-Hill in the Night, to catch my Horse, I did not thinke that thou hadst beene an Ignis fatui, or a Ball of Wild-fire, there's no Purchafe in Money. O, thou art a perpetuall Triumph, an ever-

Falstaff. So should I be sure to be heart-burn d.

Bardolph. How now, Dame Portia the Hen, have you enquir'd yet who pick'd my Pocket?

Falstaff. Why Sir John, what doe you thinke, Sir John, doe you thinke I keepe Theures in my House? I have search'd, I have enquired, so haue my Husband, Man by Man, Boy by Boy, Servant by Servant; the light of a hayre was never lost in my house before.

Falstaff. Ye lye. Hostess: Bardolph was thatd, and lost many a hayre; and Ie be furnowe my Pocket was pick'd; goe to, you are a Woman, goe.

Hostess. Who I? I defiere thee: I was never call'd so in mine owne house before.

Falstaff. Go to, I know you well enough.

Hostess. No, Sir John, you do not know me, Sir John; I know you, Sir John: you owne me Money, Sir John, and now you pick a quarrel, to beguile me of it: I bought you a dozen of Shirts to your Backe.

Falstaff. Doulas, filthy Doulas: I haue given them away to Bakers Wines, and they haue made Boulters of them.

Hostess. Now as I am a true Woman, Holland of eight shillings an Ell: You owne me Money here before, Sir John, for your Dyets, and by-Drinkings, and Money lent you, four and twentie pounds.

Falstaff. Hee had his part of it, let him pay.

Hostess. Hee? alas hee is poor, hee hath no-

Hostess. How? Poore? Looke upon his Face: What call you Rich? Let them coatye his Nose, let them coyne his Cheekes: Ie not pay a Denier. What, will you make a Younger of me? Shall I not take mine eafe in mine inne, but I shal haue my Pocket pick'd? I haue loft a Seal-

Bardolph. Do you know the Prince tell him, I know not how of that ring was Copper.

Falstaff. How? the Prince is a Jacke, a Sneake-Cupper; and if hee were heere, I would cudgell him like a Dogge, if hee should cry so.

Falstaff. How now Laat is the Window that Doore? Mult we all March?

Bardolph. Yes, two and two, Newgate fashion.

Falstaff. My Lord, I pray you hear mee.

Prince. What say'ft thou, Millesse Lecky! How does thy Husband? I love him well, hee is an honest man.

Hostess. Good, my Lord, heere mee.

Falstaff. Preach let her alone, and lift to mee.

Prince. What say'ft thou, Jacke?

Falstaff. The other Night I fell asleepe beere behind the Arras, and had my Pocket pick'd: this House is turn'd Bawdy-house, they picke Pockets.

Prince. What didst thou loose, Jacke?

Falstaff. Wilt thou beleue me, Hal? Three or foure Bonds of fortie pound speece, and a Scale-Ring of my Grand-

Prince. A Trifie, some eight-penny master.

Falstaff. So I told him, by my Lord; and I said, I heard your Grace say to: and (my Lord) hee speakes most vilely of you, like a four-mouth'd man as hee is, and said, hee would cudgell you.

Prince. What doe he did not?

Falstaff. There's neyther Faith, Truth, nor Woman-hood in me eile.

Falstaff. There's

The First Part of King Henry the Fourth.

Fal. There's no more faith in thee then a th't de Prune, nor no more truth in thee, then in a drawne Fox: and for Woman-hood, Maid-marian may be the Deputies wife of the Ward to thee. Go you nothing: go.

Hal. Say, what thing? what thing?

Fal. What thing? why a thing to thank heaven on. Hal. I am as answer to thank heaven on, I wold thou shouldst know it: I am an honest man's wife: and setting thy Knightshood aside, thou art a knave to call me so.

Hal. Setting thy woman-hood aside, thou art a beast to say otherwise.

Fal. Say, what beast, thou knave thou?

Hal. What beast? What an Otter.

Fal. An Otter, Sir John? Why an Otter?

Hal. Why? She's neither fish nor flesh; a man knows not where to have her.

Fal. Thou art a nauseous man in saying so: thou, or anie man knows where to have me, thou knave thou.

Prince. Thou say'st true Holefelle, and he flanders thee most grievly.

Hal. So he doth you, my Lord, and sayeth this other day, You ought him a thousand pound.

Prince. Sirrah, do I owe you a thousand pound?

Fal. A thousand pound Hal? A Million. Thy love is worth a Million: thou now'lt me thy love.

Hal. Nay my Lord, he call'd you Jacke, and said hee would cudgel you.

Fal. Did I, Bardolph?

Bard. Indeed Sir John, you said so.

Fal. Yes, if he said my Ring was Copper.

Prince. I say 'tis Copper. Darst thou be as good as thy word now?

Fal. Why Hal? thou know'st, as thou art but a man, I dare: but, as thou art a Prince, I fear thee, as I fear the roaring of the Lyons Whelp.

Prince. And why not as the Lyon?

Fal. The King himselfe is to bee feared as the Lyon: Don't thou thinke I be as good as thee, as I thinke thy Father! Nay if I do, let my Girele break.

Prince. O, if it should, how would thy gutes fall about thy knees. But Sirra: There's no room for Faith, Truth, nor Honesty, in this bottom of thinge: it is all full'd vp with Gutes and Middrife. Charge an honest Woman with picking thy pocket? Why thou horidon impudent imbold it call'd, if there were any thing in thy Pocket but Tobacco Recknings, Memorandum of Bandie-houses, and one poore penny-worth of Sugar-candy to make thee long-wind'd: if thy pocket were enrich'd with anie other injuries but thee, I am a Villaine: And yet you will fland to it, you will not Pocket vp wrong. Art thou not affraid'd?

Fal. Doth thou hear Hal? Thou know'st in the state of Innocency, Adam fell: and what should poore Jacke Falstaffe do, in the days of Villany? Thou seest, I have more flesh then another man, and therefore more frailty. You confette then you pick my Pocket?

Prince. It appears so by the Story.

Fal. Holefelle, I forgive thee: Go make ready Breakfast, loue thy Husband, Looke to thy Servants, and cherish thy Guesse: Thou shalt find me tractable to any honest reason: Thou seest, I am paciied still. Nay, I prethee be gone.

Exit Holefelle.

Now Hal, to the newes at Court for the Robbery, Lad? How is that answered?

Prin. O my sweet Beefe: I must fill be good Angel to thee. The Monie is paid backe againe.

Fal. O, I do not like that paying backe, 'tis a double Labour.

Prin. I am good Friends with my Father, and may do anything.

Fal. Rob me the Exchequer the first thing thou doft, and do it with a wifh'd hands too.

Bard. Do my Lord.

Fal. I have procured thee Sacke, a Charge of Foot.

Fal. I would it had beene of Horse. Where shal I finde one that can cleale well? O, for a fine threeth, or two or threetwice, or thereabout. I am hewnely unprovided. Wel God be thanked for these Rebels, they offend none but the Vertuous. I laud them. I praise them.

Prin. Bardolph.

Bard. My Lord.

Prin. Go beare this Letter to Lord John of Lancaster To my Brother John. This to my Lord of Westminister, Go toes, to horse: for thou, and I, Have thirtie miles to ride yet ere dinner time.

Jacke. Meet me to morrow in the Temple Hall.

Fal. At two a clocke in the afternoon, There shal I know whys Charge, and there receive Money and Order for their Furniture. The Land is burning, Peace stands on hye, And either they, or we must lower hye. Fal. Rare words! brave word.

Holefelle my breakfast, come: Oh, I could with this I wene were my drumme.

Exit Holiffsle.

Enter Harrie Haffbure, Waceffer, and Dowglas.

Hari. Well said, my Noble Scot, if speaking truth In this fine Age, were not thought flatterie, Such attribution should the Dowful have, As not a Soulier of this seasons flame, Should go fo generall currant through the world. But heauen I cannot flatter: I deie The Tongues of Soothers. But a Brauer place In my heartes loue, hath no man then your Selve. Nay, take me to your word: approue me Lord, Dow. Thou art the King of Honor: No man so potent breathes upon the ground, But I will Bear him.

Enter a messenger.

Hari. Do so, and 'tis well. What Letters haft there? I can but thank you.

Meff. Thes Letters come from your Father.

Hari. Letters from him?

Meff. He cannot come, my Lord, He is greeuous sick.

Hari. How? has he the leuitive to be sick now? In such a stormy time? Who leads his power? Vnder whose Government come they slung?
The First Part of King Henry the Fourth.

Dong. At heart can thinke:
There is not such a word spake in Scotland,
As this Drame of Fears.

Enter Sir Richard Vernon.

Heij. My Cousin Vernon, welcome by my Soule.
Vern. Pray God my news be worth a welcome, Lord,
The Earl of Westminster, seven thousand strong,
Is marching hither-wards, with Prince John.
Heij. No harme: what more?
Vern. And further, I haue learned,
The King himselfe in person hath set forth,
Or hither-wards intended speedily,
With strong and mightie preparation.
Heij. He shall be welcome too.

Where is his Sonne,
The nimble-footed Mad-Cap, Prince of Wales,
And his Cumrades, that daft the World aside,
And bid it passe?

Vern. All furnish'd, all in Armes,
All plumm'd like Eftridges,that with the Winde
Bayed like Eagles, haunging lately bath'd,
Glistening in Golden Coates,like Images,
As full of spirit as the Moneth of May,
And gorgeous as the Sunne at Mid-summer,
Went on as youthfull Goates,wilde as young Bulls.
I saw young Harry with his Beuer on,
His Cauhes on his thighs, gallantly arm'd,
Rife from the ground like feathered Mentrey,
And vaulted with such esto into his Seat,
As if an Angell dropt downe from the Clouds,
To turne and winde a fetiche Pagana,
And witch the World with Noble Horsemanship.
Heij. No more, no more,
Worle then the Sunne in March:
This prysfe doth nourish Agues: let them come,
They come like Sacrifices in their trimme,
And to the fire-eid Maid of smooke Ware,
All hot, and bleeding, will wee offer them:
The mayled Mars shall on his Aiar fit
Up to the ears is blood. I am on fire,
To heare this rich reprizzall is so nigh,
And yet not ours. Come, let me take my Horse,
Who is to beare me like a Thunder-bolt,
Against the boosome of the Prince of Wales.
Harry to Harry, shall not Horfe to Horfe
Meece, and neere part, till one droppe downe a Coaste
Oh, that Glendower were come.

Vern. There is more newes:
I learned in Worcester, as I rode along,
He cannot draw his Power this fouretyne daies,
Dong. That's the worst Tidinges that I heare of yet.

Vern. I by my faith, that beares a froste foun.
Heij. What may the Kings whole Bataille reache vnto?

Vern. To thirty thousand,
Heij. Fortye thouand be,
My Father and Glendower being both away,
The powers of
ws, may serue to great a day,
Come, let vs take a mutter speedily:
Doomesday is near, dyce all, dye merrily.

Dong. Tale not of dying, I am out of feare
Of death,or deaths hand, for this one hale yeare.

Exeunt Omnes.

Scene
The First Part of King Henry the Fourth.

Scena Secunda.

Enter Falstaff and Bardolph.

Falstaff. Bardolph, get thee before to Coventry, fill me a Bottle of Sack, our Soldiers shall march through: we'll go to Sutton-cop-hill to Night.

Bardolph. Will you give me Money, Captain?

Falstaff. Lay out, lay out.

Bardolph. This Bottle makes an Angell.

Falstaff. And if it doe, take it for thy Labour: and if it make twenty, take them all: I am anfwere the Coynage. But my Lieutenant Pete meece me at the Townes end.

Bardolph. I will Captain; farewell.

Falstaff. If I be not afeam'd of my Souldiers, I am a fowle-Grumet: I have mi-nd'd the Kings Prefs damaged. I have got, in exchange of a hundred and fifty Souldiers, three hundred and oddie Pounds. I preffe me none but good Howfe-holders, Yeomens Sonterequirc me out confuted Batcheler, fuch as had beene ask'd twice on the Banes: fuch a Commodity of warme flauces, as had as lieue heare the Deuell, as a Drumme: fuch as fear the report of a Caliuer, worse then a ftruck-Foole, or a hurt wilde-Ducke. I preffe me none but fuch Toffes and futter, with Hearts in their Belyes no bigger then Princes heads, and they have bought out their feurities; And now, my whole Charge confits of Ancients, Corporals, Lieutenants, Gentlemen of Companies, Slaves as raged as Lucarn in the painted Cloath, where the Glutton Dogges licked his Sores; and fuch, as indeed were neuer Souldiers, but dif-carded mifqu Servingmen, younger Sonnes to younger Brothers, reftored Taffers and Offerers, Trade-faine, the Cankers of a calme World, and long Peace, tenne times more di-honorable ragged, then an old fac'd Anciant; and fuch haue to fatisfie the roomes of them that have brought out their fenues: that you would thinke, that I had a hundred and fiftie tower'd Prodigallly lately come from Swayne-keeping, from eating, Daffle and Huske. A mad fellow met me on the way, and told me, I had unloade all the Gibbets, and preffe the dead bodies. No eye hath feene fuch skar-Crowes. Ile not march through Coventry with them, that's flat. Nay, and the Villaines march wide betwixt the Legges, as if they had Gyues on; for indeed, I had the molt of them out of Prison. There's not a Shirt and a halfe in all my Company: and the halfe Shirt is twen Napkins tacked togethe, and throwne out the Shoulders like a Heralds Coat, without fleeues: and the Shirt, to fay the truth, fllone from my Hoft of S. Albones, or the Red-Nece Inne-keeper of Daintury, But that's all one, they'd finde Linnen enough on every Hedge.

Enter the Prince, and the Lord of Westmerland.

Prince. How now gooone Jack? how now Quilt?

Falstaff. What Haif! How now mad Wag, what a Devill don't thou in Warwickshire? My good Lord of Westmerland, I cry you mercy, I thought your Honours alreadie beene at Shrewsbury.

Welf. Faith, Sir John, 'tis more then time that I were there, and you too: but my Powers are alreadie. The King can tell you, lookes for vs all: we must away all to Night.

Prince. I thinke to freacle Creame indeed, for thy theft hath alreadie made thee Butter: but tell me, Jack, whose fellows are thefe that come after?

Prince. I did never fee fuch pitiful Rafcals.

Falstaff. Sir, Sir, good enouhe to toffe foode for Powder, foode for Powder: they'll fill a Pit, as well as better: tuff, man, mortall men, mortall men.

Welf. But Sir John, me thinke they are exceeding poore and bare, too beggarly.

Falstaff. Faith, for their pourette, I know not where they had that, and for their batemen, I am sure they never learnt that of me.

Prince. No, Ile be fwoone, yllefe you call three fingers on the Ribbes bare. But firme, make halfe, Percy is already in the field.

Falstaff. What, is the King encamp'd?

Welf. Hee is, Sir John, I fear wee shall, fay too long.

Falstaff. Well, to the latter end of a Fray, and the beginning of a Feit, fift a dull fighter, and a keen Gueft.

Exeunt.

Scena Tertia.

Enter Hotspur, Wroecefter, Douglas, and Vernon.

Hotspur. We'll fight with him to Night.

Worcester. It may not be.

Douglas. You giue him then adantage.

Vernon. Not a whit.

Hotspur. Why fay you fo? looke he not for supply?

Vernon. So do we.

Hotspur. His is certaine, ours is doubtfull.

Worcester. Good Cousin be advis'd, firme not to night.

Vernon. Doe not, my Lord.

Douglas. You doe not counfaile well:

You speake it out of feare, and cold heart.

Vernon. Doe me no fclide, Douglas: by my Life, And I dare well maintaine it with my Life, If well-repected Honor bid me on, I hold as little counfaile with weake feare, As you, my Lord, or any Scot that this day lives, Let it be leene to moralize in the Barrell, Which of vs ffeares.

Douglas. Yes, or to night.

Vernon. Content.

Hotspur. To night, Say I.

Vernon. Come, come, it may not be.

I wonder much, being me of fuch great leading as you are, That you fere fee not what impediments

Drag backe our expedition: certaine Horse Of my Cousin Vernon are not yet come vp, Your Vnacle Wroecefter Horse came but to day, And now their pride and mettall is alfepe, Their courage with hard labour tame and dull, That not a Horse is halfe the halfe of himselfe.

Hotspur. So are the Horfes of the Enemy In general journey bate, and brought low: The better part of ours are full of reft.

Exeunt.
The Trumpet "Hark! a Trumpet." Enter Sir Walter Blunt.

Blunt: Peace! With gracious offers from the King;
If you would save me hearing, and respect.

Enter: Sir Walter Blunt.

And would to God you were of our determination.

Some of us fear you well: and some those some Envy your great desertings, and good name,
Because you are not of our quality,
But stand against us, as an Enemy.

Blunt, And Heaven defend, but still I should stand so,
So long as out of Limit, and true Rule,
You stand against my noble Margaret,
But to my Charge.

The King hath lent to know
The nature of your Grievances, and whereupon
You continue from the Brest of Civil Peace,
Such bold Hostilities, teaching his doughty Land
Audacious Cruelties. If that the King
Have any way your good Deeds forgot,
Which he confesseth to be manifold,
He bids you name your Grievances, and with all speed
You shall have your defence, with intent to
And pardon absolute for your selfs, and these,
Herein mis-led by your biggness.

Hast. The King is kind:
And well wee know, the King
Knowes at what time to promis, when to pay.
My Father, my Vnkle, and my selfe,
Did give him that fame Royaltye he weares:
And when he was not fixed and twentie strong,
Sicke in the Worlds regard, wretched, and low,
A poore vnmind'd Out-law, sneaking home,
My Father gave him welcome to the shre:
And when he heard him sweare, and vow to God,
He came but to be Duke of Lancaster,
To fue his Lurie, and begge his Peace,
With teares of Innocencye, and tearmes of Zeale;
My Father, in kinde heart and pitty mou'd,
Sware him allittance, and perform'd it too.

Now, when the Lords and Barons of the Realme
Percev'd Northumberland did leave to him,
The more and more, came in with Cap and Knee,
Med him in Boroughs, Cities, Villages,
Attended him on Bridges, stood in Lanes,
Lord Gifts before him, proffer'd him their Othe,
Gave him their Heires, as Pages followed him,
Even at the heels, in golden multitudes.
He presently, as Greatnesse knowes it fell;
Steps me a little higher then his Yow
Made to my Father, while his blood was poore,
Upon the naked shore at Rauenburgh:
And now (forlooth) takes on him to reforme
Some certaine Eftists, and fame first Decrees,
That lay too heauie on the Common-wealth;
Cryes out upon abuses, seems to weep
Ouer his Countries Wrongs: and by this Face,
This seeming Brow of Justice, did he winne
The hearts of all that hee did angle for.
Proceeded further, cut me off the Heads
Of all the favourers, that the obfient King,
In depuration left behinde him here,

When hee was perfomall in the Irish Warre.
Blunt. Turn, I came not to beekee this.
Hast. Then to the point.
In short time after, bee depos'd the King.
Some after that, did put him of his Life;
And in the neck of that, cast it the whole State;
To make that worse, fuffer'd his Kindred Marches,
Who is, if every Owner were plac'd,
Indeed hee the King, to bee engag'd in Wales,
There, without Ranfome, to be ye forfited:
Disgrac'd me in my happie Victories,
Sought to intrap me by intelligence,
Raced my Vnkle from the Counsellor-Board,
In rage difmis'd my Father from the Court,
Broke Oath on Oath, committ'd Wrong on Wrong,
And in conclusion, drove vs to seek out
This Head of fafeties; and withall, to prie
Into his Title; the which wee finde
Too indirekt, for long continuance.

Blunt. Shall I returne this answer to the King?
Hast. No so, Sir Walter,
Were with-draw a while:
Goe to the King, and let there be impawnd
Some sureties for a safe returne again,
And in the Morning early shall my Vnkle
Bring him our purpose: and to farewell,
Blunt. I would you would accept of Grace and Loue.
Hast. And I may be, so were shall.
Blunt. Pray Heaven you doe.

Exeunt.

Scene Quarta.

Enter the Arch Bishop of York, and Sir Michell.

Arch. Hee, good Sir Michell, bear this sealed Brieve
With winged haste to the Lord Marshall,
This to my Cousin Scroope, and all the rest
To whom they are directed.
If you knew how much they doe import,
You would make haste.

Sir Mich. My good Lord, I guesse their tenor,
Arch. Like enough you doe.
To morrow, good Sir Michell, a day,
Wherein the fortune of ten thousand men
Muft bide the touch. For Sir, as Shrewsbury,
As I am truly giv'en to vnderstand,
The King, with mightie and quick-rayfed Power,
Meetes with Lord Harry: and I fear, Sir Michell,
What with theickneffe of Northumberland,
Whole Power was in the first proportion;
And what with Owen Glendowers absence thence,
Who with them was rated firmly too,
And comes not in, over-rul'd by Prophecies,
I feare the Power of Percy is too weake,
To wage an infaunt tryst all with the King.

Sir Mich. Why, my good Lord, you need not feare,
There is Douglas, and Lord Martimer.

Arch. No, Martimer is not there.

Sir Mich. But there is Morrice, Ferrow, Lord Henry Percy,
And there is my Lord of Woreceler,
And a Head of gallant Warriors,
Noble Gentleman.
The First Part of King Henry the Fourth.

[ACT] And so there is, but yet the king hath drawne
The spireall head of all the lande together:
The prince of Wales, Lord John of Lancaster,
The noble Whittemeirland, and wastike Blount;
And many more Corialants, and dear men more.

Of eftimation, and command in Armes.

Sir M. D. Doubt not my lord, he shall be well oppo'd
Arch. I hope no leaster. Yet needful is to feare,
And to prevent the worst, Sir Mitchell sped;
For if lord Percy thrive not, etc. the king
Dislike his power, he means to visit vs.
For he hath heard of our Confederacie,
And, 'tis but Wisdome to make strong against him:
Therefore make hait, I must go write against
To other Friends: and so fare well, Sir Michell. Exeunt.

Atius Quintus. Scene Prima.

Enter the King, Prince of Wales, Lord John of Lancaster, Eustach Whittemeirland, Sir Walter Blount, and Frallafe.

King. How bloodily the Shame begins to presse
Above you buske hill: the day looks pale
At his distemperature.

Pron. The Southern winde
Doth play the Trumpet to his purpose,
And by his hollow whistling in the Leaues,
Forres a Tempest, and a打猎 ring day.
King. Then with the Infers best it symphazize,
For nothing can seeme faculties to those that win.

Enter Worcestr.

King. How now my Lord of Worcest? 'Tis not well
That you and I should meet upon such terms,
As now we meet. You have decended our truftr,
And made vs doffe our ears, Roberts of Peace.
To clothe our sad limbs in vngentle Steele:
This is not well, nor may I fancy your reasons:
What say you to it? Will you again vnske
This churlifh knot of all-abhorred Warre?
And more in that obdurate Obie agayne,
Where you did give a faire and naturall light,
And be no more an exhal'd Meteor,
A prodigie of Peace, and a Portent
Of broached Mischeefe, to the vnborne Times?

War. Hear me, my Liege:
For mine owne part, I could be well content
To entreate the Largeness of my life,
With quiet hours: For I do prostrate,
I have not fought the day of this dislike.

King. You have not fought it: how comes it then
This rebellion lay in his way, and he found it.

Pron. Peace, Cheuwet, peace, peace,
War. It pleas'd your Maiestie, to turne your looks
Of Pfavour, from my Selfe, and all our Houfe;
And yet I must remember you my Lord,
We were the first, and dearest of your Friends:
For you, my state of Office did I broke
In Richard's time, and gaftated day and night
To meete you on the way, and kifte your hand,

When yet you were in place, and in account
Nothing so strong and fortunate as I:
It was my Selfe, my Brother, and his Sonne,
That brought you home, and boldly did out-dare
The danger of the time. You swore to vs,
And you did sware that Oath at Doncastere,
That you did nothing of purpose gainst the State,
Nor can I further, then your new-fallne rights,
The cause of Gavant, Duke done of Lancaster,
To this, we sware our side: But in short space,
It cannot downe Fortune rowling on your head,
And such a fould of Greatneffe fell on you,
What with our help, what with the albeit: King,
With what the injuries of wanton time,
The seeming insufficiences that you had borne,
And the contrarious Windes that held the King
So long in the vaulty Irish Warres,
That all in England dipt repuke him dead:
And from this swarme of faire advantageous,
You took occasion to be quickly woor'd,
To stripe the general way into your hand,
Forgot your Oath to us at Doncastere,
And beene led by vs, you did so.
As that gentleull gack the Cockowes Bird,
Vith the Sparrow, did oppress our Neck,
Grew by our feeding, to goe a great bulke,
That euen our Loue dipt not come neere your sight
For fears of swelling: But with nimble wing
We were suffered to safety sike, to flye
Out of your sight; and raise this present Head,
Whereby we stand opposed by such meanes,
As you your selfe, haue fortg'd against your felie,
By wenzde viage, dangerous courtesie,
And violation of al faith and truth.
Swoone to vs in younger enterprize.

Kim. These things indeede you have articulated,
Proclaim'd at Market Crosses, read in Churches,
To face the Garment of Rebellion
With some fine colour, that may plese the eye
Of tickle Changelings, and poore Discontents,
Which gape, and rub the Elbow at the newes
Of hury burly Innovation:
And more yet did infranction want
Such water-calfe, to impaint his cause:
Not moodly Beggar's, flattering for a time
Of pell-mell haustock, and confusion.

Pron. In both our Armies, there is many a soule
Shall pay full dearly for this encounter,
If once they inoyne in triall. Tell your Nephew,
The Prince of Wales doth inoyne with all the world
In Praife of Henry Percy: By my Hopes,
This present enterprize set off his head,
I do not thinke a braver Gentleman,
More afhie, valiant, or more valiant poyng,
More daring, or more bold is now alive,
To grace this latter Age with Noble deeds.

For my part, I may speak it to my shame,
I have a Trustee beene to Chivalry,
And so I hear, he doth account me too:
Yet this before my Fathers Maiesty,
I am content that he shall take the oddes
Of his great name and eftimation,
And will, to face the blood on either side,
Try fortune with him, in a Single Fight.

King. And Prince of Wales, so dace we render thee,
Albeit, considerations infinite.

IV. iv. 27—V. i. 102

389
The First Part of King Henry the Fourth.

Do make against it: no Good Worlde, no, We lose our people well; yet those we lose That are milled upon your Cousins part: And will they take the offer of our Grace: Both he, and they, and you; yea, every man Shall be my Friend against, and I'll be his, So tell your Cousin, and bring me word, What he will do. But if he will not yield, Rebuke and dread correction wait on vs, And they shall do their Office. So bee gone, We will not now be troubled with reply, We offer faire, take it advisedly.

Exit Worcester.

Prin. It will not be accepted, on my life, The Despatch and the Heaturre both together, Are confident against the world in Armes.

King. Hence therefore, every Leader to his charge, For on their answer we will set on them; And God befriend vs, as our cause is just. Exeunt.

Mant Prince and Falstaff.

Ful. Hal, if thou fee me downe in the battell, And befriend me, fo 'tis a point of friendship.

Prin. Nothing but a Celophius can do thee that friendship Say thy prayers, and farewell.

Ful. I would it were bed time Hal, and all well,

Prin. Why, thou ow'st heauen a death.

Fal. 'Tis not due yet: I would bee loath to pay him before his day. What neede I bee fo'ward with him, that all not on my part? Well, let no master, Honor prick me on. But how if Honour prick me off when I come on? How then? Can Honour fact too a legget? No: or an arme? No: or take away the greefe of a wound? No. Honour hath no skill in Surgerie, then? No. What is Honour? A word. What is that word Honour? Ayre: A trim reckoning. Who hath it? He that dy'de a Wednesday. Doth he fee? No. Doth he hear? No. Is it inefable thing yet, to the dead. But will it not live with the living? No. Why? Detraction will not suffer it, therefore I none of it. Honour is a mere Scutcheon, and so ends my Catechisme.

Exit.

Scena Secunda.

War. O no, my Nephew must not know, Sir Richard, The liberal kind of offer the King.

Ver. I were best he did. War. Then we are all vndone. It is not possible, it cannot be, The King would keep his word in louing vs, He will subiect vs still, and finde a time To punisht this offence in others faults: Supposition, all our hues, shall be fluke full of yeas; For Treason is but trodled like the Plaine. Who are't that name, so chearful, and lock'd vp, Will have a wilder tricke of his Ancestors? Looke how he can, or sad or merrily, Interpretation will misquote our looks, And we shall seee like Oxen at a stall, The better chearish, still the nearer death. My Nephewes treipasse may be well forgot, It hath the exuse of youth, and heart of blood, And an adopted name of Pitusedge, A haire-brain'd Heaturre, governed by a Speene. All his offences flue upon my head, And on his Fathers, We did traine him on, And his corruption being tane from vs, We at the Spring of all, shall pay for all; Therefore good Cousin, let not Harry know In any case, the offer of the Kings.

Ver. Deliuer what you will, he say's tis fo. Here comes your Cousin.

Enter Heaturre.

War. There is no seeming mercy in the King. Hot. Did you begge any? God forbid. War. I told him gently of our grievances, Of his Oath-breking: which he mended thus, By now forswearing that he forsworne, He calls vs Rebels, Traitors, and will scourge With haughty armes, this hatefull name in vs.

Dow. Arme Gentlemen, to Armes, for I have thrown A braue defiance in King Henry's teeth: And Westmerland that was inag'd did beare it, Which cannot choo se but bring him quickly on.

War. The Prince of Wales stopt forth before the King. And Nephew, challenge you to single fight, Hot. O, would the quarrell lay upon our heads, And that no man might draw short brash to day, But I and Harry Moonswin, Tell me, tell me, How thow'd this Talking? Seen'd it in contempt? Ver. No, by my Soule: I neuer in my life Did hear a Challenge urg'd more modestly, Vinelle a Brother should a Brother dare To gentle exercise, and Proofe of Armes. The First Part of King Henry the Fourth.

Mf. My Lord, here be Letters for you.

Hot. I cannot read them now.

Gentlemen, the time of life is short;
To spend that shortness safely, were too long.
If life did ride upon a Dialls point,
Still ending at the arrival of an hour,
And if we live, we live to read on Kings;
If dye, brace death, when Princes dye with us.
Now for our Conferences, the Armes is faire,
When the intent for bearing them is just.

Enter another Mfessinger.

Mf. My Lord prepare, the King comes on space.

Hot. I thank you, that he eates me from my tale:
For I professe not talking: Onely this,
Let each man do his beth. And here I draw a Sword,
Whose worthy temper I intend to flame
With the belted blood that I can mete withall,
In the aduenture of this perillous day,
Now Efferance Percy, and set on:
Sound all the lusty Instruments of Warre,
And by that Mufick, let vs all embrace:
For heaven to earth, some of vs never shall,
A second time do such a curtefe.
They embrace, the Trumpets sound, the King entereth with his power, armes unto the battell, Then enter Douglas, and Sir Walter Blunt,

Blu. What is thy name, that in battell thus \\crost thee? What honor doth thou feck upon my head? Dom. Know then my name is Douglas,
And I do haunt thee in the battell thus,
Because some tell me, that thou art a King.
Blunt. They tell thee true.
Dom. The Lord of ScotfFord deere to day hath bought Thy likeness for anfe of thee the King Harry,
This Sword hath ended him, so shall it thee,
Vnlesse thou yeld thee as a Prisoner.

Blu. I was not borne to yeld, thou haughty Scot,
And thou shalt finde a King that will revenge:
Lords ScotfFords death.

Blunt. Fie, Blunt is Blame, then enters Hovwar.

Hot. O Douglas, hast thou fought at Holmedon thus
I never had triumphed o're a Scot.

Dom. All's done, all's won, here brethlesst lies the king

Hot. This Douglas? No, I know this face full well:
A gallant Knight he was, his name was Blunt,
Semblibly furni'd like the King himselfe,

Dom. Ah foole: go with thy foule whether it goes,
A borrowed Title haft thou bought too deere.
Why didst thou tell me, that thou wert a King?
Dom. The King hath many marching in his Coats.

Hot. Now by my Sword, I will kill all his Coates,
He murther all his Wardrobe piece by piece,
Until I meet the King.

Hot. Vp, and away.

Our Soulilders stand full fairely for the day.

Exeunt Armes, and enter Falstaffe folus.

Fal. Though I could scape shot-free at London, I fear the shot here: here's no scorning, but upon the pate.Soft who are you? Sir Walter Blunt, there's Honour for you: here's no vanity, I am as hot as molten Lead, and as heavy too: heaven keeps Lead out of me, I neede no more weight then mine owne Bowelles. I have led my rag of Muffins where they are pepper'd; there's not three of my 1 y 0. left alive, and they for the Townes end, to beg during life. But who comes here?

Enter the Prince.

Prin. What, stand'st thou idle here? Lend me thy sword, Many a Nobleman likes flanke and thistle
Vnder the hooves of vaunting enemies,
Whole deathes are vinegar'd. Pray lend me thy sword
Fal. O Hal, I prethee give me leave to breake white: Turk Gregory never did such deeds in Armes, as I have done this day. I have paid Percy, I have made him fate.
Prin. He is indeed, and liuing to kill thee:
I prethee lend me thy sword.

Fal. Nay Hal, if Percy bee alive, thou gettest not my Sword; but take my Pitfoll if thou wilt.

Prin. Give it me: What, is it in the Cave?

Fal. I Hal, tis hot: There's that will Sack a City.
The Prince draws out a Bottle of Sacke.

Prin. What, is it a time to left and daily now. Exit. Throws it at him.

Fal. If Percy be alive, I lie hirsh: if he do come in my way, do: if he do not, if I come in his (willingly) let him make a Carbonado of me. I like not such grinning honour as Sir Walter hath: Give mee life, which if I can fate, I do, if not, honour comes vnlook'd for, and then's an end.

Exit.

Scena Tertia.

Allarms, excursions, enter the King, the Prince,
Lord John of Lancaster, and Earl of Westermiland.

King. I prethee Harry withdraw thy selfes, thou bleedest too much: Lord John of Lancaster, go you with him.
P. Joh. Not I, my Lord, vnlesse I did bleed too.

Prin. Ife beseach thy Maiestie make vp,
Left thou retirements do amaze your friends.

King. I will do so:
My Lord of Westermiland lead him to his Tent.

Weft. Come my Lord, Ile lead thee to your Tent.

Prin. Lead me my Lord? Do I not need your helpe;
And heauen forbid a shallow scratch should drive
The Prince of Wales from such a field as this,
Where fail'd Nobility lies troden on,
And Rebels Armes triumph in maefeare.

John. We breath too long; Come coyn Westermiland,
Our duty this way lies, for heat's sake take come.

Prin. By heauen thou haft deceiv'd me Lancaster,
I did not think thee Lord of such a spirit: Before, I loo'd thee as a Brothet, John;
But now, I do respect thee as my Soule.

King. I saw him hold Lord Percy at the point,
With lighter mainteinance then I did look for
Of such an ungrowne Warrior.

Prin. O this Boy, lends mettall to vs all. Exit.

Enter Douglas.

Dou. Another King? They grow like Hydra's heads:
I am the Douglas, fatal to all thohe
That wear those colours on them. What art thou
That counterfeitst the person of a King?

King. The King himselfe: who Douglas grieues at hart

A Kingdome for it was too small a bound:
But now two pieces of the vilest Earth
Is room enough. This Earth that bears the dead;
Bestes not alike to foure a Gentleman,
If thou wer't enfile of curteu,
I should not make so great a shew of Zeale,
But let my favours hide thy mangled face,
And even in thy behalf, Ile thanke my felse
For doing these fayre Rites of Tendernesse.
A dieu, and take thy pralfe with thee to heaven,
Thy ignomy flepe with thee in the grave,
But not remembered in thy Epitaph.
What? Old Acquaintance? Could not all this flesh
Keep in a little life? Poorle lacke, farewell;
I could have better fpar'd a better man,
O, I should have a heavy miste of thee,
If I were much in love with Vanitye.
Death hast not strucke to cut a Decree to day,
Though many deester in this bloosy Fray:
Imbowell'd I wil life thee by and by,
Till then, in blood,by Noble Perciye eye.

So many of his shadowes thou haft met,
And not the very King, 1 bare two Boyes
Seeke Percy, and thy felle west about the Field:
But seeing thou fell, I have no lucke,
I will alay thee: so be laide thy felle.

Thou art another counterfeit;
And yet infaith thou fere it thee like a King;
But mine I am sure thou art, wherefore thou be,
And thus I win thee. They fight, the K'ing in danger, to Enter Prince.

Prim. Hold vp they head vile Scot, or thou art like Neuer to hold it vp vsinge the Spirits.
Of vaillant Shrewes, Staffords, Pented, are in my Armes;
It is the Prince of Wales that threatens thee,
Who never promifie, but he meanes to pay.

They Fight, Dorglas ftritt.

Cheerely My Lord: how fare thy Grace?
Sir Nicholas Gaushey hath for face count, And to haft Ciffon: Ile to Cliffon ftraight.

King. Stay, and breath awhile.
Thou haft oerefent thy loff opinion,
And shew'd thou make'st some tender of my life
In this faire recepts thou haft brought to me
Prim. O heauen, they did me too much injury,
That ever fayed I heartned to thy death.
If it were fo, I might have let alone
The infulting hand of Dorglas over thee,
Which would have beene so speedy in your end,
As all the poyonous Potions in the world,
And fay'd the Techerous labour of your Sonne.

X. Make wp to Ciffon, Ile to Sir Nicholas Gaushey. Exit Enter Halfe.

Hot. If I mistake not, thou art Harry Mounmouth.
Prim. Thou speakeft it as I would deny my name,
Hot. My name is Harue Percio.

Prim. Why then I faw a very vaillant rebel of that name,
I am the Prince of Wales, and think not Percio,
To fhare with me in glory any more:
Two Starres keepe not their motion in one Sphere,
Nor can one England brooke a double trage,
Of Harry Percy, and the Prince of Wales.
Hot. Not fithen Harry, for the hour is come
To end one day, and to begin new.
Thy name in Armes, were now as great as mine.
Prim. Ile make it greater, ere I part from thee,
And all the budding Hones on thy Cheef,
Ile crop, to make a Earl, mad for my head.
Hot. I can no longer brooke thy Vanities. Fight. Enter Faliffy.

Fal. Well fayd Hot, so Hal. Nay you fhall finde no
Boyes play here, I can tell you.

Enter Dorglas, for fighes with Faliffy, who fells down as the two were dead, The Prince killeth Percio.

Hot. Oh Harry, thou haft rob'd me of my youth:
I better brooke the losse of bratle life,
Then thoat proud Titles thou haft wonne of me,
They would my thoughts worfe, then the fword my flesh:
But thought's the flame of Life, and Life, Times foole;
And Time, that takes faire away the world,
Must have a stop. O, I could Prophesie,
But that the Earth, and the cold hand of death,
Lyes on my Tongue: No Percy, thou art duft
And food for—

Prim. For Womer, bratve Percy. Farewell great hearts;
It wou'd Ambition, how much art thou fhrunk?
When that this bodie did contain a Spirit.
The First Part of King Henry the Fourth.

Come bring your luggage nobly on your backe:
For my part, I joy may do thee grace.
He gild'st with the happiest tearmes I have.
A Retreat is founded.
The Trumpets sound Retreat, the day is ours:
Come Brother, let's to the highest of the field,
To see what Friends are living, who are dead.
Excuse me, I follow as they lay, for Reward, see that rewards me, heuere to ward him. If I do grow great again, He grow full leffe? For He purge, and leave Sacke, and live cleanly, as a Nobleman should do.

Scene Quarta.

The Trumpets sound.
Enter the King, Prince of Wales, Lord John of Lancaster,
Earle of Westmoreland, with Worcester &
Worcester Prisoners.

King. Thus ever did Rebellion finde Rebuke,
Ill-spired Worcester, did we not send Grace,
Pardon, and tearmes of Love to all of you:
And wouldst thou turne our offers contrary?
Misuse the tenor of thy Kinsman truth?
Three Knights upon our party shine to day,
A Noble Earle, and many a creature else,
Had beene alowe this hours,
If like a Christian thou hadst it truly borne Betwixt our Armies, true Intelligence.
Now. Whate I have done, my Safety urg'd me to,
And I embrace this fortune patientely,
Since not to be annoyed, it falls on mee.
King. Beare Worcester to death, and Vernon too:
Other Offenders we will pult upon.

How goes the Field?

Prim. The Noble Scot Lord Douglas, when he saw
The fortune of the day quite turn'd from him,
The Noble Percy then, and all his men,
Upon the foot of fear, fled with the rest;
And falling from a hill, he was so bruiz'd
That the pursuers tooke him. At my Tent
The Douglas is, and I beseech your grace,
I may dispose of him.
King. With all my heart.

Prim. Then Brother John of Lancaster,
To you this honourable bounty shall belong:
Go to the Douglas, and deliver him
Up to his pleasure, ransomlesse and free:
His Valour shewne upon our Crefts to day,
Hath taught us how to cherish such high deeds,
Even in the bosome of our Adversaries.

King. Then this remains: that we divide our Power.
You Sonne John, and my Cousin Westmoreland,
Towards Yorke shall bend you, with your deereft speed
To meet Northumberland, and the Prelate Scroope,
Who (as we hear) are busi in Armes,
My Selfe, and you Sonne Harry will towards Wales,
To fight with Glendower, and the Earle of March,
Rebellion in this Land shall lose his way,
Meeting the Checke of such another day:
And since this Butineffe so faire is done,
Let us not leave till all our owne be wonne.

INDUCTION.

Enter Rousnor.

Pen your Eares: For which of you will stop The vent of Hearing, when loud Rumor speaks? \(\text{E}^\text{r}\), from the Orient, to the drooping Wolf (Making the windes my Pashborne) still unfold The acts commenced on this Ball of Earth, Vpon my Tongue, continuall Slanders ride, The which, in every Language, I pronounce, Stuffing the Eares with false Reports: To speak of Peace, while euer Emtime (Vnder the smile of Safety) wounds the World: And who but Rumor, who but only I Make heartfull Matters, and prepare Defence, Whilst the bigge yeares, foolone with some other griefes, Is thought with childe, by the sterile Tyrant, Warre, And no such matter? Rumor, is a Pipe Blowne by Swrries, Ieloufes, Conicetures; And of so eafe, and to plaine a stop, That the blunt Moniter, with uncounted heads, The Hill discordant, wawering Multitude, Can play upon. But what neede I thus My well knowne Body to Aanthomize Among my household? Why is Rumor here? I run before King Harries victory, Who in a bloodie field by Shrewsbury Hath bearest downe Yong Hostylarie, and his Troopes, Qenishing the same of bold Rebellion, Even with the Rebels blood. But what meane I To speake so true at thift? My Office is: To noyse abroad, that Harries Monmouth fell Under the Wrath of Noble Hostylaries Sword: And that the King, before the Douglas Rage Stoopd his Anointed head, as lowe as death. This hauie I rumonied through the peafant-Townes, Betweene the Royall Field of Shrewsbury, And this Wone,-eaten-Hole of ragged Stone, Where Hostylarie Father, old Northermberland, Lyes crasty suche, The Poles come tyring on, And not a man of them brings other newes Then they hauie learn'd of Me. From Rousnour Tongues, They bring smooth-Comforts-falle, worste then True-wrongs.

Enter Lord Bardolf, and the Porter.

L.Bar. Who keepeth the Gate here? Where is the Earl? Por. What shall I say you are? Bar. Tell thou the Earl This is the Lord Bardolf doth attend him here. Por. His Lordship is walk'd forth into the Orchard, Plesse it your Honor, knocke but at the Gate, And he himselfe will anwer.

Enter Northumberland.

L.Bar. Heere comes the Earl. Nor. What newes Lord Bardolf? Ev'ry minute now Should be the Father of some Stratagem; The Times are wild: Contention (like a Horse Full of high Feeding) madly hath broke loose, And beares downe all before him. L.Bar. Noble Earl, I bring you certaine newes from Shrewsbury. Nor. Good, and heaven will.

L.Bar. As good as heart can wish; The King is almost wounded to the death: And in the Fortune of my Lord your Sonne, Prince Harris (alone out-right) and both the Blunts Kill'd by the hand of Dymghar, Yong Prince John, And Wellmberd, and Stafford, Red the Field, And Harris Munnsmouths Brawne (the Hulke Sir John) Is prisoner to your Sonne, O, such a Day, (So fought, so follow'd, and so fairly wonne) Came not, till now, to dignifie the Times Since Caffor Fortunes.

Nor. How is this derlue? Saw you the Field? Came you from Shrewsbury? L.Bar. I spake with one (my L.) that came from thence, A Gentleman well bred, and of good name, That freely render'd me these newes for true.

Nor. Heere comes my Seruant Travers, whom I sent On Tuesday last, to litten after newes. Enter Travers.

L.Bar. My Lord, I ouer-rod him on the way, And he is furnish'd with no certainties, More then he (haply) may retaile from me. Nor. Now Travers, what good tidings comes fro you?

Enter.
Your Spirit is too true, your Features too certain,
North. Yet for all this, say not that Percys dead.
I see a strange Confession in thine Eye:
Thou hast’t thy head, and hold it if Fears, or Sinne,
To speak a truth. I be blame, say fo:
The Towne offends not, that reports his death:
And he doth thinke that doth belye the dead:
Nor he, which sayes the dead is not alive:
Yet the first brings of an Welcome News:
Hath but a loosing Office: and his Tongue,
Sounds euer after: as a fullen Bell
Rememberd, knolling a departing Friend.

L. Bar. I cannot thinke (my Lord) your son is dead,
Mar. I am fortys, I should force you to beleue
That, which I would to heauen, I had not feene.
But these mine eyes, saw him in bloody statte,
Rendring faire quittance (wastred, and out-breath’d)
To Heaven, Memphis, whose (wit wildest beast downe)
The newer-dann’d Percis to the earth,
From whence (with life) the newer more sprung vp:
In few: his death (whose spirit lent a fire,
Euen to the dulles Pezant in his Campe)
Being bruited once, tooks fire and heat away
From the belt tempter’d Courage in his Troopers.
For from his Mestie, was his Party fleed’d;
Which once, in him abated, all the reft
Turn’d on themselues, like dull and heavy Lade:
And as the Thing, that’s heavy in it selfe,
Vpon enforcement, eyes with greatest Spede,
So did our Men, heame in Hostilies loffe,
Lend to this weight, that lightness with their Fears,
That Arrowes fled not swifter toward their ymme,
Then did our Soldiers (yamning at their safety)
Fly from the field. Then was that Noble Worcestre
Too fonene ta’ne prisoner: and that iusts Scoot,
(The bloody Douglas) whose well-labelling sword
Had three times slaine th’appearance of the King,
Gan vaille his stomacke, and did grace the shme
Of those that turn’d their backes: and in his flight,
Stumbling in Fears, was tooke.
The fumme of all,
Is, that the King hath wonne: and hath sent out
A speeding power, to encounter you my Lord,
Vnder the Conduit of yong Lancaster
And Westminster. This news I mean at full:
North. Far this, I shall have time enough to ewoce,
In Poyfon, there is Physicke: and this newes
(Hauning bee welle) that would haue made me sickes,
Being fickle, haue in some measure, made me well.
And as the Wretch, whose Fears-weakned lyoms,
Like freneticklde Flander, buckke vnder life,
Impatient of his Fit, breaks like a lite
Out of his keepers arms: Euen fo, my Limbes
(Weake’d with griefes) being now inrag’d with griefes,
Are thrice themselfes. Hence therefore thou nise cruch,
A faile Gauntlet now, with lyoms of Steele
Must gloeue this hand, And hence thou sickly Quofo
Thou art a guard too wanton for the head,
Which Princes, shad’t with Conquest, symne to hit.
Now Sinde my Bowes with Iron and approach
The rage’d here, the Time: with sight dare bring
To frowe upon th’enrag’d Northumberland,
Let Heauen kiffe Earth: now let not Natures hand
Kepe the wide Flood confin’d: Let Order dye,

L. Bar. Sweet Earle, divorce not wisdome from your

Stor. The lilies of all your looming Complizes
Leane-on your health, the which if you give o't
To stormy Passion, mutil perfecte decay,
You call the event of Warre (my Noble Lord)
And sum'd the accompt of Chance, before you said
Let vs make head: It was your preturminute,
That in the dale of blowes, your Son might drop,
You knew he walk'd o're peril, on an edge
More likely to fall in, then to get o't:
You were advis'd his flesh was capabele
Of Wounds, and Scarcers; and that his forward Spirit
Would lift him, where most trade of danger rag'd,
Yet did you fay go forth: and none of this (Though strongly apprehended) could refraine
The flitte-born Action: What hath then befalne?
Or what hath this bold enterprise brought forth,
More then that Being, which was like to be?

L. Bar. We all that are engaged to this losse,
Knew that we ventur'd on such dangerous Seas,
That if we wrought out life, was ten to one:
And yet we ventur'd for the gaine propos'd,
Choak'd the refecf of likely peril fear'd,
And yet we ventur'd, venture again
Come, we will all put forth: Body, and Goods.

Stor. Tis more then time: And (my most Noble Lord)
I hear for certaine, and do speak the truth:
The gentil-Arch-bishop of Yorke is vp
With well appointed Powres: he is a man
Who with a double Surety binds his Followers,
My Lord (your Sonne) had onely but the Copres,
But hadoves, and the throughes of men to fight.
For that fame word (Rebellion) did divid
The action of their bodiys, from their foules,
And they did fight with queuinesse, constrain'd
As men drinke Potions; that their Weapons only
Seem'd on our side: but for their Spirits and Soules,
This word (Rebellion) it had froze them vp,
As Fish are in a Pond. But now the Bishop
Turnes Infrucktion to Religion,
Support'd fancie, and holy in his Thoughts:
He's follow'd both with Body, and with Minde:
And doth enlarg[e his Rising, with the blood
Of faire King Richard, ferap'd from Pompier flies,
Deriuies from heauen, his Quarrrell, and his Caufe:
Tels them, he doth bedreife a bleeding Land,
Graipign for life, vnder great Endings,
And more, and leffe, do froke to follow him,

North. I know'd of this before. But to speake truth,
This present greefe had wip'd it from my minde.
Go in with me, and conceall every man
The apett for wayty, and revencge:
Get Polls, and Letters, and make Friends with speed,

Fal. Not so (my Lord) your ill Angelis light; but I hope, he that looks upon mee, will take me without, weighing; and yet, in some respects I grant, I cannot go: I cannot tell, Verstis is of so little regard in these Conformengers, that true valor is turn'd Beare-heard, Pregnancie is made a Toper, and hath his quickie wit wrested in giving Recknings: all the other gifts appertaining to man (as the malice of this Age shapes them) are not woorath a Gooseberry. You that are old, consider not the capacities of vs that are young: you maste the heat of our Li-uers, with the bitterness of your galls: & we that are in the warden of our youth, I mull confide, are wages too.

Inf. Do you set downe your name in the crowle of youth, that are written downe old, while all the Charsacteres of age? Have you not a moist eye? a dry hand? a yellow cheekers white beard? a decreasing leg? an ingeling belly? Is not your voice broken? your winds short? your wit fingle? and every part about your blasted with Antiquity, and will you call your selfe young? fy, fy, fy, list John.

Fal. My Lord, I was borne with a white head, & for-thing a round belly. For my voice, I have left it with hallowing and singing of Anthemes. To approve your youth father, I will not the truth is, I am onely olde in judgement, and vnderstanding: and he that will espere with mee for a thousand Mares, let him lend me the mony, & have at him. For the boxe of th'earth that the Prince gave you, he gave it like a rude Prince, and you took it like a peni-sible Lord. I have cheks for him, and the young Lion regents. Marry not in afts and shape-cloths, but in new Silke, and old Sacke.

Inf. We, heauen fend the Prince a better companion.

Fal. Heauen fend the Companion a better Prince: I cannot rid my hands of him.

Inf. Well, the King hath feuer'd you and Prince Harry, I heare you are going with Lord John of Lancaster, against the Archibishop, and the Earle of Northumberland.

Fal. Yes, I thank your pretty sweet wis for it: but look ye pray, all you that kiffe my Lady Petruce, as he hath our Armies, sion in a hot day: for if I take but two Sixe's out with me, and I meane not to swet extraordinari: if he be a hot day, I will brandish any thing but my Bottle, would I might never spit white againe: There is not a dangerous Action can peepe out his head, but I am thrust upon it. Well, I cannot sleeuer.

Inf. We, be honest, be honest, and heauen blest your Expedition.

Fal. Will your Lordship lend mee a thousand pound, to furnish me forth?

Inf. Not a penny, nor not a penny: you are too impatient to beare croffes. Fare you well. Commend mee to my Cousin Wulfenrider.

Fal. If I do, fillop mee with a three-man-Beetle. A man one, and the poppins the other; and fo both the Degrees present my curtesy. Boy?

Page. Sir.

Edw. What money is in my purse?

Page. Seven groats and two pence.

Edw. I can get no money against this Consumption of the purse. Borrowing only lingers, and lingers it out, but the disburse is insupportable. Go bear this letter to my Lord of Lancaster, this to the Prince, this to the Earle of Westmister, and this to old Misiris Urso, whom I have weekly sworn to marry, since I perceive'd the first white hair on my chin. About it: you know where to finde me. A pos of this Gown, or a Gown of this Poxe: for one or the other players the rogue with my great toe: It is no matter, if I do halt; I have the warres for my colour, and my Pension shall seeme the more reasonable. Seena Quarta.

Enter Archbishops, Halleye, Mowbray, and Lord Bardolph.

A'r. Thus haue you heard our caufes, & know our Means: And my moft noble Friends, I pray you all Speak plainly your opinions of our hopes, And firft (Lord Marshall) what say you to it?

Mar. I well allow the occasion of our Armes, But gladly would be better satisfie, How (in our Means) we should advance our felues To looke with forhead bold and big enough Upon the Power and puifance of the King.

Hal. Our present Mullers grow upon the File To free and twenty thouland men of choice: And our Supplies, live largely in the hope Of great Northumberland, whole bofonie burnes' With an intencd Fire of Injuries.

L. Bar. The question then (Lord Halley) landeth thus Whether our present fife and twenty thouland May hold vp-head, without Northumberland: Hal. With him, we may.

L. Bar. Sir, there's the point: But if without him we be thought to feeble, My judgemen is, we should not repp too farre; Till we had his Aflifance by the land.

For in a Thame so bloody fax'd, as this, Conrieure, Experiment, and Surniffe Of Aydes in certaine, should not be admitted.

Arch. 'Tis very true Lord Bardolph, for indeed It was young Hallyeffe cafe, at Shrewsbury.

L. Bar. It was (my Lord) who mad himselfe with hope, Eating the ayre, on promife of Supply, Plaing himfelfe with Proiect of a power, Much smaller, then the smallest of his Thoughts, And so with great imagination (proper to mid men) led his Powers to death, And (winking) leap'd into destruction.

Hal. But (by your leave) it never yet did hurt, To lay downe likely-hood, and formerly of hope.

L. Bar. Yes, if this pretent quality of warre, Indeed the inhumation cause on foot, Lies so in hope: As in an early Spring, We fee th'appearing buds, which to proue fruite, Hope guine not so much warrant, as Difpaire.

That Froft will bite them. When we meane to build, We fift furvey the Pofet, then draw the Modell, And when we fee the figure of the house, Then must we rate the cof of the Erection, Which if we finde out-wights Ability, What do we then, but draw a new the Modell In fewere offices Or at leaft, deficit To build at all? Much more, in this great worke, (Which is almost) to plucke a Kindome downe, And (yet another vp) should we labour The plot of Situation, and the Modell: Content upon a pure Foundation: Question Surveyors, know our owne estate, Howable such a Warke to vndergo, To weigh against his Opposite? Or elle, We forthe in Paper, and in Figures, Vning the Names of men, instead of men: Like one, that draws the Modell of a house Beyond his power to build it; who (after through) Givs o're, and leaves his part-created Cost A naked subiect to the Weeping Clouds, And waffe, for churlifh Judges tyrannee.

Hal. Grant that our hopes (yet likely of faire buyth) Should be still-horne; and that we now poffett The vnoft man of expectation:

I think we are a Body strong enough (Even as we are) to equall with the King.

L. Bar. What is the King but fife & twenty thouland? Hal. To vs no more: may not so much Lord Bardolph, For his diuisions (as the Times do brazal)

Are in three Heads: one Power against the French, And one again Glendor: Perforce a third Must take vp vs: So is the enemie King In three diuided; and his Coffers found With hollow Poverty, and Emptineffe.

A'r. That he should draw his feveral strengthes together And come against vs in full puifance

Need not be dreaded.

Hal. If he should do so. He leues his backe vnarm'd, the French, and Welsh Baying him at the heele: never feare that.

L. Bar. Who is it like should lead his Forces hither? Hal. The Duke of Lancaster, and Westmester: Againft the Welsh himselfe, and Harrisie Monmouth. But who is substituted against the French, I have no certaine notice.

Arch. Let vs see, and publith the occasion of our Armes. The Common-wealth is fickle of their owne Choice, Their outer-greedie loue hath forfeiture; An habitation giddy, and vnure Hath he that buildeth on the vulgar heart. O thou fond Many, with what loud applause Did it thou beare heaven with blesing Barking brooks, Before he vs, what thou wouldft hate him be? And being now trimm'd in thine owne defires, Thou (beaftly Fedar) art so full of him.

That thou proukst thy felfe to caft him vp. So do,(thou common Dogge) didst thou difgoufe Thy gluton-bosome of the Koyall Richard, And now thou wouldft ele thy dead vomit vp, And howl it to finde it. What truff in thee thes Times? They, that when Richard liard, would have him dys, Are now become en/mour'd on his grave.

Thou that chew'st & foften upon thy goody head When through proud London he came fighting on, After th'admir'd heales of Barking brooks, Crift now, O Earth, yeeld vs that King againe, And Enter Holofer, with two Officers. Fang, and Snare.
Holofer. Mr. Fang, have you entered the Action?
Fang. It is entered.
Holofer. What's your Yeoman? Is it a lusty yeoman? Will he hold to it?
Fang. Sirrah, where's Snare?
Holofer. I, good M. Snare, I have entered him, and all.
Sn. It may change cost some of us our lines: he will stab Holofer.
Holofer. Also the day: take heed of him: he flabbed me in mine own house, and that most badly: he cares not what mischief he doth, if his weapon be out. He will foyne like any dull, he will spare neither man, woman, nor child.
Fang. If I can clofe with him, I care not for his thrift.
Holofer. No, nor I: neither I be at your elbow.
Fang. If I but fild him once if he come but within my Vicc.
Hof. I am vndone with his going: I warrant he is an infinite thing upon my score. Good M. Fang hold him fast, and good M. Snare let him not escape, he comes continually to P Venice (sauing your mammocks) to buy a faddle, and he is incited to dine to the Lubeckas head in Lombardstreet, to M. Smooths the Silksman: I pra ye, since my Exion is enter'd, and my Cafee of openly knowne roble world, let him be brought in to his answer: A too. Maize is a long one, for a poore woman to bracce: & I have borne, borne, and borne, and have bin fabb'd, and fabb'd off, from this day to that day, that it is a fame to be thought on. There is no honesty in fuch dealing, wives a woman Should be made an Affe and a Beast, to brace e very Knutes wrong.
Enteer Falstaff and Bardolf. Yonder he comes, and that warrant Malmeley-Note Bar- dolf with him. Do your Offices, and do your Offices: M. Fang, & M. Snare, do me, do me, do your Offices.
Fang. How now, whose Maret's dead what's the matter?
Fang. Sir John, I areth you, at the fuit of Milly Quickly.
Fal. Away Varlets, draw Bardolf out. Cut me off the Villaineshead: throw the Queene in the Channel.
Ch. Justice. What's the matter? Keep the Peace here, hoas.
Hof. Good Mr. Justice, be good to me, I befeech you stand to me.
Ch. Justice. Now fo Sir John? What are you broiling here? Doth this become your place, your time, and busineffe? Thou should bene well on your way to Yorke. Stand from his Fellow, wherefore hang it upon him?

The second Part of King Henry the Fourth.

Fal. Gluttony, gluttony, is the onely drinking: and for thy walles a pretty flight Drollery, or the Scene of the Prodigall, or the Germaine hunting in Waterhouse, is worth a thousand of these Bead-hanging; and these Fly-bitten Tapitantes. Let it be tenne pound (if thou canst.) Come, if we were not for thy hunters, there is not a better Weach in England. Go, swath thy face, and draw thy Action: Come, thou must not bee in this humour with me; come, I know thou was't fée on to this.

Hoy. Prebesh (Sir John) it be but twenty Nobles, I hoath to pawn my Place in good earnest.

Fal. Let it alone, He make other shift: you'll be a fool.

Hoy. Well, you shall haue it although I pawn my Gowne. Hope you'll come to Supper. You'll pay me altogether?

Fal. Will I line? Go with her, with her: hooke-on, hooke-on.

Hoy. Will you have Doll Trease? meet you at supper?

Fal. No more words. Let's have her.

Ch. full. I have heard bitter newes.

Fal. What's the newes. (my good Lord?)

Ch. In. Where lay the King left night?

Mts. At Basingtouke my Lord.

Fal. I hope (my Lord)all's well. What is the newes my Lord?

Ch. full. Come all his Forces backe.

Mts. Not. Estimable hundred Foot, five hundred Horse Are march'd vp to my Lord of Lancaster, Against Northumberland, and the Archbishop.

Fal. Comes the King backe from Wales, my noble Earl?

Ch. suft. You shall have Letters of me presently.

Come, go along with me, good M. Gower.

Fal. My Lord.

Ch. full. What's the matter?

Fal. Maller Gower, shall I entreate you with mee to dinner?

Gow. I must wraite upon my good Lord here.

I thank you, good Sir John.

Ch. full. Sir John, you layer heere too long being you are to take Souldiers vp, in Countries as you go.

Fal. Will you fip with me, Maller Gower?

Ch. full. What foolish Maller taught you these manners, Sir John?

Fal. Maller Gower, if they become mee not, bee was a Foolke that taught them mee. This is the right Fencing grace (my Lord) tap for tap, and so fairely.

Ch. full. Now the Lord lighten thee, thou art a great Foolke.

as to remember to weake a Composition.

Prince. Belike then, 'my Appetite was not Princely got for (in truth) I do now remember the poor Creatures, Small Beere. But indeede their humbe considerations make me out of towe with my Greatnesse. What a disgrace is it to me, to remember thy name? Or to, to know thy face to morrow? Or to take note how many paire of Silk stockings & baftes (Viz. thick, and those that were thy peach-coloured ones:) Or to bear the Inventorie of thy shirts, as one for superfluity, and one other. For that the Tennis-Court Keeper knowes better then I, for it is a low ebie of Linnen with thee, when thou kepest it not Racket there, as thou haft not done a great while, because the rest of thy Low Countries, haue made a shift to eare vp thy Holland.

Pohn. How ill it followes, after you have laboured so hard, you should talk so idlely? Tell me how many good yong Princes would do so, their Fathers lying to fickle, as yours is.

Pohn. Shall I tell thee one thing, Points &

Pohn. Yes: and let it be an excellent good thing.

Pohn. It shall ferve among wittes of no higher breeding then thine.

Tone. Go to: I stand the puff of your one thing, that you'll tell.

Pohn. Why, I tell thee, it is not meet, that I should be fad now my Father is fickle altho I could tell to thee (if to one it please me, for fault of a better, so call my friend) I should be fad, and fad indeed too.

Pohn. Very hardly, upon fuch a subiect.

Pohn. Thou think'st me as farre in the Dinell Book, as thou, and Falstaff, for obduracie and persifletice. Let the end trye the man, But I tell thee, my hart bleeds inwardsly, that my Father is fickle: and keeping such wild company as thou art, hath in reason taken from me, all envisiontation of sorrow.

Pohn. The reason?

Pohn. What would'thou think of me, if I should wepe?

Pohn. I would thinke thee a most Princeely hypocrite,

Pohn. It would be every mans thought; and thou art a bleeved Fellow, to thinke as every man thinks: neuer a mans thought in the world, keeps the Rode-way better then thine: every man would thinke me an Hypocrite indee. And what assietes thy most worthful thought, to thinke for?

Pohn. Why, because you have beene so lewde, and so much ingrusted to Falstaff.

Pohn. And to thee.

Pohn. Nay, I am well spoak of, I can hear it with mine owne ears:the worst that they can say of me, is, that I am a fcond Brother, and that I am a proper Fellow of my hands: and both two things I confesse I cannot help. Lookke, lookke, here comes Bardulfe.

Prince. And the Boy that I gave Falstaff, he had him from me Christian, and see if the far villain have not trans fornd him Ape.

Scena Secunda.

Enter Prince Henry, Prince, Bardulfe, and Page.

Prince. Trustme, I am exceeding wearey.

Pohn. Is it come to that? I had thought wearines durt not have attach'd one of so high blood.

Pohn. It doth me: though it discroas the complexion of my Greatnesse to acknowledge it. Doth it not shew wildly in me, to defire small Beere?

Pohn. Why, a Prince should not be so loosely studied,
The second Part of King Henry the Fourth.

Page. None my Lord, but old Miftris quickly, and M. Dell Treesheet.

Prin. What Pagans may that be?

Page. A proper Gentlemewman, Sir, and a Kinswoman of my Masters.

Prin. Even such Kin, as the Parish Hayfers are to the Towne-bull?

Shall we sleepe upon them (Ned) at Supper?

Prin. I am your shadow, my Lord, I lie follow you.

Prin. Sirrah, you boy, and Bardolph, no word to your Master that I am yet in Towne.

There's for your silence.

Bar. I have no tongue, sir.

Page. And for mine Sir, I will governe it.

Prin. Fare ye well: go.

This Doll Treesheet should be some Rode.

Prin. I warrant you, as common as the way betweene S. Albans, and London.

Prin. How might we see Falstaff beflow himselfe to night, in his true colours, and not our felipes be fetned?

Page. Put on t'wo Leather Jerkins, and Aprons, and waife upon him at his Table, like Drawers.

Prin. From a God, to a wall! A heusey declension; it was Iower cafe. From a Prince, to a Pretence, a low trans.

Scena Tertia.

Enter Northumberland, his Lady, and Harry Percy, Lord.

North. I prethee loying Wife, and gentle Daughter,

Gue an euell way into my rough Affaires:

Put not you on the vifage of the Times,

And be like them to Percie, troublesome.

Wife. I have giuen euuer, I will speake no more,

Do what you will: your Wifedome, be your guide.

North. Alas (victive Wife) my Honor is at pawn,

And but my going, nothing can redeem it.

Lo. Oh! yet, for heauens sake, go not to these Warres;

The Time was (Father) when you broke your word,

When you were more endeuer to it, then now,

When your owne Percy, when my heare-deere Harry,

Trew many a Norward looke to see his Father

Bring vp his Powres: but he did long in vaine,

Who then perfuaded you to stay as home?

There were two Honors left; Yours, and your Sonnes.

For Yours, may heavently glory brighten it:

For his, it fluke vp upon him, as the Sunne

In the gray vaul of Heauen: and by his Light

Did all the Chealeie of England mue

To do brave Acts. He was (indeed) the Glaffe

Wherein the Noble-Youth did drefle himselves.

He had no Leger, that prach'd not his Game;

And speaking thicke (which Nature mad his blemish)

Became the Accents of the Vailant.

For tho'se that could speake low, and tardily,

Would turne their owne Perfection, to Abufe,

To feeme like him. So that in Speech, in Gate,

In Dier, in Affections of delight,

In Militarie Rules, Humors of blood,
The second Part of King Henry the Fourth.

He was the Marke, and Glaife, Coppe, and Brooke,
That fashion'd others. And him, O wondrous him,
O Miracle of Men! Him did you leave
(Second to none) vin-seconded by you.

To looke upon the hideous God of Warre,
In disadvantage, to abide a field,
Where nothing but the found of Hotspur's Name
Did scene defensible: so you left him.

Neuer, O neuer doe his Ghost the wrong,
To hold your Honor more prettie and nice
With others, then with him. Let them alone:
The Marshall and the Arch-bishop are strong.

Had I my sweet Harry but halfe their Numbers,
To day might I (hanging on Hotspur's Necke)
Have ta'ld of <Mamouth's Graue.>

North. Befrew your heart,
(Faire Daughter) you doe draw my Spirites from me,
With new is nestling ancient Outer-fights:
But I must goe, and meet with Danger there,
Or it will ferke me in another place,
And finde me worfe provis'd,
Wife. O Bye to Scotland,
Till that the Nobles, and the armed Common,
Hau e of their Puifance made a little taste,
Lady. If they get ground, and vantage of the King,
Then lyone with you them, like a Ribbe of Steele,
To make their strength stronger. But for all our louses,
Fifth, it makes them tryke themselues. So did your Sonne,
He was so suffer'd; so came I a Widow:
And neuer (hail hau e length of Life enough,
To raine upon Remembrance with mine Eyes,
That it may grow, and sprout, as high as Heaven,
For Recordeation to my Noble Husband,
North. Come, come, goe in with merit with my Minde
As with the Tyde, swell'd vp into his height,
That makes a full-Hand, running neyther way,
Faine would I goe to meet the Arch-bishop,
But many thouland Resions hold me backe,
I will refolute for Scotland: there am I,
Till Time and Vantage craze my company. Exeunt.

Scena Quarta.

Enter two Drawers.

2. Drawer. Thou fay'ft true: the Prince once fet a Dift of Apple-Johns before him, and told him there were fute more Sir John: and, putting off his Hat, fai'd, I will now take my leave of thee free drie, round, old, wi'th'd Knights. It anger'd him to the heart; but hee hath forgot that.

1. Drawer. Why then courer, and let them downe: and see if thou canst finde our Sneaky Noble; Misfit Travellors would have fone Musique.

2. Drawer. Sirhna, here we fhall be the Prince, and Master Poins anon: and they will put on two of our Jerkins, and Aprons, and Sir John muft not know of it: Bardeleph hath brought word,

1. Drawer. Then here will be old Fis: it will be an excellent faragam.

2. Drawer. I fee if I can finde out Sneaky. Exit.

Enter Hotstaff, and Sir John.

Hot. Sweet-heart, me thinkes now you are in an excellent good temperatlie: your Pulsidge bestes as extraordinarily, as heart would desire; and your Colour (I warrant you) is as red as any Rofe: But you haue dronke too much Canaries, and that's a maruellous reaiching Wine; and it perfumes the blood, ere wee can say what's this. How doe you now?

Sir John. Better then I was. Hot.

Hot. Why that was well fai'd: A good heart's worth Gold. Lookke, here comes Sir John.

Enter Falstaff.

Fal. When Arthur first in Court, (emptie the Jordan) and was a worthy King: How now Misfit Sir John?

Fal. So is all her Sett: if they be once in a Calme, they are fiek.

Sir John. Did you muddie Rascalls, is that all the comfort you gitte me?

Sir John. I make them! Gluttonie and Diseases make them, I make them not.

Fal. If the Cooke make the Gluttonie, you helpe to make the Diseases (Dol) we catch of you (Dol) we catch of you: Grant that, my poor Vertue, grant that.

Dol. I merry, our Chaynes, and our Jewells.

Fal. Your Brooches, Pearles, and Owches: For to lerre bruely, is to come halting off: you know, to come off the Breach, with his Pike bent bruely, and to Surgetie bruely; to venture upon the chaff'd-Chambers bruely.

Hot. Why this is the oldf fashion: you two neuer meane, but you fall to some discord: you are both (in good truthe) as Rheumatike as two drie Toftes, you cannot one beare with anothers Continuities. What the good-yeare? One muft beare, and that muft bee you: you are the weake Vereell; as they say, the emptier Vereell.

Dol. Can a weake emptie Vereell beeze such a huge full Hogs-head? There's a whole Marchants Venture of Burdeux-Stuffe in him: you have not fene an Hulke better fhu in the Hold. Come, Ile be friends with thee Jacks: Thou art going to the Warres, and whether I flall euer thee take anayse, or no, there is no body cares.

Enter Drawer.

Drawer. Sir, Ancient Piffall is below, and would speake with you.

Dol. Hang him, swaggering Rascall, let him not come hither: it is the foule-mouth'd Englifh in England.

Hot. If hee swagger, let him not come here: I must live amongt my Neighbours, Ile no Swaggerers: I am in good name, and fame, with the very belt: fluth the doore, there comes no Swaggerers heere: I have not li'd all this while, to have swaggering now: fluth the door, I pray you.

Fal. Doft thou haue, Hosteffe?

Dol. Pray you pacifie your felle (Sir John) there comes no Swaggerers heere.
Fadl. Do't thou hear'st? it is mine Ancient.

Holl. Tilly-fally (Sir John) never tell me, your ancient Swaggerer comes not in my doores. I was before Master Tisbe, the Deputer, the other day: and as hee said to me, it was longer agoe then Wednesday last: Neighbour Swiftly (fayes hee) Master Dunt, our Master, was by then? Neighbour Swiftly (fayes hee) receiveth those that are Gull's. For (fayes hee) you are in an ill Name: now hee said so, I can tell whereupon: for (fayes hee) you are an honneste Woman, and well thought on; therefore take heed where what Gull's you receive: Recieve (fayes hee) no Swaggering Companions. There comes none here; You would bleepe you to hear what hee said. No, Ile no Swaggerers.

Fadl. He's no Swaggerer (Hoffele): I am Cheater, heer; you may brooke him as gently, as a Puppie Greyhound: hee will not Swagger with a Barbarie Henne, if her feathers turne backe in any shew of refiaince. Call him vp (Drawer.)

Hoff. Cheater, call you him? I will barre no honnest man my house, nor no Cheater: but I doe not loue Swaggering; I am the worse when one fayes, Swagger: Feele Matters, how I flake: looke you, I warrant you. Dole Do you doe, Hoffelle.

Hoff. Doe you? ye, in very truth doe I, fit were an Apen Leaf: I cannot abide Swaggerers.

Enter Pistifl, and Bardolph and his Boy.

Pistifl. 'Sau you, Sir Iohn.

Pistifl. Welcome Ancient Pistifl. Here (Pistifl) I charge you with a Cup of Sacke; doe you discharge vpon mine Hoffele.

Pistifl. I will discharge vpon her (Sir Iohn) with two Bullets.

Pistifl. She is Pistiff-proofe (Sir) you shall hardly offend her.

Holl. Come, Ile drink no Proofee, nor no Bullets: I will drink no more then will doe you me good, for no mans pleasure, I.

Pistifl. Then to you (Miftris Dorothee) I will charge you.

Dole. Charge me? I come you (scutare Companion) what? you poore, base, rafecally, cheating, lacke-Linnen-Mare: away you mouldle Rogue, away; I am meate for your Mister.

Pistifl. I know you Miftris Dorothee.

Dole. Away you Cut-purfe Rascal, you filthy Bung, away: By this Wine, Ile thruft my Knife in your mouldle Chapper, if you play the favare Cuttle with me. Away you Bottle-Ale Rascal, you Basket-hilt flate Juguier, you. Since when, I pray you, Sir? what, with two Points on your shoulder? much.

Pistifl. I will starue your Ruffe, for this.

Holl. Nevagood Captain Pistifl: not heere, sweete Captain.

Dole. Captain? thou abominable damned Cheater, are thou not ashamed to be called Captain? If Captains were of my minde, they would trunchion you out, for taking their Names vpon you, before you have eord'd them. You a Captain? you flue, for what? for tearing a poore Whores Ruffe in a Bawdy-house? Hee a Captain? hang him Rogue, hee lisst upon mouldle worth'd-Punnes, and dry'de Cakes. A Captain? Thee Villaines will make the word Captain odious: Therefore Captains had neede looked to it.

Bard. Pray thee goe downe, good Ancient.

Pistifl. Heare thee bither, Miftris Dole.

Pistifl. Not 1: I tell thee what, Corporall Bardolph, I could teare her: Hee be trerving'd on her.

Pistifl. Ie see her damnd first: to Pluto's damnd Lake, to the Infernal Deepe, where Erebos and Tortures vtilde also. Hold Hooke and Line, say I: Downe: downe Doggers, downe Faces: have wee not Heron here?

Bard. Good Captain Peesed be quiet, it is very late: I beleefe you now, aggravate your Choler.

Pistifl. Thete be good Humors indeede. Shall Pack-Horles, and hollow-pammer'd Iades of Asf, which cannot goe but thirtee miles a day, compare with Cefer, and with Caniballs, and Troian Greeks? ruy, rather damne them with King Cerberus, and let the Welkin roar; shall wee fall foule for Toyes?

Holl. By my troth Captaine, these are very bitter words.

Bard. Be gone, good Ancient: this will grow to a Brawle anon.

Pistifl. Do me men like Dogges; give Crownes like Pinnes. Haue we not Heron here?

Holl. On my word (Captaine) there's none such here. What the good-yeare, doe you think I would deny her? I pray be quiet.

Pistifl. Then feel, and be fat (my faire Calpolia.) Come, give me some Sack, If fortune me tormente, Ierate me content. Fare wee broad-sides! No, let the Fiend giue fire: Give me some Sack: and Sweet-heart lye thou there: Come wee to full Points here, and are et ceteris nothing?

Fal. Pistifl I would be quiet.

Fal. Sweet Knight, I keepe thy Nefse: what wee haue scene the feuen Starres.

Dole. Thrilfe him downe staves, I cannot endure such a Fultian Rafcall.

Fal. Thrilfe him downe staves? know we not Galloway Nagges?

Fal. Quoit him downe (Bardolph) like a thowe-groat shilling: say, if hee doe nothing but speake nothing, hee shall be nothing here.

Bard. Come, get you downe staves.

Dole. What? shall wee have Inception? shall weem brewe? then Death rokeh me salpe, abridge my dolefull days: why then let, grieuous, filthy, gaping Wounds, wontin the Sifters three: Come Arrep, I say.

Holl. Here's good stuffe toward.

Fal. Give me my Raper, Boy.

Dole. I prethee Jack, I prethee doe not draw.

Fal. Get you downe staves.

Holl. Here's a goodly tumult: Ile forswearke keeping houle, before Ile be in thee tirits, and frights. So: Murder 1 warrant now. Alas, alas, put vp your naked Weapons, put vp your naked Weapons.

Dole. I prethee Jack be quiet, the Rafcall is gone: ah, you whorson little valiant Villaine, you.

Holl. Are you not hurt? th' Groyne? me thought hee made a threel'd Thrilfe at your Belly.

Fal. Have you turnd him out of doores?

Bard. Yes Sir: the Rafcall's drunken you have hurt him (Sir) in the shoulder.

Fal. A Rafcall naked me.

Dole. Ah, you sweet little Rogue, you: alas, poore Ape, how thou sweast? Come, let me wipe thy Face: Come on, you whorson Chops: Ah Rogue, I loove thee: Thou art as valorous as Hector of Troy, worthier of Agamemnon, and ten times better then the nine Worthies: ah Villaine.

Fal. A rascally Slave, I will send the Rogue in a Blanket.

Dor. Do, if thou dar'st for thy heart: if thou dar'st, I canus thee between a pair of Sheetes.

Enter Musique.

Page. The Musique is come, Sir.

Fal. Let them play: play, Sirs. Sit on my Knee, Del. A Rascal, bringing Slave: the Rogue fled from me like a Quick-foofer.

Del. And thou followedst him like a Church: thou whoreson little tyde Sartholomew Bore-pigge, when wilt thou issue fighting on days, and soining on nights, and begin to patch vp thine old Body for Heauen?

Enter the Prince and Poets disguised.

Fal. Peace (good Del.) do not speake like a Death's-head: do not bid me remember mine end.

Del. Sirs, what humor is the Prince of?

Fal. A foolish young fellow: hee would have made a good Pantler, hee would have chipp'd Bread well.

Del. They say I once had a good Wit.

Fal. Hee a good Wit? hang him Bobbee, his Wit is as thick as Tewkesbury Millard: there is no more conceit in him, then is in a Mallet.

Del. Why doth the Prince love him so then?

Fal. Because their Legges, are both of a bignest; and hee plays at Quoits well, and eates Conger and Fenname, and drinks off Candles ends for Flap-adragons, and rides the wild Merse with the Boys, and outps upon Toyt-dfooles, and twears with a good grace, and weares his Bree fmirror, like unto the Signe of the Legge; and breedes no busie with telling of discreete fittes: and such othere Gamboll Faculties halth, that fllew a weake Mind, and an able Body, for the which the Prince admitts him; for the Prince hissefle is such another: the weight of an hayre will turne the Scales betweene their Hader-de-poes.

Prince. Would not this Nose of a Whale haue his Eares cut off?

Poe. Let us beseech him before his Whore.

Prince. Looke, if the witcher'd Eldar not hath his Polly clawe'd like a Parrot.

Poe. Is it not strange, that Dare should so many yeeres out-line performance?

Fal. Kisse me Del.

Prince. Saturne and Venus this yeare in Conjunction? What faies the Almanack to that?

Poe. And looke whether the Starre Tri<fug>, his Man, be not dipping to his Masters old Tables, his Note-Booke, his Counsell-keeper?

Fal. Thou don't gleue me flattering Busses.

Del. Nay truly, I kisse thee with a most constant heart.

Fal. I am old, I am old.

Del. I have thee better, then I love e're a frether young Boy of them all.

Fal. What Stuffe wilt thou issue a Kittle of? I shall receive Money on Thursday: thou shalt have a Cappe to mourne: A merrie Song, come: it growes late, wee will to Bed. Thou wilt forget me, when I am gone.

Del. Thou wilt let me a weeping, if thou say'st so: proue that euer I dresse my selfe handsome, till thy returne: well, hearken the end.

Fal. Some Sack, Francis.

Poe. Pum. Anon, anon, Sir.

Fal. He? a Buffard Sonne of the Kings? And art not thou Poine, his Brother?

Prince. Why thou Globe of sinfull Continents, what a Life doe'ft thou lead?

Fal. A better then thou: I am a Gentlemang, thou art a Drawer.

Prince. Very true, Sir: and I come to draw you out of the Eares.

Hif. Oh, the Lord prefury th' good Grace: Welcome to London. Now Heauen bleffe that fweet Face of shine: what, are you come from Wales?

Fal. Thou whoreson and Compound of Maiffele: by this light Heele, and corruppe Blood, thou art welcome.

Poe. My Lord, hee will drue you out of your reuerence, and turne all to a mettrum, if you take not the heare.

Prince. You whorsone Candle-myne youe, how wildly did you speake of me even now, before this honest, vertuous, cuill Gentlewoman?

Hife. Bleffing on your good heart, and do fhee is by my testh.

Fal. Didst thou heare me?

Prince. Yes: and you knew me, as you did when you rose at the Gadd-hill; you knew I was at your back, and speke it on purpose, to trie my patience.

Fal. No, no, no: not so: I did not thinke, thou woule within hearing.

Prince. I shall drue you then to confesse the willfull abufe, and then I know how to handle you.

Fal. No abufe (Hall) on mine Honor, no abufe.

Prince. Not to disprays me? and call me Pantler, and Bread-chopper, and I know not what?

Fal. No abufe (Hall).

Poe. No abufe?

Fal. No abufe (Ned) in the World: honest Nednone, I disprays'd him before the Wicked, that the Wicked might not fall in love with him: In which doing, I haue done the part of a carefull Friend, and a true Subject, and thy Father is to give me thankes for it. No abuse (Hall) none (Ned) none; no Boys, none.

Prince. See now whether pure Fesse, and entire Cowards, doth not make thee wrong this vertuous Gentlewoman, to clofe with vs: is fhee of the Wicked? Is thine Hofleffe here, of the Wicked? Or is the Boy of the Wicked? Or honest Bardolph (whofe Zeale burnes in his Nofe) of the Wicked?

Poe. Answer youe thou dead Elms, answere.

Fal. The Friend hath prickt downe Bardolph intirecable, and his Face is Luceffers Priuy-Kitchen, where hee doth nothing but rost Mault-Worimes: for the Boy, there is a good Angel about him, but the Deuell outbids him too.

Prince. For the Women?

Fal. For one of them, thee is in Hell alreadie, and burnes more soules: for the other, I owe her Money; and whether thee doe damn'd for that, I know not.

Hife. No, I warrant you.

Fal. No,
The second Part of King Henry the Fourth.

The King, your Father, is at Westminister, and there are twenty weak and wearied Postes, that thou mayst come to Court soon, before they slippe away.

Exit Falstaff.

Enter excelent Postes.

Prince. What are these Postes, and what news? postes. The King, your Father, is at Westminister, and there are twenty weak and wearied Postes, that thou mayst come to Court soon, before they slippe away.

Exit Falstaff.

Enter the King with a Page.

King. Go, call the Earles of Surrey, and of Warwick. But ere they come, bid them one reader of these letters, and well consider of them: make good speed. Exit.

Enter the King with a Page. How many thousand of my poorest Subjects?

War. Many good morrowes to your Maiestie.

King. Is it good morrow, Lords?

War. 'Tis One a Clock, and past.

King. Why then good morrow to you all (my Lords): Have you read the Letters that I sent you?

War. We have (my Liege).

King. Then you perceiue the Body of our Kingdome, how foule it is: what ranke Discreet grows, and with what danger, is the Heart of it? War. It is but as a Body, yet distemper'd, which to him former strength may be restored, with good advice, and little medicine:

My Lord Northumberland will stone be coold.

King. Oh, Heauen, that one might read the Book of Fate, and see the resolution of the Times: Make Mountains leuell, and the Continuer (Wearie of solide firmenesse) melt it selfe into the Sea: and other Times, to see the beache Girdle of the Ocean, too wide for Neptune's horses; how Chances mocks, and Changes fill the Cuppe of Alteration:

With divers Liquors. 'Tis not tenne yeares gone, since Richard, and Northumberland, great friends, Did leaft together, and in two yeares after, Were they at Warres. It is but eight yeares since, this Perse was the man, receiued the Soule, who, like a Brother, soyl'd in my Affaires, and laid his Lawe and Life under my foot:

You, for my sake, even to the eyes of Richard, Gave him defiance. But which of you was by (You Confin Nemi, as I may remember)

When Richard, with his Ear, brim full of Teares, (Then check'd, and rated by Northumberland) Did speake these words (now proud a Prophecie):

How many thousand of my poorest Subjects?

Are these this howre or alaste? O Sleep, O gentle Sleepe, Nature solke Nurse, how hauie I frighted thee,

That thou no more wilt weign my eye-lids downe, And fleape my Sences in Forgetfulness?

Why rather (Sleepe) lyest thou in the Watch Cribs, Vpon whose Paladins stretching thee,

And buith with buffing Nightes, flyes to thy slumber, Then in the perfum'd Chambers of the Great?

Vnder the Canopies of costly State,

And lull'd with sounds of sweeteest Melodie?

O thou dull God, why lyest thou with the vilde,

In losthome Beds, and leaueth the Kingly Couch,

A Watch-cave, or a common Lurum-Bell?

Well thou, upon the high and giddie Moul,

Seale vp the Ship-boyes Eyes, and rock his Brains,

In Cradle of the rude imperious Surge,

And in the vifitation of the Winds,

Who take the Russian Billowes by the top,

Curling their monftrous heads, and hanging them With deaft ning Clamors in the flipp'ry Clouds,

That with the hurte, Death is fettle awake:

Can it thou (O partial Sleepe) give thy Repose

To the wet Sea-Boy, in an hour to rude:

And in the calmeft, and most stillst Night,

With all apparells, and means to southe,

Deny it to a King? Then happy Lowe, lyke downe,

Vnasifie the Eye, that weares a Crownes,

Enter Warwick and Surrey.
The second Part of King Henry the Fourth.

My Cousin Bellingbroke attends my Throne:
(Though then, Heaven knows, I had no such intent,
But that necessitie to bow’d the State,
That I and Greatnesse were compell’d to kisse;) The Time shall come (thus did hee follow it.)
The Time will come, that foule Sinne gathering head, Shall break into Corruption : to went on,
Fore-telling this same Time Condition,
And the division of our Amities.

War. There is a Historie in all mens Lives,
Figuring the nature of the Times decreas’d: The which obser’d, a man may prophecie
With a neere syme of the maine change of things, As yet not come to Life, which in their Seedes
And weake beginnings ly entreatured: Such things become the Hatch and Brood of Time; And by the necessitie forme of this,
King Richard might create a perfect gueffe,
That great Northumberland, then falle to him, Would of that Seed, grow to a greater fallensesse,
Which should not finde a ground to roote vp on,
Valleife on you.

King. Are these things then Necessitie? Then let vs meet them like Necessitie; And that same word, even now cries out on vs: They say, the Bishop and Northumberland Are fiftie thousand strong.

War. It cannot be (my Lord;) Rumor doth double,like the Voice, and Eccho,
The numbers of the feared. Please it your Grace To goe to bed, vp on my Life (my Lord) The Powr is that you alreadie have (ent forth, Shall bring this Prize in very early.
To comfort you the more, I have recei’d:
A certaine incidence, that Glendower is dead,
Your Maiestie hath beene this fort-night ill, And these vnfeard’ of howses perforce must addde
Vnto your Sickness,

King. I will take your counsafe: And were thefe inward Warses once out of hand, Wee would (deare Lords) vnto the Holy-Land,

Exeunt.

Scena Secunda.

Enter Shallow and Silence with Monks, Shadow, Wart, Feele, Bull-calf.

Shal. Come-on,come-on,come-on: give mee your Hand,Sir; giuer mee your Hand, Sir : an early thire, by the Road, And how doth my good Cousin Silence?

Sil. Good-morrow,good Cousin Shallow.

Shal. And how doth my Cousin, your Bed-fellow? and your faireft Daughter, and mine, my God-Daughter Ellen?

Sil. Alas, a blake Oxwell (Cousin Shallow.)

Shal. By yea and nay, Sir, I dare fay my Cousin William is become a good Scholler? hee is at Oxford still, as hee not?

Sil. Indeede Sir, to my coft.

Shal. Hee must then to the Innes of Court shortly: I was once of Clenemies inne; where (I thinke) they will talke of mad Shallow yet.

Sil. You were call’d Haffe Shadow then(Cousin.)

Shal. I was call’d any thing: and I would have done any thing indeed too, and roundly too. There I was, and little John Deit of Staffordhure, and blakke George Bare, and Francis Pickborne, and will Spritt a Const-fal-man, you had not foure such Swindge-bucklers in all the Innes of Court againe: And I may say to you, wee knew where the fault lay. Wee Knew, and had the belt of them all at commandement. Then was Jack Halface(now Sir John,) a Boy, and Page to Thomas Monbrooke, Duke of Norfolk.

Sil. This Sir John (Cousin) that comes lither anon about Soulidors?

Shal. The fame Sir John, the very fame: I saw him break Staggon’s Head at the Court-Gate, when he was a Crack, not thus high: and the very fame day did I fight with one Stempson Stagg, fifh, a Fraterere, behind Greyes-Inne. Oh the mad days that I haue spent! and to see how many of mine olde Acquitaine are dead?

Sil. Wee shall all follow (Cousin.)

Shal. Certaine: its certaine: very sure, very sure: Death is certaine to all, all shall dye. How a good Yoke of Sullockes at Stamford Bayre?

Sil. Truly Cousin, I was not there.

Shal. Death is certaine. Is old Double of your Towne liuing yet?

Sil. Dead,Sir.

Shal. Dead? See, fee: hee drew a good Bow: and dead? hee flot a fine shote. John of Gaunt loued him well, and betted much Money on his head. Dead? hee would haue clapt in the Clowt at Twelue-score, and carried you a fore-hand Shaff at foureteene, and foureteene and a halfe, that it would haue done a mans heart good to see. How a score of Ewes now?

Sil. Thereafter as they be: a score of good Ewes may be worth tenne pounds.

Shal. And is olde Double dead?

Enter Bardolph and his Boy.

Sil. Here comes two of Sir John Falstaffs Men (as I think.)

Shal. Good-morrow, honest Gentlemen.

Bard. I bence you, which is Justice Shallow?

Shal. I am Robert Shallow(Sir) a poore Esquire of this Countie, and one of the Kings Jutifies of the Peace: What is your good pleasure with me?

Bard. My Captaine (Sir) commends him to you: my Captaine,Sir John Falstaff: a tall Gentleman, and a most gallant Leader.

Shal. Hee greets me well: (Sir) I knew him go a good Back-Sword-man. How doth the good Knight? may I ask, how my Lady his Wife doth?

Bard. Sir, pardon: a Soullidor is better accommodated, then with a Wife.

Shal. It is well said,Sir; and it is well said, indeed, too: Better accommodated? it is good, yes indeede is it: good phrafe there forely, and every where very comenable. Accommodated , it comes of Accommoda: very good, a good Phrafe.

Bard. Pardon, Sir, I have heard the word: Phrafe call you it? by this Day, I know not the Phrafe: but I will maintain the Word with my Sword, to bee a Soullidors-like Word, and a Word of exceeding good Command. Accommodated : that is, when a man is (as they say) accommodated : or, when a man is, being whereby

III. i. 71—III. ii. 88
Let him so, as looke, where comes good Sir John. Give me your hand, give me your Worship,good hand: Trust me, you look well: and bear your years very well. Welcome, good Sir John.

Fal. I am glad to see you well, good M. Robert Shallow; Master Sure-card as I thinke.

Shal. No fit John, it is my Coyn Silence: in Commison with mee.

Fal. Good M. Silence, It is well befits you should be of the peace.

Sir. Your good Worship is welcome.

Fal. Fye, this is hot weather (Gentlemen) have you provided me here half dozen of sufficient men?

Shal. Marry have we sir: Will you sir?

Fal. Let me see them, I believe you.

Shal. Where's the Roll? Where's the Roll? Where's the Roll? Let me see, let me see, let me see. fo, fo, fo:

you marry Sir. Roger Moule and let them appear as I call: let them do so, let them do so: Let mee see, Where is Moule?

Moule. Heere, fit please you.

Shal. What thinke you (Sir John) a good limb'd fellow: yong, strong, and of good friends.

Fal. Is thy name Moule?

Moule. Yes, sir please you.

Fal. 'Tis the more time thou wast vp.

Shal. Ha, ha, ha, most excellent. Things that are mouldie, lacke wise: very singular good. Well said Sir John, very well said.

Fal. Prick ye him.

Moule. I was prick't well enough before, if you could have let me alone: my old Dame will be vn-done now, for one to doe her Husbandry, and her Drudgery; you need not to have prick't me, there are other men litter to goe: out then.

Fal. Go too: peace Moule, you shall goe. Moule, it is time you were spent.

Moule. Spent?

Shallow. Peace, fellow, peace; stand aside: Know you where you are? For the other Sir John: Let me see Simon Shallow.

Fal. I marry, let me have him to sit vnder: he's like to his a cold fouldier.

Shal. Where's Shallow?

Shal. Heere sir.

Fal. Shalow, whose some art thou?

Shal. My Mothers sonne, Sir.

Fal. Thy Mothers sonne: like enough, and thy Fa-ters shadow: so the sonne of the female, is the shadow of the Male: it is often so indee, but not of the Fathers subfance.

- Shal. Do you like him, sir John?

Fal. Shadow will terue for Sumner; pricke him: For wee have a number of shadowes to fill upp the Mutter-Booke.

Shal. Thomas Wart?

Fal. Where's he?

Wart. Heere sir.

Fal. Is thy name Wart?

Wart. Yes sir.

Fal. Thou art a very ragged Wart.

Shal. Shall I pricke him downe.

Sir John?

Fal. It were fupriffous: for his apparel is built up /on his backe, and the whole frame stand: you may say palp him no more.

Shal. If you, sir, you can do it: you can do it: I commend you well.

Francis Feeble.

Feeble. Heere sir.

Shal. What Trade art thou Feeble?

Feeble. A Womans Taylor sir.

Shal. Shall I pricke him, sir?

Fal. You may:

But if he had bene a mans Taylor, he would have prick'd
you. Will thou make as many holes in an enemies Bat-tale, as thou haft done in a Womans petticoate?

Feeble. I will doe my good will sir, you can have no more.

Fal. Well said, good Womans Tailour: Well sayde Couragious Feeble: thou wilt bee a valiant as the wraith-full Doue, or most magnanimous Moule. Prick the womans Taylor well Master Shalow, deepse Master Shallow.

Feeble. I would Wart might have gone fir.

Fal. I would thou wert a mans Tailor, that y might'l mend him, and make him fit to goe. I cannot put him to a privete fouldier, that is the Leader of so many thousands. Let that fuffice, sholt Forcible Feeble:

Feeble. It shall fuffice.

Fal. I am bound to thee, reverend Feeble. Who is the next ?

Shal. Peter Balckaffe of the Greene.

Fal. Ye a marry, let us see Balckaffe.

Balckaffe. Heere sir.

Fal. Trust me, think, Cowte. Come pricke me Balcaffe till he roarre again.

Wart. Oh, good my Lord Captain.

Fal. What do you thinke before this prick?

Wart. Oh sir, I am a defeated man.

Fal. What defeate haft thou?

Bal. A whorion cold fir, a cougher firm, which I caught with Ringing in the Kungs affayres, upon his Coronation day, fir.

Fal. Come thou shalt go to the Wares in a Gowne: we will have away thy Cold, and I will take fuch order, that thy friends shall ring for thee. Is heere all ?

Shal. There is two more called then your number: you must have but foure heere fir, and so I pray you go in with me to dinner.

Fal. Come, I will goe drinke with you, but I cannot carry dinner. I am glad to see you in good tround, Master Shalow.

Shal. Sir John, doe you remember since wee lay all night in the Wunde-mull in S Georges Field.

Falsaffe. No more of that good Master Shalow: No more of that.

Shal. Ha! it was a merry night. And isu 8one Night-works alive ?

Fal. She lines, M. Shalow.

Shal. She never could away with mee.

Fal. Never, she would always say thee could not abide M. Shalow.

Shal. I could anger her to the heart: thee was thes a Bona-Roba. Doth shee held her owne well.

Fal. Old,old, M. Shalow.

Shal. Nay, she must be old, she cannot choose but be old.
old: ceritaine thee's old: and had Robin Night-works, by old Night-words, before I came to Clements inne.

Sir. That's thirteene yeere agoe.

Shal. Hah, Cousin Silvius, that thou hast seen thee; that thou Knight and I have seene: hah, Sir John, said I well?

Falstaff. Wee haue heard the Chymes at mid-night, Maister Shallow.

Shal. That wee haue, that wee haue; in faith, Sir John, wee haue: our watch-word was, Hem-Boyse. Come, let's to Dinner; come, let's to Dinner. Oh the days that we haue seene. Come, come.

But, Good Maister Corporace Baldulphe, stand my friends, and here is foure Harry tyme shufflings in Crownes for you: in very truth, sir, I had as lief be hang'd sir, as goe: and yet, for mine owne part, sir, I do not care; but rather, because I am unwilling, and for mine owne part, have a desire to play with my friends: else, sir, I did not care for mine owne part, so much.

Bard. Go-too: stand aside.

Mouldie. And good Maister Corporal Captaine, for my old Damnes fake, stand my friend: thee hath no body to do any thing about her, when I am gone: and she is old, and cannot help her felle: you shall have fortie, sir.

Bard. Go-too: stand aside.

Fleeble. I care not, a man can die but once: wee owe a death. I will never beare a base minde: if it be my defile, so: if it be not, so: no man is too good to serve his Prince: and let it goe which way it will, he that dies this yeere, is quit for the next.

Bard. Well saide, thou art a good fellow.

Fleeble. Nay, I will beare no base minde.

Falstaff. Come sir, which men shall I have?

Shal. Four of which you please.

Bard. Sir, a word with you: I haue three pound, to free Mouldie and But-calf.

Bard. Go-too: well.

Shal. Come, Sir John, which foure will you have?

Bard. Doe you chuse for me,

Shal. Martyr then, Mouldie, But-calf, Fleeble, and Shadow.

Faste. Mouldie, and But-calf: for you Mouldie, they at home, till you are past service: and for your part, But-calf, you shall come for you: I will none of you.

Shal. Sir John, Sir John, doe not your felle wrong, they are your likelyest men, and I would have you fere'd with the best.

Falstaff. Will you tell me (Maister Shallow) how to chuse a man? Care I for the Limbe, the Theives, the nature, bulke, and bigge assenblance of a man? give mee the spirit (Maister Shallow) Where's Warts? you see what a ragged appearance it is: hee shall charge you, and discharge you, with the motion of a Pewterers Hammer: come off, and on, wifter then hee that gibbetts on the Brewers Bucket. And this fame halfe-fac'd fellow, Shadow, give me this man: hee pretents no marke to the Eemie, the foe-man may with a great ayme louse at the edge of a Pen-knife: and for a Retract, how swiftly will this Fleeble, the Womans Taper, runne off, O, give me the space-men, and space me the greatest. Put me a Calyuer into Warts hand, Bardolph.

Bard. Hold Wher, Tranqueve: thus, thus, thus.

Falstaff. Come, manage me your Calyuer: so very well, go-too, very good, exceeding good. O, give me always a little, lean, old, chop't, bald Shot. Well said Wher, thou art a good Scab; hold, there is a Teller for thee.

Shal. Hee is not his Crafts-matter, hee doth not doe it right. I remember at Mile-end-Greene, when I lay at Clements Inne, I was then Sir Dagost in Arthur's Shute: there was a little quater fellow, and hee would manage you his Peace thus: and hee would about, and about, and come you in, and come you in; Rah, tah, tah, would hee say, Bownce would hee say, and away againe would hee goe, and againe would he come: I shall neuer see such a fellow.

Falstaff. These fellows will doe well, Maister Shallow. Farewell Maister Silvius, I will not vie many wordes with you: fare you well, Gentlemen both: I thank you: I must a dozen mile to night; Bardolph, give the Souildiers Coates.

Shal. Sir John, Heauen bleffe you, and prosper your Affairs, and send vs Peace. As you returne, visit my house. Let our old acquaintance be renewed: peraduenture I will with you to the Courte.

Exit.

Falstaff. Fare you well, gentle Gentlemen. On Bardolph, lead the men away. As I returne, I will fetch off these Ifufeys: I doe see the bottome of Ifusfe Shallow. How foulebe was old men are to this vice of Lying? This fame Ifasfu Ifusfe hath done nothing but prate to me of the wildenesse of his Youth, and the Perfections hee hath done about Turnhall-street, and every third word a Lye, dure pay'd to the hearters, then the Turkes Tribute. I doe remember him at Clements Inne, like a man made after Supper, of a Cheefe-pasing. When hee was naked, hee was, for all the world, like a forke Riddif, with a Head fantastically car'd upon it with a Knife. Hee was so forlorne, that his Dimensiones (to any thick cleaste) were imposible. Hee was the very Genius of Famine: hee came ever in the rearward of the Fashione: And now is this Vices Daggar become a Squire, and talks as familiarly of John of Gaunt, as if hee had beene twome Brother to him: and hee be sworne hee neuer saw him but once in the Tith-yard, and then he burn't his Head, for crowding among the Marshals men, I saw it, and told John of Gaunt, hee beat his owne Name, for you might have trust'd him and all his Apparrel into an Eere-staine: the Cafe of a Tribble Hobbay was a Mansion for him: a Court: and now hath hee Land, and Beeues. Well, I will be acquainted with him, if I returne: and it shall goe hard, but I will make him a Philosopher two Stones to me. If the young Dace be a Baye for the old Pake, I fee no reaon, in the Law of Nature, but I may stop at him. Let time flye, and there an end.

Exeunt.

Our very Veines of Life: hearre us more plainly.
I have in equall balance iutly weight'd,
What wrongs our Arms may do, what wrongs we suffer,
And finde our Griefes beacon then our Offences.
Wee fee which way the streame of Time doth runne,
And are enford'd from our most quiet there,
By the rough Torrent of Occaion,
And have the tumulte of all our Griefes
(When time should ferue to shew in Articles)
Which long ere this, wee offer'd to the King,
And might, by no Suit, gyne our Audience:
When wee are wrong'd, and would unfold our Griefes,
We are deny'd access into his Person,
Euen by those men, that most havne done vs wrong.
The dangers of the dayes but newely gone,
Whose memorie is written on the Earth
With yeet appearing bloody, and the examples
Of every Monutes influence (present now)
Hath put vs in these ill-becoming Arms:
To breake Peace, or any Branch of it,
But to establishe a Peace in deede,
Concerning both in Name and Qualitie.

When ever yet was your Appeale deny'd?
Wherein have you beene galled by the King?
When Preece hath beene labored, to grace you,
That you shoule finde this ultimate bloody Booke
Of for'd Rebellion, with a Scale diuine?
My Brother general, the Common-wealth,
I make my Quarrell, in particular.

There is no neede of any such redresse:
Or if there were, it not belongeth to you.
Why not to him in party, and to vs all,
That feele the brunes of the dayes before,
And suffer the Contagion of those Times
To lay a heauie and vnsaill Hand upon our Honors?
O my good Lord Mowbray,
Continue the Times to their Necessities,
And you shal say (indeede) it is the Time,
And not the King,that doth you injuries.
Yet for your part, it not appeares to me,
Either from the King,or in the present Time,
That you shoule have any of any ground
To build a Griefe on: were you not relle'd
To all the Duke of Norfolkes Seignories,
Your Noble, and right well-remembered Fathers?
What thing, in Honor, had my Father loth,
That need to be resu'd, and breath'd in me?
The King that cou'd him, as the State flood then,
Was forde, performe compell'd to banish him:
And then that Henry Bolingbrooke: and hee
Being mounted, and both rowed in their Seates,
Their neigbiring Couriers daring of the Squire,
Their armed Staes in charge, their Beasuers downe,
Their eyes of fire, sparkling through lights of Steele,
And the lowd Trumpeter blowing them together:
Then, then, when there was nothing coule have flay'd
My Father from the Breath of Bolingbrooke;
When the King did throw his Walder downe,
(Howse Life hung upon the Staffe hee threw)
Then threw hee downe himselfe, and all their Lives,
That by Indisment, and by dint of Sword,
Have since mis-carried vnder Bolingbrooke.

V. 1. 5—129

409
The second Part of King Henry the Fourth.

We've speak'd (Lord Marshal) now you know not what.

The Earle of Hereford was reputed then
In England the most valiant Gentleman.

Who knowes, on whom Fortune would then have staid?
But if your Father had bene Victor there,
Here's he had borne him out of Countrey.
For all the Countrey, in a general voyce,
Cry'd haste upon him: and all their prayers, and loue,
Were set on Hereford, whom they doted on,
And blest, and graci'd, and did more then the King.

But this is meerely digression from my purpose.
Here come I from our Princely Generall,
To know your Grievances to tell you, from his Grace,
That hee will give you Audience: and wherein
It shall appear, that your demands are just,
You shall enjoy them, every thing set off,
That might so much as think you Enemies.

Now, but hee hath forc'd vs to compel this Offer,
And it proceeds from Pollicy, not Loue.

Wife, Marshal, you ouer-weene to take it for.
This Offer comes from Mercy, not from Fears.
For loe, within a Ken our Army lies,
Upon mine Honor, all too confident
To give admittance to a thought of faire.
Our Bataille is more full of Names then yours,
Our Men more perfect in the Vfe of Armes,
Our Armor all is strong, our Caufe the best;
Then Reson will, our hearts should be as good.

Say you not then, our Offer is compelld.

Now, well by my will, wee shall admit no Parley.
Well. That argues but the blame of your offence:
A rotten Café abides no handling.

Haste, hath the Prince told a full Commission,
In very ample vertue of his Father,
To heare, and absolutely to determine
Of what Conditions we shall stand upon.

That, is intended in the Generall Name:
I mute you make to flight a Question.

But, then take (my Lord of Wetterland) this Schedule,
For this contains our general Grievances:
Each severall Article herein herefor'd,
All members of our Caufe, both here, and hence,
That are indivis'd to this Action,
Accompted by a true substantall forme,
And present execution of our wills,
To vs, and to our purposes confin'd,
Wooe come within our awfull Banks againe,
And kniue our Powers to the Arme of Peace.

This will I shew the Generall. Please you Lords,
In flight of both our Batailles, wee may meete
At either end in peace: which Hearsue so frame,
Or to the place of difference call the Swords,
Which must decide it.

My Lord, we will doe so.
There is a thing within my Boforme tells me,
That no Conditions of our Peace can stand.

Fear you not, that if wee can make our Peace
Upon such large terms, and so abreast
As our Conditions shall confin upon
Our Peace shall stand as firm as a Rockie Mountains.
Till, but our valuation shall be such,
That every flight, and false-derived Caufe
Yes, every idle, nice, and wanton Reason,
Shall, as the King, taste of this Action:
That were our Royall faiths, Marryes in Loue,
Wee shall be winnowed with so rough a winde.

That cunning our Corne shall come as light as Chaff,
And good from bad finde no partition.

No, no (my Lord) note this: the King is wearable
Of dainty, and such fick Grievances:
For hee hath found, to end one doubt by Death,
Reniues two greater in the Heires of Life.

And therefore will hee wipe his Tables cleane,
And keep no Tell-tale to his Mermorie,
That may repeat, and Historie his loffe,
To new remembrance. For full well hee knowes,
That hee cannot so precisely weede this Land,
As his mis-doubts present occasion;
His foes are so en-rooted with his friends,
That plocking to vnfixe an Enemy,
Hee doth vsalt it, and shake a friend,
So that this Land, like an offitive wife,
That hath enrag'd him on, to offer flokes,
As hee is flinking, holds his infant vp,
And hangs resolvd Correehien in the Arme,
That was spread'd to execution.

Besides, the King hath wasted all his Rods,
On late Offenders, that he now doth lacke
The very Instruments of Chaffiment:
So that his power, like to a Fangleble Lion
May offer, but not hold,
'Tis very true:
And therefore be suffer'd (my good Lord Marshal)
If we do now make our attestation well,
Our Peace, will (like a broken Limbe united)
Grow stronger, for the breaking.

Be it so:
Here's return'd my Lord of Wetterland.

The Prince is here as hand to hand heareth your Lordship
To meet his Grace, in just distance 'twixt our Armies

Your Grace of Yorke, in heauen's name then forward.

Before, and greet his Grace (my Lord) we come,

You are well encountered here (my cousin Howley)
Good day to you, gentle Lord Archbishop,
And so to you Lord H[l]e[ng]age[s], and all.
My Lord of Yorke, it better fhew'd with you,
When that your Flocke (assembl'd by the Bell)
Encircled you, to heare with reuerence
Your exposition on the holy Text,
Then now to see you heare an Iron man
Changing a rowt of Rebels with your Drumme,
Turning the Word, to Sword; and Life to death:
That man that fits within a Monarches heart,
And ripens in the Sunne-shine of his fauer,
Would hee abuse the Countenance of the King,
Alack, what Mischiefes might hee fret abrooch,
In fhadow of such Greatnesse? With you, Lord Bishop,
It is even so. Who hath not heard it spoken,
How deep ye were within the Bookes of Heauen?
To vs, the Speaker in his Parliament;
To vs, the Image of Heauen it felle:
The very Opera, and Intelligence
Betweene the Grace, the Saneties of Heauen,
And our dull workings. O, who shall beleeue,
But you mis-vse the reuerence of your Place,
Employ the Countenance, and Grace of Heauen,
As a faile Favour doth his Princes Name,
In deeds difi-honorable? You have taken vp,

Vnder

The second Part of King Henry the Fourth.

When the counterfeeted Zeal of Heaven.

The Subiects of Heaven's Substitute, my Father,
And both against the Peace of Heaven, and him,
Have here vp-swarm'd them.

B. B. Good my Lord of Lancaster,
I am not here again against your Fathers Peace:
But (as I told my Lord of Welfelmeaid)
The Time (mis-order'd) doth in common fence
Crowd vs, and crush vs, to this monstrous Forme,
To hold our fadie vp. I fent your Grace
The parcels, and particulars of our Griefe,
The which hath been with fcorne fhou'd from the Court:
Whereon this Hydra-Sonne of Warre is borne,
Whofe dangerous eye's may well be charm'd asleep,
With graunt of our moft soft and right defiet;
And charge the tender youngest Paine I little cur'd,
Sponge teemly to the foot of Maietie.

Mor. If not, wee readie are to trye our fortunes,
To the last man.

Hauf. And though wee here fall downe,
We have Supplies, to fecond our Attempt:
If they mis-carry, their fhall fecound them.
And euen if this exprete be beleeue
And Heire from Heire fhall hold this Quarrell vp,
While England fhall have generation.

John. You are too shallow (Hauing) Much too shallow,
To found the bottome of the after-Times.

Mor. Pleseth your Grace, to anwser them direcly,
Haus. Wee forth you doth my Articles.

John. I like them all, and doe allow them well:
And sweare here, by the honor of my blood,
My Fathers purposse have beene mistook'd,
And some, about him, have too laufily
Wreathed his meaning, and Authorize.
My Lord, thefe Griefes fhall be with fpeed redreft:
Upon my Life, they fhall. If this may pleafe you,
Discharge your Powers vnto their Generall Countires,
As wee will our; and here betwixt the Armies,
Let's drinke together friendly, and embrace,
That all their eyes may beare thofe Tokens home,
Of our refored Loue, and Amity.

B. B. I take your Princeely word, for these redreffe, Hauing it, and will maintaine my word:
And thereunto I drinke vpon your Grace.

Hau. Go to Captaine, and deliver to the Armie
This news of Peace: let them have pay, and part:
I know, it will well pleafe them.

High the Captaine. Exit.

B. B. To you, my Noble Lord of Welfelmeaid,
I pledge you my Grace:
And if you knew what pains I have befor'and,
To breed this prefent Peace,
You would drinke freely: but my loue to ye,
Shall fiew it feldomore openly hereafter.

B. B. I doe not doubt you.

W. If. I am glad of it.

Health to my Lord, and gentle Cousin Munbray.

Mor. You with me wealthe in very happy feafon,
For I am, on the fadane, something ill.

B. B. Against ill Chances, men are ever merry,
But henniffe fore-runnes the good event.

W. If. Therefore be merry (Cozze) since fadane forbrew
Serues to fay that som good thing comes to morrow.

B. B. Believe me, I am paffing light in spiritt.

Mor. So much the worfe, if your owne Rale be true.

John. The word of Peace is entered: hearknow how they flow.

Mor. This had beene cheerfull, after Vctorie.

B. B. A Peace is of the nature of a Conquest:
For then both partie nobly are subdu'd,
And neither partie loofer.

John. Go to (my Lord)
And let our Army be discharged too:
And good my Lord,(to plesse you) let our Traines
March by vs, that we may perufe the men.

W. If. Wee fhould have copped withall,

B. B. Go, good Lord Hauffing.

And ere they be difmif'd, let them march by.

John. I truft Lords wee fhall lye to night together.

Enter Welfelmeaid, and John.

Now Cousin, wherefore stands our Army still?

W. If. The Leaders hauing charge from you to fland,
Will not goe out, untill they hear you speake.

John. They know their duties. Enter Hauffings.

Hau. Our Army is dispers'd:
Like you thall Sieteres, my very, d. they tooke their course Eau, Weft, North, Southor like a Schoole, brake vp,
Brooke hurrtys to theer home, and fpotting place.

W. If. Good tidings (my Lord Hauffing) for the which,
I do not thee thee (Trewor) of high Trefion:
And you Lord Arch-bishop, and you Lord Monbray,
Of Capitall Trefion, I attach you both.

Mor. Is this proceeding iuff, and honorable?

W. If. Is your Assembly fo?

B. B. Will this break your faith?

John. I am pawn'd thee none.

I proformed y redreff here of thefe Grieuances
Whereof you did complaine; which, by mine Honor,
I will performe, with a molt Christian care.
But for you (Rebell) looks to taffe the due
Meet for Rebellion, and such Acts as yours,
Mofl hollowly. Enter the fheriffes commerces,
Fondly brought here, and foolishly tryed hence:
Strike vp our Drummes, purfue the feater'd fray,
Heauen, and not we, have safely fought to day.
Some guard thefe Trestors to the Block of Death,
Trefions true Bed, and yeilder vp of breath. Exeunt.

Enter Falstaff and Coluells.

Fal. Whose is your Name, Sir? of what Condition are you?
And of what Place, I pray you?

Col. I am a Knight, Sir:
And my Name is Coluells of the Dale.

Fal. Well then, Coluells is your Name, a Knight in your Degree, and your Place, the Dale. Coluells fhall by your Name, a Trauer your Degree, and the Danagen your Place, a place deep enought: so fhall you be full Coluells of the Dale.

Col. Are not you Sir John Falstaff?

Fal. As good a man as hee fir, whores I am: doe ye yeilde fir, or fhall I sweate for you? if I doe sweate, they are the drops of thy Loueres, and they weep for thy death, therefore rowse vp Pearre and Trembling, and doe obseruerance to my mercy.

Col. I think you are Sir John Falstaff, & in that thought yeeld me.

Fal. I haue a whole Schoole of tongues in this belly of mine, and noe Tongue of them all, speakes anot her word but my name: and I had but a belly of any indifferencie, I were limply the moft active fellow in Europe; my wombe, my wombe, my wombe, men mee. Here comes our General.

| IV. ii. 27—IV. iii. 26 | 411 |
Enter Prince John, and Westminster.

John. The heat is past, follow no farther now: Call in the Powers, good Collews Westminster.

Now Faff, where have you been all this while? Whatever thing is ended, when you come. These tarded Tricks of yours will (on my life) One time or other, break some Gallows back.

Faff. I would be sorry (my Lord) but it should be thus: I knew you yet, but rebuke and check was the reward of Valour. Do you think me a Swallow, an Arrow, or a Bullet? Have I, in my poore and old Motion, the expedition of Thought? I have speeded hither with the very extremest ynych of possibility. I have townded nine score and odd Postles: and here be (travelli-taunted as I am) have, in my pure and immaculate Valour, taken Sir John Collews of the Dale, a most furious Knight, and valorous Enemy: But what of that! I see fawmee, and yeilded: that I may fully say with the hooke-no'd fellow of Rome, I came, faw, and out-came.

John. It was more of his Courtezie, then your defurung.

Faff. I know not: here he is, and here I yeeld him: and I befeech your Grace, let it be book'd, with the rest of this days deede; so I swear, I will have it in a particular Ballad, with mine owne Picture on the top of it (Collews stuffing my foot.) To the which course, if I be cast, I shall do not all this life like g silent two-pences to me; and, in the cleare Skie of Fame, o're-thine you as much as the Full Moon doth the Cyndres of the Element (which shew like Pinnese-heads to her) beleue not the Word of the Noble: therefore let mee have right, and let defert mount.

John. Thine's too heastie to mount.

Faff. Let it shine then.

John. Thine's too thick to shine.

Faff. Let it doe something (my good Lord) that may doe me good, and call it what you will.

John. Is thy Name Collews?

Col. It is (my Lord.)

John. A famous Rebel art thou, Collews.

Faff. And a famous true Subject tooke him.

Col. I am (my Lord) but as my Betteres are, That led me hither: had they beene rule'd by me, You should have wonne thene deare then you have, Faff. I know not how they told themselfes, but thou like a kinde fellow, gau'li thy selfe away; and I thanke thee for thee.

Enter Westminsterland.

John. Have you left pursuitt?

Faff. Retire is made, and Execution stay'd.

John. Send Collews, with his Confederates, To York, to pretend Execution.

Blows, lead him hence, and see you guard him sure.

Exit with Collews.

And now dispatch we toward the Court (my Lords) I bear the King, my Father, a sure foike. Our News full goe before vs, to his Maiestie, Which (Colllws) you shall bear to, content him: And wee with faster speede will follow you.

Faff. My Lord, I befeech you, give me leave to go through Gloucestershire: and when you come to Court, stand my good Lord, pray, in your good report.

John. Farewell, Fass. I am my condition, Shall better speake of you, then you desire

Exit.

Faff. I would you had but the wit: I were better then your Duke's. Good faith, this fame young forber-blooded Boy doth not love me, nor a man cannot make him laugh: but that's no matter, he drinks no Wine. There's neuer any of thole demure Boys come to any prove: for thine Drinke doth not so ouer-coole their blood, and making many Faff-Meales, that they fall into a kinde of Male Greene-lickkynyn: and then, when they marry, they get Wenches. They are generally Fools, and Cowards; which some of vs shoul have beto, but for infallation. A good Sheris-Sack hath a two-fold operation in it: it assends me into the Braine, dryes me there all the foolish, and dull, and crude Vapours, which environ it; makes it apprehensive, quicke, forgettive, full of nimble, Serie, and delectable shapes: which deliver'd o're to the Voyce, the Tongue, which is the Birth, becomes excellent Wit. The second property of your excellent Sheris, is, the warming of the Blood: which before (cold, and setted) left the Livers white and pale; which is the Badge of Paleunanimity, and Cowardize: but the Sheris warms it, and makes it course faster, and so to the parts extremest, it illuminateth the Face, which (as a Beacon) gues warning to all the rest of this little Kingdom (Man) to Arme: and then the Vital Commoners, and in-land Pettle Spirits, mustere all to their Captain, the Heats; who great, and pufp up with his Retinue, doth any Deed of Courage: and this Valoun comes of Sheris. So, that skill in the Weapon is nothing, without Sack: for that, as a workman, I Learning, a meere Hoord of Gold, kept by a Dervill, till Sack commences it, and sets it in ac, and vie. Hereof comes it, that Prince Harry is valiant: for the cold blood he did naturally inherite of his Father, bee hath, like leane, fitrill, and bare Land, manured, husbanded, and tyl'd, with excellent endeavour of drinking good, and good Blood of Tertile Sheris, that bee is become very hot, and valiant. If I had a thouand Sons, the first Principle I would teach them, should be to forsware thine Phoeto, and to addicth themeselves to Sack. Enter Bardolph.

How now Bardolph?

Bard. The Arme is discharged all, and gone.

Faff. Let them goe: Ihe through Gloucesterfhire, and there will I with Master Robert Shallow, Eliquore: I haue him ahide, or tempering between my finger and my thumb, and shortly will I leale with him. Come away.

Exit.

Scene Secunda.

Enter King, War scyes, Clarence, Gloucester.

King. Now Lords, if hevene doth give successfull end To this Debate that bleekest at our doores, Wee will our Youth lead on to higher Fields, And drawe no Swords, but what are fadisticke. Our Naus is addressid, our Power collected, Our Substitues, in absence, well invested, And every thing lies level to our wish; Oneley wee want a little personal Strength: And paisse vs, till these Rebels,now at foot, Come underneath the yoke of Gouernment.

War. Both which we doubt not, but your Maiestie Shall soone enjoy.

King. Hum.
The second Part of King Henry the Fourth.

Orne Humphries (my Sonne of Gloucester) where is the Prince, your Brother?

Glo. I think he’s gone to hunt (my Lord) at Windsor.

King. And how accompanied?

Glo. I do not know (my Lord).

King. Is not his Brother, Thomas of Clarence, with him?

Glo. No (my good Lord) hee is in presence here.

Clar. What would my Lord, and Father, say?

King. Nothing but well to thee, Thomas of Clarence.

How chance thou art not with the Prince, thy Brother?

Hee loyseth thee, and doth not neglect him (Thomas).

Thou haft a better place in his Affection, Then all thy Brothers: cherish it (my Boy).

And Noble Offices thou may effect

Of Mediation (after I am dead)

Betweene his Greatneffe, and thy other Brethren.

Then shall hee not blam thee not his love,

Nor loose the good advantage of his Grace,

By seeming cold, or careless of his will.

For hee is gracious, if hee be obserued:

Hee hath a Teare for Pite, and a Hand

Open (as Day) for melting Chrystie:

Yet notwithstanding, being unseem’d, hee’s Flint,

As amorous as Winter, and as sudden,

As Flowers conceale in the Spring of day.

His tempest therefore must be well obserued:

Chide him for faults, and doe it reverently,

When you persecute his blood endless to mirth:

But being moodie, give him Line, and scope,

Till that his passions (like a Whale on ground

Confound themselfe) with working. Leave this Thomas,

And thou shalt prove a Father to thy friends,

A Hoopoe of Gold, to bind the Brothers in.

That the visited Veuell of their Blood

(Mingled with Venome of Suggestion,

As force, perforce, the Age will powre it in)

Shall never leake, though it doe work as strong

As Acrimony, or raft Cypower.

Clar. I shall observe him with all care, and love.

King. Why art thou not at Windsor with him (Thomas)?

Clar. Hee is not there to day: hee dines in London.

King. And how accompanied? Canst thou tell that?

Clar. With Prince, and other his continuall followers.

King. Mofly subiect is the fatter Soyle to Weedes:

And hee (the Noble Image of my Youth)

Is out-spered with them: therefore my griefe

Stretches it selfe beyond the howre of death.

The blood weepes from my heart, when I doe形状

In former imaginacion) the ungarded Days,

And rotten Times, that you shall looke upon,

When I am sleeping with my Ancestors.

For when his head-strong Riot hath no Curbe,

When Rage and hot-Blood are his Counsellors,

When Meanes and laugh Manners meece together;

Oh, with what Wings shall his Affections flye

Towards frauding Perill, and opposed Decay?

War. My gracious Lord, you seeke beyond him quites

The Prince but fludies his Companions,

Like a strange Tongue: wherein, to gaine the Language,

Tis needfull, that the most immodest word

Be looke’d upon, and learn’d: which once assynd,

Your Highneffe knowes, comes to no farther vse,

But to be knowne, and hated. Sodike grossie termes,

The Prince will, in the perfectneffe of time,

Cast off his followers: and their memorie

Shall as a Pattern, or a Mesure, due,

By which his Grandse may meece the lines of others,

Turning past-euills to advantaages.

King. Tis fett-one, when the Bee dooth leave her Combe

In the dead Carnese.

Enter Weftmoreland, Who’s here? Westmoreland?

Welf. Health to my Soveraigne, and new happinesse

Added to that, that I am come to deliver.

Prince Iohn, your Sonne, doth kiss your Grace’s hand;

Mundane, the Bishop, Strange, Haining, and all,

Are brought to the Correction of your Law,

There is not now a Rebel Sword unbreak’d,

But Peace puts forth her Olive every where:

The manner how this Action hath beene borne,

Here (at more lystere) may your Highneffe reade,

With every course, in his particular.

King. O Westmoreland, thou art a Summer Bird,

Which ene in the branch! of Winter wings

The lifting vp of day.

Enter Harcourt.

Looke, here’s more newes.

Harc. From Enemies, Heaven keeps your Maiestie:

And when they stand against you, may they fall,

As those that I am come to tell you of.

The Earle Northumberland, and the Lord Bardolfe,

With a Great power of English, and of Scots,

Are by the Sheriff of Yorkshire ouerthrown;

The manner, and true order of the fight,

This Packet (please it you) contains at large.

King. And wherfore should these good newes Make me sicke?

Will Fortune never come with both hands full,

But write her faire words full in foule Letters? Shee eyther gueses Stomack, and no Foodie,

(Such are the poore, in health) or else a Feast,

And takes away the Stomack (such are the Rich,

That have a bundance, and enioy it not.)

I should rejoice now, at this happy newes,

And now my Sight fyset, and my Braine is giddie.

O me, come necesse me, now I am much ill.

Glo. Comfort your Majestie.

Clar. Oh, my Royall Father.

Welf. My Soveraigne Lord, peace vp your selfe, looke vp:

War. Be patient (Princes) you doe know, these Fits Are with his Highness very ordinarie,

Stand from him, gue him ayrce:

Hee’s straigtlye well.

Clar. No, no, hee cannot long hold out: these pangs,

Thricecane, care, and Labour of his Minde.

Hath wrought the Mure, that should confine it in,

So thonne, that Life lookes through, and will break out.

Glo. The people feare me: for they doe obserue

Vsfather’s Heires, and lastlye Births of Nature:

The Seafons change their manners, as the Yeere

Had found some Mens thes allreape, and leap’d them ouer.

Clar. The Rice, and nest thricse flowd, no ebe betweene:

And the old fullre (Times doting Chaucer)

Say it did so, a little time before

That our great Grand-sire Edward d’cd, and dy’d.
Queen. Whither do you leave me here alone (my Lords)?
Glo. We left the Prince (my Brother) there (my Liege).
King. Who understands me and watches by you.
Queen. The Prince of Wales? where is he? let me see him.
This door is open, he is gone this way.
Glo. He came not through the Chamber where we stayed.
King. Where is the Crowne? who took it from my Pillow?
War. When we withdrew (my Liege) we left it here.
Queen. The Prince hath taken it hence:
Goe fetch him out.
Is he so haughty, that he doth suppose
My deere, my death? finde him (my Lord of Warwick)
Chide him hither: this part of his coniomy
With my discourse, and helpes to end me.
See Sonnes, what things you are:
How quickly Nature falls into revolt,
When Gold becomes her Object?
For this, the foolish out of carefull Fathers
Have broke their deere, with thoughts,
Their brames with care, their bones with joyfull,
For this, their haire ingravd and pyld vp
The anckers deeres of strange-achieved Gold:
For this, they have beene thoughtful, to insert
Their Sonnes with Arts, and Martiall Exercitcs:
When, like the Bee, euljing from every flower
The vernal Sweetnesse, our Thighes: pack with Wax,
Our Mouthes with Honey, we bring it to the Hue;
And like the Bees, are murthered for our paines.
This bitter taste yields his engrossment,
To the ending Father.

Enter Warwick.
Now, where is he, that will not stay so long,
Till his Friend Sickness hath determined it.
War. My Lord, I found the Prince in the next Room,
Washing with kindly Teares his gentle Cheeks,
With such a deepemeasure, in great sorrow,
That Tyranny, which neutron quaff but blood,
Would (by beholding him) have wasth'd his Knife
With gentle eye-drops. Her is comming hither.
King. But wherefore did hee take away the Crowne?

Enter Prince Henry.
Loe, where he comes. Come hither to mee (Harry)
Depart the Chamber, leave us here alone. Ext.

P. H.en. I never thought to heare you speake again.
King. Thy wish was Father (Harry) so to that thought:
I stay too long by thee, I weary thee.
Do't thou to hangre for my emipty Chayre,
That thou wilt needs inuest thee with mine Honors,
Before thoy howre be ripe? Of foolish Youth!
Thou seest the Greatnesse, that will ouer-whelme thee
Stay but a little: for my Cloud of Dignitie
Is held from falling, with so weake a winde,
That it will quickly drop: my Day is dimme.
Thou hast holme that, which after some few howres
Were thine, without offence: and at my death
Thou hast seald vp my expectacion.
Thy Life did manifest, thou lowd me not,
And thou wilt have me dye asul'd of it.
Thou hast not a thousande Daggers in thy thoughts,
Which thou hast wethet on thy stony heart,
To flie or halfe an howre of my Life.
What canst thou not forbear me halfe an howre?
The second Part of King Henry the Fourth.

Let heaven, for ever, keep it from my head,
And make me, as the poor soul of Quaino,
This death with a smile, and never curse more:
King, Of my some pain!

Heaven put it in thy mouth, at my death, hence,
That thou might'st beguile the more thy father's love,
Pleading to wallow, in my office of it.
Come bitter Horatio, sit thou by my bed; And beare, I think, the very leaft of Councell! That euer I shall have the honour known, my some,
By what you, parishes, and indifferently crooked way,
Lost this crown, and I myself know well
How troublesome it was upon my head.
To thee, it shall defend with better Queere.
Better Opinion, better Confirmation.
For all the while, the affection sent goes.
Withme, into the Earth. It seemed there,
But am Honour match'd with boy from word,
And I had many times, to upbrade
My game off, by their Affurances,
Which daily grew to Quaino, and to blood-dried,
Wounding oppofed Peace.

All these bold Beares,
Thou fekest with peril. I have answered:
For all my rice, hast beene, but as a Beacon,
A thing that is ague to thinke on, which will thinke on it,
Chang'st the Moundes: For what in me, was purchas'd,
Falles upon thee, in a more Jovian fort.
So then, the Goathward wasn't necessary y
Yet, though thou hast it more, then I could do,
Thou art not borne enough; since greters are greeters:
And all thy friends, which thou movt majeftis thy friends
Have but their flings, and teeth newly taken out,
And without working, I was first advau'd,
And by whole power, I well mightledge it, to care
To be againe shiphard: Which to avoid,
I cut them off: and had a purpose new
To lead our mory to the Holy Land;
Leaff reft, and fying full, might make them looke
Too neere unto my state,
Therefore (my Horace)
Be it thy course to bring giddy Mindeis
With foreign Queere; that, as Action hence borne out,
May waffe the memory of the former doyes.
More would I, but my Wings are waited for,
That strength of Speech is verily deme nece.
How came I by the Crowne, O heauen forgive
And grace it may, with thee, in true peace line.
Prince, My gracious Lige,
You wou'dst, wou'dst it keep, at any rate,
Then plane and right muff my poffecution be;
Which I, with more, then with a Common paine,
Gainst all the World, will rightfully maintaine.

Enter Lord Join of Lancaster,
And Warwick.

King. Look, look, looke,
Here comes my John of Lancaster:
John. Health, Peace, and Happinnesse,
To my Royall father.

King. Though bring the happyntesse and Peace
Some lawne
But health (slacke) with youthfull wings is bewray
From this bare, wittred I makeke. Upon thy fight
My worlde businesse makes a period.

Where
The second Part of King Henry the Fourth.

Where is my Lord of Warwick?

Prince, My Lord of Warwick.

King. Doth any name particular, belong

Vnto the Lodging, where I first did sawd o'?

War. 'Tis called Jerualem, my Noble Lord.

King. Laid be to heauen:

Even there my life must end.

It hath beene prophesied to me many yeares,

I should not dye, but in Jerualem:

Which (vainly) I suppose'd the Holy Land.

But beare me to that Chamber, there I'll ly:

In that Jerusalem, shall Harry dye.

Exeunt.

Actus Quintus. Scena Prima.

Enter Shallow, Silence, Falstaff, Bardolph, Page, and Damion.

Shal. By Cooke and Pye, you shall not away to night.

What Damy, I say.

Fal. You must excuse me, M. Robert Shallow.

Excuse shall not be admitted: there is no excuse to ferve: you shall not be excused.

Why Damion.

Damin. Hicke frin.

Shal. Damy, Damy, Damy, let me see (Damy) let me see: William Cooke, bid him come hither. Sir John, you shall not be excused.

Damy. Marry frin, thus: those Pigeons cannot bee freed: and againe frin, shall we fcorne the headland with Wheet?

Shal. With red Wheete Damy. But for William Cook: are there no yong Pigeons?

Damy. Yes Sir.

Here is now the Smithes note, for Shooing,

And Plough-brass.

Shal. Let it be caft, and payde: Sir John, you shall not be excused.

Damy. Sir, a new linke to the Bucket muft needes bee had: And Sir, doe you mean to ftoppe any of Williams Wagers, about the Sacke he left the other day, at Hawkley Fayre?

Shal. He shall answr it:

Some Pigeons Damy, a couple of short-legged Hemes: a joyn of Mutton, and any pitty little the Kickshaws, tell William Cooke.

Damy. Doth the man of Warr, play all night frin?

Shal. Yes Damy:

I will vie him well. A Friend with Court, is better then a penny in purse. Wth his men well Damy, for they are arnt Knauers, and will backe-bite.

Damy. No worr: then they are bitten. Sir. For they have innumerable favile liners.

Shaliam. Well consider Damy, about thy Buttnells,

Damy. I beleeth you Sir,

I have a complaint with William Usfer of Woncor, against Cle.

Shal. There are many complaints Damy, against that.

Damy. That Usfer is an arnt Knauer, on my know-

Damy. I graunt your Wrisht, that he is a knauer Sir.

But yet heauen forbid Sir, but a Knauer should have some Compenence, as his Friends request. An honneft man Sir, is able to speake for himfelfe, when a Knauer is not. I have ferved your Worlhippe truly Sir, of the eight yeares yeares: if I cannot once or twice in a Quarter beare out a knauer, against an honneft man, I hauue but a very little erédice with your Worlshippe. The Knauer is mine honnest Friend Sir, therefore I beleeech your Worlship, let him bee Counte-

Shal. Go too,

I say he shall have no wrong: Look out about Damy,

Where are you Sir John? Come, off with your Boats.

Give me your hand M. Bardolph.

Bard. I am glad to fee your Worlship.

Shal. I thank thee, with all my heart, kinde Master Bardolph: and welcome to my tall Fellow:

Come Sir John.

Falstaffe. I fliow you good Master Robert Shalow.

Bardolph, looke to our Horfes. If I was fawde into Quantities, I should make foure dozen of fuch bearded Hermits flaues, as Master Shalow. It is a wonderfull thing to fee the lemmible Coherence of his mean spirits, and his: They by obernery of him, do bear themselves like with Jaffices: Hee, by conternynge with them, is turnd into a Jaffice-like Stringman. Their spirits are fommarried in Companionship, with the participation of Soecy, that they flocke together in content, like so many Wildlief-Geife. If I had a fuiue to Mayster Shalow, I would humour his men, with the imputation of being neere their Mayster. If this Men, I would currie with Master Shalow, that no man could better command his Servants. It is certaine, that either wife beating, or igno-nant Carriage is caugh, as men take disafte, one of another: therefore, let men take heed of their Companie. I wil deaffe matter enough out of this Shalow, to keeppe Prince Harry in continual Laughter, the wearing out of five Fuffions (which is foure Tarnes) or two Actions, and he flall laugh with Internallife. O it is much that a Lye (with a flight Oath) and a left (with a fadde brow) will doe, with a fiiow, that nearer had the Ache in his flourles. O you fliow him laugh, till his face be like a wet Cloake, ill laid vp.

Shal. Sir John.

Falstaff. I come Master Shalow, I come Master Shalow.

Exeunt.

Scena Secunda.

Enter the Earle of Warwick, and the Lord Chiefc Justice.

Warwick. How now, my Lord Chiefc Justice, where away?

Ch.Juft. How doth the King?

War. Exceding well: his Cases are now, all ended.

Ch.Juft. I hope not dead.

War. Hee will do the way of Nature,

And to our purpose, hee lieth no more.

Ch.Juft. I would his Mastro had allee me with him.

The famce, that I truly did his life.

Hath lets me open to all injuries.
War. Indeed I think the young King lourcs you not.
Ch. Inf. I know he doth not, and do ame my felfe.
To welcome the condition of the Time,
Which cannot look more hideously upon me,
Then I have drawn it in my fantifie.

Enter John of Lancaster, Gloucester, and Clarence.

War. Here come the heavy fife of dead Harry:
O, that the living Hadrye had the temper
Of him, the worf of the three Gentlemen:
How many Noblest then, should hold their places,
That must strike faile, to Spirits of wilde fort?
Ch. Inf. Alas, I faint, all will be over-turn'd.
John. Good morrow Cofin Wauick, good morrow.
Clow. Cofine, Good morrow, Cofin.
John. We meet, like men, that had forgot to fpeake.
War. We do remember: but our Argument
Is all too beaute, to admit much talke.

Iob. Well! Peace be with him, that hath made weahty
Ch. Inf. Peace be with vs, left we be beller.
Glo. O, good my Lord, you have loft a friend indeed:
And I dare fure, you borrow not that face
Of the ftrewed, forrowfull felfe of mine.
John. Though no man can afford what grace to finde,
You stand in coldeft expeftation.
I am the tertor, wou'd be otherwifie.
Clow. Wel, you must now fpeake Sir John fadly for fime,
Which fummes againft your freame of Quality.

Ch. Inf. Sweet Princes; what I did, I did in Honor,
Loy by the Imperiall Conrufte of my Soule,
And neuer fhall you fee, that I will bagge
A raged, and fore-fall'd Remifion.
If Truth, and uprigh Innocency fayle me,
Ile to the King (my Mafter) that is dead,
And tell him, who hath fent me after him.
War. Here come the Prince.

Enter Prince Henry.

Ch. Inf. Good morrow: and heaven fave your Maiety.
Prince. This new, and gorgeous Garment, Maietty,
Sits not fo faire on me, as you thinke.
Brothers, you mine your Sadeffe with Some Peare;
This is the English, not the Turkifh Court:
Not Amnurah, in Amnurah fucceeds,
But Henry, Henry, You are my befie Brothers)
For (to fpeake truth) it is very welcom beseom you:
Sorrow, fo Royally in you appeares,
That I will deeply the Fashion on,
And were it in my heart. Why then be fad,
But entreate now more of it (good Brothers)
Then a lyome burtthen, laid upon vs all.
For me, by Heaven (I bid you be affur'd)
Ile be your Father, and your Brother too:
Let me but bear your Loun, Ile bare your Cares;
But weep not that Harries dead, and fo will I,
But Harry, liues, that shall conrue thofe Teares
By number, into houres of Happineffe.

Ps. We have no other from your Maiesty,
Ch. Inf. I know he doth not, and me: and you moft,
You are (I think) after d, I love you not.
Pr. No? If I be misjudg'd rightfully.
Your Maiesty hath no affuir to hate mee.
Ps. How might a Prince of my great hopes forget
So grefc Indignities you laid upon me?

War. What Race? Rebuffd? and roughly tend to Prifon?
Th' immediate Heire of England? Was this eale?
May this be wafh'd off in Lorde, and gone yon?
Ch. Inf. I then did vie the Perfons of your Father:
The Image of his power, by then in me,
And in th'administration of his Law,
Whiles I was fufp for the Commonwealth,
You Highneffe pleadt to forget my place,
The Maienity, and power of Law, and Induce.
The Image of the King, whom I prefented,
And ftroke me in my very State of Judgment.

Whereon (as an Offender to your Father),
I gaue bold way to my Authority,
And did commit you. If the deed were ill,
Be you contented, wearing now the Garland,
To have a Sonne, let your Decreas be athoug'd?
To plucke downe Induce from your owne Fall Bench?
To trip the comity of Law, and blunt the Sword
That guards the peace, and safety of your Perfons?
Nay more, to ipume at your moft Royall Image,
And mocke your wouking, in a Second body?

Pr. You are right Induce, and you weight this well;
Therefore fll bear the Balancie, and the Sword;
And I do with your Honors may enerease,
Till you do liue, to fee a Sonne of mine
Offend you, and obey you, as I did,
So fhall I liue, to fpreak my Fathers words:
Happy am I, that have a man fo bold,
That dares do Induce, on my proper Sonne;
And no leffe happy, having such a Sonne,
That would deliver vp his Greatneffe fo,
Into the hands of Induce. You did commit me:

For which, I do commit into your hand,
Th'untainted Sword that you have vs'd to beare;
With this Remembrance, That you vfe the fame
With the like bold, and in the fentiment of spirit
As you have done gaincl in me, There is my hand,
You fhall be as a Father, to my Youth:
My voice fhall found, as you do prompt mine cares;
And I will foape, and humbly my Intents,
To your well-praf'd, wife Directions.
And Princes all, beleee me, I befeech you:
My Father is gone wide into his Grave,
(For in his Tombe, lyee my Affections)
And with his Spirits, fadly I fufaine,
To mocke the expeftation of the World;
To frustrate Prophecies, and to racle out
Rotten Opinion, who hath writ me downe
After my femeing. The Tide of Blood in me,
Hath prouedly flow in Varity, to flow;
Now dark it turns, and ebbie backe to the Sea,
Where it fhall mingle with the state of Floods,
And flow henceforth in formal Maiety.
Now call we our High Court of Parliament,
And let vs choofe fuch Limbes of Noble Courafi,
That the great Body of our State may go
In equal rame, with the best governed Nation,
That Warre, or Peace, or both at once may be
As things acquaint and familiar to vs,
In which you (Father) shall have formof hand.
Our Coronation done, we will accite
(As I before rememberd) all our State,
And heauen (confusing to my good intents)
Not once, nor twice, shall have suffe to stay,
Heauen shorten Harry's happy life, one day. Exeunt.

Scena Tertia.

Enter Falstaff, Shallow, Silence, Bardolph, Page, and Poftall.

Shal. Nay, you shall see mine Orchard: where, in an Ashtree, we cut a ladie yeeres Pippin of my owne grafting, with a dnh of Carts away, and so forth (Come Co tinuam), when ten to bed.

Fal. Ye shall have here, a goodly dwelling, and a rich.

Shal. Barn, barren, barn, Barn: Beggars all, beggars all
Sir John: Marry, good ayre. Spread Dams, Spread Dams:
Well said, Dame.

Fal. This, Dame, fumes you for good vies; he is your Serving-man, and your Husband.

Sil. A good Varlet, a good Varlet, a very good Var let, Sir John: I have drunk too much Saack at Supper. A good Varlet. Now fit downe, now fit downe: Come Co

Sil. Al firs (quoth-a) we shall doe nothing but eate, and make good cheere; and praise heauen for the merrie
yeere: when flesh is cheape, and Females deere, and lufthe Lads come heere, and there fit merryly, and ever among fit merrily.

Fal. There's a merry heart, good M. Silence. I gle you a health for that anon.

Shal. Good M.Bardolph: some wine, Dame.

Da. Sweet Sir, Ile be with you anon: most sweete fit, fit, Matter Page, good M. Page, fit: Profase. What you want in meae, we'll have in drinkes: but you beare, the heat's all.

Shal. Be merry M. Bardolph, and my little Souliour
there be merry.

Sil. Be merry, be merry, my wife ha's all.

For women are shewes, both (hor, and tall):
Tis merry in Hall, when Beards wagge all;
And welcome merry Shriouette. Be merry, be merry, Fal. I did not thinke M. Silence had bin of this Mettle.

Sil. Who If? I have beene merry twice and once, ere now.

Da. There is a dith of Leech-costs for you.

Shal. Da.

Da. Your Worship: Ile be with you straight. A cup of Wine, sir.

Sil. A Cup of Wine, that's briake and fine, & drinke into the Leman mine: and a merry heart lues long-a.

Fal. Well said, M. Silence.

Sil. If we shall be merry, now comes in the sweete of the night.

Sil. Fill the Cuppe, and let it come, Ile pledge you a mile to the bottom.

Shal. Honell Barbadoe: welcome to you, man: I'll any thing, and will now call, beswore thy heart. Welcome my little tyue theefre, and welcome indeed too: I thee drink to
M. Barbadoe, and to all the Quelleroes about London.

Dau. I hope to see London, since ere I die.

Bar. I'll make thee see there, Daun.

Shal. You'll trake a quart together? Ha, will you not
M. Barbadoe?

Bar. Yes Sir, in a pottr pot.

Shal. I thanke thee: the knave will flicke by thee, I can affure thee that. He will not out, he is true bred.

Bar. And I'll flicke by him, sir.

Shal. Why there spoke a King: lack nothing, be merry.

Looke, who's at doore there, ha: who knockes?

Fal. Why now you have done me right.

Sil. Do me right, and dub me Knight, Saminges. It's not so?

Fal. Tis so.

Sil'st for Why then say an old man can do somwhat.

Dau. If it please your Worshippee, there's one Piffo come from the Court with newes.

Fal. From the Court? Let him come in.

Enter Piffo.

How now Piffo?

Pif. Sir John, I tause you sir.

Pif. What windes blow you hither, Piffo?

Pif. Not the ill windes which blowes none to good, Sweate Knight: Then now one of the greatest men in the Realme.

Sil. Indeed, I thinke he be, but Goodman Puffe of Basfon.

Pif. Puffe? puffe in thy teeth, most reurent Coward base. Sir John, I am thy Piffo, and thy Friend: heiter skelter have I rode to thee, and rydings do tbring, and lucky ioyes, and golden Times, and happy Newes of pia..

Fal. I prethee now deliuer them, like a man of this World.

Pif. A footra for the World, and Worldings bafe
I speake of Afflicte, and Golden ioyes.

Fal. Gabe al Affrion Knight, what is thy newes?

Let King Cawufl know the truth therefor.

Sil. At Robin-hood, Scarlet, and John.

Pif. Shall daunghill Cawffes contemn the Halleions?

And shall good newes be baffe'd?

Then Piffo lay thy head in Fusses lappe.

Shal. Honell Gentleman, I know not your breeding.

Pif. Why then Lame therefore.

For if you come with news from the Court. I take it ther is but two wayes, either to vitter them, or to conceale them. I am Sir, under the King, in some Authority.

Pif. Vnder which King?

Becanion, speake, or dye.

Shal. Vnder King Harry.

Pif. Harry the Fourth! or Fifth?

Sil. Harry the Fourth.

Pif. A footra for shine Office.

Sir John, thy tender Lamb-kinne, now is King.

Harry the Fifts the man, I speake the truth.

When Piffoe lyes, do this, and figne me, like
The bragging Spaniard,

The second Part of King Henry the Fourth.

Scena Quarta.

Enter Hotspur quickly, Del Teare-scheite, and Beatrix.

Hotspur. No, thou arrant knave: I would I might dye, that I might have thee hang'd: Thou hast drawne my shoulder out of toyoy. Off. The Confables have deliver'd her out ere to mee: and shee shall have Whipping cheere enough, I warrant her. There hath beene a man or two (lately) kill'd about her.

Del. Nut-hooke, nut-hooke, you Lyce: Come on, hee tell thee what, thou damn'd Tripe-viag'd Rascal, if the Childe I now go with, doe miscarie, thou had'st better thou had'st strooke thy Mother, thou Paper-fac'd Villaine.

Hot. O that Sir John were come, she would make this a bloody day to some body. But I would the Frute of her Wombe might miscarry.

Off. If it do, you shall have a dozen of Cushions againe, you have but eleven now. Come, I charge you both go with me: for the man is dead, that you and Piffol bear among you.

Del. Ile tell thee what, thou thin man in a Cenfor; I will have you as soundly swing'd for this, you blew-Bottel'd Rogue: you filthy famili'd Corroctitioner, if you not swing'd, Ile fasten you halfe Kistles.

Off. Come, come, you thee-Knight-arrant, come.

Hot. Os, that right foulth thus o'recometh me. Wel of Officinance, comes safe.

Del. Come you Rogues, come.

Bring me to a luffice.

Hot. Yes, come you curry'd Blood-hound.

Del. Goodman death, goodman Bones.

Hot. Thou越来, thou me.

Del. Come you thimble Things: Come you Rascall.

Off. Very well.

Exit.

Scena Quinta.

Enter two Groomes.

1. Groom. More Ruffian, more Ruffian.

2. Groom. The Trumpets have sounded twice.

1. Groom. It will be two of the Clocke, ere they come from the Coronation.

Exit Grooms.

Enter Falstaff, Shallow, Piffol, Bardolph, and Page.

Falstaff. Stand here by me, M. Robert Shallow, I will make the King do you Grace. I will leere wpon him, as he comes by: and do and mark the countenance that hee will give me.

Piffol. Bleffe thy Lungs good Knight.

Fal. Come heere Piffol, stand behind me. O if I had had time to have made new Lineiers, I would have be-flowed the thousand pound I borrowed of you. But it is no matter, this poore thing doth better: this doth inferre the zeale I had to see him.

Shal. It doth fo.

Fal. It strewes my earnestnesse in affection.

Piff. It doth fo.

Fal. My devotion.

Piff. It doth, it doth, it doth.

Fal. As it were, to side day and night, And not to deliberate, not to remember, Not to have patience to shifte me.

Shal. It is moft certain.

Fal. But to stand thain'd with Tramble, and sweating with desire to fee him, thinking of nothing else, putting all affyres in obtusion, as if there were nothing els to bee done, but to see him.

Piff. 'Tis fomper ideam: for oh sym bol nihil el. 'Tis all in every part.

Shal. 'Tis fo indeed.

Piff. My Knight, I will enflame thy Noble Liuer, and make thee rage, Thy Del, and Helen of thy noble thoughts is in base Durance, and contagious prison: Hal'd this day by moft Mechanicall and durnay hand. Rowze vppe Refuge from Ebon den, with fell Alecto's Snake, for Del is in: Piffol, speakes nought but troth.

Fal. I will deliver her.

Piffol. There roard the Sea: and Trumpet Clangour founds.

The Trumpets sound. Enter King Henry the Fifth, Brothers, Lord Chief Justice.

Fal. Save thy Grace, King Hell, my Royall Hell.

Piff. The heauens thee guard, and keepe, most Royall Impe of Fame.

Fal. *Save thee my sweet Boy.

King. My Lord Chief Justice, speake to that vaine man,

Ch.инф. Have you any wits?

Know you what 'lis you speake?

Fal. My King, my loure; I speake to thee, my heart.

King. I know thee not, old man: Fall to thy Prayers:

How ill white hairs become a Poole, and leffer?

I have
The second Part of King Henry the Fourth.

Sed. I cannot well perceive how, vaine you should give me your Doubler, and stifle me out with Straw; I beseech you, good Sir John, let me have five hundred of my thoufand.

Fal. Sir, I will be as good as my word. This that you heard, was but a colour.

Sed. A colour I fear, that you will dye, in Sir John.

Fal. Fear no colour, go with me to dinner:

Come Lieutenant Pilgrif, come Bardinfe.

I shall be fent for loome at night.

Ch. Inf. Go carry Sir John Falfaff to the Fletche,

Take all his Company along with him.

Fal. My Lord, my Lord.

Ch. Inf. I cannot now speake, I will hear you foonere:

Take them away,

Pfi. Sir fortune me torment, ferne me contente,

Exit. Mant Lancifer and Chief Inflice.

John. I like this faire proceeding of the Kings:

He hath inteme his wonted Followers

Shall all be very well provided for:

But all are banift, till their converfations

Appeare more wife, and modell to the world.

Ch. Inf. And fo they are.

John. The King hath call'd his Parliament,

My Lord.

Ch. Inf. He hath.

John. I will lay odders, that ere this yeere expire,

We beware our Ciull Swords, and Natuere fire

As fate as France. I heare a Bird fo fing,

Whole Mufique (fo my thinking)pleas'd the King.

Come, will you hence?

FINIS.

V. v. 54—115
EPILOGUE.

I FIRST, my Fears: then, my Curtse: last, my Speech. My Fears, is your Delight: My Curtse, my Duty: And my Speech, to Begge your Pardons. If you looke for a good Speech now, you endure me: For what I have to say, is of mine owne making: and what (indeed) I should say, will (I doubt) prove mine owne marvling. But to the Purpose, and so to the Venture: Be it knowne to you (as it is very well) I was lately heere in the end of a dishelving Play, to pray your Patience for it, and to promise you a Better: I did meane (indeede) to pay you with this, which if (like an ill Venture) it come undeluckily home, I breake, and you, my gentle Creditors love. Here I promise you I would be, and here I commit my Bodie to your Mercies: Bate me some, and I will pay you some, and (as most Debtors do) promise you infinitely.

If my Tongue cannot entreat you to acquite me: will you commande me to wipe my Legges? And yet that were but light payment, to Dancce out of your debt: But a good Conscience, will make any possible satisfaction, and so will I. All the Gentlewomen heere, have forgiven me, if the Gentlemen will not, then the Gentlemen do not agree with the Gentlewomen, which was never scene before, in such an Assembly.

One word more, I beseech you: if you be not too much cloud with Fat Meat, our humble Author will continue the Story (with Sir John in it) and make you merry, with faire Katherine of France: where (for any thing I know) Falsestaff shall dye of a sweat, Confesse already be kill'd with your hard Opinions: For Old-Castle dyed a Martyr, and this is not the man. My Tongue is weary, when my Legs are too, I will bid you good night, and so kneele downe before you: But (indeed) to pray for the Queene.

The Life of Henry the Fifth.

Enter Prologue.

For a Muse of Fire, that would ascend
The brightest Heavens of invention:
A Kingdom for a Stage, Princes to All,
And Monarchs to behold the surging Scene,
Then should the History, like himself,
Assume the Port of Mars, and at his heels
(Leave in, the Humilitie) should Pages, Sword, and Fire
Crouch for employment. But pardon, Gentlest all:
The flat unraised Spirits, that hath dar'd it,
On this unworthy Scaffold, to bring forth
So great an Oak. Can this Cook's Pat'rol'd
The genius fields of France? Or may we examine Within that Wooden O, the very Cocks
That did affright the Are in Agincourt?
O pardon: since a cracked Figure may Absurd in little place a Million,
And let us, Olypers to this great Attempt,
On your imaginative Forces works,
Suppose within the Girdle of the Wall.
Are now confid two mightie Monarchies,
Whose high, up-reared, and burning Fronts,
The perilous warrant Octave parts asunder.
Teece out our impression with your thoughts:
Into a thousand parts divide one Man,
And make imaginative Puffresses.
Think when we talk of Harfey, that you set them.
Printing their proud Harfey's rich remaining Earth:
For in your thoughts that now must deck our King,
Carry them here and there: Insomning o're Times;
Turning th' accomplishment of many yeeres
Into an Harpe-glasse: for the which stopple,
Admit me Chorus to this Historie;
Who Prologue-like, your humble patience pray,
Gently to heare, kindly toudge our Play.

Bisb. Cant.
Y Lord, Ile tell you, that selfe Bill is wrig'd,
Which in the eleventh yere of last Kings reign
Was like, and had indeed age; 2 vs past,
But that the lambling and vnquiet time
Did pull it out of further question.

Bisb. Els. But how my Lord shall we refid it now?
Bisb. Cant. It must be thought on: it is past against vs,
We lose the better half of our Possession:
For all the Temporall Lands, which men deuot
By Testament have given to the Church,
Would they stripp from vs; being val'd thus,
As much as would maintaine, to the Kings honor,
Full fiftene Earles, and fiftene hundred Knights,
Six thousand and two hundred good Esquires:
And to reliefe of Lazars, and weake age
Of indigent *aint Souls, paup corporall toyle
A hundred Almes-houses, right well supply'd:
And to the Coffers of the King beside,
A thousand pounds by th'yeere. Thus runs the Bill.

Bisb. Els. This would drinke deeper.
Bisb. Cant. T'would drink the Cup and all.

Bisb. Els. But what prevention?

Bisb. Cant. The King is full of grace, and faire regard.

Bisb. Els. And a true lover of the holy Church,
Bisb. Cant. The course of his youth promis'd it not.
The breath no sooner left his Fathers body,
But that his wildneffe, mortif互通 id in him,
Seem'd to dye too: yea, at that very moment,
Consideration like an Angell came,
And whipt the offending Adam out of him;
Leaving his body as a Paradise,
Tintelow and contains Celeftiall Spirits.
Neuer was such a Fodaine Scholler made:
Neuer came Reformation in a Flood,
With such a heady curance flowing faultes:
Nor neuer Hydra-headed Wilfulneffe
So soone did loose his Seat: and all at once;
As in this King.

Bisb. Els. We are blest in the Change.
Bisb. Cant. Hearse him but reason in Dumitie;
And all adorning with an inward with
You would desire the King were made a Prelate:
Hearse him debate of Common-wealth Affairs;
You would say, it hath been all in all his study:
Lift his discourse of Warre: and you shall here
A fearefull Battale rendred you in Musique.

Turn him to any Cause of Policy,
The Gordian Knot of it he will undo,
Familiar as his Garter: that when he speaks,
The Ayre, a Character'd Liberator, is still,
And the mute Wonder stucketh in men's ears,
To recite his sweet and mangled Sentences:
So that the Art and Præcaute part of Life,
Must be the Medifice to this Theorium
Which is a wonder how his Grace should gleaze it,
Since his addition was to Courses wins,
His Companies unletter'd, rude, and fashlow,
His Hotes fill'd up with Nyss, Banquets, Sports;
And never noted in him any Bedsie,
Any retrench, any sequestration,
From open Huangs and Populane.
B. Ely. The Strawberry grows underneath the Nettle,
And holestone Berrys thrive and open beef,
Neighbour'd by Fruit of bacer quality:
And so the Prince observ'd his Contemplation
Vnde; the Veyle of Wildnffe, which (no doubt)
Grew like the Summer Grasse, fallent by Night,
Vdiee, yet crefuite in his facetie.
B. Cant. It must be for, for Miracles are craft:
And therefore we must needs admit the meanes,
How things are perfected.
B. Ely. But my good Lord:
How now for mitigation of this Bill,
Vrg'd by the Commons: doth his Majeftie
Incline to it, or no?
B. Cant. He femeis indifferenc:
Or rather fwaying more upon our part,
Than cherifhing the exhibitors against vs:
For I have made an offer to his Majeftie,
Vpon our Spiritual Convocation,
And in regard of Caufes now in hand,
Which I have open'd to his Grace at large,
As touching France, to give a greater Sumine,
Then ever at one time the Clergie yet
Dio to his Predeceflors part withall.
B. Ely. How did this either feme receiv, my Lord?
B. Cant. With good approbation of his Majeftie:
Sauz that there was not tune enough to hear,
As I percénd his Grace would faine done more,
The feeralles and wherein paffages
Of his true Titles to some certaine Dakedomes,
And generally to the Crown and Sitt of France,
Deri'd from Edward. his great Grandfather.
B. Ely. What was the impediment that broke this off?
B. Cant. The French Embaffador upon that infite
Crud' audience and the howre I thinkes is come,
To give him hearing: Is it fome a Clock?
B. Ely. It is.
B. Cant. Then goe we in, to know his Embaffador:
Which I could with a ready grefsle declare,
Before the Frenchman speake a word of it.
B. Ely. He wait upon you, and I long to hear it.
Exeunt.
Enter the King, Humphrey, Bedforp, Clarence,
Warwick, Wempton, and Exeter.
King. Where is my gracious Lord of Canterbury?
Exeunt. Not here in presence.
King. Send for him, good Vuckie.
William. Shall we call in the Embaffador, my Liege?
King. Not yet, my Cousin: we would be refolvd,
But to the hear him, of some things of weight,
That take our thoughts, concerning vs and France.
Enter two Bifhops.
B. Cant. God and his Angels guard your sacred Throne,
And make you long become it.
King. Sure we thank you.
My learned Lord, we pray you to proceed,
And fully and religiously unfold,
Why the Law Salle,that they have in France,
Or Claim of it or should not barre us in our Clayme:
And God forbid, my dear and faithfull Lord,
That you should fashion, weft, or bow your reading,
Or licelly charge your underftanding Soul,
With opening Titles miscreate, whole right
Sutes not in nature colours with the truth:
For God doth know, how many now in health,
Shall drop their blood, in approbation
Of what your reuerence shall incite vs to,
Therefore take heed how you impugne our Persou,
How you awake our sleeping Sword of Warre;
We charge you in the Name of God take heed:
For never two such Kingsdomes did contend,
Without much fall of blood, whose guiltlesse drops
Are every one a Woot, a fore Complaint,
'Gainfi him, whose wrongs gincs edge into the Swords,
That makes such waft ale in briefe moralie.
Vnder this Coniuration, speake my Lord:
For we will heare, note, and beleue in heart,
That what you speake, is in your Confiquence well,
As pure as ftme with Baptisme.
B. Cant. Then heare me gracious Sovereigne, &c. Peers,
That ovo your velues, your hues, and features,
To this imperatull Throne. There is no barre
To make againft your Highnesse Clayme to France,
But this which they produce from Pharamond,
To terram Salicam: Assertions we refceind,
No Women fhall fucceed in Salie Land:
Which Salle Land, the French vniually choye
To be the Realm of France, and Pharamond
The founder of this Law. and Fe male Barre.
Yet there our Authors faithfully affinance,
That the Land Salle is in Germanie.
Betweene the Friends of Sala and of Elts:
Where Charles the Great hanging fubdied the Saxons,
There left behind and settled certaine French:
Who holding in disdain the German Women,
For some difmifler manners of their life,
Efflibh'd then this Law, to wit, No Female
Should be Phentrix in Sala Land:
Which Salle (as I fayd) twent. Elks and Sala,
Is at this day in Germanie, call'd Meffen.
Then doth it well appear, the Salle Law
Was not denied for the Realm of France:
Nor did the French poftiffe the Salle Land,
Vntill four hundred one and twentie yeares
After declaration of King Pharamond,
Fully approv'd the founder of this Law,
Who died within the yeere of our Redemption,
Four hundred twentie fix: and Charles the Great Subdu'd the Saxons, and did feat the French
Beyond the River Sala, in the yeere
Eight hundred fixe. Before, their Writers fay,
King Pepin, which depofed Childerke,
Did as Heire Generall, being defended
Of Blisht, which was Daughter to the King Clovis,
Make Clayme and Title to the Crowne of France.
Hubb Capet also, who viurpt the Crowne

Of Charles the Duke of Loraine, sole Heire male Of the true Line and Stock of Charles the Great: To find his Title with some shame of truth, Though in pure truth it was corrupt and naught, Conuey'd himself as th'Heire to th'Lady Liona, Daughter to CHARLEMAGNE, who was the Sonne To Lewer the Empeur, and Lewer the Sonne Of Charles the Great: so King Lewer the Tenth, Who was sole Heire to the Vnuper Capet, Could not keep quiet in his conscience, Wearing the Crowne of France, till satisfied, That Hare Queenes I said, his Grandmother, Was Lineall of the Lady vermogna, Daughter to Charles the forefaid Duke of Loraine: By the which marriage, the Lyne of Charles the Great Was reнииted to the Crowne of France. So, that as cleare is as the Summers Sunne, King Pepus Title, and Hugh Capet Cyvme, King Lewre his satisfaction, all appeare To hold in Right and Title of the female: So doe the Kings of France vnto this day. Howbeit, they would hold up this Salique Law, To barre your Highnesse clayming from the Female, And rather chuse to hide them in a Net, Then amably to imbarre their crooked Titles, Vnleast from you and your Progenitors. King May I have right and conscience make this claim? By Cant. The fame vpon my head, dread Sovereign: For in the Bookes of Numbers it is writ, When the man dyes, let the inheritance Defend vnto the Daughter. Gracious Lord, Stand for your owne, vnwind your bloody Flagge, Looke back into your mightie Ancestors: Who on the French ground play'd a Tragedie, Making deface on the full Power of France: Whiles his most mightie Father on a Hill Stood smiling, to behold his Lyons Whelp Enrage in blood of French Nobilitie, To Noble English that could entertaine With halfe their Forces, the full pride of France, And let another halfe band laughing by, All out of worke, and cold for action. By Cant. Awake remembrance of thse valiant dead, And with your puissant Arme renew their Fears: You are their Heire, you sit upon their Throne: The Blood and Courage that renowned them Run in your Vessse: and my thrice-puissant Liege Is in the very May-Morne of his Youth, Ripe for Exploits and mightie Entrepries. Exe. Your Brother Kings and Monarchs of the Earth Do all expect, that you should rowee your selfe, As did the former Lyons of your Blood. Wooff. They know your Grace hath heart, and means, and So hath your Highnesse: newer King of England Had Nobles richer, and more loyall subjects, Whole hearts have left their bodies here in England, And lye palely d in the fields of France, Wooff. Cant. O let their bodies follow my deare Liege With Bloods and Sword and Fire, to win your Right, In that whereof, we of the Spiritualitie Will royce your Highnesse such a mightie Summe, As vnto the Clergie at one time Bring in to any of your Ancestors.

King. We must not only armes invade the French, But lay downe our proportions, to defend Against the Scot, who will make roade up on vs, With all advantages.

Bish. Cant. They of those Marchers, gracious Sovereign, Shall be a Wall sufficient to defend Our in-land from the piffering Borderers.

King. We do not meane the couring finachers onely, But feare the maine intendment of the Scot, Who hath been fill a giddy neighbour to vs: For you feall ready, that my great Grandfather Neues went with his forces into France, But that the Scot, on his unformift Kingdome, Came pouring like the Tyde into a breach, With ampie and brim fulleffe of his force, Gilling the gleaned Land with hot Affayes, Girding with grieuous finge, Castles and Townes: That England being empiue of Defence, Hath broke, and trembled at this ille neighbours.

Exe. She hath bin the more feard the harder, my Liege: For heare but expaml'd by her selfe, When all her Chesaue hath been in France, And thee a mourning Widdow of her Nobles, Since hath her selfe not onely well defended, But taken and impoundd as a Stray, The King of Scots with them hee did dispoze to France, To fill King Edward's name with prisoner Kings, And make their Chronicle as rich with pratyse, As is the Owle and botteme of the Sea With funder Wrack, and fan-leffe Treasures.

Bish. Ely. But there's a faying very old and true, If that you will France won, then with Scotland foil begin. For once the Eagle (England) being in prey, To her vnguarded Nest, the Weazell ( Sco) comes sikeing, and to fucks her princely Eagles, Playing the Moule in abence of the Cat, To tame and tucke more then the canecate.

Exe. It followes thes, the Cat must stay at home, Yet that is but a cruelld necessity, Since we have lockes to safeguard necessaries, And pretty traps to catch the petty thieves. While that the Armed hand doth fight abroad, The adduned head defends it selfe at home: For Government, though high, and low, and lower, Put into parts, doth keep in one content, Congreeting in a foul and natural close, Like Musick.

Cant. Therefore doth heaven divide The face of man in divers functions, Setting endeavour in continuall motion: To which is fixed as an ayre or butt, Obedience for to worke the Hony Beer, Creatures that by a rule in Nature teach The Act of Order to a peopled Kingdome, They have a King, and Officers of orts, Where none like Magistrates correct at home: Others, like Merchants venter Trade, abroad: Others, like Soullers armed in their king, Make boose vpon the Summers Velvet budders: Which pillage, they with merry march bring home: To the Tent-royal of their Emperor: Who bluyed in his Mislies suruyes, The singing Mafons building roofes of Gold, The civil Citizens kneeling up the hony: The poore Mechurickes Porters, crowding in Their heayy burthenes at his narrow gate:

The tid-e'y'd justice with his furyu humane,
Delivering one to Executors pale
The laziest yawning Drone: This inferne,
That many things having full reference
To one consent, may work contrarioty,
As many Arrowes loosed feverall ways
Come to one mark: as many ways meet in one towne,
As many fresh streams meet in one fall sea;
As many Lynes close in the Dial's center:
So may a thousand actions once a foole,
And in one purpofe, and be all well borne
Without defeat. Therefore to France, my Liege, Diuide your happy England into foure,
Whereof, take you one quarter into France,
And you withall shall make all Gallia shake.
If we with thirfe fuch poweres left at home,
Cannot defend our owne doores from the dogge,
Let vs be worried, and our Nation lofe
The name of hardestifhe and policie.

King. Call in the Meffengers sent from the Dolphin.
Now are we well resolu'd, and by God's helpe
And yours, the noble finewes of our power,
France being ours, we'll bend it to our Awe,
Or brake it all to pieces. Or there we'll fit, (Ruling in large and ample Empire,
Of France, and all her (almost) Kingly Dukedomes)
Or lay their bones in an awful pyre,
Tomblifie, with no remembrance over them:
Either our History shall with full mouth
Spake freely of our Acts, or efe our grave
Like Turkifh mure, shall have a tongueefe mouth,
Not worhipt with a waxen Epitaph.

Enter Ambassadors of France.
Now are we well prepar'd to know the pleasure
Of our faire Cadin Dolphin to vs we heart,
Your meeting is from him, not from the King.

Amb. May't please your Maiestie to give vs leave
Freely to render what we have in charge:
Or shall we sparingly throw you farre off
The Dolphins meaning, and our Embafsie.

King. We are no Tyrant, but a Chriftian King,
Vnto whose peace our passion is as Subiect
As is our watchfull fentinel in your potitons,
Therefore with franke and with incurv'd plainneffe,
Tell vs the Dolphin s minde.

Amb. Thus in few:

Your Highneffe lately fending into France,
Did declare none certaine Dukedomes, in the right
Of your great Predecessor, King Edward the third.
In answere of which claime, the Prince our Mafter
Syes, that you favour too much of your youth,
And bids you be advis'd: There's noth in France,
That can be with a nimble Galliard wonne:
You cannot rewnt into Dukedomes there.
He therefore fends you meeter for your spirit
This Tun of Treafure; and in lieu of this,
Defire you let the dukedomes that you claime
Have no more of you. This the Dolphin speaks.

King. What Treafure vche?

Exe. Tennis balles, my Liege.

King. We are glad the Dolphin is fo pef tent with vs,
His Prefent, and your paines we thonke you tor:
When we haue matched our Rackets to thofe Balles,
We will in France (by Gods grace) play a fett,
Shall thiik his fathers Crowne into the hazard,
Tell him, he hath made a match with fuch a Wrangler,

That all the Courts of France will be duffer'd
With Chaces. And we understand him well,
How he coms so vs with our wilder dayes,
Not measuring what wee we made of them.
We are but valv'd this poore fear of England,
And therefore liking hence, did give our felte
To barbarous licence: As 'tis cures common,
That men are merry, when they are from home.
But tell the Dolphin, I will keepe my State,
Be like a King, and fwee my fayle of Greatneffe,
When I do rowifie me in my Throne of France,
For that I have laded by my Maietie,

Exe. This was a merry Meffage.

King. We hope to make the Sender blefte at it:
Therefore, my Lords, omit no happy hooure,
That may give furthance to our Expedition.
For we hate now no thought in vs but France,
Saufe thofe to God, that runne before our bull che.
Therefore let our proporftions for thefe Wares
Be loone collected, and all things thought upon,
That may very well be fulfilled in our purposes,
More Feathers to our Wings: for God before,
We'll chide this Dolphin at his fathers doeire.
Therefore let every man now tafke his thought,
That this faire Action may on foot be brought.

Enter Ambassadors.

Exe. Now all the Youth of England are on fire,
And filk Dalliance in the Wardrobes byes:
Now thruithe the Armorers, and Honors thought
Reignes folely in the broat of euy man.
They fell the Pallure now, to buy the Horfe;
Following the Mirror of all Chriftian Kings,
With winged heales, as English Mercureis,

Seek to divert the English pursuits.

What mightst thou do, that honour would thee do, Were all thy children kind and natural? But fie, thy faults France hath in thee found out, A nest of hollow bonemotes, which he filles With treacherous Crownes, and three corrupted men: One, Richard Earle of Cambridge, and the second Henry Lord Scroope of Masham, and the third Sir Thomas Grey Knight of Northumberland, Hau for the Gifts of France (O guilt indeed) Confirm'd Conspiracy with trearell France, And by their hands, this grace of Kings must dy. If Hell and Treason hold their promises, Ere he take ship for France; and in Southampton, Linger your patience on, and we'll digest Till that of force; for the time is past. The summer is payde, the Traitors are agreed, The King is set from London, and the Scene Is now transported (Gentles) to Southampton, There is the Play, house now, there must you fit, And thence to France shall we convey you safe, And bring you backe: charming the narrow seas To give you gentle Paff: for if we may, We'll not offend one homage with our Plays: But till the King come forth, and not till then, Vnto Southampton do we flatter our Scene.

Exit Enter Corporall Nym, and Lieutenant Bardolf. Bar. Well met Corporall Nym. Nym. Good morrow Lieutenant Bardolf. Bar. What, are Ancient Pifallo and you friends yet? Nym. For my part, I care not: I say little: but when time shall ferve, there shall be Smiles, but that shall be as it may. I dare not fpeak, but I will wake and holde out mine roomes as a faire one, but what though? It will toffe Cheefe, and it will endure cold, as another mans fword will: and there's an end. Bar. I will belowe a breakfeft to make you friends, and we'll be all three fome brothers to France: Let's be fo good Corporall Nym. Nym. Faith, I will live fo long as I may, that's the certaine of it: and when I cannot live any longer, I will doe as I may: That is my reft, that is the rendezou of it. Bar. It is certaine Corporall, that he is married to Neil Quickly, and certainly the did you wrong, for you were troth-plighted to her. Nym. I cannot tell, things must be as they may: men may flpee, and they may have their throats about them at the morning of their un. I one, Horr: howes have edges: it must be as it may, though patience be a tyed name, yet fire will plodde, there must be Conclusions, well, I cannot tell. Enter Pifallo, & Quickly. Bar. Here comes Ancient Pifallo and his wife: Good Corporall be patient here. How now mine Hostle Pifallo? Pif. Bafe Tyke, call thee me Hoft, now by this hand I fowe ye I forne the termes: nor shall my Nest keep Lodgers. Hoft. Not by my troth, not long: For we cannot lodge and board a dozen or fourenee Gentlewomen that live honestly by the pricke of their Neecles, but it will bee thought we keep a Bawdwy-house Gentlemen. O weithday Lawe, if he be a gentlewoman now, we shall fee wilfull adultery and murther committted. Bar. Good Lieutenant, good Corporall offer nothing here. Nym. Pif.

Pif. Pith for thee, Island dogge: thou pricked ear of Island. Hoft. Good Corporall Nym thee thy valor, and put vp your fword. Nym. Will you thongge off? I would have you folus. Pif. Solus, egregious dog? O Viper vile; The folus in thy most menstruous face, the folus in thy teeth, and in thy throat, and in thy hateful Lungs,yea in thy Maw perdy; and which is worse, within thy naffle mouth. I do recrout the folus in thy bowels, for I can take, and Pifallo cocke is vp, and flashing fire will follow. Nym. I am not Bardofon, you cannot confine mee: I have an humor to knocke you indifferentely well: If you grow fowle with me Pifallo, I will confue you with my Rapiar, as I may, in fayre tearest: If you would walke off, I would pricke your guts a little in good tearest, as I may, and that's the humor of it. Pif. O Braggard vile, and damned furious wight, The Graue doth gape, and doing death is nere, Therefore exahle. Bar. Hear me, hear me what I fay: Hee that strikes the firit Stroke, He run him vp to the hifts, as I am a foldiuer. Pif. An oath of mickle might, and furious fhall abate. Give me thy lifh, thy fore-foote to me giue: Thy fpirites are modell: Nym. I will cut thy throat one time or other in faire terms, that is the humor of it, Pifallo. Couple a garage, that is the word, I defire thee againe.O hound of Creec, think'ft thou my fpoone to get? No, to the fippele gree, and from the Pondring tub of infamy, fetch forth the Lazar Kite of Crifall kinde, Doll Teenoe, flerte, the by name, and her epouie. I haue, and I will hold the Quandam Quincey for the onely thee: and Fancia, there's enough to goe. Enter the Bay. Bay. Mine Hostle Pifallo, you must come to my Mayfler, and your Hostleffell,Hie is very ficke, & would to bed. Good Bardolf's, put thy face betweene his fheets, and do the Officer of a Warming-fan: Faith, he's very ill. Bard. Away you Rogue. Hoft. By my troth he'yleed the Crow a pudding one of thefe days: the King has kild his heart. Good Hufband come home prefently. Exit Bar. Come, I shall make you two friends, Wee muft to France together:why the duell shou'd we keep knytes to cut one another throats? Pif. Let floods ore-fwell, and fire for fowle hon. Nym. You take me the eight fhillinges I won of you at Beting? Pif. Bale the Slawe that payes, Nym. That now I will have: that's the humor of it. Pif. As manhood fliall compound: Ships home, Draw Bard. By this fword, bee that makes the firit thraff, I'le kill him: By this fword, I will, Pif. Sword is an Oath, & Oaths muft have their courfe. Bar. Corporall Nym, & thou wilt be friends be friends, and thou wilt not, why then be enemies with me to prethee put vp. Pif. A Noble fruit thou have, and prefent pay, and Liquor likewise will I glue to thee, and friendlifh frill combyne, and brotherhood. I'le buy by Nymmes, & Nymmes fruit hie by me, in not this suit? For I'le buy a -Sulier be unto the Campe, and profits will accrue.Give mee thy hand.

Bed. True God his Grace is bold to trust these traitors.

Exe. The King is pleased to do nothing, come with me.

Well, how smooth and even do they bear themselves, as if allegiance in their bosomes fate

Crowned with faith, and constant loyalty.

Bed. The King hath note of all that they intend,

By interception, which they dreame not of.

Exe. Nay, but the man that was his bedfelowe,

Will cut their paffage through the force of France?

Doing the execution, and the act,

For which we have in hand assembled them.

Sero. No doubt my Liefge, each man do his best.

King. I doubt not that, since we are well perfwaded

We carry not a heart with vs from hence,

That grows not in a faire content with us,

Nor leave not one behinde, that doth not with

Successe and Conquest to attend on vs.

Cam. Never was Monarch better fear'd and loud,

Then is your Majestie; there's not I thinkke a subject

That first in heart-greede and vnclaffinell

Under the sweet shadie of your government,

That the many desire that were your Frenemies enemies,

Haue steep'd their gauls in honoy, and do fere vs with Hearts creaste of duty, and of zelze.

King. We therefore have great cause of thankfulness,

And shal forget the office of our hand

Sooner then quittance of defect and merit,

According to the weight and worthinell.

Sero. So farre as shall with feeded lineswore stye,

And laboure shall requite it selfe with hope

To do your Grace incessant services.

King. We Judge no leffe, Vukle of Exeter,

Inflarge the man committed yesterdies,

I hat rayd against our person; We consider

It was exercte of Wine that let him on,

And on his more allience, We pardon him.

I must say, he was such trafffe,

Let him be punish'd Souzergie, least example

Bred (by his sufferance) mote of such a kind.

King. O let vs yet be mercifull.

Cam. So may your Highnesse, and yet punish too.

Gray. Sir, you shew great mercy if you give him life.

After the cause of much correction.

King. Also, your too much louse and care of me,

And my Office* gainst this poor wretch:

That little faults proceeding on diftemper,

Shall not be wink'd at, how shall we fetthe our eye

When capital crimes, chew'd, swallow'd, and diggell,

Appeare before us? We'll yet inflarge that man,

That though Cambridge, Scope, and Gray, in their deere care

And tender prefervation of our person

Would have him bar'd, And now to our French caues.

Who are the late Commissioners?

Cam. I one my Lord,

Your Highnesse bad me ask for it to day.

Sera. So did you my liege.

Gray. Sir, I my Royal Souzergie.

King. Then Richard Estle of Cambridge, there is yours:

There you may to Scope of Mathiam, and Sir Knight:

Gray of Northumberland, this fame is yours:

Reade them, and know I know your worthinesse,

My Lord of Westminster, and Vukle Exeter.

We will appord to night. How why now Gentlemen?

What fee you in thole papers, that you looke

So much complexion? Looke ye how they change:

Think they are paper. Why, what reader you there,

That have to coward and chuse your blood.

Out of apperance.

Cam. I do confesse my fault,

And do submite to you your Highnesse mercy.

Gray. Sera. To which we all appeale.

King. The mercy that was quick in vs but late,

By your owne cause he is appeale and kill'd:

And thou shalt not that thou tooke of mercy,

For your owne reasons turne into your bosomes,

As dogs upon their masters, worrying you:

See you my Princes, and my Noble Peeres,

These English monisters: My Lord of Cambridge heere,

You know how apt our love was, to accord

To furnish with all apporitions

Belonging to his Honours; and this man,

Hath for a few light Crownes, lightly confpir'd

And sworne into the pratticess of France

To kill vs heere in Hampton. To the which,

This Knight no leffe for bounty bound to vs

Then Cambridge is, hath likewise sworn. But O,

What shall I say to thee Lord Scope, thou cruel,

True unkind, and inhuman Creature?

Thou that didst bear the key of all my counsell,

That knewst the very bastoure of my soule,

That almost it might haue come into Godes,

Wouldst thou have praer'd on me, for thy vie?

May it be poble, that foreigner hyer

Could out of thee extract one spark of cuillus

That mightst light my finger? In so strange,

That though the truth of it stands off as grotele

As blacke and white, my eye will fearely see it.

Treason, and murther, ever kept together,

As two yoke diesles sworne to eythers purpose,

Working to grotelesly in aneuallcause,

That admiration did not hoope at them.

But thou (painted all proportion) deptt bring in

Your to wites his murther, and on murtherer:

And whatsoever connell fend it was

That wrought in vs thee so perpetually,

Hath got the voyce in hell for excellence:

II. i. 119—II. ii. 113

428
The Life of Henry the Fifth.

And other duels that suggest by treasons,
Do both and bungle vp damnation,
With patches, colours, and with forms being fetched:
From glistening feances of petty:
But he that temper'd thee, bad thee hand vp.
Gaue thee no inefface why thou shouldst do treason,
Vnliefe to dub thee with the name of traitor.
If that fame Damon that hath guld thee thus,
Should with his Lyon-gate walke the whole world,
He might returne to vatile Tarar hacke,
And tell the Legions, I can never win.
A soule fo easie as that Englishmans.
Oh, how halfe thou with jealoous infected
The swartnesse of affiance? Shew me duftself,
Why so didst thou: seeke they graue and learned?
Why so didst thou. Come they of Noble family?
Why so didst thou. Smeee they religious?
Why so didst thou. Or are they price in diet,
Free from grofe passion, or of mirth, orangeri,
Constant in spirit, not twerwing with the blood,
Garnish'd and deck'd in modest complement,
Not working with the eye, without the ear,
And in pure judgement trufing neither,
Such and so finely bounteou as thou feeme:
And that the fall hath left a kind of blote,
To make thee fully fraught man, and belt indued
With some sippitation, I will wepe for thee.
For this retoul of shine, me thinkes is like Another fall of Man. Their faults are open,
Arrereth them to the anwser of the Law,
And God acquit them of their praetiches.

Exe. I arrereth thee of High treason, by the name of Richard Exlie of Cambridge.
I arrereth thee of High treason, by the name of Thomas
Lord Sroope of Meres.
I arrereth thee of High treason, by the name of Thomas
Grey, Knight of Northumberland.
Sure, Our pursipes, God dutly hath disscour'd,
And I repent my fault more then thy death,
Which I befrech thy Highe Noise to forger.
Although my body paye the price of it.

Cam. For me, the Gold of France did not seduce,
Although I did admit it as a motuie,
The sooner to effect what I intended:
But God be thanked for prevention,
Which in sufferance heartely will rejoyce,
Befeech God, and you, to pardon mee.

Gray. Neuer did faithful fubiecte more rejoyce
At the discovery of most dangerous treason,
Then I do at this houre joy or my felle,
Prevent'd from a dammed enterprise;
My fault, but not my body, pardon Soveraigne.

King. God quitte you in his mercy. Hear your sentence
You have conspir'd againft Our Royal person,
Joyn'd with an enemy proclain'd, and from his Coffers,
Recey'd the Golden Earneft of Our death:
Wherein you would have fold your King to slaughter,
His Princes, and his Peeres to feritude,
His Subjectes to oppression, and contempt,
And his whole Kingdome into defolation:
Touching your person, feeke we no revenge,
But we the Kingdomes safety wuff to tenure.
Whose ruine you sought, that to her Lawes
We do deliver you. Get you therefore hence, (Doore miserable wretches) to your death:
The tale whereof, God of his mercy gue

You patience to induce, and true Repentance
Of all your deare offences. Bear them hence. Exit.
Now Lords for France: the enterprize whereof
Shall be to you as, like glorious.
We doubt not of a faire and lucchie Warre,
Since God so graciously hath brought to light
This dangerous treason, lurking in our way,
To hinder our beginings. We doubt not now,
But every Rubble is smoothen'd on our way,
Then forthe, deare Countreymen: Let vs deliuer
Our Puissance into the hand of God,
Putting it straight in expedition.
Chearely to Sea, the signes of Warre aduance,
No King of England, if not King of France.

Flowers. Enter Piffes, Nim, Bardolph, Boy, and Holfife.

Holfife. Prty thee honey sweet Husband, let me bring thee to Staines.
Piffes. No: for my manly heart doth erre. Bardolph, be blythe:
Nim, rowle thy vaunting Veines: Boy, bristle thy Courage vp:
for fast of thee is dead, and wee must eme therefore.

Bard. Would I were with him, whereofmere hee is,
Cyther in Heauen, or in Hell.

Holfife. Nay, there be not in Hell: h'res is in Arthur.
Bofonce, if every man went to Arbitr Bofoone: a made a finer end, and went away it and it had bee ne any Christlome Child: a parted eu'n between T velve and One, eu'n at the tournung o'th Tydes: for after I saw him tumble with the Sheets, and play with Flowers, and smile upon his fingers end, I knew there was but one way: for his Noise was as sharp as a Pen, and a Table of greene fields. How now Sir Lok (quoth I') what man? be a good chere: so a cryed out, God, God, God, three or four times: now I, to comfort him, bid him a should not think of God; I hop'd there was no neede to trouble himselfe with any such thoughtes yet: so a bad me lay more Clothes on his feet: I put my hand into the Bed, and felt them, and they were as cold as any stone: then I felt to his knees, and to vpc peer'd, and upwaerd, and all was as cold as any stone.

Nim. They say he cryed out of Sack.

Holfife. I, that a did.

Bard. And of Women.

Holfife. Nay, that a did not.

Boy. Yes that a did, and fayd they were Deules incinate.

Woman. A could neuer abide Carnation, 'twas a Co-

Boy. A fayd once, the Deule would haue him about

Woman. Holfife. A did in some fort (indeed) handle Women:
but then hee was rumatie, and talkd of the Whore of Babylon.

Boy. Doe you not remember a faw a Flee fliecke vpon Bardolphs Noise, and a faid it was a blacke Soule burning in Hell.

Bard. Well, the fule is gone that maintaine't that fader:
thats all the Riches I got in his service.

Nim. Shall we flogg? the King will be gone from Southampton.

Piff. Come, let's away. My Loue, give me thy Lippes
Look to my Chantels, and my Mouserables: Let Sence rule: The world is Pitch and pay: truth none: for Oaches are Strawes, mens Faiths are Wafer-Cakes, and hold-daf is the onely Dogge: My Ducke, therefore Camill be thy Counseller. Go, cleare thy Chyrstalls. Yoke fellowes in Atmes, let vs to France, like Horfeleches
And he is bred out of that bloodie fhaine,
That haunted vs in our familiar Paths:
Whencefe our too much memorabile fhame,
When Crefiy Battell fatally was frucke,
And all our Princes captivid,by the hand
Of that black Name,Edward,black Prince of Wales:
Whiles that his Mountain fire, on Mountain flanding
Vp in the Ayre,crowned with the Golden Sunne,
Saw his Heroicall Seed, and imdi to fee him
Mangle the Worke of Nature, and deface
The Patternes, that by God and by French Fathers
Had twenty yeares been made. This is a Stem
Of that Vitorious Stock: and let vs fcare
The Natije mightineffe and fate of him.

Enter a Mefinger.

Meff. Embassadors from Harry King of England,
Do crave admittance to your Maffeau.
King. We ele give them prefent audience.
Goe, and bring them,
You fee this Chafe is hootely followed, friends.

Dolphin. Turne hede, and stop pursuite for coward Dogs
Moft fpend their mouths, whet they feem to threaten Runs fake before them. Great your Soueraigne
Take vp the English short, and let them know
Of what a Mountaine you are the Head;
Selfe-loue,my Liege, is not to fole a time,
As felfe-neglecting.

Enter Exeter.

King. From our Brother of England?
Exe. From him, and thus he greets your Maietie;
He wills you in the Name of God Almighty,
That you decaff your felfe and lay apart
The borrowed Glories, that by gift of Heaven,
By Law of Nature, and of Nations, Longs
To him and to his Heires, namely the Crowne,
And all wide-stretched Honors, that pertaine
By Cultane, and the Ordinance of Times,
Into the Crowne of France: that you may know
To be fit fit para with an awkward Clayre,
Pucke from the worne holes of long, vanitl dayes,
Not from the dull of old Obfution rakt,
He fends you this most memorabile Lyne,
In every Branch truly demonstrative;
Willing you ouer-looke this Pedigree:
And when you find him evenly derived
From his mefll fband, of famous Anceftors,
Edward the third; he bids you then regaine
Your Crowne and Kingdome, indifferently held
From him, the Natije and true Challeger.

King. Or elfe what follewes?
Exe. Bloody contraint: for if you hide the Crowne
Fuen in your heartes, there will he rafe for it,
Therefore in force, Tempefl is he comming,
In Thunder and in Earth-quake, like a faire:
That if requiring tale, he will compell
And bids you, in the Bowels of the Lord,
Delive vp the Crowne, and to take mercie
On the poore Soules,for whom this hungry Warre
Opens his vaffe Iawes: and on your head
Turning the Wideowers Teares, the Orphans Cryes,
The dead-men Blood, the pruy Maidens Groazes,
For Husbands, Fathers, and betrothed Louers,
That shall be swalled in this Controouerie.

This is his Clayne, his Threatening; and my Melfage:
Vnifeffe the Dolphin be in prefence here;
To whom expreflly I bring greeeting to,

King. Fai.
The Life of Henry the Fifth.

King. For vs, we will consider of this further:
To morrow shall you bene our full intent
Back to our Brother of England.

Dolph. For the Dolphin,
I stand here for him: what to him from England?

Exe. Scorne and defiance, fleight regard, contempt,
And any thing that may not mis-become
The mighty Sender, God have you at.
Thus fayes my Kingd and if your Fathers Highmeale
Do not, in grante of all demands at large,
Sweeten the bitter Mock you fent my Maileft.
Hee call you to fo hot an Answer of it,
That Caues and Wombie Vaulages of France
Shall chide your Trefpas, and return you my Mock
In second Accent of his Ordinance.

Dolph. Say, if my Father render faire return,
It is againft my will: for I desire
Nothing but Odds with England,
To that end, as matching to his Youth and Vaince,
I did preient him with the Paris-Bulls,

Exe. Hee le make your Paris Louer finte for it,
Were it the Miftrust Court of mightie Europe:
And be affcied, you'll ferve him as you at.
As we his Subiects base in wonder found,
Betweene the promife of his greener daies,
And thefe he mafteres now: how he weighs Time
Even to the vtmoff Graine: that you fhall reade
In your owne Loffes, if he flye in France.

King. To morrow shall you know our mind at full.

Exe. Dispatch vs with all speed, leaff that our King
Come here himfelfe to queftion our delay;
For he is foote in this Land already.

King. You fhall no fooner dispatch, with faire conditions.
A Night is but small breathe, and little pavie,
To answer matters of this confirmation.

Exit.

Alarum. Sealing Ladders at Harflew.

King. Once more vnto the Breach,
Dearc friends, once more;
Or clofe the Wall vp with our English dead:
In Peace, there's nothing fo becomes a man,
As modell finifhine, and humbleffe:
But when the blood of Brave blifes in our eres,
Then imitate the action of the Tyger:
Stiffen the finewes, commune vp the blood,
Difguife faire Nature with hard-fauour'd Rage:
Then and the Edge a terrible aspect:
Let it pry through the portage of the Head,
Like the Braife Cannon: let the Brow of ethelme
As fearfully as doth a galled Redbreake,
Ofe-haung andusty his confounded Bafe,
Swil'd with the wild and wallifull Ocean.
Now let the Teeth, and ftrech the Norfolk wide,
Hold hard the Breed, and bend vp euerie Spirit
To his full height. On, on, you Nobiliff English,
Whofe blood is fent from Fathers of Warre-proofe:

Fathers, that like fo many Alexanderes,
Have in their parts from Morne till Even fought,
And bleafe'd their Swords,for lack of argument.
Difhonour not your Mothers: now attell,
That thofe whom you cull'd Fathers, did beget you,
Be Coppy now to me of groffer blood,
And teach them how to Warre, And you good Yeomen,
Whofe Lycns were made in England: thow vs here
The mettell of your Paffure: let vs vearce,
That you are worth your breeding: which I doubt not:
For there is none of you fo mean and bafe,
That hath not Noble lufter in your eyes.
I fee you fland like Grey-hounds in the flips,
Staying vpon the Start. The Game's afioot:
Follow your Spirits: and vpon this Charge,
Cry, God for Harry, England, and S. George.

Alarums, and Chamber's get off.

Enter Nim, Bardolp, Pijfol, and Boy.

Bard. On, on, on, on, on, to the breach to the breach.

Nim. Praye thee Corporall flay, the Knocks are too hot:
And for mine owne part, I have not a Case of Limes:
The humor of it is too hot, that is the very plaine:

Pijf. The plaine Song is most ioft:
For humors doe abound: Knocks goe and come:
Gods Vpflais drop and dye: and Sword and Shield,
in bloody Field, doth winne immortal fame.

Boy. Would I were in an Ale-house in London,
I would giue all my fame for a Pot of Ale, and faftie.
The Life of Henry the Fift.

Pist. And I: If wishes would presiyle with me, my purpose should not fayle with me; but thither would I hie.

Boy. As duly, but not as truly, as Bird doth fing on bough.

Enter Fuscus.

Fusc. Vp to the breach, you Dugges; saunt you Calions.

Pist. Be metrefull great Duke to men of Mould: a-bate thy Rage, a-bate thy namely Rage; a-bate thy Rage, great Duke. Good Bawcock bate thy Rage; vie lenient sweet Chuck.

Nim. These be good humors: your Honor wins bad humors.

Boy. As young as I am, I have euer'd these three Swatheds: I am Boy to them all three, but all they three, though they would weeue me, could not be Man to me; for indeed three such Antiques do not amount to a man: for Bardolph, he is white-flitter'd, and red-fac'd; by the meanes whereof, a faces it out, but fghts not; for Piffell, he hath a killing Tongue, and a quiet Sword; by the meanes whereof, a breaks Worlds, and keeps whole Weapons: for Nim, he hath heard, that men of few Words are the belf men, and therefore hee comes to say his Prayers, left a should be thought a Coward: but his few bad Words are macht with as few good Deeds; for a neuer broke any mans Head but his owne, and that was againft a Poft, when he was drunke. They will freke any thing, and call it Purchafe. Bardolph flate a Little-cate, borne twelve Leagues, and fold it for three halfe-pence. Nim and Bardolph are sworne Brothers in th'other, and in Callicke they flate a fire-shouewell. I knew by that piece of Service, the men would carry Cosles. They would have me as famillies with mens Pockets, as their Glouses or their Hand-kercchers; which makes much againft my Manhood, if I shoulde take from another Poft, to put into mine; for it is plainke pokering vp of Wrongs. I muft free them, and seekke thee better Service: their Villany goes againft my weake stomack, and therefore I muft call it vp.

Exit.

Enter Gower.

Gower. Captaine Finellen, you must come preffemy to the Myner; the Duke of Gloucefter would speake with you.

Fin. To the Myner? Tell you the Duke, it is not fo good to come to the Myner: for looke you, the Myner is not according to the disciplines of the Warre; the conuertes of it is not sufficient: for looke you, th'other faie, you may difcuffle into the Duke, looke you, is digt himselfe foure yard under the Countermine: by Chriftus, I thynke a will powre vp all, if there is not better direction.

Gower. The Duke of Gloucefter, to whom the Order of the Siege is given, is altogether directed by an Irish man, a very valiant Gentleman ysfate.

Welch. It is Captaine Mackesca, is it not?

Gower. I thinke it be.

Welch. By Chriftus he is an Aife, as in the World, I will venge as much in his Beard: he ha's no more directions in the true discipines of the Warres, looke you, of the Rouen discipines, then is a Puppy-dog.

Enter Mackesca, and Captaine Iamy.

Gower. Here a comes, and the Scotts Captaine, Captaine Iamy, with him.

Welch. Captaine Iamy is a maruellous famous Gentleman, that is certain, and of great expedition and knowledge in the auncient Warres, upon my particular knowledge of his directions: by Chriftus he will maintain his Argument as well as any Militia man in the World, in the discipines of the Prifftine Warres of the Romans.

Scott. I say gudday, Captaine Finellen.

Welch. Godden to your Worship, good Captaine Iamy.

Gower. How now Captaine Mackesca, haue you quit the Myner? haue the Pioners gien oute?

Ifris. By Chriftus Law thif ill done: the Warke thif gueuer, the Trompet found the Retreat. By my Hand I swarre, and my fathers Soule, the Warke thif ill done: it thif gueuer: I would have blowed vp the Towne, for Chriftus faue me law, in an houre, thif ill done, thif ill done: by my Hand thif ill done.

Ifris. Captaine Mackesca, I beseech you now, will you yrove safe, looke you, a few disputation with you, as partly touching or concerning the discipines of the Warres, the Roman Warres, in the way of Argument, looke you, and friendly communication: partly to satisfie my Opinion, and partly for the satisfaction, looke you, of my Mind as touching the direction of the Militia disipines of the Towne.

Scott. It fell be very gud, god feith, god Captaine Iamy, and I fall quity you with gud leue, as I may pick occasion: that fall I may.

Ifris. It is no time to discuss, for Chriftus faue me: the day is hot, and the Weather, and the Warres, and the King, and the Dukees: it is no time to disscuss, the Towne is take, and the Trumpet call vs to the breech, and we talke, and be Chriftus do nothing, tis flame for vs all: for God faie his flame to fand full, it is thame by my hand: and there is Threats to be cut, and Workes to be done, and thif thif nothing done, for Chriftus faie law.

Scott. By the Mes, ere theie eyes of mine take themelles to fomber, ayle de gud feiere, or ile lige fife ftronge for te; ay, or goe to death: and ile pay as avouzouze as I may, that fall I fute do, that is the breft and the long: mary, I was fulll tale heard fome queation thence you sway.

Welch. Captaine Mackesca, I think, looke you, under your correction, there is not many of your Nation.

Ifris. Of my Nation? What ifth my Nation? ifth a Villaine, and a Backerd, and a house, and a Plarcall, What ifth my Nation? Who taketh of my Nation?

Welch. Looke you, if you take the master otherwise then is meant, Captaine Mackesca, peradventure I shall think you do not vfe me with that affability, as in discretion you ought to vfe me looke you, being as good a man as you fete, both in the discipines of Warre, and in the derivation of my Birth, and in other particularities.

Ifris. I do not know you so good a man as my felle: for Chriftus faue me, I will cut off your Head.

Gower. Gentlemen both, you will matteach each other.

Gower. The Towne founds a Parley.

Welch. Captaine Mackesca, when there is more better opportune time to be required, looke you: I will be so bold as to tell you, I know the discipines of Warre; and there is an end.

Exit.

Enter the King and all his Traine before the Gates.

King. How yet refolves the Gouvernour of the Towne?

This is the laft Parie we will admit:

There.
Therefore to our belt mercy give you felues,
Or like to men proud of destruction,
Defile vs to our woor: for as I am a Souldier,
A Name that in my thoughts becomes me belst;
If I begin the batt'rie once againe,
I will not leave the halfe-architected Harlesw,
Till in her ashes the lyte burn'd.
The Gates of Mercy shall be all shut vp,
And the heft'd Souldier, rough and bard of heart,
In libertie of bloody hand shall range
With Confidence wide as Hell, moving like a Graftle.
Your fresh faire Virgin, and your flattering Infants.
What is it then to me, if impious Warre,
Arrayed in Iames like to the Prince of Friends,
Doth with his snyre-complexion all feel feast,
Enlynetk to waff and defolation?
What is't to me, when your felues are caste,
If your pure Maydens fall into the hand
Of hot and forcing Violation?
